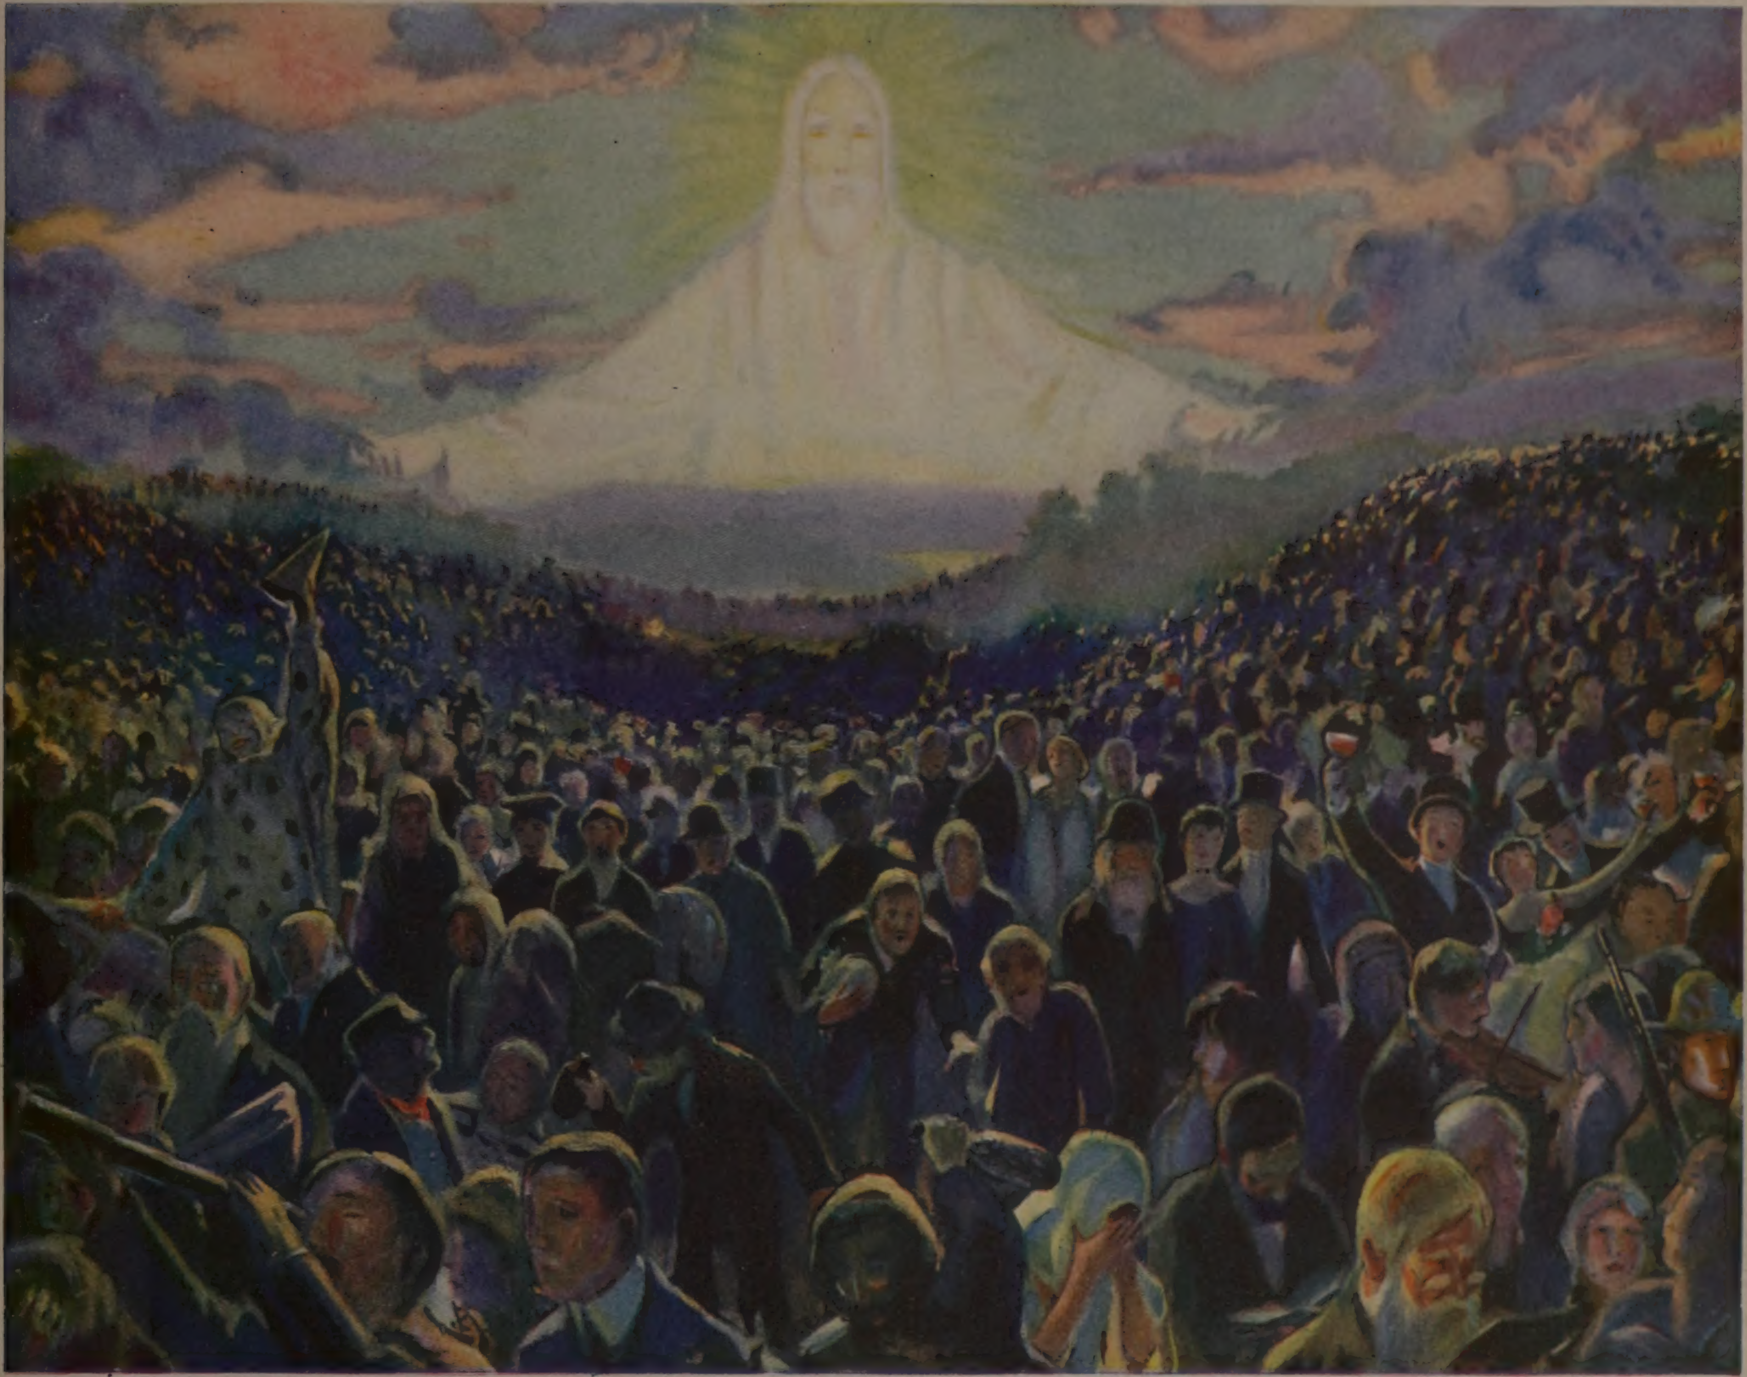
Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
NEW YORK, JANUARY 3, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 1. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



YE WILL NOT COME UNTO ME THAT YE MIGHT HAVE LIFE

"O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord!"

All we like sheep have gone astray. We have turned every one to his own way."

And this is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light because their deeds were evil."

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets and stonest them that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, but ye would not."

All day long I have stretched forth my hands unto a disobedient and gainsaying people."

I have spread out my hands all the day unto a rebellious people, which walketh in a way that is not good, after their own thoughts."

For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord; For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts."

Border Decoration by H. Deland Williams

From a painting by H. Willard Ortlip

To Wash Blankets

MAKE Ivory Soap paste according to the recipe inside the wrapper. A pair of blankets requires from a half to a whole cake of Ivory Soap (small size) made into Ivory Soap paste. Hard water and large, heavy blankets require two to three times as much soap paste as soft water and small, light blankets. Choose a bright sunny day with a moderate breeze. Fill three tubs about half full of warm—not hot—water. To the first, add enough Ivory Soap paste to make a good foamy suds. Put in one double or two single blankets. Let them soak thirty minutes. Work them up and down, adding Ivory Soap paste as needed. To remove spots do not lift the blanket from the water, but put one hand under the spot and brush with Ivory Soap paste. Use a moderately stiff brush. To the second tub add as much Ivory Soap paste as to the first. Put in blankets and repeat the lifting and sousing. To the third tub add enough Ivory Soap paste to make the water milky. Run blankets into this tub through loosely adjusted wringer. Rinse, wring lightly, and hang in open air at once—white blankets in sun, colored blankets in shade. When dry, go over them with a soft flannel cloth or a clean whisk broom and hang near a stove or in a warm room for several hours.

COPYRIGHT 1916 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI

THE housewife who takes pride in her home almost invariably washes the blankets with Ivory Soap. She knows that not only careful handling but a pure neutral soap is necessary to keep them soft and unshrunken.

Ivory Soap is free from the materials that are harmful to wool. It does nothing but cleanse. It cannot injure blankets in any way.

Using it exclusively and proceeding so as to avoid rubbing and changes of temperature, the woman who depends upon Ivory Soap never hesitates to wash blankets at home and never is disappointed with the result.

IVORY SOAP . . . .

. . . . $99\frac{44}{100}\%$ PURE

IT FLOATS

THE·CHRISTIAN·HERALD
·AN·ILLUSTRATED·NEWS·WEEKLY·FOR·THE·HOME·

Mercy and Munitions

U.S. CHRISTMAS SHIP

THE naval collier Cæsar, America's Christmas Ship, sailed from Dock No. 2 of the Bush Terminal on December 16 with 2,000 tons of food and medical supplies sent by the American people to relieve distress among the Armenian and Syrian exiles. On the other side of the same dock, laborers were busily trucking huge bars and slabs of copper onto a barge for shipment abroad, and thus from the same pier were being loaded materials for munitions which should make want and misery, and the materials of mercy which were to alleviate in a very small degree a part of that war-created woe. It is peculiarly fitting that this cargo of mercy should have been loaded so near the docks which have been kept busy in the last two years by the handling of the merchandise of death. It is an answer in a small way, but a thorough answer nevertheless, to the great accusation of the world at large that America is wholly mercenary.

In England they are singing a pair of verses which run like this:

France has her lily,
England has her rose,
And where the shamrock comes from Everybody knows.

Scotland has her thistle
On every vale and hill;
But the emblem of America
Is a one dollar bill.

That is the measure of America which is widely held among those who purchase our munitions. But the accusation that America worships the dollar bill antedated the war and it has been only emphasized by the progress of our trade since Mars set up his sway over the nations of Europe.

The Cæsar was speeded on her way by a group of 150 or more persons, including thirty or forty Syrians and Armenians, who held a brief service of dedication and thanksgiving on the dock while the last supplies were being loaded. The Cæsar is under command of Master I. F. Shurtleff, of the Naval Auxiliary Service, Lieut. Commander John N. Enochs, U. S. N., having charge of the shipment as a diplomatic representative of the navy. The exercises on the dock were under the chairmanship of Mr. Cleveland H. Dodge, whose son and his wife are missionaries in Beirut. The cargo of the Cæsar is consigned to the American consul at Beirut. Mr. Dodge said that his son had not seen the American flag for eighteen months and that the sailing of this old collier, which he called a "bully old boat," into the harbor with the Stars and Stripes flying would be to the Americans a message from home, and to the waiting Syrians an angel of mercy. The cargo of the Cæsar consisted of $250,000 worth of food, clothing and medicines, and included three automobiles, which were sent to aid in the distribution of the goods to the camps in which the refugees are concentrated. Christian Herald readers paid for one-tenth of the cargo, $25,000. Other shipments must follow; $410,000 has already been cabled to inland centers which cannot be reached by the Cæsar's cargo, and the committee in charge reports that a total of $5,000,000 will be needed.

The cargo space for the 2,000 tons sent by the committee was supplied by the Navy Department of the United States by order of the President. The balance of the carrying capacity of the Cæsar, about 1,000 tons, was used for supplies for the cruiser Des Moines. The Cæsar is a slow boat, making about nine knots in good weather, and she will probably reach Beirut about the middle of January if all goes well.

AS the war goes on, misery increases; and while we have done well, we must do better. We, who are so fortunate as to be saved from the waste and ruin and bereavement of battle, may well sacrifice pleasures, even necessities, in order that we may do our part in raising the great weight of woe and destitution pressed upon our fellow human beings in these war-stricken lands. While the war lasts, the cry will be for more and still more. Just now we have had a slight glimpse of possible peace, but even if peace should come within the next three months, the misery and hunger and imminent need which cries so loudly for relief today would not be relieved before another harvest, and gifts would need to come increasingly until the fall. No matter how long the war continues, nor when it ends, the suffering which it has caused, the famine, the homelessness, will not be cured until after the following harvest. And until that time we, who by God's grace are at peace and prosperous, are privileged to stretch forth our arm of strength to succor the weak and the afflicted.

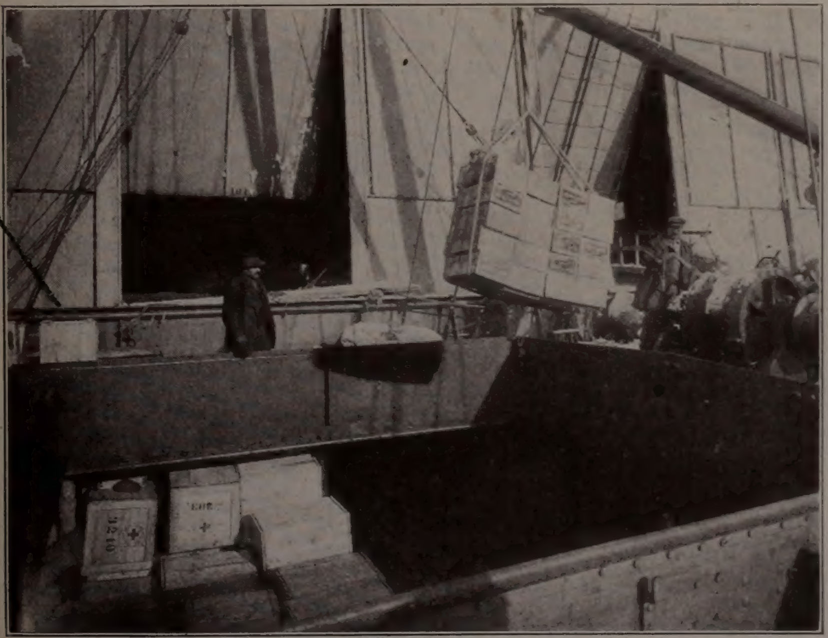
Because this need is so acute, so constant and so constantly increasing, it is imperative that every committee engaged in the work of relief should be able to make definite plans for the sending of definite relief at specified times. For that reason we urge again the thoughtful and prayerful consideration by each subscriber of the Christian Herald of the Monthly Offering plan which has already met with measurable success. We know that it is impossible for all to plan a definite monthly gift, but we do urge all those who can foresee the ability to give a definite amount each month to let us have their registration for that amount in order that we may make our promises and plans with assurance and with the certainty of fulfilment. Those who cannot promise a definite amount can still participate in the monthly plan by pledging to send as much as possible each month. The clubs are as follows: No. 1, for donors of fifty cents monthly; No. 2, for donors of one dollar monthly; No. 3, for donors of two dollars monthly; No. 4, for donors of three dollars monthly; No. 5, for donors of five dollars monthly; No. 6, for donors of ten dollars monthly; No. 7, for donors of twenty dollars monthly; No. 8, for donors of twenty-five dollars monthly; No. 9, for donors of fifty dollars monthly; No. 10 for donors of some amount monthly determined by circumstances.

While the Armenian need is imperative, we would not have our subscribers forget the needs of those other fields in which their gifts have saved the lives of women and children and helped to repair wasted homes and to replant devastated fields. The following letter of thanks has been received from Poland:

"OUR country has been grievously afflicted by the war; but particularly those cities and villages where larger battles took place. Among the numerous villages of Russian Poland which on account of violent battles have fallen a prey to the flames, there are also the villages of Janinow, New-Skoszewy, Galkow, Teolin and others. Only with the greatest danger were we enabled by flight to save our bare lives. Where once our farm buildings stood, we found upon our return only ruins and ashes. Thanks to kind people who interested themselves in us in our great distress, we were able, indeed, to knock together huts out of boards on the sites of our old homes, in order thus at least to find shelter against the inclemency of the weather; but so many things that we need most in household utensils and fixtures are still missing. Hence we were deeply moved when we received through Pastor Wannagat help out of the Christian Herald fund, by means of which we are now able to procure at least those things which we need most. To the honorable committee, as well as to all noble givers, the undersigned hereby express their warmest thanks for the advance."

|Signed]
August Nikoba, A. Schmidke,
Jusuaf Lauer, W. Hundoort,
W. Schmidke, G. Fredrich,
Wilhelm Semon.

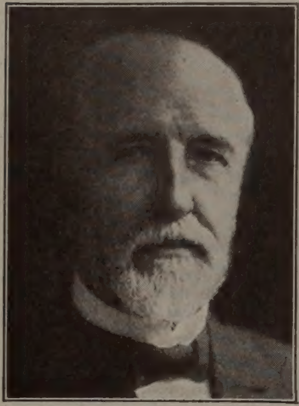
Continued on page 21



These cases of condensed milk being lowered into the hold of the Christmas ship in appearance are not unlike the cases of munitions being rushed into the holds of many other ships within a stone's throw of this one

Boarding over foodstuffs on the deck of the Cæsar, the ship whose one cargo of mercy is worth to civilization more than all the cargoes of all the ships that greedily carry war tools to the fighting nations

An Art Gallery in a Church

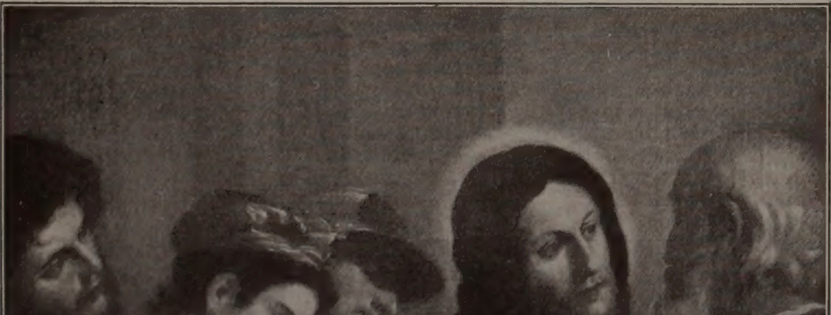


Mr. T. B. Walker, donor of the paintings

THE idea of an art gallery as part of a church's activities was conceived and brought to completion by Mr. T. B. Walker of Minneapolis. Mr. Walker considered the idea of a church gallery for a long time, and, as a test, twenty years ago placed a beautiful canvas by Ciseri, "Christ before Pilate," and several smaller oil paintings—all Biblical subjects—in the vestry rooms of the Hennepin Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church in Minneapolis, of which he is a charter member. A patron and lover of art as well as a stanch believer in its uplifting and refining influence in every phase of social life, Mr. Walker observed with satisfaction that the pictures in the church brought the results he anticipated and desired. He has had ample experience in noting the influence of pictures, for he has been the great art educator of the Northwest. The Sunday school rooms and the halls of the Hennepin Avenue Church are hung with a magnificent collection of two hundred and fifty water colors illustrating Biblical scenes, made by eminent artists, who spent years in the Holy Land, Nubia, and Egypt, making the originals, the gift of Mrs. Walker.

When the plans for the new Hennepin Avenue Church were being formed, Mr. Walker told the building committee that he would furnish a gallery of Biblical pictures if a suitable room were provided. Delighted with the idea, the committee planned a room 50 by 60 feet on the top floor in the Guild Hall, which is fitted with the most modern lighting appliances and serves the double purpose of lecture and reception room. During the years of building, Mr. Walker nursed and fostered the idea, spending many months annually in New York, carefully selecting appropriate canvases, until he had gathered together the most imposing collection of Biblical oil-paintings in this country, now said to be of greater value than the entire church and property.

There are thirty-four paintings in the church gallery. Among the most notable is "Christ Raising Jairus's Daughter," by Benjamin West, the American painter who went to England, became president of the Royal Academy, and was for over thirty years a favorite of George III. When Mr. Walker brought this picture to the United States he loaned it to the National Academy of Art in Washington, where it hung until it was transferred to the Church Gallery.



"The Erring Woman Before Christ," by Guercino (1591-1666). Painter of the famous fresco in the cathedral dome at Piacenza

There is a famous Angelica Kauffman, "Rebekah at the Well"; "Isaac Blessing Jacob," by Flinck, one of Rembrandt's most apt pupils. And there is a most interesting series of great value, picturing the life of Joseph, by Santa Croce, a fifteenth century Italian, a pupil of Bellini.

The complete catalogue of the paintings is as follows: "Holy Night," by Washington Allston, American. "Belshazzar's Feast," by Giuseppe Bezzuoli, Italian. "Building the Tower of Babel," by Carlo Bononi, Italian. "Adoration of the Shepherds," by Francisco Nicholas Borras, Spanish. "Joachim and Anne," from an old altarpiece at Toledo, Spain. "The Annunciation." "The Holy Family," by Mateo Cerezo, Spanish. "Ecce Homo" or "Christ before Pilate," by Antonio Ciseri, Italian. "The Nativity," by Francesco Cuirado (or Curradi), Italian. "Notable Events in the Life of Jesus," by Christian Wilhelm Ernst Dietrich, German. "The Crucifixion," by Christian Wilhelm Ernst Dietrich, German. "Adoration of the Shepherds," by Karel Fabritus, Netherlands. "Isaac Blessing Jacob," by Govaert Flinck, Dutch. "Adoration of the Shepherds," by Francesco Furini, Italian. "The Erring Woman before Christ," by Giovanni Francesco Barbiere Guercino, Italian. "Abraham and the Three Angels," by Martin Van Heemskerk, Netherlands. "Rebekah at the Well," by Marie Anna Angelica Catharina Kauffman, Swiss. "Jesus Bearing His Cross," by Lucas Van Leyden (real name Lucas Jacobsz), Netherlands. "The Assumption of the Virgin," by Carlo Maratti, Italian. "Assumption of the Virgin," by Osorio Francisco Menesses, Spanish. "Christian Pilgrims at the Tomb of the Blessed Virgin at Jerusalem," by Jules Jean Antoine Lecomte du Muoy, French. "Job's Messengers," by Paul Falconer Poole, English. Seven "Joseph" scenes, by Francesco di Simone da Santa Croce, Italian, as follows: "Joseph's Brethren Casting Him in the Pit," "Joseph Sold to the Ishmaelites," "Exhibiting Joseph's Blood-Stained Coat to Jacob," "Joseph's Escape from Potiphar's Wife," "Joseph Interpreting the Chief Butler's and the Chief Baker's Dreams," "The Cup Found in Benjamin's Sack," and "Joseph Meeting His Father in Goshen." "Wedding in Cana of Galilee," by Herman Swanevelt, Netherlands. "Madonna and Donors," by Berna or Bernardo da Siena, Italian. "Christ before Caiaphas," by Giovanni Tiepolo, Italian. "Christ Healing the Sick," by Jacopi Tintoretto (real name Giacomo Robusti), Italian. "Christ Healing Jairus's Daughter," by Benjamin West, American.

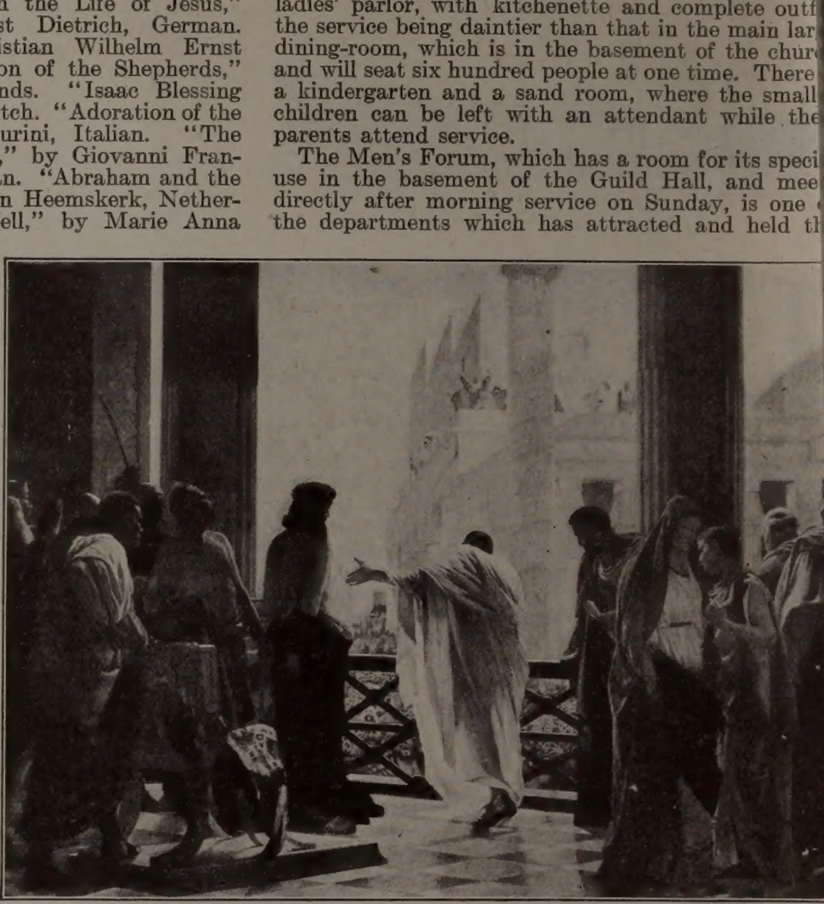
The new building of the Hennepin Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church of Minneapolis was dedicated last October. It is probably the most modern and finest Methodist church in the United States, having cost more than a half-million dollars. Its architecture is English Gothic, the exterior is of Bedford cut stone, the ground plan 300 x 130 feet, with a spire 248 feet in height. It has a seating capacity of 1,200 on the main floor, and 600 in the balcony. Despite the fact that the interior is fifty feet in height, the acoustic properties are almost perfect, due, the building committee state, to the utilization of Guastivene tile for the ceiling, walls, and floors. There are no carpets, these specially tiled floors killing all sound. Without effort, an ordinary speaking voice can be heard in the farthest corner of the auditorium or balconies.

Professor John Marshall of the Boston Symphony Orchestra designed the organ, which is one of the finest in this country, the gift of Mr. Russell Bennett in memory of his father. It has 5,475 pipes and 80 stops, with an echo manual installed in the dome of the church two hundred feet from the keyboard.

An institutional church, provision has been made for its social and educational activities in the Gu Hall, a separate building three stories high just ba of the main structure. In the basement there is splendidly equipped gymnasium with two balconi and a fine basket ball service, all free to both girls a boys. There are shower baths, lockers and a gar room 61 by 30 feet. The pastor and assistant past have study rooms on the first floor, and there a twenty-four Sunday school rooms in the hall.

On the floor adjoining the Art Gallery, to be us for smaller gatherings, there is an artistically furnish ladies' parlor, with kitchenette and complete outf the service being daintier than that in the main lar dining-room, which is in the basement of the chur and will seat six hundred people at one time. There a kindergarten and a sand room, where the small children can be left with an attendant while the parents attend service.

The Men's Forum, which has a room for its speci use in the basement of the Guild Hall, and mee directly after morning service on Sunday, is one the departments which has attracted and held th young men. At these meetings, after the speaker ha finished, the discussion is thrown open to the two t three hundred men usually present. This Forum ha been so successful that two others have grown fron it; one for both women and men, another for womer only.



"Christ Before Pilate," by Ciseri (1821-1891). This painting is a replica by the artist himself of the original which is held in Rome

The congregation of this church practically sup ports the Methodist mission work in the Muttr district of India (Northwest India Conference), whicl has a population of 4,000,000, with 18,000 Methodis church members, attended by eleven pastors anc thirty-five special workers.

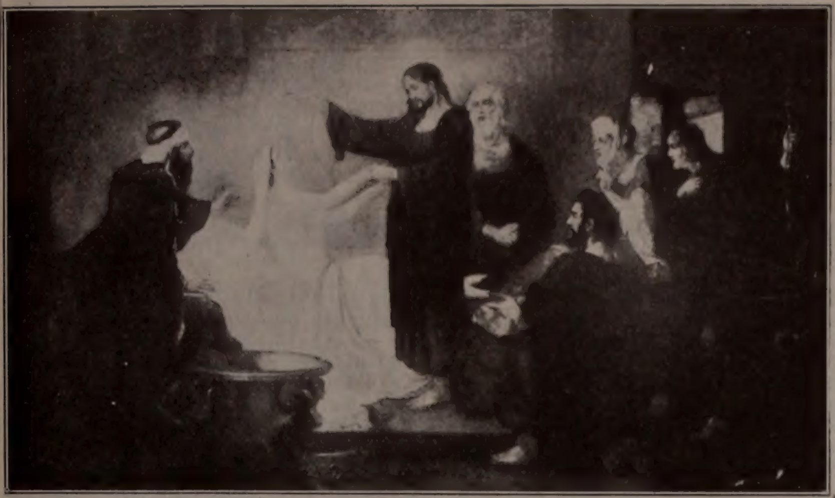
THE inception of the Hennepin Avenue Church wa exceedingly modest. It was organized in 1875 witl eighty-six members, twenty-four of whom are living The first place of worship was the "Friends' Meeting house" at the corner of Hennepin Avenue and Eightl Street. The first Sunday school class numbered 10 persons, and the first collection amounted to $10.07 Rev. A. Hollington was the first pastor.

The new congregation grew so rapidly that befor a year had passed it was necessary to find large quarters. To accommodate its new needs the edifice called "the Tabernacle" was hurried to completio in one month and two days at a cost of $3,802. Th building was surprisingly comfortable for a fram building in the frigid climate of Minnesota at tha time, its walls having been filled thickly with warmth-giving sawdust. Years later the Minneapolis childrer knew it only as a grocery store.

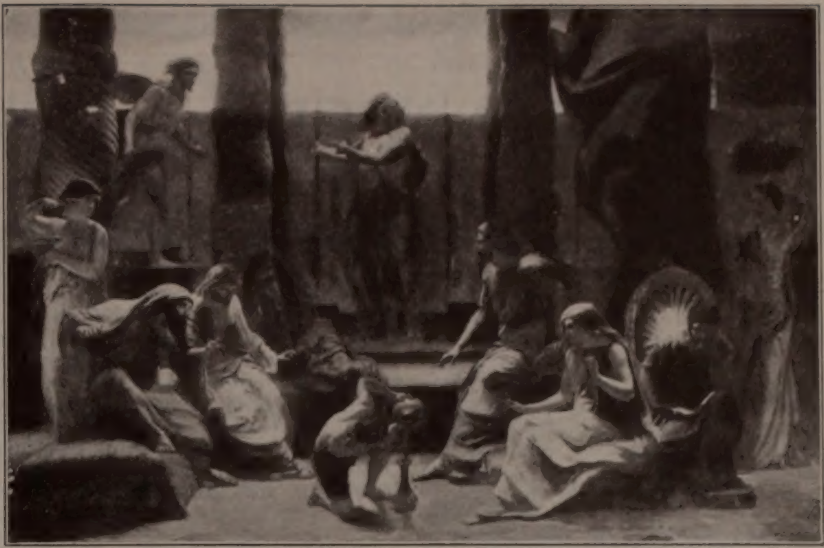
The membership of the church, with which is now united the congregation of the Fowler Methodis Episcopal Church, is 1,848, with 956 Sunday schoo pupils enrolled. Dr. Andrew Gilles, now retired, wa in the pulpit during the strenuous years of building Dr. Charles Burns of Philadelphia became pastor o the day the church was dedicated, while Dr. Gilber Stansell, who has been with the congregation a numbe of years as assistant, continues in that position.

From the beginning the Hennepin Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church has been conspicuous for it generosity and fine Christian spirit. Now, with it greater capacity for good, and the innovation of th Church gallery, which will attract thousands o visitors, an increasing usefulness and spirituality i looked for.

ROBY DANENBAUM.



"Christ Raising Jairus's Daughter," by Benjamin West (1738-1820). This self-taught American painter was a Pennsylvania Quaker, and there is a tradition that, as a boy, he found his pigments in the woods, and made his brushes of hair taken from the cat's tail



"Job's Messengers," by Poole (1810-1879). Also self-taught and, like West, a member of the Royal Academy

(Also in the Hennepin Avenue Church Gallery)

Governors' Conference at Washington

By FERDINAND C. IGLEHART

WHILE the Senate and House of Representatives were in session on Capitol Hill, governors from the various states were holding their annual conference toward the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue at the New Willard Hotel, December 14–16. The conference was opened on Thursday morning by Governor William Spry of Utah. In the afternoon Governor Emerson C. Harrington of Maryland spoke ably on "The Executive Budget."

The Maryland budget plan seeks to make impossible an expenditure of more money in appropriations than is received by the commonwealth from all sources. It centers authority in the governor. Governor Holcomb described the Connecticut system of naming a state financial board to assist in planning appropriations, and told how the state indebtedness had been reduced by several million dollars within the last few years.

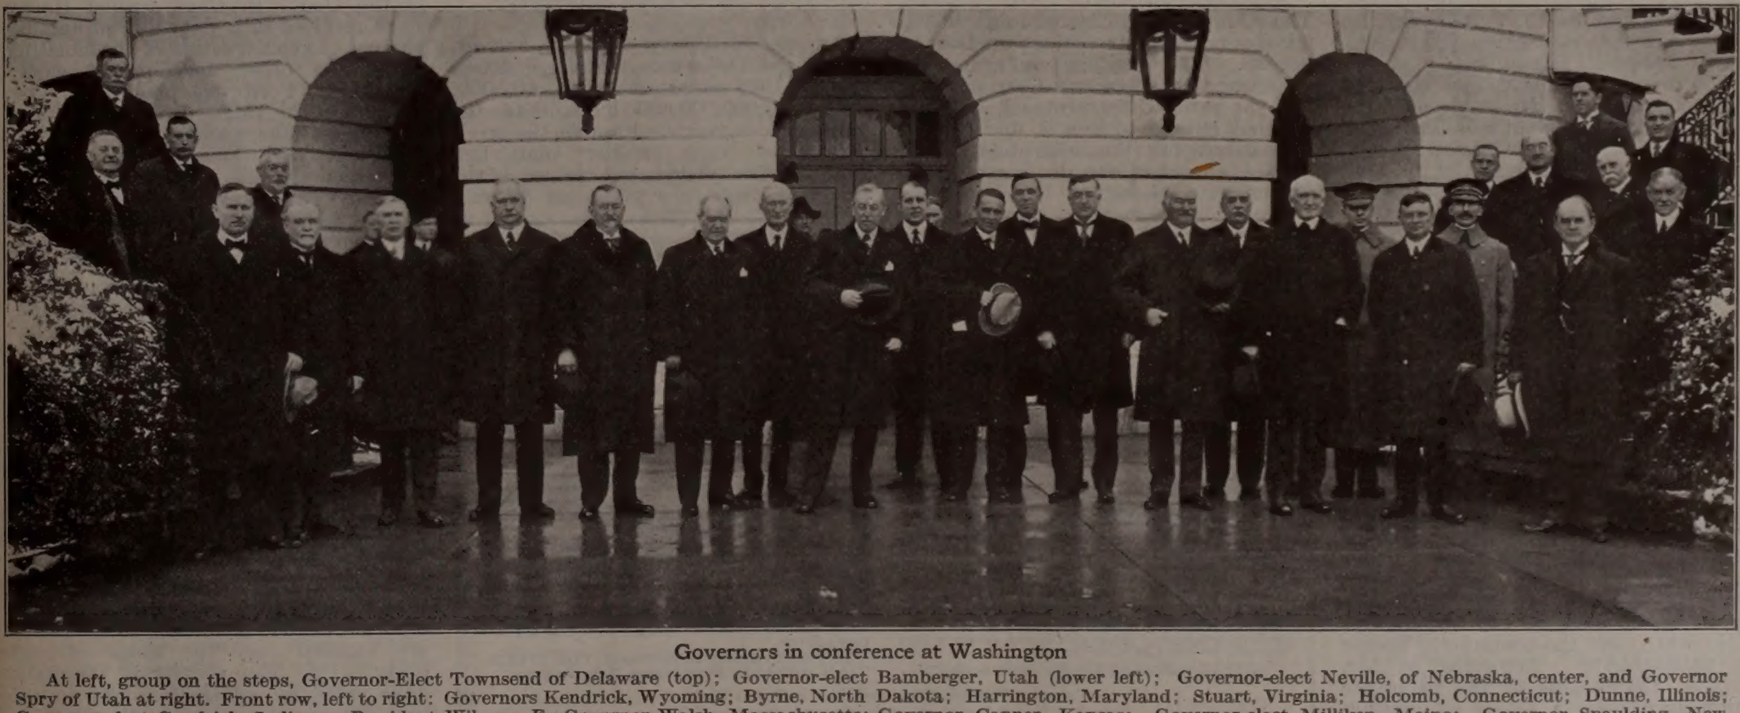
On Friday morning Governor S. V. Stewart of Montana opened the discussion on "State Administrative Problems." He thought more power should be given to the executive, to compel the officers under him to enforce the law or remove them for failing to do so. In the discussion that followed, there was a general endorsement of the "short ballot" under which governors might be allowed to appoint their associates and assistants in office as well as subordinates of lower grade, rather than have foisted upon them officials not in sympathy with state executives as a result of the elective system. There was also commendation of the idea of "cabinets" whose members the governor might appoint.

Governor McCall of Massachusetts took the chair Friday afternoon, and made an excellent address, in which he attributed a reduction in the number of murders in his state to the abolition of capital punishment. Governor Arthur Capper of Kansas then made an address on "Our Duty and Responsibility after the World War," which captivated the conference. He began by saying that he hoped President Wilson and the United States government would do all in their power as mediators to bring the war in Europe to a close, and to do so at once. He said:

"THE duration of the war, the final outcome, the terms of peace, the vitality left in the contending nations and their powers of recuperation, all will affect in one way or another the commerce, the industry, the financial condition of this country, and the national life of our people. The question of tariffs, the problem of immigration, the maintenance and extension of our foreign markets, our fiscal problems will engage our most serious attention. But above all our domestic problems will loom the great responsibility that America owes to our own people no less than to the world, of establishing among the nations of the earth a permanent peace that shall never again be broken by the insanity of war. We have 'kept out of the war,' but our interest in its consequences is none the less on that account, and our duty and responsibility is all the greater. All the greater, too, because we are not entirely spotless, our hands are not wholly clean. We have pursued the safe course, and have filled our coffers in the meantime. We have fattened on the blood of the battlefield. Our farms have been depleted of horses, our grain has sold at war prices, our factories have worked overtime making munitions, and our speculators have fattened on 'war babies.' The people of the United States, for all our neutrality, have participated most actively in the world war, and we cannot evade our responsibility at its close.

"In the natural trend of events, it is highly probable that the United States government will have a voice in the negotiations of peace upon the cessation of hostilities. Upon the American people rests the responsibility and duty of leadership in the movement for permanent peace among civilized nations. Putting the question on its very lowest basis, looking at it from a purely material point of view, war accomplishes nothing which could not be secured in a sane and Christian manner, and its cost in dollars and cents is far beyond all computation. The nations of Europe are expending a million dollars every thirty minutes. They are slaughtering human beings at the rate of a million men a year; they are wiping out the production of centuries of progress. Our protest is not sentimental, although we thank God that we are moved by human suffering and the waste of human life by this destroying world-sickness. The war has intensified as nothing else could have done the hatred of battle, and has brought home not only to rulers, but, what is of greater importance, to the people of the earth, the utter folly, the wicked futility, the criminality of a resort to arms as a means of settling international disputes. We live today in a new world, a world transformed in the last one hundred years; a world knit by the telegraph and the wireless, a world made one country by quick transportation facilities and world-wide commercial enterprises, a world physically re-created in a century by science, invention and commerce, and intellectually made over by the wide dissemination of intelligence and the inculcation of the spirit of liberty and brotherhood in the hearts of all men. In this sweep of progress why should international disputes be settled by the methods employed by the savages of the stone age?" Governor Capper devoted the last part of his address to an endorsement of the plan for an international court of arbitration, which should handle and settle amicably all questions of dispute and make war an impossibility in the earth.

The meeting was a real conference. Coming so recently from the hotly contested battlefield of the elections, with views directly opposite, and with passion at white heat, these men met as brothers, forgot their political differences and united in purpose and heart in plans for the betterment of the individual states and the nation.



Governors in conference at Washington

At left, group on the steps, Governor-Elect Townsend of Delaware (top); Governor-elect Bamberger, Utah (lower left); Governor-elect Neville, of Nebraska, center, and Governor Spry of Utah at right. Front row, left to right: Governors Kendrick, Wyoming; Byrne, North Dakota; Harrington, Maryland; Stuart, Virginia; Holcomb, Connecticut; Dunne, Illinois; Governor-elect Goodrich, Indiana; President Wilson; Ex-Governor Walsh, Massachusetts; Governor Capper, Kansas; Governor-elect Milliken, Maine; Governor Spaulding, New Hampshire; Henderson, Alabama; ex-Governor Fort, New Jersey; Governor McCall, Massachusetts, and behind him his military aide; Governor Whitman, New York, and behind him his military aide; Governor Manning of South Carolina; next on the steps, former Governor Quimby, of New Hampshire; the rest of group mainly officers of the convention.

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

ENGLAND'S ATTITUDE ON PEACE. Lloyd George on December 19 addressed the House of Commons for the first time as premier. His speech, which lasted two hours, was a very complete setting forth of the military situation from the Allies' point of view, and a forcible statement of the national problems and the steps proposed to meet them. He admitted that somebody had blundered in the Rumanian episode. He declared that the war must be fought through until the object for which the Allies were fighting had been obtained. He said:

"I am very glad that the first answer was given to the German Chancellor by France and by Russia. They have unquestionably the right to give the first answer. The enemy is still on their soil and their sacrifices have been greater. . . . And here let me say that any man or set of men who wantonly and without sufficient cause prolongs a terrible conflict like this has on his soul a crime that oceans could not cleanse; on the other hand, a man or set of men who from a sense of war weariness abandoned the struggle without achieving the high purpose for which we entered upon it would be guilty of the most ghastly poltroonery ever perpetrated by any statesman."

He quoted Lincoln's words uttered under similar conditions: "We accepted the war for an object, a worthy object. The war will end when that object is attained. Under God, I hope it will never end until that time."

The premier stated that England was in full accord with the answers already made by Russia and France to the German proposals of a peace parley. He said again in part: "There has been some talk about the proposals of peace. What are those proposals? There are none. . . . We feel we ought to know, before we give favorable consideration to such an invitation, that Germany is prepared to accede to the only terms on which it is possible for peace to be obtained and maintained in Europe. What are these terms? They have been repeatedly stated by all the leading statesmen of the Allies. All I can do is to quote what the leader of the House, Mr. Bonar Law, said last week when he made practically the same statement of terms as those put forward by Mr. Asquith—'restitution, reparation, guarantees against repetition.' So that there shall be no mistakes (and it is important that there shall be no mistake in a matter of the life and death of millions), let me say complete restitution, full reparation and effectual guarantees."

The premier admitted that the food problem was acute. He emphasized the necessity for a complete mobilization of all the resources of the nation in men and material, and announced that all British shipping would be nationalized, and that the man power of the nation would be directed by Mr. Neville Chamberlain of Birmingham, who had accepted the post of Director General of National Service. Lloyd George stated that the formal answer which would be given by the government to the German proposal would be given in full accord with all the Allies.

A DEADLY FOE. According to Arthur Hunter, president of the Actuarial Society of America, cancer resulted last year in the death of 80,000 people, and in the last decade has caused the death of 750,000 in the United States. About one-half the deaths were persons under sixty years of age. If these persons under sixty years of age were potentially worth $2,500 each to the community, their deaths left the community poorer by $100,000,000. According to Mr. Hunter, the records of the insurance companies create a strong supposition that cancer is in no wise hereditary. The Crocker Research Laboratories recently announced the results of extensive tests of the effect of radium upon cancers, the conclusion reached being that radium used in large quantities would retard the cancerous growth, but there was no evidence that a permanent cure could be secured by the treatment. Radium in small quantities appeared to stimulate the growth of the cancer tissue.

A PLAGUE ERADICATED. The United States Department of Agriculture announced on December 13 that the foot and mouth disease which broke out in Niles, Mich., in the summer of 1914, and which extended to twenty-two states and the District of Columbia, had been finally eradicated. The cost of eradicating it is placed at $15,000,000, which included the value of 172,222 destroyed cattle, swine, sheep and goats, worth $5,865,720. The true cause of the infection was not disclosed.

BOSTON BOWS TO BOOZE. In spite of the earnest efforts of Billy Sunday, of her women, and of the organized forces of righteousness, Boston on December 19 voted 53,459 to 29,997 to license the liquor business for another year. The contest was expected to be close, even with a chance of a dry victory. The result was declared to be due to a fear of loss of revenue by the closing of the bars.

FOR A MILITANT PEACE. In a hearing before the sub-committee of the Senate Military Affairs Committee on December 18, Major General Hugh L. Scott, Chief of Staff, and Major General Leonard Wood condemned in unsparing terms the federalizing of the militia as a national military organization and recommended the adoption of a system of universal military training and service. General Scott declared that as long as Great Britain and Japan remained in alliance and retained their military establishments, the United States could be safe from possible trouble only by maintaining a standing army of 1,500,000 men with a reserve of trained men of equal numbers. It is reported that the President is not convinced that universal military training is necessary to adequate preparedness. Secretary of War Baker is said to favor a further trial of the militia before any form of compulsory service.

MEXCIAN PROTOCOL NOT SIGNED. The American-Mexican Joint Commission resumed its sittings on December 18. The Mexicans informed the Americans that General Carranza had not yet ratified the protocol, but had also not refused to sign it, and that he had asked for the interpretation of certain phases of the document. The statement of Secretary Lane that the United States reserved the right to pursue raiders into Mexico is said to have prevented Carranza from signing the protocol, Carranza insisting that Mexico must have similar rights.

TO PARCEL OUT PAPER. Following a hearing by the Federal Trade Commission on December 12 at which paper manufacturers and publishers of metropolitan dailies and printers of smaller dailies and weeklies stated their difficulties, the commission called a conference for December 18 at which it was proposed that the commission be authorized by all concerned to act as a distributing agency between manufacturers and consumers of print paper. The conference on December 18 was largely spent in an effort to find out how much paper was in sight, and how much would be required. The large metropolitan papers, which have adequate supplies contracted for, have so far not shown any tendency to release any part of their supply for the benefit of the smaller papers. The Trade Commission is attempting to determine whether the present apparent shortage is a real or a panic shortage. There are said to be 23,000 small publishers in the country towns of the nation who are experiencing difficulty in securing supplies.

AN ENEMY IN THE CAMP. New York State has been looked upon as the last refuge of liquor. The license element was therefore thrown into a near panic on December 18 by the announcement that Governor Whitman had declared himself as heartily in favor of the general principles of the prohibition movement. The governor is expected to give his official endorsement to one of several bills which will be before the legislature in the coming session. A stiff fight will be made for a state-wide local option law. A proposition is pending for a referendum on state-wide prohibition.

CITIZENS IN TRAINING. According to the annual report of the Commissioner of Education, approximately 24 per cent. of the inhabitants of the United States are attending school in 1916 as compared with 19 per cent. in Great Britain, 17 per cent. in France, 20 per cent. in Germany and a little over 4 per cent. in Russia, the total number of persons in school being 23,500,000. Of this number 706,000 are teachers, and of the teachers 169,000 are men and 537,000 women. The total cost of education to the whole country is approximately $1,000,000,000 a year.

SWITZERLAND REMAINS NEUTRAL. Edmund Schulthess, who for the past year has been vice-president of the Federal Council, was on December 14 elected president of the Swiss Federation for 1917. He immediately pledged his administration to strict neutrality.

ABOUT $76 WORTH APIECE. According to the Department of Agriculture, crops of 1916 were worth $7,641,609,000, nearly $2,000,000,000 more than the value of last year's, although the crops themselves were smaller than last year's. The yields and values of the principal crops are given as follows: Corn, 2,583,241,000 bushels, valued at $2,295,783,000; wheat, 639,886,000 bushels, worth $1,025,765,000; cotton, 11,511,000 bales, worth $1,079,598,000; hay, 89,991,000 tons, worth $1,008,894,000; oats, 1,251,992,000 bushels, worth $96,673,000; potatoes, 285,437,000 bushels, worth $95,071,000; sweet potatoes, 70,955,000 bushels, worth $13,161,000; barley, 180,927,000 bushels, worth $41,362,000; rye, 47,383,000 bushels, worth $12,774,000; buckwheat, 11,840,000 bushels, worth $1,521,000; flax seed, 15,459,000 bushels, worth $13,940,000; rice, 41,982,000 bushels, worth $10,974,000; sugar beets, 6,671,000 tons, worth $4,243,000; apples, 67,695,000 barrels, worth $27,660,000; oranges, 23,835,000 boxes, worth $9,545,000. The International Institute of Agriculture at Rome on December 5 published a report under the title "Has the World Enough to Live on Until the Next Harvest?" in which it expressed the conclusion that the world must save in the use of cereals; that close economy might leave a narrow margin of surplus at the beginning of the next harvest; but that if the next harvest should be no better than the present, the situation will be serious.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. The War Department announced on December 12 that Lieutenant-Colonel George O. Squier, U. S. A., of the Signal Corps, had perfected an appliance that makes it possible to receive cable messages in the Morse code by telephone. . . . On December 18, 16,647 more National Guardsmen were ordered back to their homes from the border, reducing the force in border service to 75,000, which number will be maintained for the present. . . . The will of John D. Archbold, who was reputed as worth $100,000,000, disclosed that his estate was worth under twenty-five million. The whole estate goes to the widow and children, no outside bequests being made. . . . Dr. Harvey W. Wiley on December 9 declared for municipal and city control of all food-stuffs, stating that "the people must take this thing into their own hands." . . . The Senate is considering several propositions, each of which would result in prohibition for the District of Columbia. . . . The striking garment workers in New York have been offered the increase of two dollars a week asked for, the manufacturers refusing to reduce the working hours. About half of the original body of strikers are reported back at work. . . . Plans are being perfected for an aeroplane mail route between Chicago and New York, to begin regular service in about eighteen months. . . . Because of favorable postal arrangements, Japan is said to be sending nearly $4,000,000 worth of goods a year to Russia through the mails. The new American commercial treaty with Russia is still to be arranged. . . . The suit of the Dodge Brothers against Henry Ford resulted in a sixty-day injunction against the construction of the smelting plant and other development works which Mr. Ford was planning. This injunction the Dodge Brothers are now seeking to have made permanent. . . . President and Mrs. Wilson quietly celebrated the first anniversary of their wedding on December 18. . . . According to the National City Bank there has been produced in all the world since the discovery of America, $16,500,000,000 worth of gold, of which America has produced $3,830,000,000; and $15,500,000,000 of silver, of which America has produced $1,800,000,000. Of this gold production $8,000,000,000 worth has been produced in the last twenty-five years. . . . One way to supply coal to the poor was tried in Public School 34, New York, on December 15, when each pupil brought a piece of coal to school. There are 1,900 pupils in the school, and their contributions filled forty pails of the kind that is sold by coal dealers in New York at fifteen cents. . . . The channel of the Panama Canal through the Culebra Cut is now reported in good condition, so that ships are handled past the slides without delay. . . . The people of Denmark have voted by a large majority to sell the Danish Islands to the United States government. This vote has

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

been ratified by the lower house of the Danish parliament, by a vote of 90 to 16 and by the upper house on December 21, 40 to 19. . . . On December 6, the Spanish steamer Pio IX foundered in a storm, 700 miles west of Cadiz. Forty of her crew were drowned, eleven survivors being rescued by the Spanish liner Buenos Aires. . . . A bill has been introduced in Congress which proposes that the government buy all wireless telegraph stations in the United States that communicate with ships at sea. . . . A bill has been introduced in the House by Representative Randall of California, which proposes to bar liquor advertising from the mails. . . . Professor Hugo Münsterberg, of Harvard University, generally considered the most able exponent in America of German aims and culture, died suddenly on December 16. . . . Alonzo Kimball, the first manufacturer of pin-tickets for marking merchandise, died early in December, aged eighty-eight. . . . China is experiencing a money stringency through the converting of her ancient coin, "the cash," into bullion, it being worth more as copper than as cash.

THE WORLD TALKS PEACE. Guarded expressions of statesmen and stray fragments of news from belligerent and neutral nations show that the undercurrent of universal desire for peace which has been reported from time to time by various travelers and observers, is moving more strongly, gaining volume and voice. The note of the President is officially reported as being coldly received in England and Bonar Law is said to have declared negotiations to be impossible on the basis of the proposal of the Central Powers, while the New York Evening Post prints a statement by Stephen A. Chandler of Exeter, England, that there is a growing pacifist sentiment in England which is being muzzled by the military censorship. Also certain elements of the socialist and labor parties in Germany have, ever since the war began, taken advantage of every opportunity to urge peace. The proposals of peace have furnished the mechanism through which the desire for peace may work. The desire is no longer merely voiceless hunger, for now the world talks peace even while the fighting goes on.

President Urges World Peace

The Secretary of State to the American Ambassadors at the Capitals of the Belligerent Powers:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
WASHINGTON, D. C.,
Dec. 18, 1916.

THE President directs me to send you the following communication to be presented immediately to the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Government to which you are accredited:

The President of the United States has instructed me to suggest to the [here is inserted a designation of the Government addressed] a course of action with regard to the present war, which he hopes that the Government will take under consideration as suggested in the most friendly spirit, and as coming not only from a friend but also as coming from the representative of a neutral nation whose interests have been most seriously affected by the war and whose concern for its early conclusion arises out of a manifest necessity to determine how best to safeguard those interests if the war is to continue.

The suggestion which I am instructed to make the President has long had it in mind to offer. He is somewhat embarrassed to offer it at this particular time, because it may now seem to have been prompted by—This phrase inserted here in the note to the Central Powers:—(a desire to play a part in connection with) the recent overtures of the Central Powers. It is, in fact, in no way associated with them in its origin, and the President would have delayed offering it until those overtures had been answered but for the fact that it also concerns the question of peace and may best be considered in connection with other proposals which have the same end in view. The President can only beg that his suggestion be considered entirely on its own merits and as if it had been made in other circumstances.

THE President suggests that an early occasion be sought to call out from all nations now at war such an avowal of their respective views as to the terms upon which the war might be concluded and the arrangements which would be deemed satisfactory as a guaranty against its renewal or the kindling of any similar conflict in the future as would make it possible frankly to compare them. He is indifferent as to the means taken to accomplish this. He would be happy himself to serve, or even to take the initiative in its accomplishment, in any way that might prove acceptable, but he has no desire to determine the method or the instrumentality. One way will be as acceptable to him as another, if only the great object he has in mind be attained.

He takes the liberty of calling attention to the fact that the objects, which the statement of the belligerents on both sides have in mind in this war, are virtually the same, as stated in general terms to their own people and to the world. Each side desires to make the rights and privileges of weak peoples and small States as secure against aggression or denial in the future as the rights and privileges of the great and powerful States now at war. Each wishes itself to be made secure in the future, along with all other nations and peoples, against the recurrence of wars like this and against aggression or selfish interference of any kind. Each would be jealous of the formation of any more rival leagues to preserve an uncertain balance of power amid multiplying suspicions; but each is ready to consider the formation of a league of nations to insure peace and justice throughout the world. Before that final step can be taken, however, each deems it necessary first to settle the issues of the present war upon terms which will certainly safeguard the independence, the territorial integrity, and the political and commercial freedom of the nations involved.

In the measures to be taken to secure the future peace of the world the people and Government of the United States are as vitally and as directly interested as the Governments now at war. Their interest, moreover, in the means to be adopted to relieve the smaller and weaker peoples of the world of the peril of wrong and violence is as quick and ardent as that of any other people or Government. They stand ready, and even eager, to co-operate in the accomplishment of these ends, when the war is over, with every influence and resource at their command. But the war must first be concluded. The terms upon which it is to be concluded they are not at liberty to suggest; but the President does feel that it is his right and his duty to point out their intimate interest in its conclusion, lest it should presently be too late to accomplish the greater things which lie beyond its conclusion, lest the situation of neutral nations, now exceedingly hard to endure, be rendered altogether intolerable, and lest, more than all, an injury be done civilization itself which can never be atoned for or repaired.

THE President therefore feels altogether justified in suggesting an immediate opportunity for a comparison of views as to the terms which must precede those ultimate arrangements for the peace of the world, which all desire and in which the neutral nations as well as those at war are ready to play their full responsible part. If the contest must continue to proceed toward undefined ends by slow attrition until the one group of belligerents or the other is exhausted; if million after million of human lives must continue to be offered up until on the one side or the other there are no more to offer; if resentments must be kindled that can never cool and despairs engendered from which there can be no recovery, hopes of peace and of the willing concert of free peoples will be rendered vain and idle.

The life of the entire world has been profoundly affected. Every part of the great family of mankind has felt the burden and terror of this unprecedented contest of arms. No nation in the civilized world can be said in truth to stand outside its influence or to be safe against its disturbing effects. And yet the concrete objects for which it is being waged have never been definitively stated.

The leaders of the several belligerents have, as has been said, stated those objects in general terms. But, stated in general terms, they seem the same on both sides. Never yet have the authoritative spokesmen of either side avowed the precise objects which would, if attained, satisfy them and their people that the war had been fought out. The world has been left to conjecture what definite results, what actual exchange of guaranties, what political or territorial changes or readjustments, what stage of military success, even, would bring the war to an end.

IT may be that peace is nearer than we know; that the terms which the belligerents on the one side and on the other would deem it necessary to insist upon are not so irreconcilable as some have feared; that an interchange of views would clear the way at least for conference and make the permanent concord of the nations a hope of the immediate future, a concert of nations immediately practicable.

The President is not proposing peace; he is not even offering mediation. He is merely proposing that soundings be taken in order that we may learn, the neutral nations with the belligerent, how near the haven of peace may be for which all mankind longs with an intense and increasing longing. He believes that the spirit in which he speaks and the objects which he seeks will be understood by all concerned, and he confidently hopes for a response which will bring a new light into the affairs of the world.

LANSING.

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

IN Rumania, during the past week, no stand, nor indeed any attempt at a stand, was made by the retreating Rumanians and Russians in eastern Wallachia, and the Teutons have now practically reached the southern boundary line of Moldavia. There was expectation that the Rumanians would attempt a more strenuous resistance on the line of the Buseu River, which runs east and west across eastern Wallachia, but the reports show nothing of the kind attempted, and the Teutons have crossed this stream on a wide front, and also forced the passage of the lower Calmatni. The Rumanian parliament is to transfer itself to Petrograd, and the rest of the government is to move from Jassy to some other city in Russia.

In Dobrudja also the Russians and Rumanians are in full retreat northward, with a mixed force of Germans, Austrians, Bulgars and Turks in hot chase. These latter have reached a line parallel to and about ten miles south of the most southerly of the three arms into which the Danube splits as it approaches the Black Sea. It is expected, however, that when the Russo-Rumanian forces reach the extreme northern portion of the Dobrudja, which is covered with forests, they will try to arrest the advance of their foes. Indeed, they must do so to escape being either cut to pieces or forced to surrender.

There seems to be considerable doubt in the minds of writers on the war as to whether the Teutons will keep up their movement northeastward in Rumania, and eventually attack Russia through Bessarabia, or whether they will swing a large part of their forces now in Rumania to the Macedonian front. The Russian attack has greater possible injury to the enemy to recommend it, besides which to leave a job half finished would hardly be like the Teutons. The Macedonian front has lost practically all its importance since the conquest of Rumania, which has opened shorter routes of communication between the Central Empires and Turkey through Rumania and Bulgaria. Hence, it seems probable that Russia will be the objective for such winter operations as are undertaken by the Teutonic armies.

For the first time in a long period, the Mesopotamian front contributed on Monday to the week's news. Below Kut-el-Amara at Sannayat, the British assumed the offensive, apparently suddenly. This offensive was successful in capturing the left bank of the Hai River, and after crossing the river, in clearing the right bank of Turks for a considerable distance inland, ultimately driving the Turks from their trenches at Kala Haji Fahan.

Greece was presented with the latest Allied ultimatum the afternoon of December 18, demanding removal of the Greek troops in North Greece, to begin within twenty-four hours. If this ultimatum were not complied with, the ministers of the Entente powers were to quit Greece, since the Allies would consider the disregarding of the note by the Greek government as a hostile act. Although reported otherwise, the Greek government had not complied, so far as we are creditably informed. In Mr. Lloyd George's speech it was announced that the Allies intended to recognize the government which Venizelos has set up in Salonica as the government of Greece. Prior to this, however, the Greek government at Athens had had a warrant issued for the arrest of Venizelos on a charge of high treason. On the whole, the situation in Greece is obscure.

The Germans announce the sinking of a French transport, the Maghelan, near the island of Panatella, south of Sicily, on December 11, with 1,000 men.

The Austro-Italian front can be dismissed with brief mention. Except for occasional artillery duels and insignificant infantry clashes, of not even real importance, nothing took place anywhere on this front last week, and presumably this condition of stagnation will continue till the spring, if the war lasts till then.

General Joffre has handed over the command of the French armies of the north and the northeast to General Nivelle, and will now take up the duties of his advisory position as consulting technical military expert to the Allies. His retirement puts General Nivelle in absolute command of all the Allied armies on the western front.

While the Somme front of the western line was quiet most of the week, the beginning of a very heavy bombardment of the German positions toward the end of the week seemed to indicate an approaching infantry attack on a large scale.

On the Verdun front, however, there was some hard fighting, resulting in as complete a victory for the French as they have won for a considerable time. This fight opened Saturday morning, December 16, when the French, after several hours' artillery preparation, launched a general assault on a seven-mile front to the north of Douaumont, in the direction of Louvemont and Hardaumont, and during the day advanced on the whole to a depth of about two miles, taking 7,500 prisoners and some heavy artillery.

On Sunday fighting continued, and both the villages named above were captured by the French, as well as Vacherauville on the Meuse, and the famous Pepper Hill. On Monday the Germans recovered a small portion of their losses by recapturing the Chambrettes farm, from which, however, a subsequent French counter-attack again drove them out. After this the fighting relapsed into an artillery duel. In the whole affair the French took about 11,500 prisoners, over 100 cannon and a large amount of supplies and munitions of war.

At some points on this north front, the French have now driven the Germans back to within a mile of the line from which the latter began their attack last February.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

To Open the Way to Peace

PREMIER LLOYD GEORGE'S speech in the House of Commons followed the lines anticipated, and gave the keynote to the formal reply to Germany which is to follow. It was the strong utterance of a leader under tremendous tension and suddenly burdened with a sense of responsibility which he unhesitatingly declared to be the greatest that ever rested on one man's shoulders. He felt that "a crime that oceans could not cleanse" would lie at the door of those who, without sufficient cause, prolonged the war; yet to abandon the struggle through weariness or despair, without achieving the purpose aimed at, would be the basest cowardice. He repelled the suggestion that the Allies had any designs against the national existence of Germany, or her freedom of development. But there must be "complete restitution, full reparation and effectual guarantees." These he indicated as an essential basis to any peace conference that might follow.

The speech itself is not a finality, but rather a prelude to the British note which now goes to the Central Powers. While stating the maximum demands, as is customary at the outset of negotiations, Lloyd George leaves the way open for discussion, with the proviso that Germany take the initiative in submitting terms. There may be proposals and counter-proposals, and a long road with many obstacles may have to be traveled before a conclusion is reached.

When our government transmitted the note of the Central Powers to the Allies, it was sent without comment, in deference to diplomatic usage. Neutrality is a frigid virtue, capable of chilling the warm blood that flows in the hearts of men. Now, however, before the sending of the Allies' reply, President Wilson has seized the opportune moment to send a note addressed to all the belligerent governments, which may be productive of the happiest results. In that note (which we publish elsewhere in this issue) he suggests that all the belligerents should give their views as to the terms upon which the war might be brought to an end. He even goes so far as to say that he "would be happy himself to serve or even to take the initiative," in order to bring about such a general presentation of views as he has indicated; yet he is careful to explain that in making this suggestion he is not proposing peace, nor even offering mediation. His note, which was written before Premier Lloyd George's speech, is a clear, logical and admirable presentation of America's friendly attitude and an expression of our deep solicitude for the welfare of all the nations. God grant that it may prove a substantial step toward the ending of the war!

Can They Stampede the Country?

IN a recent address, in which he pictured America's part in the great world drama now being enacted, the President used the following words:

"When we look forward to the end of this war, we want all the world to know that we are ready to lend our forces without stint to the preservation of peace in the interest of mankind. The world is no longer divided into little circles of interest. The world no longer consists of neighborhoods. The world is linked together in a common life and interests such as humanity never saw before, and the starting of wars can never again be a private and individual matter for the nations." This was a worthy expression of the American attitude, and of the broad and far-reaching vision of the nation, which looks beyond narrow, selfish interests, and holds its mission to be one which relates to the welfare of the world.

An incident which is strangely at variance with our national peace professions is found in the report of statements before a sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs by two of the highest ranking officers of the United States army. At that hearing the military chiefs advocated an army of 3,000,000 men; strongly urged universal military training; pronounced the volunteer system a failure, National Guard mobilization a "tragedy," and the menace of hostile foreign powers greater than ever. It is clear that the militarists are again in the saddle, and unless they receive a stern rebuke from the American people, they may have their way. Are we to learn nothing from the tragedy of the great war? Are the slain millions of Europe, the devastated cities, the shattered homes, the bankrupt treasuries to be without a lesson to this republic, which has been the world's hope for a century past? If we may believe the militarists, the only lesson of the war for ourselves is that we must prepare for a greater to follow. We must be a nation in arms, not only equal in point of equipment, by air, land and sea, to any other power on earth, but superior to any possible combination of powers that may be formed against us. We must spend billions upon billions of dollars and impoverish the whole nation that we may be ready for war.

It is of no material consequence to those military hotspurs that the whole world is war-sick and that at this moment it is groping to find a way toward permanent peace. While the old world is looking forward to disarmament, to assure a peace that will avert further financial disaster, we are to put on the whole armor of a nation ready for war.

We cannot and will not believe that the President has become a convert to the startling plan of militarizing the nation, on the plea that it is needful for defense. We have no quarrel with any other nation, and now that the war may be drawing to a close, there is less justification than ever for this violent attempt to stampede the country into militarization. We trust to see the Executive sit down upon the whole business with heavy emphasis.

The Inventory

THE first weeks of the year is inventory time. Banks compile their annual statements, big business casts up its accounts, stocks of merchandise are overhauled to determine what lines it will pay to keep. The old year is made to tell its story of profits and losses in columns of figures.

The inventory is just as helpful to the individual life. We should stop, at least once a year, carefully to determine what purposes have helped or hindered, what endeavors have brought a spiritual profit or loss, what lines of conduct have strengthened or slackened our hold upon the better things.

It is well worth while to take an annual inventory of one's character and achievements—to balance that column of figures which stands for the invisible but all-important things pertaining to daily life. The man, whatever his work or his aim, who is not getting on as he should, needs a searching inventory. It will show him where his stock of enthusiasm and energy has not been kept fresh, and where the shelves of his mind and heart hold shoddy, which is a drug on the market of life.

No man succeeds or fails, goes forward or slips back, grows in happiness or swamps in misery, without good reason. He who is dissatisfied with his condition and would better it must put out of his mind all notions about luck, and settle down to a careful inquiry of his qualifications and efforts. He may have to admit that he had found something wrong within himself. This is a priceless discovery.

While we are measuring the material things so painstakingly, we would be shortsighted indeed not to measure also the more precious treasures of the mind and heart and soul. For the real life is within, and the rules which obtain there are just as immutable as those which obtain without. To get something for nothing, to profit in shoddy, to foist worthless merchandise, is as impossible in the inner life as in the outer one. To get value we must have value. To grow we must give. To really live we must put forth the very best of ourselves.

To forecast the blessings which are to be ours during the year we must inventory our own stock of honesty, industry, love, sympathy, charity and kindly helpfulness. Without these, our hope for success and happiness is as vain as is the hope for profits by the merchant whose shelves are bare.

The Things We Cling To

IT is said that the people of the war-shattered communities of Europe, the moment the shells cease to fall about their homes, return to rebuild and to sow new crops, notwithstanding the contending armies may trample them again at any time.

The remarkable thing is that the residents of these vicinities, aware as they are of the dangers close at hand, should continue to make their homes and to cultivate their farms on the very edge of the firing lines.

The same seeming foolhardiness has ever been shown by the people on the slopes of Vesuvius and in other volcanic regions. After flight in terror from an eruption, they return before the ashes are cool.

The case is not different with people who live in regions visited by earthquakes, tornadoes, tidal waves or fevers. Neither Lisbon nor San Francisco was abandoned after the great earthquakes, nor Galveston after the great wave. A Western town destroyed by wind is rebuilt, not deserted. Yet no one can guarantee the inhabitants immunity from similar visitations. Each man has his own way of earning a livelihood and his own place of living. He cannot tell whether he would fare as well elsewhere. There is his home, and there are all the associations that make life sweet.

Transplanting the lives of thousands of people is no small matter. There are things we cling to as tenaciously as to life itself. Among these are home, friends, customs, that grow upon us from childhood and become an inseparable part of us.

The danger must be indeed deadly and imminent to drive mankind from these, the dearest things in life.

The Public Buildings Grab

THERE has been no lack of indication that the country has sickened of "pork" in congressional appropriations. General public condemnation of the $43,000,000 Rivers and Harbors Bill had not yet died down, when another pork barrel is rolled into Congress in the form of $35,000,000 in appropriation for public buildings. The fact that there yawns ahead a treasury deficit of $185,000,000 in the general fund is not the sole, nor the most important, reason against this reckless appropriation. There is in the practice a menace far more serious than a treasury deficit. It is the menace of political graft in the influence of votes on all classes of legislation, which is none the less dangerous because the graft goes not to the congressman direct but to the community he represents.

The present public buildings act provides "pork" for 300 or more separate congressional districts, thus insuring 300 or more votes for it. Were votes thus secured for this measure alone, it would be bad enough; but—worse yet—by this form of bribery votes are bought for all kinds of other measures, which —good, bad or indifferent—cease to stand upon their merits.

The test of time and common sense has shown the notorious Public Buildings Bill of 1913 to be wasteful in about 80 per cent. of its items. The present bill on its face appears no better. For instance, one Florida town with a population of 2,812, where a post office is rented for $600 a year, is to have a $65,000 building; another town in the same state, with 1,915 people, rental $350, is given a $70,000 building. Nine Florida towns, with population aggregating only 25,774, receive nearly a half-million dollars. Nor is Florida especially favored. Chadron, Neb., population 2,687, gets a $125,000 building; Wahoo, same state, whose population increased only 68 from 1900 to 1910, is given a post office costing $56,000. Willow, Calif., population 1,099 in 1900 and 1,139 in 1910, gets a $75,000 post office. The same generosity with the people's money is extravagantly bestowed upon hamlets throughout the entire country. In the appropriations for Federal court houses there seems to be the same reckless disregard of needs. Bowling Green, Ky., with three days of court a year, is given a $145,000 court house. It is but a sample of scores of like cases. North Carolina gets seven Federal court houses, at a total cost of $1,458,000, for a total of 49 court days. Of course, the original cost of all these buildings is by no means all; the cost of maintenance will be a continuous expense. In many towns where post offices have been rented for $600 to $1,000 a year, the cost of keeping up the new building will run from $2,000 to $5,000.

Such appropriations are possible only through the method of bunching them all in an omnibus bill and forcing it through Congress intact. When the last Public Buildings Act was rushed through its opponents were allowed only twenty minutes for discussion. By the same method the present bill will be jammed through, unless sufficient popular protest is raised at once.

Greetings

AT the beginning of a New Year, the Christian Herald gives cordial greeting to those friends whose bright minds and able pens have made its pages luminous throughout the year just ended. May the New Year bring to the entire body of contributors still greater opportunities of service, and may a rich blessing rest upon the ministry conducted through its pages.

Our heartiest greetings to every member of the great Christian Herald Family. May their united Christian influence be more than ever a power for peaceful and godly living, and for the upbuilding of the kingdom of righteousness on earth.

And to God's people in every land we send cordial greeting. May their earnest prayers for the restoration of peace to a war-torn world be heard and answered.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D.D.

Possesses William Penn's Bible

WHAT is undoubtedly one of the most interesting as well as valuable copies of the Holy Book in existence has been obtained by Judge John M. Patterson. It is William Penn's copy, which he used for several years and finally gave to his son John. It is a sturdy volume, with substantial board covers in rich brown leather. An inscription opposite the title page in the hand of Penn, states: "Squire Medford's gift in lieu of a mourning ring for my deare nephew, Anthony Lowther, and which I give to my deare son John Penn, the first day of the second month, 1705." It was Penn's purpose to found and govern the colony of Pennsylvania without arms or military defenses, to reduce the Indian tribes by gentle and just measures to the life of civil society and the Christian religion, to lay the foundation of a broad colony for all mankind. He granted liberty of conscience to all and declared that none should be molested in matters of faith and worship. A Bible belonging to such a man represents an association which is most inspiring. William Penn had almost more than his share of trouble. In the beginning of his career, before he founded Pennsylvania or laid out the city of Philadelphia (brotherly love), he was persecuted and thrown into prison, and at the last his colony got into a snarl, and he fell into financial bankruptcy by the dishonesty of a trusted steward. But at the beginning the grand old Quaker wrote a book, "No Cross, No Crown," and at the last, though thrown into prison for debt, and distressed at the conduct of his son, he trusted in the promises of God's Word, and rested his head on the bosom of Christ. William Penn verified the truth of these words: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." (Ps. 119 : 105.)

$600,000 for Business Training

THE trustees of Columbia University have announced the receipt of a gift of $600,000, the largest anonymous offering ever made to the University, for the erection of a suitable home for the Columbia School of Business, which began its first year last September. The donor, who is believed to be a railroad man, in a note accompanying the money said so many college graduates had applied to him for positions who knew almost nothing about business that he felt there was a demand in college life for a business course. There is this Scriptural encouragement to diligence in business life for the Christian: "Not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord." (Rom. 12 : 11.)

Collie Saves a Boy

VICTOR, a ten-year-old boy, was saved from severe injury if not death the other day by the intervention of his dog when attacked by a sow. The boy was running around a straw rick and stumbled over the hog, which had made a bed for her pigs under the edge of the stack. The animal savagely attacked Victor, threw him down, bit him in the forehead, and seemed about to kill him, when Jasper, the pet collie, the companion and guardian of the boy, seeing the situation, sprang at the hog, sank his teeth into her flesh, and liberated the boy. Bred for generations in intelligence and guardian care, to take the place of a man in tending sheep, the collie in his knowledge of the flock and in his watchful care over it is a real shepherd. When there are no sheep to care for, the collie feels that his duty is to guard the home or persons of the family, especially of the children. Ordinarily the pet collie dog will not go far away from the baby carriage, or the children at play. The action of the dog in rescuing the boy suggests the duty of caring for the bodies and souls of others, and rescuing them from danger and death, and also of that divine providential care thus expressed: "Behold, the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy, to deliver their soul from death." (Ps. 33 : 18, 19.)

Money Found in War Ruins

THE London Chronicle records this incident. Recently a French civilian and his wife came to Fricourt, which is now far back from the fighting lines. Of the village there remain only a few rubbish heaps among the litter of complete destruction, but the Frenchman pointed to a plot of earth in all this turmoil and said: "There was my home. I am sure of it." The party started scraping up the earth. Suddenly there was a cry of astonishment. "God be thanked, it is here, I have found it!" cried the Frenchman. He and his wife had found 35,000 francs, all the treasure of their life, six inches deep under the soil that had been flung up by mine craters, burrowed by high explosives, tramped over by troops and tortured by every destructive act of war. Would that all the people and nations might get back what they have lost in this war! That is impossible. The billions of dollars of waste, it will take a generation of hard work and saving to repair. The best that can be hoped is that out of the ruins of the battlefield there may be dug up spiritual treasures that will enrich the mind and soul, that out of the ashes may spring a better civilization, more prosperous and happy, and a peace that shall never be broken through the centuries, one in which "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other." (Ps. 85 : 10.)

Porto Rico's Large Coffee Crop

THE coffee crop now being harvested in Porto Rico promises to be one of the largest and most valuable ever produced in that island. More than 3,750,000 pounds of the new crop have been exported in the last two months at an average price of $17.90 per hundred pounds. Supplies of Porto Rico coffee everywhere are low, and there is a keen demand for it. Cuba, Spain and Italy are the principal purchasers. A shortage of transportation facilities is delaying shipments to Europe. But for damage done to the crop by a hurricane in August, a little while before the berries matured, it is estimated that the present crop would have been the largest ever produced. Probably ten per cent. of the crop was lost by the storm. It is expected that there will be between 45,000,000 and 50,000,000 pounds for export despite this loss. The coffee tree is a native of Abyssinia, Arabia and many parts of Africa, and is naturalized in many of the tropical countries, colonized by the Europeans. Coffee from the island of Java is known the world over. Brazil is producing and will more and more continue to produce enormous crops of the coffee berry. Porto Rico is an agricultural island; sixty-five per cent. of its population are farmers. Besides the coffee crop they have sugar, cotton, fruit, and cattle products bountiful and valuable. The island has never been as prosperous since Columbus discovered it in 1493 as it is now. There was this promise to the loyal nation of a bountiful harvest: "So shall thy barns be filled with plenty." (Prov. 3 : 10.)

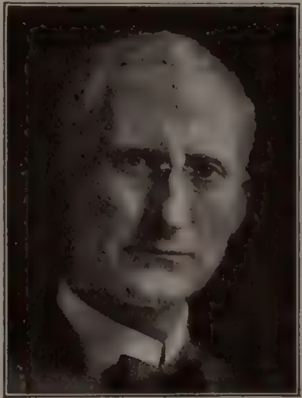
Paralysis Reward $25,000

MR. T. CRANE recently offered a reward of $25,000 for the physician who should first discover the infantile paralysis germ, and produce a remedy that would cure the disease. Five men, two in Chicago, one in New York, one in Rochester, Minn., one in Baltimore, and perhaps others, are claiming in the papers to have found the germ. That is only a part of the requirement. The other is that a remedy carefully tested shall be produced. A bacteriologist in one of the hospitals of Chicago is quite happy in the claim that within a few days he will have the serum ready that will master the disease. Medical science has done such wonders that it is likely that the remedy will be discovered and this pitiful massacre of the innocents be brought to an end. Christ was the Great Physician with his divine healing for the body as well as soul; "And Jesus went forth, and saw a great multitude, and was moved with compassion toward them, and he healed their sick." (Matt. 14 : 14.)

Clean Money

CONSIDERABLE space was given in the newspapers of the land to the refusal of a young woman to accept a fortune left her by her uncle, on the ground that it was "tainted money." She was commended by some and condemned by others for her course. It seems that she changed her mind and concluded to accept the money. She will receive $119,860 of the estate, according to a supplementary appraisal filed the other day in the office of the Surrogate. The gross estate amounted to $208,108. According to the original appraisal, the niece, as next of kin, was to inherit the net estate of $194,860. Among the papers of the deceased were found memoranda indicating that he intended to leave $65,000 to various charities and $10,000 to a friend. These claims were not allowed in settling the estate, but the heiress decided they should be paid. Although at the time of the uncle's death the niece declared that she would not touch a cent of the money because it was "tainted," the facts revealed that every dollar of his fortune was gotten by the most competent and constant and honest work at his desk for some forty years. Yet it hardly paid him to scrape together $100,000 or more to fall into the hands of ingratitude, and even hate, as many another fortune has done. How much better to have given money to these charitable institutions while he was living, to have seen the good it would have done, and realized the great fact that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." (Acts 20 : 35.)

A Christian Statesman



WITH Governor-elect James P. Goodrich, founder of the largest Sunday school class in his home town and a fearless Christian worker, in the governor's chair starting January 1, the forces fighting for a dry Indiana and good government will receive a powerful impetus. Governor Goodrich hails from Winchester, Ind. A quarter of a century ago he established a Sunday school class in the Presbyterian church of that town with a dozen men, which now has an average attendance of more than two hundred. Business men, professional men, farmers, laborers and men of all types are included in the large class. Since the founding of the class Mr. Goodrich has given it his personal attention. Many times on a Saturday night he has found himself one or two hundred miles away, but when the class started on the Sunday morning, he was at his post. One time in particular, when Governor Goodrich was on a business trip in the mountain districts of Kentucky, he traveled by donkey, horse and buggy, train, and finally automobile, in order to get back to Indiana and his class. Mr. Goodrich will return on Sundays to the class as during the campaign he promised he would do if elected. At a Sunday afternoon men's mass meeting of the Young Men's Christian Association at Indianapolis, the Governor-elect reiterated his promise to materially aid the "dry" cause. He told the two thousand men that the greatest need in politics was the work of the Christian man. What a change! Only a few years ago a man could not have been elected "dog-pelter" in Indiana if he had ever said one word against the saloon. Governor Goodrich, in carrying his religion into every-day political life, is obeying Christ's command, "Render therefore unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's; and unto God the things that are God's" (Matt. 22 : 21.)

The Imperial City of Japan

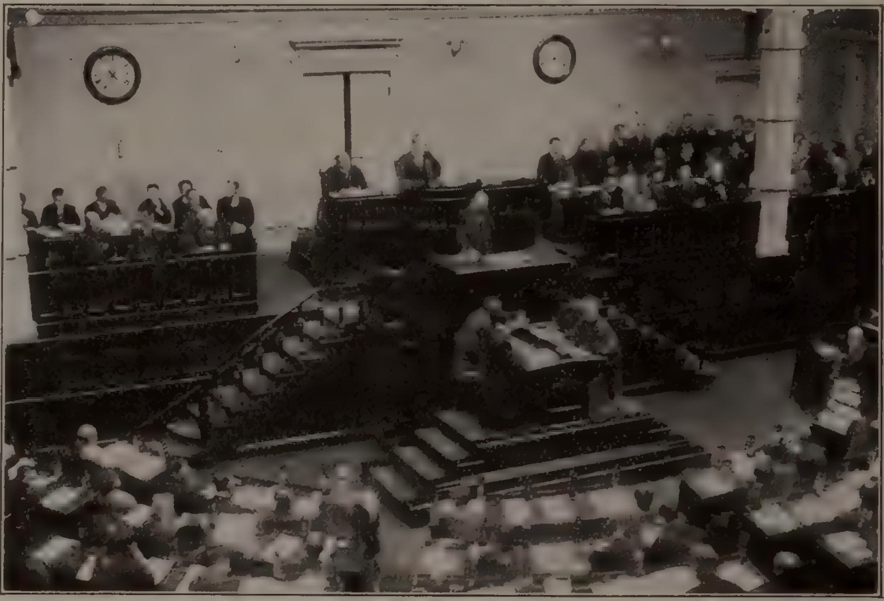
By
MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

AS the World's Sunday School Convention in Tokyo is not to be held until the end of the war, the names of the speakers have not yet been given out; and although a giant auditorium, for which Baron Shibusawa gave the money, is being built for this great gathering of the Sunday school workers of the world, the plans have not yet been completed. But the city in which the cosmopolitan meeting is to be held is one of great interest, if one has opportunities to get acquainted with it.

Tokyo is made up of a group of small towns which expanded until, like the old lady's two teeth, they hit. It is the most conservative city in Japan, and is the one most lacking in unity of spirit. Each district has its own market and its own shops. Homes and stores are mixed together in bewildering confusion, and even old residents find it hard to find their way about the crooked streets.

On my motorcycle, the only way I have mastered the problem is by memorizing the numbers of the tram lines and then riding till I see a car. Then I know where I am. The city is grouped around the Imperial Palace, and segments, like dehorned pieces of pie, radiate from the center of the cobweb. As one cannot start from the center of this mix-up, due to the fact that that is where the sacred person of the Emperor holds court, he must play "ring around the rosy" at some distance from the center. If he is near the outer circumference, two miles on his speedometer mean one thing. If he circles the inner moat, they mean another.

One's first impression on reaching Tokyo is that it is exceedingly well provided with means of transportation. Up through the middle of the city runs the elevated trestle, under which scores of warehouses and shops utilize the covered space, and on this four-track trestle electric and steam trains enter and leave in steady streams. The streets are filled with automobiles, motor trucks, bicycles, man-drawn carts—every type of vehicle except the baby carriage. The baby carriage of Japan is the mother's back or the daddy's shoulder, and I have no doubt that this closeness of mother and child throughout months and years has much to do with the excellent behavior of the bright little babies. Street cars pass a given point every minute or two, and at a crossing there are always a half-dozen big trams in sight.



Japanese House of Representatives: membership is 380. There is also a House of Peers, 366 members including 15 princes of the blood

But after one has ridden for a few weeks on Tokyo trams, he realizes that more than two million people, living within a radius of three miles of the Imperial Palace, require many trams to carry them. Seats are always at a premium. Even the New York subway is not as continually crowded. The trams are fast, well handled and plenteous. But a moving stairway or sidewalk covering all the tramlines in the city would scarcely fill the bill.

There are five or six stations from which trains depart for different parts of the empire, but these stations are only joined by city trams, so that if one wants to go from Tokyo Station, the terminus of the Shimonoseki Line to Europe, to Ueno Station, whence trains depart for Nikko, Karuizawa, Sendai and Hokkaido, he must take a ricksha, a taxicab or a street car, or else circle the city for more than twenty miles in more than an hour to reach a station that is only a mile and a half away as the crow flies.

The Tokyo Station is architecturally a joke and practically a failure, but it is a most imposing pile nevertheless. It must be a quarter of a mile in length. Incoming passengers enter at one end and out going travelers leave at the other, but if they want to go from one end of the station to the other, they have to go out and around, for the center is reserved for the Emperor.

The presence of the imperial family and the court in Tokyo makes the city far more conservative than those of the provinces. Automobile owners in Tokyo lag behind the rugged farmers of the Hokkaido in progress, and Tokyo will wait for hours to use streets over which the Emperor is to pass. This willingness to suspend business on such occasions is lessening, and officials are making these ceremonies less burdensome than formerly, when whole districts of a modern city were tied up simply because the Emperor was returning from his summer palace in Nikko. Osaka is more modern in spirit.

The streets of Tokyo are wide and there are sidewalks in some places, which few people use, as they are not sidewalks at all in the sense of being paved, except in a few small spots. Wooden geta or clogs are cheaper than asphalt, and no rubbers are needed even in muddy weather by any but the few who wear European clothes, and they ride in motor cars or rickshas.

In dry weather the streets are soaked; sprinkled is too mild a term. In rainy weather, puddles form here and there, which give the street department the clue where to throw down a peck of gravel which tramping feet and rolling tires make into roads. Not only do the crowds overflow the streets at all hours, but there is almost no observance of the law of the road except by trams, which invariably keep to the left. In one or two sections there are small sections of badly run-down paving; but for the most part the streets are filled with "thank-ye-mums," so that the autos and man-carts use the car tracks when they can.

The tourist centers are Shiba Park, where the tombs of the Tokugawa Shoguns attract large crowds; Hibya Park, where band concerts and athletic meets and flower shows are held; Ginza and Nihombashi, the Fifth Avenue and Broadway of the city; half a dozen museums, led by the Imperial Museum, whose new building reminds an American of a state capitol, and the Military Museum, whose battlemented walls rise above a wonderful collection of arms; Ueno Park, which in cherry-blossom time is a mammoth bouquet of the most beautiful flowers, and where some exhibition is always going on to attract the crowds of pleasure-seekers of Tokyo, who always seem to have time and money to visit the places of interest; and Asakusa Park, the Coney Island of Japan, once a theater district, but now given over to lurid movies, which divide interest with the dark depths of the Kwannon temple.

No tourist crosses the Sumida River, unless it is to visit the great amphitheater for a wrestling match or a chrysanthemum show; yet there is where the real secret of Tokyo's future lies. It is the factory and slum section of the city, and the population there has increased in the last decade ten times as fast as has the population in the district of Kojimachi, which surrounds the Palace.

In the last generation, the population of the five greatest industrial and commercial cities in Japan has increased by three hundred and fourteen per cent. as against an increase in the whole empire of fifteen per cent. The trend in Japan is cityward, and the visitor to Tokyo, seeing the streets crowded with people, does not realize that in the suburbs the growth in population has run from 250 to 500 per cent. in the last decade.

This move of the population from the maple-clad hills and rice fields of beautiful Japan to the crowded quarters, low resorts, and inhuman factories of the cities is lowering the physical efficiency, the mental horizon, and the moral standards of the people. Tuberculosis is taking its toll from frenzied industrialism. A prominent Y. M. C. A. worker, Mr. J. Merle Davis, whose study of the social problems of an increasing urban population in Japan has been thorough, says that an expert in factory conditions makes the statement that often one-half of the girls employed in certain mills become depraved within a year after entering the mills. They lose their health soon after, so that the price of a broader commerce and a sun flag in every port is being paid by weak womanhood and hollow-chested men.

Japan, honest as are her leaders and earnest as are her thoughtful men, lacks any considerable spirit of altruism which will go out of its way to do a Good

Tokyo never overlooks the opportunity of a bright day to rush to Ueno Park

Geisha girls present a lantern to the temple at Asakusa, Japan's Coney Island

Look, baby, see that funny American man taking our picture!

Samaritan act for any one. A few are fighting the fight of the many, but the background for the finest spiritual and moral efforts is heathenism. One would expect succor from the Christian missionaries who come from university courses in sociology, social service and industrial conditions. But not a single missionary lives in the trans-Sumida district. The Salvation Army is almost unaided in its fight for the health and souls of nearly a million people.

The missionary forces of Japan are not applied with the care and foresight which distinguish the work of the Young Men's Christian Association. The social service of the Association, containing as it does Christian precepts and practices, should be more strongly supported by the direct evangelism of the churches, both at home and abroad.

Two of the most interesting sights in Tokyo are the fish market at Nihombashi and the Mitsukoshi department store, very near the Billingsgate of Tokyo. Nihombashi is not only the geographical center of Tokyo, but of Japan, according to the Japanese, who ought to know. Here is situated what is probably the largest fish market in the world. There is every kind of fish a man could mention and a few thousand other varieties. Some big fellows cut up into great steaks, weighing ten pounds or so, and there are little ones which would make good minnow bait, if one could find a hook small enough not to mangle them. I think that in certain sections they must use a chamois skin for a fish net, and save everything that does not pass through the pores. Until the sea dries up around Japan, the islands will never starve.

Across from the fish market, and untouched by the piscatorial scent which pervades it, rises the modern building of the Mitsukoshi department store. If I could describe it in some vague, impersonal way, I would do it; but this modern store is so different from anything else in Japan, that any one would know the store I described.

But the Mitsukoshi store is worthy of description, even if some enthusiastic reader should use this article as a guide to shopping in Tokyo. The big sight of the store to me is the spotless matting that covers every floor. The floor is never trodden by the filthy shoe of out-doors. The Japanese put on light slippers and remove their geta or clogs, and the foreigners have foot coverings put on over their shoes, just as though they were visiting the Mosque of Omar or Saladin's tomb. From the roof one can see the great city spread out on all sides and a constant stream of visitors use the rapid elevators that carry them to the sixth floor. In the roof garden, where a fountain plays and an orchestra tries to, where there is an Inari shrine and an American soda fountain, one can sit and listen to the band and eat ice cream that is fairly good or drink soda water that reminds you of Socrates, Cleopatra and Lucretia Borgia. A conservatory attracts many who buy the seeds and potted plants, and there is a ceremonial tea room where notable guests are entertained. You can have a good photograph taken in the sky-high gallery and get the pictures an hour later, when you have finished the tour of the store. Like the raw materials in a modern factory, we were lifted to the top by an elevator and descended by gravity.

On the fifth floor some kind of an art exhibit is always in progress. Mail chutes convey the letters from the offices to the big box on the ground floor. Toys in the thousand bright colors of Japan make the next floor a Liliputian Paradise, and there is a big restaurant. Some rooms are fitted up as models in the Japanese style and some in the foreign style, which doubles the expenses of the man who would be cosmopolitan in his tastes.

When a middle-class Japanese lady goes out to any little function, her clothes, exclusive of pearl hair ornaments and any other jewelry, of which the Japanese women wear little, are worth from $200 to $300. If she is of the wealthy class, her obi, or bright belt, or sash, or surcingle, or whatever is the translation for the overgrown necktie which is to the Japanese woman what a bright scarf is to a quietly dressed man, her obi is worth probably $500. It will interest all women to know that, each year, new designs for the inner kimono are drawn by recognized artists, and that a Japanese woman of society would no more wear a last year's kimono pattern than you would wear balloon sleeves or a wasp waist.

Some of the wedding gifts that are shown to visitors were so expensive and seemingly so useless that I asked about them. Some were in the form of great fish, made of bright red crêpe, and some were ships of happiness fitted out with sails of gold brocade. As I had never seen these bright grotesqueries in Japanese homes, I wondered how they were used. The ship, with its flowing sails, is entirely constructed of precious silks and satins, not cut, but simply basted together, so that when the delicate compliment of a ship of happiness has served its purpose as a wedding decoration, it is unbasted and the fine crêpe and brocaded silk are made up into a rich costume.

Half of the population of Japan is from 20 to 65 years of age, and one-third of the entire population is married. The ratio of divorces for every 1,000 population has decreased in the last generation from nearly 3 to 1¼; but even at present it is a source of deep anxiety on the part of unmarried statisticians.

Tokyo, to a much larger degree than any American city, and even more than Paris or London, is the center of the life of the nation. Here the universities draw students from every province. Here is being fought out the battle for democracy and freedom from a military bureaucracy. Here industrialism is raising its many-headed body and threatening destruction of the race. Here is the center from which one must study the movements of the Orient, and the World's Sunday School Convention should find more of interest and more to remedy than in any other city of the world. Japan awaits you. It wants your money, your friendship, your respect.

Obstacle race. So you see American girls can learn something worth while from the girls of Japan. Perhaps many things

The Wicked John Goode

An Autobiography Transcribed by
HORACE WINTHROP SCANDLIN

CHAPTER XXI

In Which I Suffer as Never Before

EACH day I went to the Labor Bureau and each day met the same kind treatment. This business of being kind to others began to soak in, and the deeper it went the more ashamed of myself I became. You see, I didn't associate my emotions with any phase of religion—if I had I'd probably have quit—all I had in mind was Jane and a square deal for her. What these men did for me touched me deeply, but I couldn't figure it out. Here they were, total strangers to me, falling over one another to do me kindnesses. What had I ever done to deserve it? How had I treated those with whom I'd been thrown in contact? Finally I got to the point where I admitted to myself that there must be something real and tangible back of it all. When I arrived at that point I'd taken my second big step forward—out of darkness into light. I realized then that this constant kindness to every one stood for something definite. The men on the platform all said it stood for God!

My third big stride ahead came next. If that was what God stood for—kindness—then I wanted God and I'd get God. From that moment on I was as serious as I could be about that God business. I didn't understand it, but I wanted to, and so I tried to do as they all did, and I tried to pray. I was imitating instead of believing; so there was nothing doing.

THE next day an impulse overtook me which I tried hard to shake off. I wanted to go and see Jane. And yet I didn't want to go. I thought I ought to wait a little until I was surer of myself. But the idea wouldn't down, and over I went.

She was living then at her brother's home in Brooklyn. He had little use for me—justly—and I had as little use for him—just as justly. I found Jane with strength and courage gone. Her sister had just passed beyond into "the other room" after a long and trying illness, during all of which time Jane, in her already enfeebled condition, had nursed her tenderly day and night. Poor little woman! she was indeed in a sorry plight. I never wanted to do anything so badly as I wanted to tell her about the Bowery Mission and what it was doing for me. Yes! and about what it had done for me. But I didn't. I thought it best to wait. I'd disappointed her so bitterly so many times that I preferred to wait and not run any chances of doing it again. But oh! how my heart ached for her as I sat by her bedside! How I longed to do for her! I stood it as long as I could, and, taking her in my arms, embraced her as I should have done seventeen years before but failed to do. And then I left her!

As I passed out of the house onto the street a great, surging impulse stirred me—moved me like I'd never been moved before. I stood still in my tracks, closed my eyes and offered up to heaven this silent prayer.

"O God, if you're what they say you are over there in the Mission, give me the help I need—make me a good husband to my wife!"

It was the first prayer I'd ever said. It was offered with all my heart, and it brought me instant relief. I felt soothed and comforted, and I walked with a lighter step and a braver heart. In that prayer I asked for all I thought I needed. But I needed lots else to make me a man.

Without having had a mouthful of food all day I went to the Mission that evening. I'd walked to and from Brooklyn, besides tramping around looking for work. I was exhausted. The music cheered me and I listened attentively to the men who testified to what good the Mission did them and to all God had done for them and was doing each day they continued to serve him. I didn't laugh once that night! I tried as hard as I could to make it all seem real to me like it did to the speakers. And when they asked for requests for prayer I stood up and asked them to pray for me!

SURELY, surely I was making headway, and as soon as I sat down I realized it. I didn't feel ashamed—simply strange. And I left the service greatly strengthened physically by the coffee and the rolls.

Then began the period of most intense mental and physical suffering I ever went through! I'd had a hard life and had suffered all sorts of hardships, but they were child's play alongside of my experiences until the following May—a period of about six months.

I'd been one of twenty-five selected by Charlie Balevre to form a Bible class to meet with Dr. Hallimond on Wednesday nights for an hour prior to the big service in the Mission. I was very proud of the chance, although it didn't mean very much to me; but I made up my mind to fight my battle to a finish.

It was January and a bitter cold one at that. I don't think I possessed as much as seven pounds of clothing, including my shoes. Both of them were nearly gone, and I had no overcoat. I had neither work nor money. I went over the whole situation carefully and made up my mind that unless it was absolutely necessary I'd accept no favors from any one at the Mission, except, of course, work. And I was the same man who only a little while before had gone there to do them up! Such is the power of the religion of Jesus Christ; that's what they were taming me with.

FOR days and days from ten till four I sat in the Labor Bureau sharing with my comrades the scanty calls for work that came in over the 'phone and by mail. I grabbed a ten-cent errand like I used to grab a thousand-dollar roll. I tackled everything they offered me. There were days and days during which I didn't get a mouthful to eat except the roll and coffee at the Mission about ten o'clock, then one on the Bread Line at one o'clock. Night after night in almost zero weather I "carried the banner" without an overcoat and with the poorest kind of broken shoes. Cold?

Continued on page 20

THE MEAT OF THE SOUL

A SERMON

By

*REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.

TEXT—John 4:34. "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work."

WE have here a glimpse into the secret depths of the Master's life. It is always a matter of fascinating interest when we are permitted to gaze into the inmost spirit of a noble life, to peer into its chamber of imagery, to study its assembly of motives, and to examine the raw material of its enterprises and ambitions.

There is nothing more vitalizing, excepting full communion with the Lord, than the privilege of sharing the intimacy of a holy man's life. To be permitted to read the private journal of a man like Andrew Bonar, or the diary of David Brainard, or to be allowed to listen to the prayers of Lancelot Andrewes, is to receive great stimulus and inspiration in one's own devotion. It is a sweet surprise of grace when some spiritual record is placed before our eyes that was never intended for publication, and we have the privilege of a personally conducted tour through the unknown and amazing continent of a faithful soul.

But the highest of all privileges is that we are permitted to gaze upon the lineaments of the Spirit of Jesus. It is ours to look with reverent eyes into his spiritual consciousness, to see his affections, and hopes, and desires, his most sacred communions, his sorrows, and his joys. My text offers to us one of these precious glimpses. Let us look into it.

"My meat is to do the will of him that sent me." Then, in the consciousness of Jesus, there is the distinct sense of a mission. He is not moving about in uncertainty. He is not drifting among unknown currents to an unknown end. He is not spending his life in prospecting for a purpose, and just hitting upon it at the close. The purpose is known. He has received his commission. No energy is wasted in feverish and futile quest. His calling has been appointed to him. He knew it and accepted it. His consciousness was possessed by a sense of a sovereign mission: "The will of him that sent me."

COMMON observation tells us how great is the ministry of a controlling purpose in human life. Two things characterize a man whose life is dominated by some supreme and all-controlling mission. First of all, he bears the characteristic of great decisiveness. His days are not fretted away in aimless wanderings, in meandering explorations that yield no weighty product. Life does not go in mere living, but is concentrated upon some definite end. A great mission meets a man at the opening of his day, it regulates all the movements of the day, and awaits him when he goes to rest.

And surely this was one of the features in the life of the Lord. There was a commanding decisiveness about it. It was always dead-set upon some evident and all-controlling end. "He set his face steadfastly to go to Jerusalem." And the second contribution which a great mission makes to a life is that it imparts an unfailing delight. The real delight of life is found in the exhilaration of honorable and progressive movement. Joy is just the appointed glow which accompanies resolute living along the right road. Purposeless life is sad, and flighty, and moody, and possesses no secret of the eternal springs. Is it not a most significant thing that in the life of our Lord, whether he were passing through public popularity or public contempt, whether amid the bright home scenes of Nazareth or the darkening shadows of Calvary, he was ever in possession of a quenchless joy? Within twenty-four hours of Calvary, he was able to speak in this wise: "That my joy be in you." I say this was just the glow of health, the wonderful heat that belongs to the soul that is set upon the attainment of a godly end.

BUT what was the mission which filled the Lord's consciousness, and directed all his doings? He was conscious that he had been sent, but sent what for? We must turn to Luke for the answer. "He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted." Then he was conscious of having been sent as a Physician! It is a pity that the Scriptural word "heart" receives such a narrow interpretation. We now commonly confine its content to the emotions, the run of the sentiments, to matters of the feelings. But its wealth is much wider and deeper than this. There are people who are broken-willed, and these are among the great company of the broken-hearted. There are people whose expectancy has been destroyed, and they move upon the ground like birds with broken wings. Our Lord conceived it to be his mission to come to souls like this and to "heal the broken-hearted." "He sent me to proclaim." Then he was conscious of having been sent as a Herald! A Herald with sovereign authority and power behind him! And what was he to proclaim? "Release to the captives." Is it not of beautiful import that the word translated "release" is commonly rendered "forgiveness"? "To proclaim recovery of sight to the blind." I think that is a wonderful succession. The herald was not only to announce forgiveness to the sin-bound, but the possible restoration of their lost spiritual endowments. In the life of sin they had lost their hearing and their sight, and the herald had to proclaim the possibility of a glorious renewal of sense, a recovery of their lost endowments. "And to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord." And what is the acceptable year of the Lord? "Now is the accepted time." The herald was to say, as with the sound of a trumpet, that forgiveness could be acquired now, and impaired power could be renewed now; that "the year of jubilee" had come, and that the ransomed sinners could return home. "To set at liberty them that are bruised." Then he was conscious of having been sent as an Emancipator! Jesus of Nazareth conceived himself as having been sent upon this great and abiding mission. "He hath sent me!" "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me."

BUT what has all this to do with us? It has everything to do with us, for when we have discovered our Master's mission, we may discover our own. We have seen what was the guiding star that glowed and burned in the firmament of his life. What if the same star might reign in our own? Listen to this: "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I sent them into the world." "Even so!" The Lord's mission is our mission, too; it is the mission of every Christian. Our primary purpose is to be physicians and heralds and emancipators in the common life. If our life does not accomplish this, it accomplishes nothing. We may make money, we may win fame, we may come into ways of luxurious ease, but unless we are following the star which directed the Lord our life will end in fruitless waste. We are to be healers and heralds and emancipators. If that be our purpose, we shall be left in no doubt as to how to execute our ministry. A man who makes up his mind to follow that star will become an expert in the discernment of spiritual opportunity. By the aid of a most refined sense, he will detect just where healing is needed, where it is essential that he should apply both hands to the removal of a tyrannous load.

But let me complete our Master's description of his mission. "To do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work." To carry it through to its last detail, to leave nothing omitted and undone, to be perfectly thorough in his obedience! And that is our mission, too. There are so many of us who begin the good work, but we do not perfect it. We discharge a little of the Physician's ministry, but we do not finish it. We get a man to sign the pledge and then we assume our ministry is completed! Why, we have only just begun the work, and it is now our mission to finish it. Our work is not done when we have got a multitude of people to give themselves to the Lord. The real Physician and Emancipator will carry it forward until the redeemed soul shall awake in the "fulness of the measure of the stature of Christ." It is the mark of a great disciple when he does the least thing in a great way.

LET me add a concluding thought. "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me." He found his spiritual sustenance in the doing of his Father's will. What had he just been doing? He had been doing physician's work upon a poor abandoned woman, herald's work upon one who had lapsed into the depths of a sunless despair. He had been feeding a hungry soul. And the amazing thing is, that when the disciples returned from the city, where they had gone to buy bread, the Master appeared as though he had been at a feast. He looked refreshed and lightened, as though his Spirit had received a new baptism of eternal life. And so he had. While he was feeding the woman he fed himself! "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me."

It is even so with us; we are sustained by service. We find our bread in our obedience. Many of us are very lean and starved in the spirit, and it is perhaps because we have not received the feeding meat. Selfishness always makes the heart very lean, whether the selfishness manifest itself in our living or in our prayers. "He gave them their request and sent leanness into their souls." Then their request must have been very selfish, for while their prayers were answered, their souls grew more and more lean. "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me." While we heal we become healthy, while we proclaim the Gospel we ourselves become more assured, while we seek to emancipate a brother we ourselves rise into a more glorious freedom. It is in these ways we find the Bread of Life. There is no other way.

---

*Pastor, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

FOR EVERY DAY
IN THE
YEAR

DAILY MEDITATION

Revs.
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
C. C. Albertson, D.D.
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

The Bright Cloud

SUNDAY, January 7. Matt. 17 : 5. "Behold, a bright cloud overshadowed them." The other day, I watched a cloud form very suddenly and cover the summit of a great mountain, and hide its exalted glory. I could see the track, which had been made by the feet of many generations, winding up the mountain, and I could see where it was lost in the lowering cloud. The cloud itself was bright and radiant. It concealed, and yet it was luminous. It had its deep secrets, and yet it was lucent. It was a home of light, and yet it acted as a veil. The summit of the mountain was hid, but the minister of concealment was also a minister of grace and glory.

And there are bright clouds which often overshadow the lives of the devoted friends of the Lord Jesus Christ. Secrets are hid from our gaze. We cannot trace even the outlines of our Father's will. Meanings are shrouded in mystery, but in the very mystery there is a certain radiance. The Presence that is hid is shining. The secrets are love secrets. The veil is there, but within the veil is the home of God.

The Atonement itself is a bright cloud. The ordinary roads are lost in the vast mystery, and the mountain peaks are hid, but the cloud is not black and cold and chilling; it is warm and radiant with eternal love. The Lord is within the cloud, in the unfathomable wonders of perpetual sacrifice. Our understandings are not yet finally enlightened, but the heart is kindled and sustained. We can rest in the Lord and wait patiently for him. When the veil is lifted we shall see "Jesus only."

And in Christ Jesus even death itself is a bright cloud. It is a great mystery, but it is lit up from within. The fitting symbol of a Christian's death is not midnight but dawn; not blackness but grayness, for grayness is just blackness made luminous with an indwelling whiteness. Within the mystery of death the Sun of Righteousness is arisen, and there is healing in his radiant wings. The veil has not yet been lifted; but death is like a house in the night-time, whose shades are drawn, and whose door is closed, but whose windows are bright with the comforting cheer of fire and light within. Our Lord is in the house, and the mystery is radiant.

And so it is with many other mysteries which confront us in life's way. In Christ Jesus there are bright clouds. Tomorrow is one of them. Yes, and when we look back, yesterday is another of them. We need not fear to enter the cloud. The transfigured Saviour is within. It is the dwelling-place of the Lord.

J. H. J.

Faith and the Future

MONDAY, January 8. Ps. 90 : 1. "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations." Out of the bourne of eternity there comes another year. Its burden is unknown to us. We may anticipate its probabilities and calculate its possibilities, but our most plausible reckonings are subject to revision. At the end of the year the computation that we made at its beginning may prove to have been entirely wrong. The new year comes as a sealed gift. What happiness is wrapped up in it and in what particular hour and at what place our hearts will be thrilled with it, what sorrows the year will bring and when we shall bow beneath them, is yet to be unfolded to us.

Nor do we know in advance how we shall behave in the glad and sad moments of this year. Fortune and misfortune have an unsettling effect on our frail hearts. Both joy and grief have been known to make men silly. A single success has carried some people off their feet; one failure has utterly crushed them. What if the weight of the experiences of an entire year were suddenly thrown into our consciousness? It is really a blessing that the year will open up its contents to us very slowly. We shall have to add the meaning of many minutes to arrive at the import of one hour, and put together the significance of many hours to find the value of a day. God will make us spell out the lesson of the year with the ticking of the clock.

Do we not need One to know events ahead of their happening, and to shape them so as to suit them to our strength? To the eternal God, before whom the generations of men pass in silent review, our thoughts ascend today. The feeling of our dependence makes his gracious presence in our lives a most cheerful fact. To the bosom of Jesus, who was, and is, and ever shall be, we flee for shelter in view of the disquieting uncertainties before us. Every pain and pleasure shall be hallowed to us, in proportion as it brings us close to him.

W. H. T. D.

Emancipated by Prayer

TUESDAY, January 9. Job 42 : 10. "And the Lord turned the captivity of Job, when he prayed for his friends." This was a miracle which has been repeated innumerable times in the experience of the saints. Held captive by doubts and fears, our prison doors have been opened as if by angel hands when we have prayed, not for ourselves, but for others. This is how, losing our lives, we save them.

There is a beautiful story of a dove under whose wings a smaller bird took refuge in a blizzard. The smaller bird was saved by the sheltering wings of the dove, and, incidentally, the spark of life was kept alight in the dove's own breast by the living thing that nestled near it. This is a parable suggesting to us that individual salvation may be, and often is, the by-product of an effort to save others. One who is content to save himself is hardly worth saving.

There was a minister whose prayers were fully as wonderful as his sermons, and his sermons were classical. There came to him dark days, when his character was assailed and his well-won fame was turned to deep disgrace. On the darkest of these days, he stood in his pulpit and prayed a prayer which will never be forgotten by those who heard it. As he poured out his soul to God, his spirit rose to thoughts of God's unchanging goodness, of God's sovereign care, and a light not of earth seemed to rest upon his brow. His prayer was like a piece of music, varied by trembling minors and dissonances, but ending in a burst of harmony. He prayed not for himself but for all souls in distress, and especially for those in whose lives sorrow had left bitterness. His captivity was turned when he prayed for his friends.

C. C. A.

The Crown that Awaits the Victor

WEDNESDAY, January 10. Rev. 3 : 11. "Let no man take thy crown." A Christian man, who had departed from his former faithfulness, dreamed that he was caught up into the crown-room of heaven. Among the many crowns he saw was one of exceeding beauty. Asking the angel, "whose crown is this?" the reply was, "It was thy crown; but now that thou hast refused to do the work of the Lord, it is thine no longer, but given to another." In the agony of this revelation, the man awoke and cried out, "Lord, don't take away my crown!"

The crown of holy character no man can take from us, unless we are willing to cast it aside. Paul knew that a crown of righteousness awaited him, for the halo of its splendor already shone upon his brow. Language is incapable of expressing the beauty and glory of a crowned soul in Christ's kingdom. It is called a crown of life, a crown of victory, a crown of rejoicing, a crown of glory, and a crown of righteousness.

Imagination fails to picture the triumph, the authority, the everlasting riches of grace and soul pleasures which are at His right hand forever more. We shall sit together with him on the throne of his glory who is crowned with many crowns.

Earthly crowns fade away; the heavenly are of amaranthine splendor. The crowned Napoleon was uncrowned at St. Helena; another took his crown, as Paul took the crown of Judas, for Judas was branded instead of crowned. In this life we are often satisfied with imitation crowns, and ambition leads us to sacrifice everything for a crown. But the crown of noble, Christlike manhood, unremovable, unchangeable, unfading as that on the brow of the King eternal, is infinitely more precious than any earthly coronation.

E. W. C.

Friends of God

THURSDAY, January 11. Ex. 33 : 11. "And the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend." There have been many attempts to define prayer. None is wholly satisfactory. Prayer is too great to be defined. Though we can not define it, there is not one of us who may not know its value and its power. The words which describe Moses' relation to God have their bearing on the meaning of prayer. It is conversation with God. As in human conversation both parties speak, so in prayer. Prayer is a dialogue.

Peerless privilege it is to be on friendly terms with God. This it is which broadens the narrowest life and lifts the lowest roof.

A college president used to tell of a vision he had of his mother. A little boy, he was playing near the kitchen door, and heard his mother speak. She had not called him by name, and he knew there was no one else in the kitchen. He was curious to know what she was saying. Approaching the door he heard his mother praying and felt a strange sense of awe. Her words sounded exactly as though she were in intimate conversation with a dear friend. Never thereafter, even during years of doubt, could he doubt the reality of the possible presence of God with those who seek his face.

C. C. A.

The Blessed Heritage of the Believer

FRIDAY, January 12. Ps. 119:111. "Thy testimonies have I taken as an heritage for ever: for they are the rejoicing of my heart." David called his Bible the "testimonies" of God. In David's view God has gone on record in the Scriptures, declaring himself to men and revealing to them things which they could not know by any other means. All nature is, indeed, a witness for God. The heavens declare his glory, and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Rain from heaven and fruitful seasons, filling our hearts with food and gladness, are evidences of his power and kindness. The conscience in man, with its accusing or excusing thoughts, also bears witness of the holy and righteous God. But none of these testimonies can satisfy the helpless and guilty heart of man, causing it to rejoice as over a splendid heritage. That only the Bible can do. It brings to men from the very heart of God the message of his redeeming love, his pardoning grace, his fatherly goodwill. These things, which no sinner can conceive of as possible, the Bible declares to be indubitable facts. Being his testimonies, the Scriptures rest on God's truthfulness and faithfulness.

Blessed is the man who has learnt to estimate his Bible as the record of his Father's love. An hour spent over a single passage of the Bible, with such a mind, becomes a spiritual feast. No heritage, bequeathed to us from any other source, can equal this. He only is truly rich and abidingly happy who can open his Bible with the conviction that in it he is face to face with the only Being who thoroughly understands man, and can make man understand his Maker, Redeemer, and Comforter.

W. H. T. D.

Consecrate Your Children to Christ

SATURDAY, January 13. Matt. 18 : 5. "And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me." Christ estimated children by what they might become in this world and in the celestial realms. He knew that each little babe might unfold immortal powers for its blessedness and his glory.

Every cradle is a prophecy of a mysterious and wonderful future. Each little traveler is knocking at the door of opportunity and is in the arms of Christ, as well as in its mother's, receiving his kiss of blessing, his words of welcome in the great family of the heavenly Father.

The child in faith, trust, simplicity and love is like those of the kingdom of heaven. Doubt, treachery, fear and jealousy have not yet soiled the whiteness of the child heart. Wicked parents have often been kept from crime because they hesitated to taint the names of their children, and many a father and mother have been led by little hands into the kingdom of righteousness, "for a little child shall lead them." As a mother loves, so Jesus loves; as a father pities, so the Lord pitieth his children.

If all Christian parents would consecrate their children to Christ as Hannah did Samuel and Monica did Augustine, millions of young people would be saved from evil ways. A child can love the Saviour almost as soon as it loves its mother. A great divine once said that if he could have a child till it was six years old, no one could ever win it away. If the church would win the world, it must win the children first. How sad that many hold the children off till they wander away, thinking that the lambs are too young to be housed in the fold of the Good Shepherd!

E. W. C.

◆

He who is anxious to fill another's place may soon lose his own.

When the barn and the crib overflow the strenuous labor is forgotten.

John the Baptist and Jesus

International Sunday School Lesson for January 14. John 1:19-34

The Harbinger of the Christian Era

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

JOHN THE BAPTIST is the connecting link between the Old Testament and the New. A true successor of the Hebrew prophets: a man of the desert vision stripped of the non-essentials; a stern and mighty revealer of the sins of his times; a wistful forecaster of the glories of the future. We do well to take a whole lesson to seek the significance of so important a figure. Little indeed do we know of him! Only scenes from three or four days of his career. But this man did prepare the way for Jesus, awakening hearts and pointing out the emptiness of the current Judaistic system. His influence must have been tremendous. For on one hand it aroused King Herod in his palace to take action to silence so fearless a reformer; and on the other hand, years afterward in far-off Ephesus, St. Paul found eloquent Apollos and many others professing themselves disciples of John the Baptist! This man brought to Jesus his first disciples, and he was the first who glimpsed, though he did not fully realize, the significance of Jesus to the world.

No wonder Christ testified that of men born of women there is none greater than John the Baptist.

John the Self-Effacing

JOHN'S greatest personal characteristic was self-effacement. The messenger was lost in his message. He had the ability to challenge, intimidate, arouse and win crowds of people—and nothing of the self-importance or the self-consciousness that has afflicted so many great agitators. He was no demagogue, no self-seeker. When the people began to whisper that he might be the coming Messiah he declared that he was not worthy to unlace the shoes of the Messiah. To the out-and-out question of the deputation of Pharisees, "Art thou the Christ, or Elijah?" he responded, "I am not." "Are you the nameless prophet foretold in Deuteronomy 18?" He answered flatly, "No." "Well, who are you then?" "I am only a voice crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord. If you must think of me as one prophesied, I am the voice Isaiah called for, the voice commanding repentance and preparation for God's will."

How different is such a man from the Pharisees, so desirous of place and recognition! Jesus, who took such a sane and reasonable attitude toward prophecy, said that John the Baptist was the true Elijah who should come (Matt. 17 : 9–13). But John made no claims for himself. When his followers complained to him of the great success of Jesus, John instantly set them right: "A man can receive nothing, except it has been given him from heaven." What a poised, unselfish soul is revealed there, with its calm statement of a conviction that "He must increase, but I must decrease." So the morning star disappears before the rising sun.

"The Baptism of John"

JESUS seems to have taken over the baptizing of disciples from John. Yet the rite was not entirely original even with him. Jews baptized heathen converts to Judaism, at least under certain circumstances. Moreover, ceremonial washings have always been favorite symbols with Oriental devotees, whatever their religion.

But to John baptism was an act of personal consecration, and a vivid picture of repentance, and a confession of a need of cleansing in the eyes of God. It gave the penitent hearer a definite act of self-dedication to perform, which would always mark a turning-point in his life. Thus it brought many to decision and separated mere curious listeners from avowed followers.

Yet John never made the mistake of exaggerating the importance of the form itself, nor did he cease to emphasize the need of the baptism of the Holy Spirit. To him the rite was symbolic and typical, by no means a magic power changing the nature of the soul. Many have wondered that Jesus was so anxious to submit to John's baptism, which so greatly emphasized repentance. For it is certain Jesus did not feel any sense of sin and guilt. But we ought to see how prophetic of the coming age John made the rite—virtually an act of consecration to the Messianic kingdom and its works. To this Jesus wholeheartedly gave himself, not merely setting a right example, as he said, but also joyously pledging his life before the Father, whose approval was manifest to him.

The Witness of John

JOHN was the first to recognize Jesus as the Messiah of the Jewish hope. One can discern from the fragmentary records of John's ministry the various phases of this recognition. When Jesus presented himself for baptism John became aware that this was no ordinary person. After the discussion (which he probably had with each candidate, as his words to soldiers, taxgatherers and others show) he declared that he would rather be baptized by the Man who stood before him. That was the first impression of the Christ on this humble-minded servant of righteousness: "I have need to be baptized of thee."

Then, when Jesus persisted, the baptism itself affected John profoundly. He saw the Spirit come upon the Man of Nazareth in unmistakable power and he was haunted by the memory of that shining upturned face. During the absence of Jesus in the wilderness, much thought confirmed and deepened the impression. When therefore Jesus returned to the Jordan, the Fourth Gospel declares that there was wrung from the lips of John the exclamation, "Behold the Lamb of God, that beareth the sin of the world!" According to this, John the Baptist was the first to realize the sacrificial character of the Messianic work, which proved a stumbling-block to so many others. John knew his Isaiah, and he had been reading the fifty-third chapter pretty carefully. His spiritual intuition flashed a gleam of what was to be the fate of the Son of God in Jerusalem.

The last picture of John the Baptist represents a truly human and appealing figure—no miraculously directed puppet was he—a great man in doubt as to the outcome of his life work. After his persecution, from the depths of Herod's dungeon, John sent his friends to Jesus with the pathetic message, "Art thou he that cometh, or look we for another?" For answer Jesus uses the terms of Isaiah once more: "Go and tell John the things which ye hear and see: the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, and the dead are raised up, and the poor have good tidings preached to them. And blessed is he whosoever shall find no occasion of stumbling in me." Then Jesus extolled John before the multitude as a prophet indeed, and much more than a prophet. Jesus wanted John's name written large in the history of Christianity.

John's Help to Jesus

HOW much did John do for Jesus? Christians have always regarded him as the forerunner, preparing the way, arousing the expectation of Judea, even preparing a group of receptive men. But we must also realize that he had a marvelous influence in Jesus' life at that turning-point when He left the obscurity of the Nazareth shop for the public career that has changed the history of the world. We should like to know more of those silent years of Jesus, of the problems of the boy, the youth, the strong young man. It was John, though, who brought Jesus to his decision time. It is likely that it was John who crystallized his ideals, which had been ripening in the meditation and prayer of years. We honor John therefore as one who greatly affected the public life of the Lord and Saviour of us all. Yet we all see clearly that Jesus did not depend on John in the least. Indeed, he left John immediately after the baptism, for those forty days of desert meditation upon his mission, when Jesus thought his life through, put aside the wrong modes of going about his work, and came to a complete understanding with his Father in heaven. When Jesus returned to John again, John saw the light of the glory of God in his face, and knew that his own work was almost done.

Modern Witnesses for Christ

NO man has wasted his years who like John has spent himself unsparingly in Christ's service. The approval of Jesus thus given is the hope of all Christian evangelism, and all Christian social reform as well. How little we can accomplish in so great and needy a world! How likely the scorn of Pharisees sitting at ease in Zion, or the prison of the Herods whose entrenched wrongs we must assail! Enough that we shall hear Christ's "Well done, good and faithful servant."

We should as modern witnesses for Christ heed the message of Horatius Bonar's poem:

"Go, labor on, 'tis not for nought;
  Thy earthly loss is heavenly gain.
Men heed thee, love thee, praise thee not;
  The Master praises; what are men?"

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

How to Plan for Decision Day

DURING January, or in the first week of February, many Sunday schools observe Decision Week and Decision Day. Many teachers and superintendents are looking for practical help as to the wisest use of this opportunity to enable our scholars to enter the Christian life. The methods suggested are those that have come from experience.

In the writer's school, some 5,000 of the scholars have, in the thirty years of the school life, become Christians. It is expected that from 100 to 200 yearly will take this step and join the church. This harvest never fails.

Possibly we shall help our readers most by setting in order the features of Decision Day.

1. LITERATURE

For the Superintendent; "Decision Day and How to Use It" (Brant); "Decision Day" (Henderson); "Decision Day" (Pope); "A Soul-Saving Sunday School," "Evangelism in the Sunday School" (Goodell); "Casting the Net on the Right Side" (McKinney).

For the Teacher; "My Class for Jesus," "Little Parishes of Eight," "Unconscious Tuition" (Huntington).

For the Scholar; "Will You Not Come?" (Havergal); "That Means Me" (Henderson); "What Am I Asked to Do on Decision Day?" (Miller).

2. DECISION DAY

THIS is often the first Sunday of February. Some schools observe the first or second Sunday in November as well, taking advantage of the time of quiet between October's busy days and the Christmas preparations. Many schools find Palm Sunday a splendid day for the acknowledgment by the children of Christ as Saviour and King. As the result of the concerted use of Palm Sunday by the Brooklyn Sunday schools, one year over five thousand from the Sunday schools joined the church on Easter Sunday. Children's Day has been found an excellent time to win to decision for Christ. One pastor secured over thirty members for his church one Children's Day as the result of writing to about sixty members of the school. In that letter he had asked them to write him if they desired to talk with him about coming into the church on Children's Day. Over thirty responded.

The day is not always termed "Decision Day." Sometimes the terms "Enlistment Day," "Testimony Day," "Confession Day," "Witnessing Day," and "Acknowledgment Day" are used, and especially where the scholar's decision has been previously secured through the letter of the teacher, superintendent or pastor, so that the scholar has been prepared for a public stand on the day.

3. PREPARING FOR THE DAY

THE teacher's preparation is most important. D. Henderson in his booklet on Decision Day suggests that each teacher sign the following Covenants on a card:

(a) To pray daily for myself, that I may be enabled to win every one of my unsaved pupils to Christ.

(b) To pray daily from this date until Decision Day for each of my unsaved pupils by name, that each may personally receive Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord.

(c) To pray daily for the saving presence of Christ in the Decision Day service.

In the teacher's personal work with the scholar it is important that he or she have ready for use some pivotal texts which should be marked in the teacher's Bible. Helpful texts are:

Confession of sin. I John 1 : 9. The invitation. Matt. 2 : 28–31. Dangers of delay. II Cor. 6 : 2, Heb. 4 : 7. Christ the Saviour from sin. John 3 : 16, Matt. 1 : 21, John 6 : 37. Becoming God's child. John 1 : 12, I John 3 : 1, 2, 10. Confessing Christ. Matt. 10 : 32, I John 4 : 15, John 14 : 23. Following Christ. John 12 : 26; Heb. 12 1, 2.

For several weeks in advance of Decision Day the officers and teachers should meet for prayer and discussion of the methods of approach to the scholar.

Teachers should be urged at these gatherings:—

(a) To approach the scholar individually and not when others are around, and to study the plan best suited to the individual scholar.

(b) To avoid pressing church membership in the appeal, but to present Christ and the necessity of saying yes or no to Christ's claim for an undivided love and service.

(c) To see the parents if possible and secure their cooperation in promoting a decision.

(d) To place in the scholar's hands one of the leaflets referred to above, such as Miss Havergal's "Will You Not Come?"

THE superintendent should place in the teacher's hands one of the leaflets for the teacher named above. He himself will need to meet with Christ face to face, as Moses was fitted for his service by his vision of God. He will procure and read carefully one of the leaflets on Decision Day referred to, say "Decision Day and How to Use It" (Brant), or "Decision Day" (Henderson).

The superintendent should have secured from the teachers the names of the scholars who are not Christians or church members. This record should really be in card form as a permanent record of the Christian life and progress of the scholar. These scholars should be made the subject of special and earnest prayer at the prayer gatherings of the workers.

The superintendent should suggest to the teacher the value of a brief prayer by the teacher with the class just before or after the lesson teaching, to prepare the heart for the message, or to drive the message and lesson thought home.

Forms of letters and cards and other plans for making the most of the day will appear in next week's issue.

None can enjoy the refreshing rain
Without having passed under the cloud.

North America's Golden Horn

By FRANK G. CARPENTER

Copyrighted, 1916, by Frank G. Carpenter

I HAVE just returned from a trip with Jafet Lindeberg through the greatest gold mines of the Seward peninsula. These mines belong to the Pioneer Mining Company, which was founded by Lindeberg, Brynteson and Lindbloom, the three lucky Swedes who made the first discovery at Anvil Creek, near Nome. Since then more than $6,000,000 worth of gold has been taken out of that creek, and tens of millions have come from the coastal plain through which it runs. The Pioneer Mining Company was founded shortly after the discovery, and it has been mining gold almost continuously since then. It now owns about 3,000 acres of gold-bearing earth and is capitalized at $5,000,000. When gold was discovered Lindeberg and his partners washed out the first dust by hand, melting the frozen earth with hot water. Today the washing is done with the finest of mining machinery. Rivers of water have been carried over the mountains to supply the hydraulic giants, and the gold-bearing earth is forced up through pipes to a height of fifty feet into sluice boxes, which take out the gold. Some of the land is phenomenally rich. Three hundred acres, or about one-tenth of it, will run, so Mr. Lindeberg tells me, from $75,000 to $100,000 of gold to the acre, or in all from twenty to thirty million dollars. The remaining 2,700 acres carry more or less gold, and the company has enough work in sight to keep it busy for generations to come.

Seward Peninsula is the Golden Horn of the North American continent. It forms the extreme western end of Alaska. It is 2,700 miles from Seattle and only sixty miles from Asia, across Bering Strait. It consists of a body of land 200 miles long and in places 150 miles wide. The district has already produced more than $70,000,000 worth of gold dust and nuggets and the country has hardly been scratched. Dr. Alfred H. Brooks, the head of the Alaska division of the geological survey, has estimated that there are more than $300,000,000 worth of gold mixed with its gravels, and the probability is that the total output of minerals will be equal to fifty times the amount we paid for the territory of Alaska.

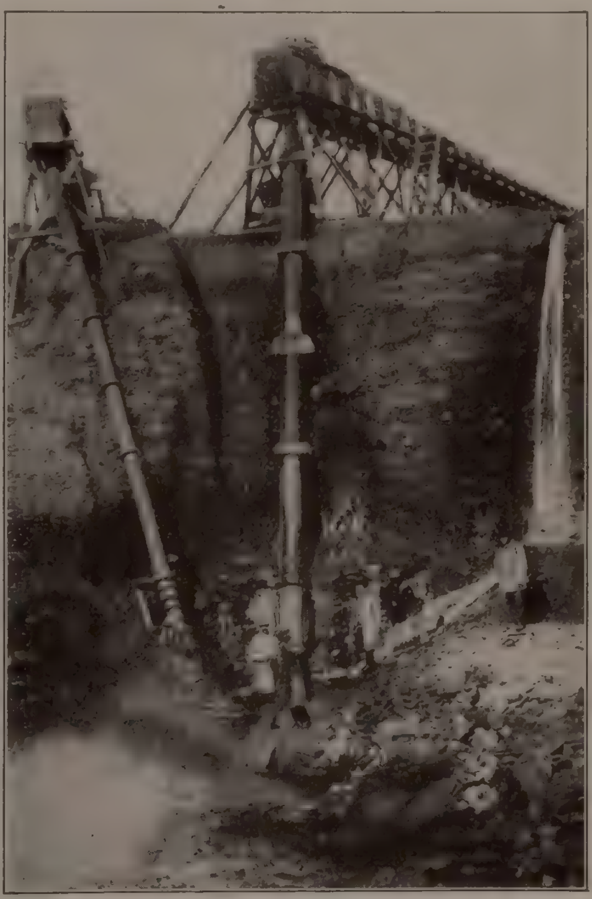
The Seward Peninsula is a part of Arctic Alaska. It lies right under the Arctic Circle, and on the north it is washed by the Arctic Ocean. The country is underlaid with prehistoric ice, and the most of the gold has to be thawed out of gravel that has been locked in ice for thousands of years. The peninsula is ice-bound except from June to November. It has more than six months of winter, during which the ocean is frozen far out from land and the smaller streams freeze to the bottom. The thermometer goes down at times to fifty and even more degrees below zero. The country is covered with snow and the only means of travel is by foot, or with sleds drawn by dogs. The mails come weekly by dog-sled from Fairbanks, a distance greater than from New York to Chicago.

Navigation is open only during the summer, when two lines of steamers have monthly sailings between Nome and Seattle, and when there is regular communication with interior Alaska by way of the Yukon.

There are but few wagon roads on the peninsula, and the country has only two little railroads. One of these is on the south coast, running from Nome back to the mountains. The other is not far from the Arctic Ocean, connecting the town of Candle with the gold-bearing creeks. Both lines are of a narrow gauge. At this writing neither is working.

The summers of the Seward Peninsula are delightful. As I write this the air is full of ozone and the thermometer is about eighty degrees above zero. The country is covered with green. There are wild flowers everywhere, and the lowlands have a thick mat of vegetation composed of mosses, grass and flowers. There are many bushes, and blueberries and salmonberries are to be had for the picking. The greater part of the country is rolling, and there are rounded hills that rise to a height of from 800 to 2,500 feet above the sea.

Until 1898, when the gold fields of Nome were discovered, the Seward Peninsula was one of the least-known parts of the world. It was looked upon as a barren waste, and its only population three or four hundred Eskimos, and a score or more of whites who came here to engage in whaling.



One of the powerful hydraulic lifts

THE news of the discovery of the three lucky Swedes caused the great stampede to this part of the world. In the fall of 1898 Nome, then called Anvil City, had a population of 250. By the end of the next year it had 3,000; and the first and second sailings of 1900 alone brought in 20,000 more. A row of tents and shacks, five miles long, was built along the seashore. The country about was honeycombed with pits. During one year 4,500 mining claims were recorded, and from fifty of these claims was taken out more than a million and a half dollars' worth of gold.

Then the first gold was found in the sands of the seashore. It was discovered by a United States soldier, who was accustomed to pan out enough every day or so for an extra meal. Then "Missouri Bill" made his big strike, washing out $12,000 worth of gold in one day; and a little later 2,000 men were engaged in beach mining. They averaged from $20 to $100 a day each, and within less than two months they had taken out more than a million dollars by means of hand rockers from the sand in front of Nome.

This gold was found in a kind of ruby sand which lay on the shore in beds of from six inches to two feet in thickness. Some of the sand was rich in gold, and the beach mining created great excitement. All sorts of theories were advanced as to gold in the ocean, and every one expected to make a fortune. Many got as much as from $5 to $10 a pan; and not a few took out thirty or forty thousand dollars each from their little seashore claims. Today any one can wash three or four dollars a day out of the Nome sands, and there are some miners still at work there.

In the meantime the output of the mines discovered along the creeks flowing into Snake river and on the plain back of Nome steadily increased, and it is this region that is being mined today. If you will imagine a grassy plain running back from the seashore for a distance of five or six miles to a low range of mountains you will have some idea of the present gold mining district of Nome. The plain consists of three old sea beaches, each of which contains gold. The first begins at the shore and runs for a mile or so back. It consists of tundra, which means that it is hidden by moss, grass, niggerheads and other vegetation, and that the land below is of ice-frozen gravel. The second beach, which is a little higher and farther back, is also tundra; but it consists of material deposited at a different period, as does also the third beach, which runs into the foothills of the mountains. For all practical purposes the beaches are one. Just now they are covered with green, except where the gold mines have caused the excavation of the ground beneath. They looked much like meadows when the gold miners first came.

Beyond these beaches and in the mountains, and especially in the creeks that flow from them, great quantities of gold have been found. The whole region, in fact, seems to have been more or less peppered with grains of gold, flakes of gold, flour gold and small nuggets. As it is now, the country is covered with piles of gravel, the tailings from which the gold has been washed, and there are also great gravel beds that mark the workings of the larger properties.

THE chief agent in getting out the gold is water, which bursts forth from pipes in streams as big around as a telegraph pole and often several hundred feet long. The force of these streams is such that they would cut a man in two if he tried to cross one. They are so strong you cannot pierce them with an ax. They are sent against the hills, and they lift up rocks and gravel and shoot them in clouds through the air. At one point of my trip today one of these streams came between me and the sun, and the sand, gravel and water, composing it took on all the colors of the rainbow.

I stood for a while and watched the men working. They were clad in slickers and white rubber boots that reached to their waists. One man directed the pipe from which the stream came. This was so hung on a pivot that it could be moved with the touch of a finger, and made to carry the gold-bearing earth where the man willed. The water boiled and foamed as it struck the glacial ice in which the golden gravel is bedded. It melted the ice and tore the earth away from it and carried the mass of earth and gravel to the hydraulic lifts. In one place I saw such streams moving mountains of gravel, and everywhere they were forcing the gold, sand and gravel up the pipes into the sluice-boxes.

Delicious Peach Fritters

Recipe of Marion Harris Neil

1 cupful water
3 tablespoonfuls Crisco
1 cupful flour
4 eggs
¼ teaspoonful salt
1 teaspoonful baking powder
5 tablespoonfuls flour peaches sauce

(Use accurate level measurements)

Bring Crisco and water to boiling point. Then add one cupful flour all at once. Stir until a smooth paste that will come away from side of pan is formed. Take from fire and cool but do not allow to become cold. Beat in the eggs one at a time, then add baking powder, salt, and 5 tablespoonfuls flour. Turn on floured board and roll out. Cut into rounds with a cutter and on each place a drained half of peach. Wet the edges and press together until peach is entirely covered. Fry in hot Crisco 5 minutes, drain and serve with any desired sauce.

The use of Crisco as a shortening and frying fat improves the tastiness of any fritter and canned peach fritters are delicious when you follow the simple directions of the cooking expert whose splendid new recipe is given above.

CRISCO
For Frying - For Shortening For Cake Making

Try it if you want something really good when fresh fruit is scarce. These fritters are unusually crisp, tender and not a bit greasy.

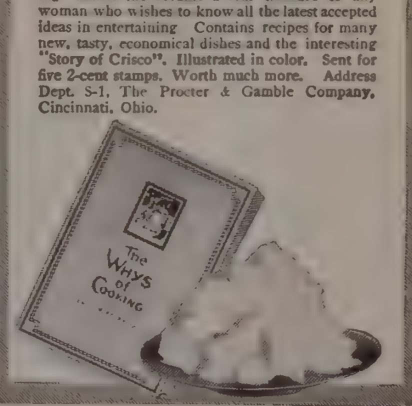
Wherever a shortening is required or a fat is needed for frying, Crisco gives superior results in preparing dainty, wholesome, appetizing foods.

Crisco gives up its heat so quickly that a light brown crust forms immediately—keeping the fat out and the real flavor in, the secret in making fine fritters.

Crisco is the rich cream of edible oil, purely vegetable, and is of such uniform goodness it always can be depended upon. If you have never tried it do so. You at once will understand why so many, many housewives now use Crisco exclusively.

Write Today for this Addition to the Crisco Library

Have you sent for your copy of "The Whys of Cooking"? This new book by Janet McKenzie Hill, editor of "American Cookery" and head of the Boston Cooking School is dedicated to every housewife with household problems to solve. Some of your own may be among the hundreds of questions asked and answered. A chapter on "Serving" makes the volume a real treasure to any woman who wishes to know all the latest accepted ideas in entertaining. Contains recipes for many new, tasty, economical dishes and the interesting "Story of Crisco". Illustrated in color. Sent for five 2-cent stamps. Worth much more. Address Dept. S-1, The Procter & Gamble Company, Cincinnati, Ohio.



REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

GENUINE HAS TRADE MARK ON THE PACKAGE

To make a good cup of Cocoa Begin Right!

CHOOSE

BAKER'S

Prepare it carefully, following the directions on the package, and you will find that every member of the family will thoroughly enjoy this delicious and wholesome beverage. Its healthfulness is assured by its purity and high quality.

Grand Prize
Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, 1915

Made only by
WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD.
ESTABLISHED 1780
Dorchester, Mass.

Reduce Your Weight

You CAN do it in a dignified, simple way in the privacy of your room and surprise your family and friends.

I know you can, because I've reduced 35,000 women from 20 to 85 lbs., and what I have done for so many I can do for you.

Don't reduce by drugs or diet alone. You'll look old if you do. You should have work adapted to your condition.

No woman need carry one pound of excess fat. It is so simple to weigh what you should, and you enjoy the process. My cheerful letters and your scales keep you enthused.

I build your vitality, strengthen your heart and teach you to stand, walk and breathe correctly, as I reduce you.

Don't endure fat when it is so easy to reduce.

If you send me your height and weight I'll tell you just what you should weigh. No charge—and I'll send you a 24-page illustrated booklet FREE. Write me. Ask for Booklet 23. I'd like to tell you my wonderful experience.

Susanna Cocroft
Dept. 18. 624 Michigan Boulevard, Chicago

Bring Out the Hidden Beauty

Beneath the soiled, discolored, faded or aged complexion is one fair to look upon. Mercolized Wax gradually, gently absorbs the devitalized surface skin, revealing the young, fresh, beautiful skin underneath. Used by refined women who prefer complexions of true naturalness. Have you tried it?

Mercolized Wax In one ounce package, with directions for use, sold by all druggists.

HIGH-VALUE PATENTS
—the ONLY kind Wanted and BOUGHT by Manufacturers. Send 8c. postage for new book of Extraordinary Interest to Inventors.
R. S. & A. B. LACEY, 61 Barrister Building, Washington, D. C.

The most of the mining here is done with hydraulic lifts. The sluice boxes are great troughs about as wide as a wagon-bed and perhaps 150 feet long. Their sides are two feet in height, and in the bottom are steel gratings, known as riffles, which catch the gold as the stream of gravel and water runs over them. These sluice boxes are made of steel. They are inclined at an angle of about 30 degrees, and are supported on a trestle-work, the top being at an altitude of fifty feet or more above the ground. At the upper end of the sluice box there is a steel pipe, as big around as the chest of a prizefighter, and extends from there to the ground. This is connected with the hydraulic stream, and the water sent from the pipes I have described forces the gold-bearing earth, gravel and rock up through this pipe into the sluice box. The gold is so heavy that it drops to the bottom of the box within the first thirty or forty feet, and is caught in the riffles, and the force of the stream is such that it carries away the refuse, stones and other material. The streams are at work day and night, and the gold drops down into the riffles at the rate of $3,000 per day, or about $100,000 per month, throughout the open season, when the weather is so warm that the water can flow.

Mr. Lindeberg took us to the side of a hill and demonstrated the richness of the gold-bearing sand. He drove a shovel into the hill and carried a couple of quarts of the sand gravel to one of the little streams that ran through the bed of the pit. He dipped the shovel into the water and moved it slowly about, washing away the dirt and the sand, and at the end he showed us a good-sized pinch of pure gold in grains ranging from the size of coarsely-ground coffee to those of fine table salt. My daughter, who was with me, expressed a wish to do likewise, and Mr. Lindeberg gave her the shovel. She scooped up about a hatful of earth and washed it. At the end, she had perhaps three score of fine grains of gold in the shovel, the value of which was about 75 cents.

Young People's Topics for January 14

Ought

Christian Endeavor and B. P. Y. U. Topic. Ps. 50:1-15 (Pledge Meeting)

WHAT is the pledge? It is the making personal to each member, of the central purposes of our organization. Young people's societies exist to help young people to realize a more perfect work of grace in their own hearts, to help them to learn how to help others, and to teach them to express publicly and without embarrassment their thoughts, their hopes, their convictions and their earnest purposes. Many object that the pledge forces active participation in the meetings upon those who feel no spiritual impulse to take part, that it results in forced testimonies which are not always sincere and which therefore border on hypocrisy, and that it is an arbitrary limitation upon individual liberty of worship. It is human nature to prefer to do the things we like to do and to dislike to do the things we ought to do. "Ought," "duty," "must," "should," are irritating words. But this attitude is really an attribute of the unregenerate heart. The pledge, by the very pressure of its implied duty, has often turned a forced compliance into a spiritual victory. The adversary of souls would have us disregard our duty and keep silent, but there before us hangs the framed copy of the words we vowed, and at last we shake off this devilish inertia that holds us in our seats, and as we rise words of testimony spring to our lips, and we have a blessed experience in a meeting that, but for our pledge and its keeping, would have been a failure as far as we were concerned. In the fifth verse of the reference we read, "Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice." This is the philosophy of the pledge. We covenant with God to sacrifice our liberty of non-action. It is a law of the spiritual world that we approach God and apprehend him only through sacrifice.

League Local Study Courses

Epworth League Topic. I Tim. 4:13; Deut. 11:18-21; Ps. 119:18-27

WE hear much today about commercial relations with South America. Our American banks are opening Latin American branches, our big business houses are planning how best to win the markets to the southward, our engineers are studying the great resources of the Andes and are dreaming of industrial plants and great systems of railways, and our people are flocking to the classes for the study of Spanish. Why South America? Well, partly because an unusual opportunity has become ours to trade and to enrich ourselves. But the interest of North Americans in their brothers of the Latin tongue has been growing for a number of years, fostered to a large extent by the missionaries who have carried southward the message of the risen Christ.

The story of Catholic decadence, of resulting unbelief, of early persecutions of Protestant missionaries, of final victory for religious freedom which brought with it an increased measure of tolerance and of individual liberty, all of this is a heart-gripping story of the present power of the Spirit of Christ. Yet though religious liberty has been proclaimed, the millions of South America have no clear comprehension of the Word of God, the Indians, a fourth of the whole population, are still largely pagan, from forty to eighty-five per cent of all the people are illiterate, the way is open for the message of the living Christ. It has been truly said that future right relations depend upon sympathy and understanding.

Christianity is a world movement, and only as we are informed upon world conditions can we be fully prepared to serve Christ acceptably. A narrow vision limits our service. Mission study broadens us, helps us to understand the heart of God and to visualize the work of the Spirit in the world. We need to see beyond the limits of our own daily round, and mission study is the next best thing to an actual trip through mission lands. Just now is a most excellent time for the starting of a class. The first three months of the year are not broken into by holidays, and the course of study can be completed before April.

The Educational Secretary of the Mission Board plans a nation-wide mid-week School of Missions to include the whole congregation and to cover in eight weeks one of several intensely interesting new books on South America and its opportunities. Plans for organizing and conducting these classes may be obtained from Ralph E. Diffendorfer, Educational Secretary, 150 Fifth Ave., New York City.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

PRAYER is the refuge of saints and the proven implement of prophets. We read of the courage of those ancient men of God, of the deeds they did and of their triumphs over kings and priests, and we often overlook the place that prayer held in their lives. Elijah, that rugged man of God, who alone among all Israel dared tell the truth to a wicked king and his more wicked queen, who defied, in the power of God, the priests and prophets of Baal—that terror of evil-doers was after all a man of frequent prayer and a great-hearted man of manifold kindnesses. Just now we are thinking of the widow of Zarephath, whose cruse of oil failed not and whose barrel of meal wasted not as she ministered to Elijah through the days of the drought and famine. The widow had a son. He fell sick and died. She came, broken-hearted, to the man of God. Elijah took the boy, laid him on his own bed and prayed unto the Lord. "He stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried unto the Lord, and said, O Lord my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into him again. And the Lord heard the voice of Elijah."

There are widows today, widows with only sons. Often these sons are the sure support and constant pride of these widowed mothers; but all too frequently the widowhood is doubled and the mother's heart broken by a death worse than physical dissolution; for the sons are dead in trespasses and sins. For this death the remedy, too, is prayer, and many a mother's heart has been healed by the salvation of her son by grace through prayer.

Mrs. E. T., for whose son the League is now praying, writes that he is still wayward, and she is fearful that he may break his parole. She asks us again to

The Best Health Policy

5¢
DEANS COUGH DROPS
DEANS COUGH DROPS MENTHOLATED
"THEY CURE THE TICKLE"
UNEQUALLED FOR CONTAIN NO OPIATES

Cough & Cold Insurance

When you invest 5c in a Package of Deans Mentholated Cough Drops, you invest in a form of Health Insurance that is unfailing and convenient—Deans afford immediate relief, soothe the raw, tender throat and clear the head. Use them the next time you feel a cold coming on. Always have a package with you.

Dean Medicine Company
Milwaukee, Wis.

Ask Your Dealer for This Package

"I Would Not Part with it for $10,000"

So writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer, "Worth more than a farm," says another. In like manner testify over 100,000 people who have worn it.

The Natural Body Brace

Overcomes WEAKNESS and ORGANIC AILMENTS of WOMEN AND MEN. Develops erect, graceful figure.

Brings restful relief, comfort, ability to do things, health and strength.

For Children Also

See What It Will Do For You

Does away with the strain and pain of standing and walking; replaces and supports misplaced internal organs; reduces enlarged abdomen; straightens and strengthens the back; corrects stooping shoulders; develops lungs, chest and bust; relieves backache and nervousness. Comfortable and easy to wear.

Wear It 30 Days Free at Our Expense

Write today for illustrated booklet, measurement blank, etc., and read our very liberal proposition.
HOWARD C. RASH, Pres. Natural Body Brace Co.
171 Rash Building SALINA, KANSAS

Indoor Closet

More Comfortable, Healthful, Convenient

Eliminates the out-door privy, open vault and cesspool, which are breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to invalids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health.

ABSOLUTELY ODORLESS

Put It Anywhere In The House

The germs are killed by a chemical process in water in the container, which you empty once a month. Absolutely no odor. No more trouble to empty than ashes. Closet absolutely guaranteed. Write for full description and price.

ROWE SANITARY MFG CO. 127A ROWE BLDG., DETROIT, MICH.
Ask about the Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

Join Our MONEY-MAKERS with "Successful" INCUBATORS & BROODERS

Twenty-three years leadership. Poultry lessons free to every buyer. Booklet, "How to Raise 48 out of 50 Chicks"—10c. Catalog FREE. Make green, egg-making feed in "Successful" Grain Sprouters.

DES MOINES INCUBATOR CO.
389 Second St. Des Moines, Ia.

POMPEIAN OLIVE OIL
ALWAYS FRESH
THE STANDARD IMPORTED OLIVE OIL

MONEY IN HONEY Bees Pay Easy, interesting work. Latest Methods of beekeeping told in 24 page "Bee Primer." Send 25c for new 3 months subscription, primer, and bee catalogs to pray that God will save him from his weakness of will and make him strong. Here is a boy who has been given a new chance, but he is still held by law under the shadow of past missteps. Pray earnestly, members of the League, that this widow's son may turn squarely toward God and do the right.
AMERICAN BEE JOURNAL, Box 50, Hamilton, Ill.

Mrs. L. H. writes that she has been greatly blessed by the Prayer League. She has felt her Saviour's presence in the hour of prayer and he has been her help in every time of need.

A. K. asks how much of the noon hour members of the League are supposed to give to prayer and devotion. We do not attempt to lay down any rule, but leave it to each one to give such time as it may be possible to give. Some may indeed be unable to leave their work during the noon hour, but they can lift up their hearts in prayer even while they work; others will have the leisure to give the whole hour to prayer and meditation.

Miss F. S. sends to the worried mother, for whose drink-cursed son the League is praying, the verses Mark 11 : 22–24. She writes that with others she is praying for the son of a friend who has periodical spells of drunkenness, and she sends the mother the message, "Don't stop praying, for our God answers prayer."

Miss C. S. asks the prayers of the League for the recovery from a protracted illness of her niece, Miss G. M., who also is a member of the League, praying for others as she awaits the answer to her own petition.

Mrs. B. E. M. asks prayer for herself and her husband that God may heal their afflictions.

S. J. C. asks prayer that God may guide him in a financial crisis which confronts him. If he succeeds in arranging pending matters, he will gain possession of the only building in his town available for saloon purposes and will be able to vote the town dry without holding an election. We will all pray for him.

Mrs. S. M. B. asks prayer for the healing of her husband, sick for four years after coming home from a period of work at Panama, whose illness has just been pronounced leprosy. For her "the whole earth turns to blackness where the anguish of the heart blots out everything else." She asks prayer also that she and her daughter, who must care for the husband and father, may escape the infection of this dread disease.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Wytheville, Ontario, Canada; Laurens, S. C.; Schoharie, N. Y.; Austin, Texas; Clarksburg, W. Va. (pray for a revival meeting in the United Brethren Church); Bradford, Ontario, Canada (that many may be saved during revival); South Haven, Mich. (that many may be saved during revival in Methodist Church); Coffee Creek, Mont. (that our evangelistic campaign may be fruitful here); Ashcreek, S. D. (that many may be saved during revival meetings); Stockbridge, N. Y. (in the Methodist Church); Kennebunkport, Me. (that many souls may be saved during revival here); Brookfield, Mo. (pray for a revival in all the churches here); G. M. asks prayer that God may move in mighty power on the hearts of the people of Jackson, Bloom Center, Deweyville, and Pleasant Ridge, Ohio. E. E. G. asks prayer for God's richest blessings upon a tabernacle revival in Quincy, Ill., under the leadership of Bob Jones.

Mrs. F. L. F. and Mrs. J. A. O. ask prayer that their sons' minds may be restored; Mrs. T. C., that father's mind may be restored. A Reader and Mrs. L. G. F., that their minds may be strengthened; six friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for other relatives or friends.

M. P. asks prayer that cataracts may be removed from father's eyes; Mrs. B. E. M., that husband's and own sight may be restored; A Minneapolis Believer, that mother's sight may be restored; thirteen friends ask prayer for restoration or strengthening of sight for other relatives or friends.

Twenty-seven friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace and assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Eleven parents ask prayer that their sons may be delivered from the liquor habit; Mrs. J. A. F., that brother and son may be cured of the liquor habit; four wives, their husbands; five readers, that friends or relatives may be delivered from the liquor habit.

Twenty-three parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; three wives, their husbands; forty-one readers ask prayer for the conversion of relatives or friends.

Five readers ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for others.

Eighty-four ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including E. E. J., that a minister may regain the use of his limbs; Miss R. E. W., that mother may be healed without an operation; N. W. W., that son may be healed without an operation; Mrs. W. H. H., that daughter may be restored to health without an operation; fifty-two, for healing for themselves, including Mrs. G. W. S., that the use of limbs may be restored; H. C. G., that health may be restored without an operation. Eight friends ask prayer for restoration of hearing for themselves or others.

Thirty-three ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Twenty-nine friends ask prayer for the granting of various desires and needs.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

Mrs. J. E. M., Verona, Ill.; M. R. W., Missouri; L. N. B., Quincy, Pa.; R. E. E., Auburn, Iowa; Mrs. M. C. S., Audubon, Iowa; L. M., Rockford, Ill.; L. M. A., Moline, Ill.; Mrs. F. B. T., Onsted, Mich.; E. E. W., Kennebunkport, Me.; Mrs. M. R., Reelsville, Ind.; Grateful Mother, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Mrs. J. B., Deckerville, Mich.; N. W. W., Van Horne, Iowa; F. A. B., Bridgeport, Ohio; M. B. B., Bridgewater, Me.; Reader, Guymon, Okla.; Mrs. M. E. C., Ogdensburg, N. Y.; Mrs. J. T. K., Warren, N. Y.; J. F. W., Harlon, Iowa; Mrs. G. W. H., Chambersburg, Pa.; Mrs. W. B., Wytheville, Va.

Among the Workers

THE Beacon Light Mission, affiliated with the National Bible Institute of New York City, founded twenty-four years ago in the lodging-house district of Harlem by William P. St. Germain, has recently taken possession of a five-story brick building at 2350 Third Avenue, one of the finest buildings on the avenue north of One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street. The building is being remodeled and equipped for the uses of the mission. Dormitories and private rooms will afford accommodations for one hundred men. There will be baths, a sterilizer, laundry, barber shop, kitchen, dining-room and reading-room. Class rooms will be provided for the rapidly growing Sunday school, and there will be a room for mother's meetings. From the beginning the mission has fought and prayed its way through manifold difficulties and discouragements, ever keeping its light burning, and guiding wrecked and derelict lives back to manhood and active Christian service.

AT a recent meeting of the Peace Committee of the Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends, the condition of education in Mexico was considered from the point of view of constructive peace work. It was the judgment of the committee that permanent friendly relations between the United States and Mexico would be fostered if a number of well-prepared Mexican students were admitted year by year to American colleges and universities by means of scholarship aid.

THERE is now pending in the U. S. Senate a bill which has passed the House and which will authorize the establishment of a National Leprosarium. There are now several hundred lepers scattered through seventeen states. The national government is appropriating about $140,000 a year for the care of lepers, there being leper colonies at Carville, La.; Penikese, Mass.; and San Francisco, Calif. Missionary funds amounting to $33,000 annually are used to bring added care, comfort and consolation to these afflicted ones.

THE work of the Young Men's Christian Association in the army camps on the border is well illustrated by these figures taken from the report of the activities in the Ohio building at El Paso. In three days 38,600 stamps were sold, 19,000 of them in one day; 2,500 to 4,000 letters are written daily in the building. Every book in the library is in continual use. The Bible class meets every night. An average of 1,600 men attend the religious services. At one meeting 176 men signed the personal purity pledge and at another 313 men accepted Christ and 201 reaffirmed their allegiance to the King of kings.

EVANGELISTS HART AND MAGANN of Madison, Wis., closed a union tabernacle meeting with the churches of Everett, Wash., late in November. Nine hundred conversions, besides many consecrations, are reported. The party opened a tabernacle meeting at Fairbury, Neb., early in December.

Saving the Boys. They tell a story of a man in a covered wagon driving through a Western town who stopped and hailed a man on the street.

"Hey, any saloons in this town?" he asked.

"Yes, four," was the answer.

"Giddap," said the man, moving on. "I can't locate here; I've got three boys in this wagon."

"What's your business?" yelled the citizen.

"My business is to save these boys," came back the answer as he disappeared around a bend in the road.—Kansas City Times.

One of the most picturesque roads in America — the famous sky-line drive of Colorado

You Can Be Sure of Goodyears

You are sure of a good tire when you buy a Goodyear Tire, because we are sure. We make sure.

All our effort over the last decade—in the selection of material, in the pursuit of experiment, in the manufacture of the product itself—has been to make this sureness positive and constant.

We have spent vast sums in processes, tests and inspections, and developed machines and special methods, all to this end.

And today there is not a single inexpert moment in the making of a Goodyear Tire.

The object desired—certain and invariable goodness in every tire sent forth—has been accomplished. Everywhere, Goodyear Tires stand for a definite measure of value.

Motorists generally, know that this measure of value commonly exceeds what can be had for like investment elsewhere, and for that reason more Goodyear Tires are sold than any other brand.

Motorists, generally, know they are sure of a good tire when they buy a Goodyear Tire.

You can be just as sure.

For the success that has been ours, and which we trust will continue to be ours, we realize rests and must rest upon such confidence of the public in Goodyear products.

And so realizing, it is inevitable that we shall seek to sustain this confidence in Goodyear products, by continuing to make sure.

Goodyear Tires, Heavy Tourist Tubes and "Tire Saver" Accessories are easy to get from Goodyear Service Station Dealers everywhere.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio

GOODYEAR
AKRON

BUY AN ENGINE ON YOUR OWN TERMS.

30 Years of success in making and selling my high-grade engines enables me now to sell direct to the user on practically his own terms. Any worthy, creditable man anywhere in the U. S. can accept my offer, and be sure of a reliable engine at direct from factory prices.

ED. H. WITTE

WITTE ENGINES are made in sizes 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 12, 16 and 22 H-P.—Kerosene or Gasoline. Particularly adapted for farm and shop. Hundreds in use in every state. My Free Book, "How To Judge Engines," explains fully by printed word and illustration, what you should know before buying.—ED. H. WITTE, PRES.,

WITTE ENGINE WORKS,
3753 Oakland Ave.,
Kansas City, - Missouri.
3753 Empire Bldg.,
Pittsburgh, - Penna.

Vapo-Cresolene

"USED WHILE YOU SLEEP"

Established 1879

for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Catarrh.

Don't fail to use Cresolene for the distressing, and often fatal affections for which it is recommended.

It is a simple, safe, effective and drugless treatment.

Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough and relieves Spasmodic Croup at once.

In asthma it shortens the attack and ensures comfortable repose.

The air carrying the antiseptic vapor inspired with every breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat, and stops the cough, assuring restful nights.

Cresolene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Diphtheria.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 37 years of successful use. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by Druggists

Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your Druggist or from us 10c in stamps.

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO. 62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

101 Wall Paper Samples FREE

Send your name now for this big FREE book. Over 100 new, beautiful Wall Paper designs to choose from. Every sample is cut from the paper itself. Show the exact colors and designs; prices on back of each. Prices are low—

65 CTS. Papers a Room 12 x 14 x 9 Feet!

All prices less than ½ ordinary prices—6 cents to 50 cents per double roll. And satisfaction guaranteed always or money back. Send for a copy today, study the designs and prices. You will be surprised to see how much you can save buying wall paper and paints from us.

Write house most convenient. Montgomery Ward & Co. Dept. A16º

NEW YORK CHICAGO KANSAS CITY
FORT WORTH, TEXAS
PORTLAND, ORE.

VICK'S GARDEN AND FLORAL GUIDE FOR 1917

IT'S FREE — WRITE TODAY

Several new features. Valuable information about planting. An authority on Vegetable, Flower and Farm Seeds, Plants, Bulbs and Trees. Based on our experience as America's oldest mail-order seed concern, and largest grower of Asters and many other flowers in the world. With this guide, the best ever issued, we will gladly include booklet, Asters in the Home Garden. Both are absolutely free.

Send for your copies today, before you forget.

JAMES VICK'S SONS
13 Stone Street, Rochester, N. Y.
The Flower City

FACTORY to RIDER

Saves you big money. Buy direct and save $10 to $20 on a bicycle.

RANGER BICYCLES in 44 styles, colors and sizes. Greatly improved; prices reduced. Other reliable models, $14.75 up.

WE DELIVER FREE to you on approval and 30 days trial and riding test.

Our big FREE catalog shows everything new in bicycles and sundries. A cyclopedia of information which every person should have. Write for it.

TIRES, lamps, wheels, parts and supplies at half usual prices. A few good second-hand bicycles taken in trade $3 to $8 to clear.

Do not buy a bicycle, tires or sundries until you write and learn our wonderful new offers, low prices and liberal terms. A postal brings everything. Write now.

MEAD CYCLE CO. DEPT. F-71, CHICAGO

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it, write
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

Anticipation

By
MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

"EVER been West?" questioned the man with the loud voice as he swung nonchalantly on his subway strap. "Ever been West? Ever seen the Pacific Ocean, and the sun rising way out over Golden Gate? Ever seen the Rockies—almost touching the sky—and the Arizona desert, and the Grand Canyon? Ever been West?"

His companion, a thin, pale man who looked as if he had spent the greater part of his life working hard over a ledger, jolted sickeningly as the car swung into the brightly lighted space that marked a station.

"No, never!" he gasped in answer.

The man with the loud voice looked pityingly down, as if from a very superior height.

"I went West last summer on my vacation. Some vacation! So you've never been out there—in God's country? That's what the natives call it. My, man, but you've missed a lot!"

The train jerked out of the station and began to speed smoothly through the darkness. The thin pale man loosened his clutch on the strap and gradually—very gradually—regained his poise—and his breath.

"No," he answered again, and I was surprised at the latent note of optimism in his rather tired voice, "I've lived in the city most of—all of—my life. I've always wanted to travel, and I'd like best of all to go West. But I've never been. That's a pleasure still in store for me!"

I ONCE knew two little boys who were never, except on very extra special occasions, allowed to eat sweets. One afternoon, while I was calling on their mother, they came in, radiant, each with a bright silver dime clutched in his chubby hand.

"Where did you get them?" questioned the mother.

"We were walkin' down the street," the largest of the little boys told her, "an' we met—"

"Daddy!" finished the tiniest boy.

"An' he said, 'I guess I know what you fellers'd like!'—An' we said—" continued the largest boy.

"Ice-cream sodas," murmured the tiniest boy.

"An' so," went on the largest boy, scarcely noticing the interruption, "he put his hand in his pocket an' he gave us each ten cents. An' he said, 'If yer mother'll let you—'"

Both boys paused and watched her with large, questioning eyes.

"May we?" they asked.

The mother laughed. "Yes," she said, "you may. I don't usually let you have sweets, but this once—"

The two boys scampered out of the room, out of sight. But half an hour later, as I left the house and went down the street, I saw them standing on the corner, engaged in earnest conversation. Each one still clutched a bright silver dime.

"Let's," the tiniest boy was saying, "let's get our ice-cream sodas—now!"

"No." The largest boy was very positive. "Let's not get them now. Let's wait a while."

The tiniest boy glanced across the street. Following his glance I saw a temptingly decorated window with words, gilded words, printed across it. "Candy & Ice Cream," read the gilded words. There was blank wonder in the tiniest boy's voice as he spoke.

"Why?" he questioned. "Why? Why not now?"

And then the largest boy spoke out with a wisdom greater than his years.

"Bobby," he said, "if we go get those ice-cream sodas now—we got 'em. An' that's all. An' you know it isn't often that we're allowed to have 'em. But if we wait a while we can be thinkin' all afternoon about 'em—we'll know we're goin' to have 'em. An' we'll have all the fun of thinkin' . . . " he paused, at a loss for words, for the average small boy's vocabulary is not a large one.

"If we got 'em now," he finished, "we just got 'em! An' that's all."

LATER I told the story, with much laughter, to the mother of the little boys. She laughed, too.

"They're such different little mites," she told me; "so utterly different. Bobby always wants everything right away. If he doesn't get it right away he's inclined to feel that he's been cheated. But Tom, the oldest, always get's so much joy out of looking forward. Anticipation is the great thing to him.

"If I promise to take them to the shops, or the zoo, or the moving pictures, and then something happens to prevent, I'll usually say, 'We'll go another time, boys!' And Bobby never fails to wail and say, 'I didn't want to miss it!' But Tom will always look interested and cry, 'Won't it be fun when we do go!'"

THERE are just two ways of looking at the things that you can't have, the things that you can't do, the sights that you can't see. Just two ways, but they are as different from each other as the sunshine is different from the rain; as far away from each other as the south pole is from the north pole. One way is the loud-voiced man's way—the other is the way of the pale, thin man.

For, when I heard them talking in the subway car, the man with the loud voice said:

"You've missed a lot!" But the other man said, rather bravely,

"It's a pleasure that's still in store for me!"

A pleasure still in store! That's the way to look at the things we dream about, the things that we hope, someday, to have—the things we fear that we shall never do, never see, never own, even while we are in the midst of our hoping for them.

Anticipation is a wonderful thing, even though it's the anticipation of a dream that may never be realized. It helps—oh, how it helps!—to know that there's something untried ahead! It's exciting to struggle on to a certain goal; and if you never reach the goal, you've still had the joy of the struggle and the excitement and the sweetness of it.

The thin, pale man looked as if he had spent most of his life working, bent over a ledger. Doubtless he had; for a great army of men, who spend their lives in just that way, travel on the subway—where I saw him—every day. And yet, over his ledger, beyond the figures and statistics, he had the gift that only anticipation may bring. He could still dream, even when he was crowded in by the city—the city that he had always lived in—of the Grand Canyon, and the sunrise beyond Golden Gate, and the snow-capped Rockies touching the sky.

OH, friends of mine, never get so tired of heart that you lose the pleasure of looking forward! Never get so commonplace that you lose the joy of anticipation. Never forget to dream of the things ahead! Never cry out, in bitterness of soul and spirit, that you've missed something—be it success, or riches, or health, or love. Be brave enough to put a bit of optimism in your tones and say,

"That's a pleasure still in store for me!"

For you know, and I know, that God has a storehouse of precious dreams; and if you are brave enough, he may some day open that storehouse and let you wander through the glory of it.

◆

2,400 Rain or Shine!

HAVE you heard of the many churches which were finding it easy to lure folks out to service on Sunday night? Neither have we!

But do you think a prescription like this would make it any easier? Open the doors at six-thirty o'clock; start in with an old-fashioned song service, followed by a twenty-five-minute Bible talk; then an organ recital; and conclude with a service of anthems, prayer, Scripture reading, hymns and address, lasting an hour and a half more.

"What a dose!" gasps the skeptic. "Why, nobody would stand for that nowadays!"

Nobody? Listen! In the city of Chicago, during October and November, for seven successive Sunday nights, three thousand people walked past a glittering array of amusements and diversions to take in just that religious bill of fare! A climax of 10,000 was reached on the night that William Jennings Bryan was advertised to speak on "The First Commandment." It was a great tribute to Mr. Bryan, of course, but scarcely less so to the religious organization under whose auspices he appeared. For years, through the stormy nights of winter and all, this is a congregation that has steadily averaged 2,400 strong.

The institution that draws such gatherings is the Sunday Evening Club. The autumn meetings mentioned above are only the first of a season that lasts till June, and they no longer have the charm of novelty, for these are the opening months of the tenth year.

The programs of the club meetings have been unusual from the start. The speakers have been drawn from the ranks of distinguished Americans in many walks of life, and also from eminent visitors from other lands. Whether layman or clergyman, all are asked to present an essentially Christian message.

The feature of the Bible class, conducted by President Barnes, is typical of the growth and character of the club. Started as a small service for early arrivals, it has become itself a prominent feature at which between 1,500 and 2,000 people may be found in attendance each Sunday. GEORGE J. ANDERSON.

◆

Called Higher

Mrs. Mary. J. Ellis, Indianola, Iowa; Miss Lizzie Humphreys, Bryn Mawr, Pa.; E. H. McClanahan, Deputy, Ind.; Mrs. Clara K. Baker, Stafford Springs, Conn., 88 years; Mrs. Elizabeth H. Smith, Webster, Mass., 93 years; Miss Libby Ford, Morristown, N. J., 81 years; Henry Freese, Plattin, Mo., 76 years; Mrs. Almina Fry, Wheeling, W. Va., 87 years.

Mrs. Daniel White, devoted friend of the Christian Herald for many years, died June 15, aged 95 years. She was a native of Canada, where she raised a family of ten children, coming to California in 1882, where five sons and two daughters and numerous grandchildren and great-grandchildren survive her. She was a faithful Methodist.

Richard Frederick Winsor, a valued missionary worker in India for years, passed away recently in Omaha, Neb. He was a son of Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Richard Winsor, well-known missionaries in India.

Church Organs

LATEST APPROVED METHODS. HIGHEST GRADE ONLY. ESTABLISHED 1827.

Main Office and Works: Kendal Green, Mass.

Hook & Hastings Co.

BRANCHES

Boston, New York, Phila., Chicago, Louisville, Dallas

NOTICE TO JOIN THE ARMY Came to an over-the-sea farmer. Read how he went about arranging his affairs. Interesting and stimulating to faith. Send a three months' trial subscription to include the December issue, 25c. Six months, 50c; one year, $1.

THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS MAGAZINE
152 Institute Place CHICAGO

LE PAGE'S GLUE 10¢
WILL MEND IT

Improve Your Voice

Send now for information on the famous Feuchtinger Method. A course of easy, silent exercises for the vocal organs. Makes weak, harsh and husky voices strong and clear. Special attention to stammering and lisping. Recommended by greatest singers of Europe. No matter how hopeless your case may seem, send for literature.

Write Today for our literature, absolutely FREE and postage prepaid. Send for it now.

Perfect Voice Institute, Studio 2491 1810 Wilson Ave., Chicago

SAMPLE OUR SEED

Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c. One packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Earliest Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce, 10c to new customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG FREE.

C. N. Robinson & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore, Md.

MENDETS—THE WONDER MONEY MAKERS

Mend leaks instantly in all Utensils, Hot Water Bags, etc. Simply insert and tighten. 10c. and 25c. per pkg. Postpaid. Agents wanted.

COLLETTE MFG. CO., Box 302, Amsterdam, N. Y.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."

RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES For 50 yrs. Standard Relief for Asthma (Inhalation) All Druggists; or by mail, 35c.

STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.

Mercy and Munitions

Continued from page 3

From Poland also have come these letters from Pastors Schmidt and Scheffler:

"The Lodz German News,
"Wednesday, June 14, 1916.

"THE warm sunshine of love casts its rays far distant over the sea! The American newspaper, The Christian Herald, has set itself the task of collecting contributions for the sufferers and needy in Poland. It has sent to the Warsaw Evangelical Augsburg Consistory a right considerable amount: 100,000 marks. From this fund the undersigned received 2,000 marks. How many anxious cares which hung like heavy clouds over the lives of many poor fellow Christians are thereby dissipated! How many treasuries were thereby enabled to be filled at least for a short time, whereby many a now prevailing bitter distress was checked! Thanks, a thousand thanks for this gift. The undersigned has distributed these 2,000 marks, for which he received 1,060 rubles in exchange, in the following manner:

"Above all things the great need of potatoes for our poor Evangelical people could now be checked somewhat; 110 Evangelical families of the city and partly of the country were enabled at the same time to plant their own potatoes, after six 'morgen' [a little under four acres. TRANS.] of land had been rented for them and they had been provided with seed potatoes and artificial manure. Each family received for this purpose thirty square roods [the German 'Rute,' roughly about 175 square yards, for each family. TRANS.] of land and two hundredweight of potatoes. So then these families are relieved of anxious care for the coming winter. 'Where shall we get bread (potatoes now are the bread of the poor), so that we and our children may eat and not die of hunger?' For this purpose 610 marks were expended. Many another poor suffering inhabitant of our country community too has been permitted to feel something of the warm sunshine of love which has spread over our land from America. Various country people in Ruda Pabianicka, Wymyslow, Kudrovice and Koenigsbach received 90 rubles out of this fund. Also two treasuries, which provide our Evangelical community with provisions and food, received contributions, namely, the Evangelical Lutheran Mission Society, which every week distributes flour among the poorest 100 families of our community, 100 rubles, and the cheap food dispensary of our Evangelical community, which no longer is able to pay its expenses out of its own means, that is, out of the gifts coming from our community, 50 rubles. The remaining 210 rubles were, in accordance with the designation of the Christian Herald, assigned to the Catholic and Jewish communities.

"Thankful as we are for these large, magnanimous bounties, yet we can not help but point out the fact that the need does not grow less but rather ever greater. What a great responsibility weighs down there like a heavy load on the souls of all those who can still help! Oh friends, save what can be saved!

"(Pastor) R. SCHMIDT."

Dr. Stanley White offering prayer for God's blessing on the voyage of the Cæsar. The monster bouquet was given to the commanding officers as an expression of the gratitude of New York Syrians to the Government for placing the ship at the service of the committee.

In a report Pastor Schmidt requests an allowance of 400 rubles monthly. This request is only one of many, and it is because of these we have planned the Monthly Offering Clubs.

"Wirballen,
"May 19, 1916.

"I GIVE the heartiest thanks of all of us to the Christian Herald for the 300 marks we have received. In our present condition it was an extraordinary help to us; for it was just enough for the purchase of a milch-cow, which is of incalculable value to us, as we have a two-year-old child and my wife is very sick abed with a dangerous disease of the stomach which she got on account of poor nourishment. Then the money came to us as a savior in our distress.

"We have lost almost everything in the war, but can now hope to hold out during the hard times without having to suffer hunger and distress.

"Most respectfully, your thankful
A. SCHEFFLER."

PLEASE address all gifts to the Christian Herald, Room 93, Bible House, New York City.

Temperance War Posters

THE warring nations of Europe are not only utilizing the latest inventions in science, but they are also conducting their campaign along the lines pursued by business. Great Britain has become the greatest advertiser in the world. The war-recruiting posters were marvels of advertising art.

The temperance forces have been quick to follow the example of the government, and probably more artistic and striking examples of the advertising art have never been used in behalf of temperance than the temperance war posters which appeal to the public from every place where publicity is possible, for total abstinence during the war.

Miss Margaret Wintringer, whose articles have appeared in the Christian Herald, secured quite a collection of these war and temperance posters, and an exhibit of them attracted great attention at the National Anti-Saloon League Convention at Indianapolis. President Bishop Luther Wilson referred to the posters in his annual address, declaring it to be the most wonderful exhibit ever brought to the United States. The exhibit is to be used for the purpose of raising funds to carry on temperance work among the soldiers of the warring nations. Miss Wintringer will be glad to correspond with any one who will aid in bringing before the public this collection of temperance war posters, which have a telling message for audiences in our own country. Letters addressed to Miss Wintringer, in care of the Christian Herald, will reach her.

Give Quaker Oats the Center Place

Make This the Best-Loved Dish

The oat, you know, is the greatest cereal that comes to your morning table.

It is the age-famed vim-food. It is a major source of brain and nerve constituents—also of vitamines.

So, among our cereal foods, the oat dish should stand first. And our aim should be to make it the most inviting.

Study Food

That's the chief reason for serving Quaker Oats. Not because of extra vitalizing power, but for its extra enticements.

It best serves your purpose because folks like it best. It does more good because folks eat more of it.

Vim Food

Quaker Oats

The Vim-Food Luxury

Quaker Oats is flaked oats, like many another oat food.

But these flakes are made from the queen grains only. The little oats are all discarded. A bushel of choice oats yields only ten pounds of these big, white, luscious oat flakes.

That is why Quaker Oats has such flavor and aroma. That is why oat lovers of a hundred nations choose it. And that is why it holds the center place among the breakfast dishes of the world.

It has made oat-food a different dish from what it used to be.

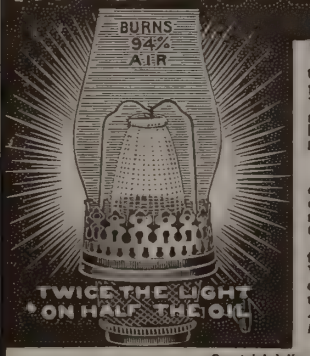
10c and 25c per package
Except in Far West and South

An Aluminum Cooker for $1.00

Made to our order, extra large and heavy, to cook Quaker Oats in the ideal way. Send us our trademarks—the picture of the Quaker—cut from the fronts of five Quaker Oats packages, or an affidavit showing the purchase of five packages of Quaker Oats. Send $1.00 with the trademarks or affidavit, and this ideal cooker will be sent to you by parcel post prepaid. We require the trademarks or affidavit as assurance that you are a user of Quaker Oats. The trademarks have no redemption value. This offer applies to United States and Canada. We supply only one cooker to a family.

Address The Quaker Oats Co., 1708 Railway Exchange, Chicago

(1460)



BURNS 94% AIR
TWICE THE LIGHT ON HALF THE OIL

New KEROSENE LIGHT BEATS ELECTRIC OR GASOLINE

10 Days FREE—Send No Money

We don't ask you to pay us a cent until you have used this wonderful modern white light in your own home ten days, then you may return it at our expense if not perfectly satisfied. You can't possibly lose a cent. We want to prove to you that it makes an ordinary oil lamp look like a candle; beats electric, gasoline or acetylene. Lights and is put out like old oil lamp. Tests by U. S. Government and 34 leading Universities show that it common kerosene (coal oil), no odor, smoke or noise, simple, clean, won't explode. Three million people already enjoying this powerful, white, steady light, nearest to sunlight. Won Gold Medal at Panama Exposition. Greatest invention of the age. Guaranteed.

Burns 50 Hours on One Gallon

$1000 Reward will be given to the person who shows us an oil lamp equal to the new Aladdin in every way (details of offer given in our circular). We want one user in each locality to whom we can refer customers. To that person we have a special introductory offer to make, under which one lamp is given free. Write quick for our 10-Day Absolutely Free Trial Proposition and learn how to get one free. Yours FREE

MANTLE LAMP COMPANY, 105 Aladdin Building, CHICAGO, ILL.
Largest Kerosene (Coal Oil) Mantle Lamp House in the World

Men With Rigs Can Make Big Money Our trial delivery plan makes it easy. No previous experience necessary. Practically every farm home and small town home will buy after trying. One farmer who had never sold anything in his life before writes: "I sold 51 the first seven days." Christensen, Wis., says: "Have never seen an article that sells so easily." Norring, Iowa, says: "92 per cent of homes visited bought." Phillips, Ohio, says: "Every customer becomes a friend and booster." Kemerling, Minn., says: "No flowery talk necessary. Sells itself." Thousands who are coining money endorse the Aladdin just as strongly. NO MONEY REQUIRED. We furnish stock to reliable men to get started. Ask for our distributor's plan, and learn how to secure an appointment and make big money in unoccupied territory. State occupation, age, whether you have rig or auto; whether can work spare time or steady; when can start; townships most convenient for you to work.

GUNN OFFICE DESKS
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Be Good to your Books

When you need a bookcase to really preserve your books, as well as add to the artistic beauty of your room—something in Colonial, Mission, Clawfoot, etc., designs, handsomely finished, dust-proof, easily taken apart, no ugly iron bands, do not fail to look at

GUNN Sectional Bookcases

Are Lower in Price than Others

at your dealers. Our free new catalogue in colors will help you make a satisfactory selection at prices lower than others. Four sections shipped in a little box, instead of set up, mean a big saving in freight and cost to you. Something entirely new and interesting, "In an Emperor's Den," will be sent also. Dealers everywhere.

THE GUNN FURNITURE CO.
1824 Broadway, Grand Rapids, Mich.

After 20 Years in a Gunn

10 Years not so protected

War-Peace-Prosperity

A trio of New Gladioli from Meadowvale Farms

War. Deep blood-red, shading to crimson-black.
Peace. The finest white. Slight lilac feathering on inferior petals.
Prosperity. New, and first offering. Bright rose-pink, shading to madder-lake. Large flowers, long spikes.

One Bulb of Each Variety Sent to Any Address for $3

Only two collections to a customer. Prosperity is sold in this collection only.

The Glory of the Garden, my booklet for 1917, describes the trio in detail with many other well-known and desirable varieties. You may have a copy free if you send your name and address. Write today.

ARTHUR COWEE—Meadowvale Farms, Box 214, Berlin, New York

Real Help for Tired Feet

A busy day and on your feet most of the time—a long, tiresome trip or a hike in the country—new shoes to break in—all these mean tired feet. Soothe and rest them by applying a few drops of Absorbine, Jr.

THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

Or, if you are very tired and your feet burn, ache or swell, soak them in a solution of Absorbine, Jr., and water. Relief will be prompt and lasting.

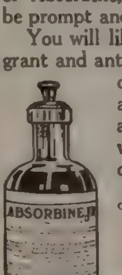
You will like the "feel" of this clean, fragrant and antiseptic liniment. It penetrates quickly, leaves no greasy residue and is intensely refreshing. Only a few drops needed to do the work, as Absorbine, Jr., is highly concentrated.

Keep a bottle handy at home, at the office, or in your grip when travelling.

$1.00 a bottle at most druggists or postpaid.

Send 10c for Liberal Trial Bottle or procure a regular size bottle from your druggist today.

W. F. YOUNG, P. D. F.,
5 Temple St., Springfield, Mass.



FREE 1917 PLANTING GUIDE AND PURE SEEDBOOK

Ask now! This beautiful 96-page four-color book describes 1917 varieties vegetables and flowers; handsomely illustrated; beautiful home grounds, flower and vegetable gardens, landscaping, shrubbery, orchards, farms. A dictionary on gardening! Flower lover's delight! Berry grower's book! An orchardist's manual! Most wonderful gardening guide catalog ever published. Better than our famous 1916 book. Don't miss it. Ask today. A postal gets it.
Galloway Bros. & Co., Dept. 2655 Waterloo, Ia.

FREE LESSONS IN MUSIC

Largest School Offers Instruction Gratis to Ambitious Students

An opportunity that will be eagerly seized by ambitious music lovers, both young and old, is being extended this month by the largest school of its kind in America, the U. S. School of Music of this city.

By an entirely new and amazingly simple and easy method for teaching music by mail—a system originated by this institution—more than 240,000 pupils have been successfully trained in their own homes to play the Piano, the Violin, Mandolin, Banjo, Organ, Cornet, Harp, Sight Singing, Guitar, 'Cello, Clarinet, Trombone, Piccolo, Flute.

At a recent meeting of the board of directors the school decided to accept a limited number of new pupils to whom full courses of instruction will be given without charge in order to further advertise this new system for teaching music by mail.

All those who apply at once will be enrolled for free scholarships—only a very small charge being made to cover the expense for postage and the sheet music required for lessons. The school is located at 225 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and any one interested can obtain full particulars simply by addressing a postal to the President, Mr. D. F. Kemp, Dept. 7.

The Wicked John Goode

Continued from page 11

Cold? Say, man, all you know about cold is how it's spelled. I've been so cold on some of those nights I didn't know where I was walking or even that I was walking. I got so cold I didn't know it was cold! And then how I suffered after sun-up on a warm grating on a bakery where I drank in the savory odor of freshly baked bread! You've walked a mile, maybe, in zero weather, on a good big breakfast and before a hearty meat dinner when you were warmly clad. Well, I know what it means to walk in that kind of weather all night for seven consecutive nights, scantily clad and not tasting one morsel of meat or fat in all that time. And what I got at the Mission taught me how to do that little stunt without complaining and without making a touch. Don't you call that a result? Do you think I did it for fun? I did it because I wanted God and I couldn't get God unless I was on the level. Not once in that six months did I enter a saloon or touch a drop of beer or liquor or wine. Not once in that six months was I profane!

One day while sitting in the Labor Bureau, half starved, helpless, almost hopeless and despairing of ever making good, I wondered whether it was worth while to go on. There were about eighty of us sitting about, and there wouldn't be eighty or forty or thirty jobs come in that day. There wasn't a chance in the world of my making so much as ten cents. Another night must I walk and walk and walk those icy, friendless streets till daylight. You couldn't stop or you'd die of exposure. I was on the verge of throwing up the sponge. God above knows how I was tempted, but I didn't yield. I sat still and gritted my teeth. And then in the midst of my despair and discouragement in walked Charlie Balevre. He must have read my face, for over he walked and asked how things were going. Before I had time to answer he slipped a dollar bill into my hands and left me standing there. It was a gracious act and it came at a time when something unusual was needed to save the day. Never before or since has anything so strengthened me and put heart in me. A single simple act. He had seen my desperate need. My soul cried to heaven in thanks! I could sleep on a "pad" again! I could have a piece of meat again! I could take off my clothes that night and have a warm bath! Do you wonder such thoughts made me feel good?

On my way to a lodging house to rent a "pad" I was told that the Holy Name Mission was to remain open all night because of the cold! In I went, and also the four following nights—five nights of delightful, refreshing sleep, even though it came on a hard wooden bench with my clothes on!

DOES God help a man "come back" while the man is on the level? Let's see! I was fighting hard. That January was the toughest of my life, but I kept on right up to the verge of the breaking point. Then came that dollar bill! Then five nights of warm, restful sleep! And then the Mission gave me a job with board and a place to sleep in the Memorial House—a place they maintained where some of their converts lived! I was to tend door; and the salary was one dollar a week. Every man in the house was living right and thinking right. I was thrown into intimate relation with these fellows, and I got a lot of strength and courage to help me keep on struggling for a better manhood and for God!

I attended the Mission services regularly, and the Wednesday night Bible class. My ultimate victory—although I fell down again miserably before I reached it—I lay to that six months' Bible study with Dr. Hallimond. When I got through, the Bible meant something to me, or rather a very small part of it did.

We began our study at a happy chapter. I doubt if any other would have got me the way that one did. Perhaps the Doctor had more of my kind among the twenty-five. At any rate he chose well, for all of us, without exception, developed splendidly in our new life. We started and finished one chapter in those six months—the 13th chapter of First Corinthians. Its undreamed-of treasures were food to my starved soul. As the meaning of it—of love—dawned slowly on my mind I could see the beautiful way it had been applied to me, and I realized at last that religion did have a "kick" in it, and that the brand I'd run up against down there on the Bowery was the real stuff. I understood then why they fed fellows and got them work as well as talked to them about God and his love. It was a different sort of brotherly love than I'd heard about in prisons and reform schools.

Love—brotherly love—the love of God—His love for us—all these things became real to me then. I wanted to be on God's side—but only for Jane. I hadn't yet caught the true meaning. What I wanted God for was because of Jane.

I thought she needed it in me. I didn't dream I needed it first. I didn't know then that I couldn't go safely—keep right—until I got God for myself. But I learned that, as I learned all I know, by personal experience, the best teacher in the world.

From my dollar-a-week job in the Memorial House they transferred me to a job at a dollar and fifty cents a week in the industrial department at the Mission itself. I ate and slept there. My duties consisted of going out on call to collect old chairs that were to be recaned and furniture that needed re-upholstering or repairing. This work was done in the Mission by men who were going through the same process I was going through. When the work was completed I delivered it and collected the money. They trusted me implicitly, of course, although they knew my past just as you do. I turned in every cent I collected and sometimes I carried a goodly amount of money. I did it all without an error and without even a single thought of being dishonest. You know what love and responsibility will do. Love is the most powerful force in the world, and there's no power on earth can stop it once it gets into a fellow's skin. That's Mr. Osborne's belief and the results he had at Auburn and Sing Sing are only natural and commonplace. He awakened in the hearts of those men something they didn't know they possessed.

AS I called each week on Jane I could see plainly she was getting no better, in fact, I saw she was failing. How my heart ached! And as I noticed this change for the worse in her she noticed the change for the better in me. Frequently she said to me, the tears streaming down her cheeks, "John's a good man now!"

While my salary had been a dollar a week I'd given her half of it, but now that I earned $1.50 I could spare her a dollar, which she got regularly. Those were proud and happy days for both of us! Each day that passed gave me greater confidence in my strength and my ability to beat the things that for years had beaten me.

The month of May rolled round as I began to get impatient at the progress I was making. I wasn't earning enough. I wanted a home where I could take Jane. One dollar and a half wouldn't give it to me. And so I looked around for new employment. All my friends advised me to remain at or near the Mission, to stay where its influence could help me until I was stronger in my new life.

But no, I must have more money. I must have a home for my failing wife. I feared she would die. I dreaded to think of that before I had in a small way made up to her for all those years of agony and heartache.

To be continued

◆

PROF. BYRON PORTER SMITH, teacher in Syrian Protestant College, Beirut, Syria, who, while on furlough, wrote several articles for the Christian Herald, has returned to his post in Beirut, going by Balkan Railway from Berlin to his destination by way of Constantinople and Aleppo.

MAGAZINE BARGAINS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has made arrangements with the publishers of other magazines whereby our readers can obtain two or more magazines in a club at a considerable saving over the price if ordered singly. The prices given here are for one year (new or renewal) and can go to different addresses, except in a few cases noted otherwise. No one can fill your order for these magazines at any lower prices. If the magazines wanted are not given below, ask us for special quotation. Canadian postage, 50c additional; foreign, $1.00.

Magazines	Prices	Club price	Saving
Christian Herald... McCall's (pattern)..	$2.00 .50	$2.00	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... Today's (pattern)...	$2.00 .50	$2.00	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... Woman's World....	$2.00 .35	$2.00	Save 35 cts.
Christian Herald... Ladies' World......	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald.. Every Week........	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Boys' Magazine (or Boy's Life)..........	$2.00 1.00	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Today's (pattern)... McCall's (pattern)..	$2.00 .50 .50	$2.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Modern Priscilla...	$2.00 1.00	$2.35	Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... Etude (Music).......	$2.00 1.50	$2.50	Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Little Folks.........	$2.00 1.00	$2.50	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... Mother's Magazine	$2.00 1.50	$2.50	Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Garden Magazine..	$2.00 2.00	$2.50	Save $1.50
Christian Herald, 1 yr. Am. Poultry Ad., 2 yrs. Book—200 Eggs a Year per Hen....	$2.00 1.00 '.50	$2.50	Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Modern Priscilla... Home Needlework..	$2.00 1.00 .75	$2.75	Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.50	$2.75	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Delineator.........	$2.00 1.50	$2.75	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... American (or Everybody's)....	$2.00 1.50	$2.75	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Pictorial Review...	$2.00 1.50	$3.00	Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... Ladies' World...... Mother's Magazine.	$2.00 1.00 1.50	$3.00	Save $1.50
Christian Herald... McCall's (pattern).. Youth's Companion	$2.00 .50 2.00	$3.50	Save $1.00
Christian Herald... *Woman's Home Companion..... *American.........	$2.00 1.50 1.50	$3.50	Save $1.50
(*Must go to same address)
Christian Herald... Modern Priscilla... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.00 1.50	$3.60	Save 90 cts.
Christian Herald... Pictorial Review... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.50 1.50	$4.25	Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... *Youth's Companion *Review of Reviews..	$2.00 2.00 3.00	$4.50	Save $2.50
(*Must go to same address)

CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House New York, N. Y.

The Bible Picture Contest

ALL members of the Committee of Judges in the Bible Picture Contest have come to a joint decision as to the applicable Bible verses.

In all, there have been one hundred and twenty-four verses selected. In some cases, one verse has been found to be the only one that could fit a certain picture within the definition of the rule of "best." In some other cases, two verses have been found equally applicable; in several instances four verses were selected as best.

The lists submitted by contestants (these are mostly in Reply Books) are being checked and otherwise verified so that there shall be absolute accuracy and justice in determining who are the four hundred and nineteen winners. Indeed, this number may be increased in event of ties being found, as qualified by the rules. Further information of interest will appear in next week's issue.

An announcement of the second Bible Picture Study appears on this page. We have been ready to start this new and improved educational pastime for a considerable time, but we would not announce the start until we were able to give our readers satisfying news in reference to the closing of the first competition.

The new Study will be better in several respects than its predecessor, one of the chief virtues being a plan whereby the Committee of Judges will be able to come to a prompt decision so that rewards may be paid soon after the last picture is published.

◆

The Correspondence of Prof. David Smith, D.D.

FOR some time past I have been living day and night with sudden death stalking about me on every hand. I honestly confess that there are times when I shudder and shiver with fear. Hundreds of others are suffering likewise to the extent of being counted as casualties under the heading of "shell-shock." During the night, and when isolated from comrades, this fear can only be known by those who have experienced it. I have parents, wife, and children for whom I desire to live and provide. They and others are praying that I may not be killed nor wounded. I have an intuitive feeling that I shall return home, but it is not the confident faith of some Christians who are under fire. Am I justified in desiring such a faith in view of so many who have held it and died?—Sapper C. M. (France).

THIS fear is not cowardice. It is, on the contrary, inseparable from the highest type of heroism. It is told of that gallant French soldier of the seventeenth century, Marshal Turenne, that once, when he was riding into action, his body shuddered and trembled. "Aha!" he exclaimed (addressing his body), "you are trembling? You would be still more afraid if you knew whither I am taking you." It is not courage, but stolidity, to be unmoved in the face of danger.

The true hero is one whose flesh is weak, but whose spirit is willing and compels his weak flesh. Presentiments are inevitable with an imaginative temperament, and there is no harm in them if they be harbored discreetly. The essential fact is that they are not promises of God, and we must not build upon them. They are largely temperamental, the offspring of moods. There is a striking example in the experience of Paul. When he was returning to Jerusalem at the close of his third missionary journey, he was deeply depressed. The outlook was dark, and he had a presentiment that the end was near: he was on the road to death. He stopped en route at Miletus, and had an interview there with the elders of the Ephesian church; and he told them that they would never see his face again (Acts 20 : 25). In fact, they did see his face again. He did not die at Jerusalem. He was sent to Rome, and after lying in prison there for two years he was released and revisited Ephesus (I Tim. 1 : 3). The apostle had his presentiments, but in all his calculations his constant proviso, expressed or implicit, was "if the Lord will" (I Cor. 4 : 19). DAVID SMITH.

The College, Londonderry.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF THE

Christian Herald Second Bible Picture Study

IN the issue of January 17 we shall begin the second popular contest in which 60 pictures will be published for which applicable Bible verses are to be found and submitted by those who participate in this fascinating pastime.

Even Better Than Last Year's Contest

Instead of 419 rewards, there will be given 1,000 rewards in the Second Bible Picture Study.

Instead of $3,500 in cash rewards, there will be at least $5,628 in cash rewards in the coming Study.

Instead of delays that are unavoidable when there is a wide divergence in geographical location of the Judges, the correctly applicable Bible verses will be determined by a Committee of eminently capable Bible authorities holding sessions in New York City, until the full decisions are made. It is calculated that by this plan, coupled with a newly improved checking system, the list of correct verses and of winning participants can be announced—and rewards paid—within a short time after the close of the Bible Study.

Attractive List of Rewards

First Reward..............................	$1,000 in Cash
Second Reward............................	800 in Cash
Third Reward..............................	600 in Cash
Fourth Reward............................	400 in Cash
Fifth Reward..............................	200 in Cash
Sixth Reward..............................	100 in Cash
Seventh Reward...........................	75 in Cash
Eighth and Ninth Rewards, each $50.......	100 in Cash
Tenth to Fifteenth Rewards, each $25......	150 in Cash
Sixteenth to Eighteenth Rewards, each $20.	60 in Cash
Nineteenth to Twenty-first Rewards, each $15..............................	45 in Cash
Twenty-second to Thirty-first Rewards, each $10..............................	100 in Cash
Thirty-second to Fifty-first Rewards, each $5..............................	100 in Cash
Fifty-second to One Thousandth Rewards, each $2..............................	1,898 in Cash
Total....................................	$5,628 in Cash

The announced list of rewards will be awarded, in order, to the highest ranking participants. In the event of ties, each tying participant will receive the full reward tied for.

Further Particulars Coming

See next week's issue for very interesting details. Some changes have been made in the Rules, in the interest of simplicity.

Think of the pleasure of looking over the many interesting Bible pictures that will appear in coming issues and matching them with Bible verses which explain or are explained by pictures. Besides, it may be the means of laying aside a nest-egg, which will provide the extras in life you have been planning and can in this way secure.

We want you to join us, and we know you yourself will welcome the opportunity. You do not need to be a diligent, well-versed student of the Bible. That is one reason why so many whose knowledge of the Bible was limited obtained so much good from our study last year. We believe that even those who fail to obtain one of the thousand cash rewards we offer will consider the time profitably spent.

You can obtain the Bible Study Outfit, in combination with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.35.

Or you can obtain the Bible Study Outfit by securing for us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.

An illustrated descriptive circular about the Christian Herald Second Bible Picture Study will be mailed on request. Ask for "Bible Picture Study Prospectus." Address:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY

ONE YEAR of the HUDSON SUPER-SIX

A year ago a stranger—an enigma. A new invention with astounding claims. Now conceded ruler of motordom. It perfected the Six and turned interest back from added cylinders. It showed the way to real efficiency. Holder of all worth while records. Applauded by 25,000 enthusiastic owners. The Largest Selling Front Rank Car.

A STORY UNPARALLELED IN AUTOMOBILE HISTORY

Two years ago, with us and with others, the trend was toward motors of the V-type.

We were then the foremost builders of the light weight Six. Its advantages and limitations were fully understood by us.

Its smoothness of operation quickly made the Six the accepted type over Fours. But as the motors were developed limitations were encountered which prevented the realization of engineering ideals.

The problem was approached principally from the standpoint that if added cylinders were adopted, all such limitations would be banished.

For a time it seemed the Six would cease to command the leadership it had maintained.

Just before the New York Automobile Show one year ago, all interest centered in motors of the multi-cylinder type.

But at the Show, the Hudson Super-Six made its debut. Then instantly interest swung to it.

We claimed a new type. The factor which had limited the efficiency of all types—Fours, Sixes, Eights and Twelves—had been discovered and overcome.

A new principle in design had been revealed.

What had been sought by leading engineers for years had been found by Hudson.

The simplicity of the Six could be retained. Motor limitations had been removed. Added cylinders were not needed.

So leadership, because of that, was accorded the Super-Six.

The trend to the multi-cylinder was arrested.

Numerous makers gave up their Eight and Twelve cylinder plans.

Let us review the year's developments.

The Super-Six Showed the Way

Hudson engineers approached the problem from a new angle. They solved it with a mathematical principle upon which a basic patent was granted.

By that single invention the most sought for solution to motor car problems, regardless of the number of cylinders, was found.

Greater power was obtained. More flexibility was shown and when the car was tried for endurance it successfully met tests never imposed on motor cars before. These things we think essential to efficiency. They are efficiency. You will see by what the Super-Six has done in winning all worth while stock car records that our claim to 80% increased efficiency is a modest boast.

Greater Proof of Endurance

Until the coming of the Super-Six practically all records for speed, acceleration, hill climbing and endurance were held by Fours. The Sixes had not done much.

A few records had been won by cars of the multi-cylinder type.

But the Super-Six instantly changed that condition.

We first proved the endurance of the Super-Six motor by running a stock chassis 1819 miles in 24 hours. That beat the best previous endurance record by 52%. It is perhaps the world's most coveted record.

We showed greater power by winning the Pike's Peak Hill Climb, the greatest "non-stock" event of its kind. And we defeated twenty famous contenders in the world's most trying power test.

We proved road service by driving a 7-passenger Super-Six Touring Car from San Francisco to New York in 5 days, 3 hours and 31 minutes.

Then we turned around and went back, completing the round trip in 10 days and 21 hours. Thus twice in one round trip with a single car we established America's greatest proof of endurance. It was the first car to ever attempt the round trip against time.

Our invention gives more power without added cylinders or weight. It gives quicker acceleration and adds a yet unknown degree to the endurance of the motor.

All this came from the solution of that one problem which engineers had been unable to solve. The power that had been wasted in the motor itself was delivered where it was useful and available.

This Turned Interest Back to the Six

But many did not distinguish between a Six and the Super-Six.

As a result all makers of Sixes profited. Many buyers thought by what the Super-Six had shown that any good Six could do as well. So when they found it difficult to get prompt delivery of a Super-Six they accepted a Six.

Now they know there is no similarity between Sixes and the Super-Six save in the number of cylinders used.

They know that without the Super-Six invention all motors are limited as to efficiency. They know that with the Super-Six invention any motor of one, two, four, six, eight or twelve cylinders delivers more power—is more flexible and will give longer service, many times over.

And they know that being patented such efficiency is exclusive to the Hudson Super-Six. It is the only known principle by which such efficiency may be obtained.

The Gasoline Saver

The Super-Six possesses many other exclusive advantages.

One is the gasoline saver, a device which adds gasoline mileage. By it the low grade gasoline now on the market is made more efficient. At a nominal charge it can be quickly installed on any Hudson Super-Six not so equipped.

Note the variety of models in which the Hudson Super-Six is produced. Every taste is met. Every comfort provided for.

It is a fine car in every sense of the word. Men who want the finest will not be content with less.

One year of the Hudson Super-Six convinces us it is the only permanent type thus far produced.

Phaeton, 7-passenger	$1650	Touring Sedan	$2175	Town Car	$2925
Roadster, 2-passenger	1650	Limousine	2925	Town Car Landaulet	3025
Cabriolet, 3-passenger	1950	Prices f. o. b. Detroit		Limousine Landaulet	3025

HUDSON MOTOR CAR COMPANY, DETROIT, MICHIGAN

Learn the Harp

So easy, thanks to the new method. The sweetest, the grandest music with the most romantic of all instruments. Fingering much more simple than on a piano. To transpose takes but an instant. With each Wurlitzer Harp, we give a complete book of instructions, through which you can learn in your own home. Harpists are in demand. By very little study you can qualify yourself to answer the call. Harp teachers too are greatly needed.

$12.50 a Month Buys a Style I

Wurlitzer Harps are now sold for a few dollars a month. Terms from $12.50 to $50.00 a month, according to the style selected. We illustrate our great $1000 harp above, but we have other harps now on a special offer priced from $500.00 up.

Write for Our New Harp Book sent free and—without obligation.

The Rudolph Wurlitzer Co., Dept 2491
S. Wabash Ave., Chicago

"Best" Hand Lantern

A powerful portable lamp, giving a 300 candle power pure white light. Just what the farmer, dairyman, stockman, etc. needs. Safe—Reliable—Economical—Absolutely Rain, Storm and Bug proof. Burns either gasoline or kerosene. Light in weight. Agents wanted. Big Profits. Write for Catalog. THE BEST LIGHT CO.
470 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

COUGHING spells eased, throat soothed, voice helped by

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

NEW TRIAL SIZE BOX 10c

Regular Sizes 25c, 50c, $1. At Druggists.

JOHN I. BROWN & SON, Boston, Mass.

POULTRY PAPER 4 MONTHS 10 CTS.

Most Widely Known Poultry Paper

Billion Dollar Industry. Tells all you want to know about care and management of poultry for pleasure or profit. Our paper is handsomely illustrated, practical, progressive and up-to-date on poultry matters. Written by well-known poultry authorities. Established 1892. 44 to 116 pages monthly. 50 cents a year. Four months' trial 10 cents. Sample copy free. Catalog of poultry literature Free.

Address AMERICAN POULTRY ADVOCATE, 704 Hodgkins Block, Syracuse, N. Y.

Largest stock of rebuilt typewriters in the United States. Guaranteed saving of $10.00 to $25.00 on any rebuilt typewriter bought. Remingtons, Underwoods, Olivers, Monarchs, Royals. Write for big illustrated catalogue and discounts to dealers and agents.

Dearborn Typewriter Co.
Dept. D-24 Chicago

Strawberries

EVERBEARING AND OTHER KINDS

Also Headquarters for Raspberries, Blackberries, Currants, Gooseberries, Grapes, Asparagus, Fruit Trees, Roses, Shrubs, Seed Potatoes, Eggs for Hatching, Crates, Baskets, etc. 34 years experience. Catalog free. Write today, address L. J. Farmer, Box 755, Pulaski, N. Y.

The Wing Piano

One of our 38 Styles

On Four Weeks' Trial

Yes, we will ship you on four weeks' absolutely free trial, all freight prepaid, direct from our own factory, your choice of thirty-eight new styles of the highest grade Wing Piano or Player Piano.

No Money Down—Freight Prepaid Nothing on arrival—no deposit—no freight either way. Use it and enjoy it four full weeks; then, if you wish, ship it back at our expense. You alone are the judge. You will be amazed at our rock bottom direct price on the superb Wing, guaranteed 40 years. Easy monthly payments or cash. Write now.

Valuable Book—FREE

"The Book of Complete Information About Pianos" sent free and prepaid. Valuable 136-page book. Tells how to judge piano quality and prices. Beautiful art catalog also sent and particulars of our great Free Shipment Offer. Write today.

Wing & Son, (Est. 1868)
9th Ave. and 13th St.
Dept. 2491
New York

Wing & Son
(Established 1868)
9th Ave. and 13th Street, Dept. 2491 New York, N. Y.

Please send me free "The Book of Complete Information About Pianos," and details of your free trial offer on Wing Pianos.

Name..........

Address..........

Merry Moments

WHEN the Merry Moments column was started we announced that we could only return contributions when postage was enclosed. Some contributors, evidently forgetting this, have written inquiring as to the non-return of their contributions.

HER SOCIAL EAR WAS CLOSED. The minister knocked at the door. There were sounds of swift footsteps and splashing water, as though wash tubs were being cleared away. Thinking he had not been heard, he knocked louder. Faster went the footsteps, and there was noise as of moving chairs and tables. Waiting a reasonable length of time, he again knocked vigorously. In a few moments a smiling woman came to the door and exclaimed: "Oh! I'm so glad to see you, but you must excuse me. I did not hear you the first two times you knocked."

THE BARE FACT. A teacher asked her class of children what a skeleton was. One little fellow, Benny, seven, said: "I know; it's bones with the people rubbed off."

A WILLING VICTIM. Margaret, aged four, had eaten one of two boxes of berries that her mother had purchased for company. Her mother cried, "What would you do if you had a little girl and she ate a whole box of strawberries?"

"Oh, mamma!" she exclaimed eagerly, "I'd make her eat the other box."

A SERIOUS OMISSION. At a camp-meeting where hats were used as collection baskets, the preacher said, "Let us sing while the hats are coming in." The pianist, after some fumbling with the pages, turned to him and said, "I can't find it." "Beg pardon," said the preacher, not understanding. "Why," replied the pianist, "I can't find that song, 'While the Hats Are Coming In,' in my book."

THOSE TRUTHFUL FIGURES. A man went into a Broadway house and applied for work. He said he wanted a salary of $1,500. He was told he was not worth the money, and he naturally asked the reason. He was told the reasons as follows:—

Each year has	365 days
You sleep eight hours each day, which equals	122 days
This leaves	243 days
You rest eight hours each day, which equals	122 days
This leaves	121 days
There are 52 Sundays that you do not work	52 days
This leaves	69 days
You have one-half day off each Saturday	26 days
This leaves	43 days
You have one and a half hours each day for lunch	28 days
This leaves	15 days
You get two weeks' vacation each year	14 days
This leaves	1 day
And this being Labor Day, we close on that day	1 day
	0

—New York American.

KNOCKED SPEECHLESS. Propositions of peace, at this juncture, in the European war, recall a conversation:

"When you're whipped," said Mr. Dolan, "you ought to say you've had enough."

"If I've the strength left to say I've had enough," replied Mr. Rafferty, "I'm not whipped yet."—The Catholic Citizen.

◆

Worth Passing On

HERE are a dozen don'ts for daily duties, republished in The Gideon from American Education:

Don't argue with the inevitable. The only argument available with an east wind is to put on your overcoat.

Don't preach too much. None preaches better than the ant, and she says nothing.

Don't waste your feelings. Feelings are too rich cream to be skimmed for nothing.

Don't be too patient. "Once in a while," said Uncle Even, "a man compliments himself on having patience when he's simply too lazy to make a kick."

Don't pack up worries. You can get them anywhere as you go along.

Don't let your stream of life be a murmuring stream.

Don't use a pile driver to pin on a bow of ribbon.

Don't measure success by accumulation, for this measure is false.

Don't talk over "prevailing conditions." Just make friends with your luck.

Don't fail to love your neighbors, yet pull not down your hedge.

Don't kill yourself with unnecessary work. There was once a New England woman whose epitaph read, "She hath done what she couldn't."

Don't leave the sky out of your landscape.

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

READER, Oregon. Do you think that a church which has been dwindling for years past, and has now only a score or so of faithful adherents, should be continued? Is not the fact that it has gone down evidence that it is not needed?

A church's vitality and spiritual usefulness cannot be gauged by the size of its congregation. Although it is always desirable to have as many as possible assembled to hear the preaching of the Word, some very small congregations have made wonderful records in efficiency. If a church is alive, the fact will be evident in its various activities—missions, charities, and the like—as well as in the daily lives of its members. As long as they find the Lord's work ready to their hand, it is their duty to do it. Much of it is necessarily accomplished through the organized Christian Church. You ask whether the fact that your church's attendance has fallen is not a proof that the church is not needed. We would regard it rather as proof that the church needs a reawakening, to give it a new infusion of spiritual vigor and greater confidence in God. We have known humble and seemingly insignificant country churches, with only a few score members, and no growth apparent; yet from these churches (which many would have regarded as in a rut and declining), and through their Gospel teaching, there have sprung forth some of the most glorious Christlike personalities of modern times. Carey, Livingstone, Moody, and many others, were the products of small churches, which, if they had succumbed to the feeling that their day was past and they were cumbering the field, would have deprived the world of incalculable blessing.

C. N. A., Des Moines, Iowa. A tree is known by its fruits, and the genuineness of conversion is made manifest in the Christian life, character and acts of the convert. If he lives near to God, asks for His help and guidance daily, strives to do His will as far as in him lies; if he confesses Christ openly, loves the fellowship of Christian men and women in God's house and elsewhere, forsakes sin and follows after righteousness, is kind and forgiving in spirit, generous and compassionate—if these are the outstanding traits of his life, then, as far as our enlightened human wisdom goes, we do right to acknowledge him as a true fellow Christian. God alone knoweth the heart, and he is the final Judge of us all.

A reader, Dr. John Peach of Mitchellsville, Md., writes us: "A friend of mine has requested me to ask if a poem entitled 'October's Party' was ever published in the Christian Herald. The first two lines she remembers as follows:

> October gave a party,
> The leaves by hundreds came."

We have no recollection of such a poem. Perhaps some Mail-Bag reader may be able to send our friend the verses he desires.

L. A., Los Angeles, Calif. Lovers of Dante may resent the idea set forth in Dr. Dixon's sermon, in your issue of October 11, that the poet "walked in a world of darkness with no stars in it." The "Inferno" is only one part of the powerful "Divina Commedia." In "Purgatorio" is light, and in "Paradiso" is light more and more abundant. And does not each of the books composing the trilogy, even the "Inferno," end with "stelle"?

L. A. is unquestionably correct in her characterization of the "Divina Commedia" as a whole; but Dr. Dixon had in mind only the "Inferno," which he used as a vivid and effective illustration in his sermon, just as one might select a single book of the Bible to illustrate a certain phase or point, which would be ineffective and out of place were he to say or write the same thing of the Bible as a whole.

Reader, Tilden, Neb. It is not at all extraordinary that among the multitudes who live in a single generation there should be not a few whose experiences closely resemble each other. On the other hand, it is quite conceivable that some intimate acquaintance, wishing to surprise you, might furnish to some distant occultist a narrative of facts in your experience which, when related to you by an entire stranger, would cause you to believe him gifted with supernatural powers. We have heard that strategy of this kind is often resorted to by a certain class of pseudo-professionals.

R. F., Aracaju, Brazil. Please explain John 21 : 25. Does this passage warrant the doctrine of tradition?

The passage was evidently designed to let the ages afterward know that, far from the materials of which the Gospels are composed having been exhausted in the time of the apostles, it was practically inexhaustible, and that the works "which Jesus did" were far beyond what the evangelistic writers had been able to express.

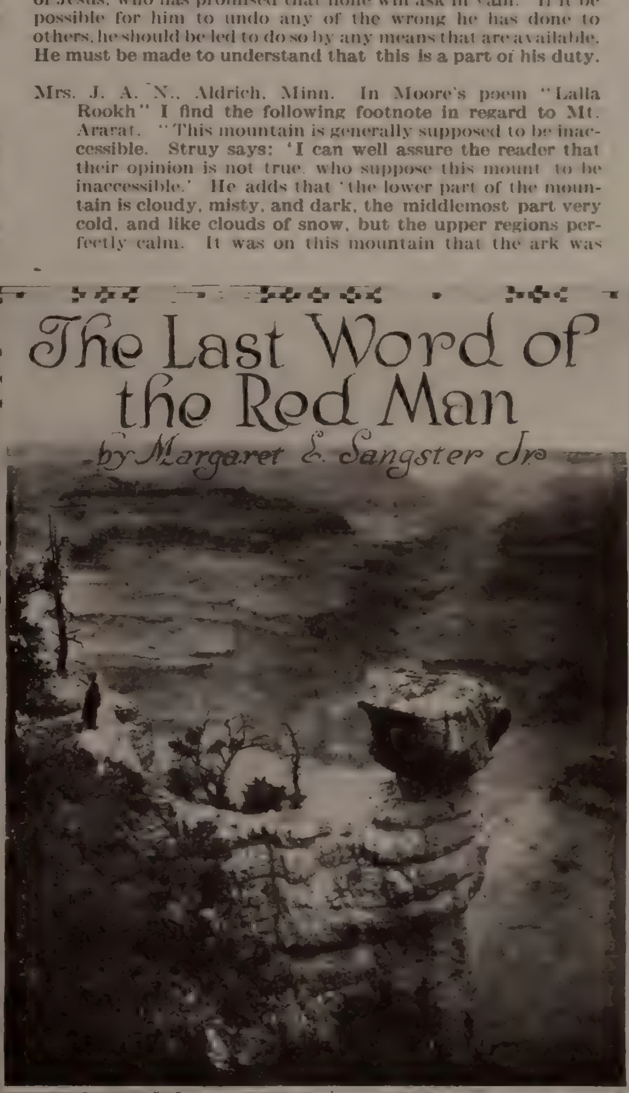
E. L. C., Hartford City, Ind. A person who is stricken with remorse for past sins would do well to heed the call of his awakened conscience, and seek pardon and peace at the only source where it is to be found. If you cannot deal with the case yourself, take him to your pastor, to whom he can speak freely. He will assist him and lead him to confess his sins to God, and will join him in asking the divine forgiveness, which, if he is truly penitent, will surely be granted. Let him ask in the name of Jesus, who has promised that none will ask in vain. If it be possible for him to undo any of the wrong he has done to others, he should be led to do so by any means that are available. He must be made to understand that this is a part of his duty.

Mrs. J. A. N., Aldrich, Minn. In Moore's poem "Lalla Rookh" I find the following footnote in regard to Mt. Ararat. "This mountain is generally supposed to be inaccessible. Struy says: 'I can well assure the reader that their opinion is not true, who suppose this mount to be inaccessible.' He adds that 'the lower part of the mountain is cloudy, misty, and dark, the middlemost part very cold, and like clouds of snow, but the upper regions perfectly calm. It was on this mountain that the ark was supposed to have rested after the deluge, and part of it, they say, exists there still.'" I read this footnote to my children, and my little ten-year-old girl wondered how Noah and all the animals got down from there when the deluge subsided, if the mountain was wholly or nearly inaccessible. I would like these questions answered.

Mount Ararat has been a fruitful theme for the speculative writers of a past age, and many incredible things have been printed concerning it. We recall a fanciful story, many years ago, of the discovery of a portion of the ark by some daring climber, which proved later to be pure imagination. As to inaccessibility, we have the record of Tournefort, who in 1700 climbed nearly to the summit; that of Dr. Parrot, who succeeded in reaching the top in 1834, and took the altitude at 13,350 feet above the Araxes plain and 16,254 above sea level. Another traveler, M. Abich, ascended to the top in 1845 and found a comparatively easy way of ascent. Others who have climbed the peak are Antonomoff (Russian), Seymour (English, 1846) and probably several others in more recent years. No one has made any report of traces of the ark.

The Last Word of the Red Man

by Margaret E. Sangster Jr



Look ye, my brothers, the canyon fills with sun,
The mist of early morning is rising to the sky—
Far off I hear the calling of silver water, falling,
Far off I hear it echo, and hear the echo die.
Look ye, my tribesmen, the canyon fills with sun;
The white man's day is dawning, the red man's day is done.

Listen, my brothers, and hear me as I speak—
The white man came with laughter, the laugh of guns, aflame,
His fire-water maimed us, his culture crushed us, tamed us;
He took our country from us, and left us only shame!
Listen, my tribesmen, and hear me as I speak:
We fled, they followed after . . . Now we are few and weak.

Far off, my brothers, across the rocky steeps,
The star-light, softly beaming, will show another land,
Where hunting moons shine ever, and war cries circle never,
Where there will be no whiteman who does not understand!
Far off, my tribesmen, across the rocky steeps,
There lies a land where, dreaming, the red man's spirit sleeps.

Heed ye, my brothers, this word may be my last,
Here facing toward the morning, I make my sunrise prayer;
For there is One to love us—to raise His hand above us,
Ah, though our race is dying, there still is One to care!
Heed ye, my tribesmen, this word may be my last:
Our God smiles from the dawning, although our day is past!

I. R., Naco, Ariz. I am writing to your magazine because its readers are a class of people I would like to hear from. I presume that most of your readers have homes and are comfortably situated. They don't have to worry very much about where they are going to sleep tonight or where their next meal is to come from. What chances have I for a home or to meet good clean women? I have no trade or profession, and my education is very meager. I had no opportunity for the latter, because I left school and home when only twelve years old. Now I am twenty-five. In all these years I have been floating like a chip in the tide. My parents had four daughters besides me, and it seemed to me a burden on my father to support us all. With a child's exaggerated idea of things I decided to go out into the world to make my fortune, then come home and make my folks comfortable. Instead I was a hobo, a sailor, and now am in the army (cavalry). Most of my time is spent riding the border line along hot, desolate desert trails. In a short time my enlistment will expire. Where will I go, and what will I do? I am asking the question for many young men like myself. Kindly send me the letters from your readers.

This young man is not so unfortunate as he seems to think. He shows himself possessed of fine spirit, which is more than half the equipment for successful life. Very many have not found themselves until twenty-five and later. Indeed, the young man who at twenty-five can see as clearly as I. R. does the folly and futility of aimless drifting, and feel as strongly a yearning for the things really worth while in life, is fortunate above the average. Lost advantages and opportunities of youth can never be restored; but what we commonly know as advantages do not always prove such: many a mind has been smothered by education and luxuries, while many another has been quickened to the higher life by deprivations and hardships. The best education any young man can have lies in knowing and wanting the results worth striving for. As for the rest, the way will open and "all things shall be added." Soul will find its own as irresistibly as the flower opens to the sunshine and the seed-shoot unerringly works upward to the light it seeks.

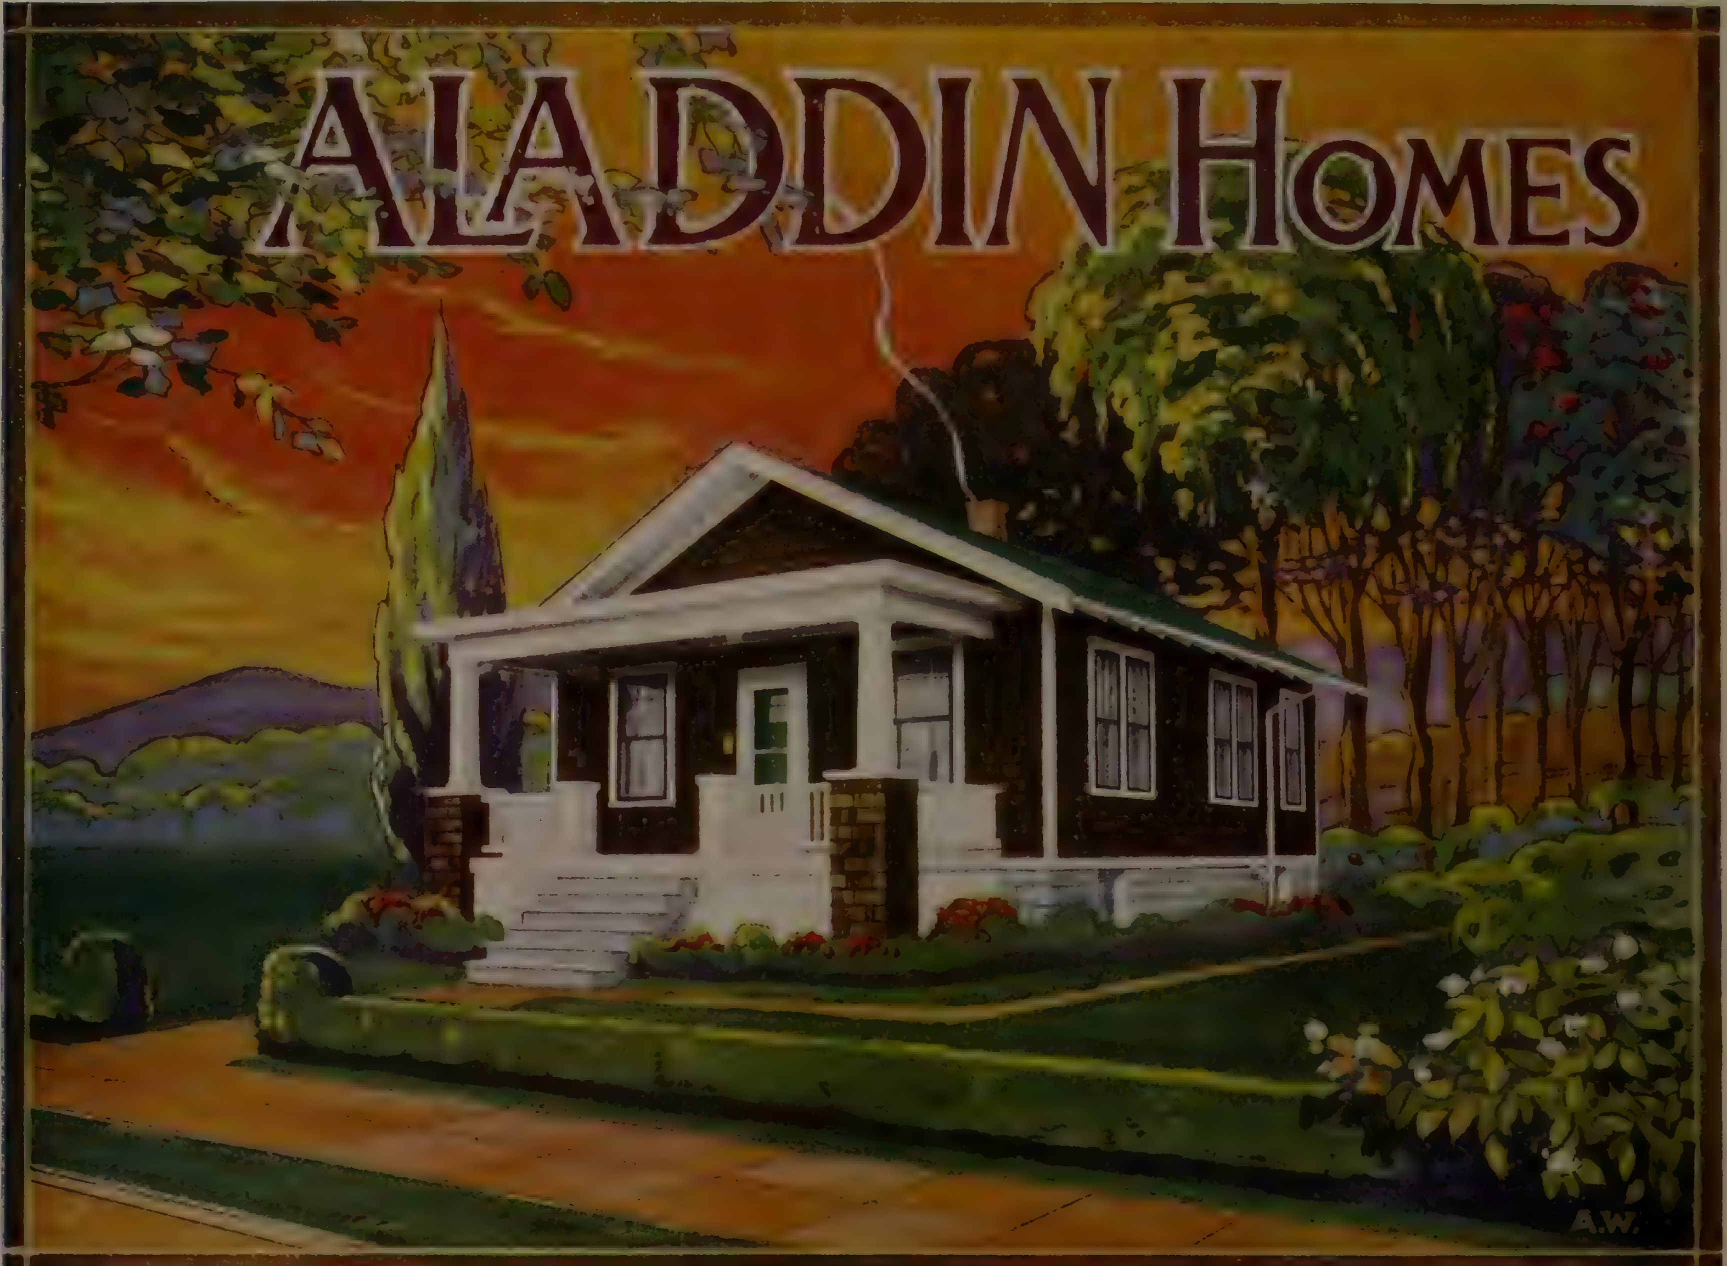
Mrs. S. S. Giles, Washington, writes: "In the Mail-Bag of October 25, I see you ask us mothers how we raised our families and how we conducted our family worship. I had each one to take part, say one read the chapter of a morning and led the praying, and we all joined in the Lord's Prayer and that way around, each one and the husband and I taking our part. Of course the prayers were short, but sweet. I found the morning was the best time to hold the family together, as in the evening there were parties or clubs, or some one coming in to spend the evening, so that it kept us from having a heart-to-heart talk with God. So we just got up a little earlier. I am a woman of sixty-five—will be sixty-six in February if I live. My children and children's children all do as I taught them. May these few lines be of help to some one."

Subscriber, Harvard, Ill. The only way to help the Armenians is for the Christian nations—if there are any such—to stop fighting among themselves, then unite and avenge the death of those Armenians, and the thousands who have been murdered by the Mohammedans in the past few years. It is very evident that the Mohammedans have commenced to murder the Christians by the wholesale. Cannot the Christian Herald start a movement with the object of putting a stop to the murdering of the young men of the so-called Christian nations of Europe and then unite those nations and have them avenge the murdered Armenians?

The duty of the Christian nations is to stop fighting and to adjust their differences in peace and according to law. The war is a deadlock, and the time has come for the United States to take steps looking to mediation. All the other neutrals are waiting for us to do this, and the populations of the fighting countries are heartsick of the war. As far as Turkey is concerned, the Almighty God will punish her for her sins. "Vengeance is mine, saith God, I will repay."

Reader, Sterling, Ohio. You do right to guard your children from doubtful companionships. The moral and spiritual training of the children is largely in the mother's care, and she should take the best means available to surround them with good, wholesome influences, and to warn them well against evil company. Your letter has been sent to the Prayer League.

W. H. W. J., Portsmouth, Ohio. James, Joses, Simon and Judas (mentioned in Matt. 12 : 46, Matt. 13 : 55, John 2 : 12 and Acts 1 : 14) are regarded by many commentators as proper brothers of Jesus, being named conjointly with Mary the mother, and the same is inferred from John 7 : 5. Some of the early historians of the church take the view, however, that they were simply relatives or cousins (sons of the sister of Jesus' mother), in accordance with a custom prevalent in the East, of calling all relatives "brothers" or "brethren." The early church held that Mary, the mother of Jesus, had no other children. They were held to be sons of Joseph by a former marriage, and therefore half-brothers of Jesus. A great deal has been written on the subject without much enlightenment, and modern commentators are still divided.

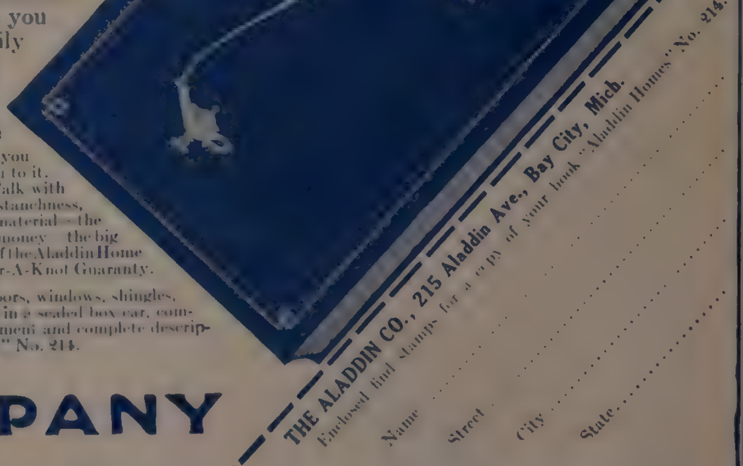


$697 for this 7-Room Aladdin

Yes! It can be yours—a 7-room modern house all on one floor—WIDE PORCH, BIG LIVING ROOM, DINING ROOM, THREE BEDROOMS, WORK-SAVING KITCHEN, BATH and CLOSETS. A beautiful, solidly built, roomy home for you and your children's children—for $300 less than you would pay your local builder. Glad owners of this money-saving Aladdin Home say its wonderful convenience inside calls forth as much admiration as its beauty outside. LET US SEND YOU TODAY THIS BEAUTIFUL ALADDIN CATALOG THAT SHOWS YOU THE PLANS AND PICTURES OF A HUNDRED CHARMING, LOWEST COST HOMES.

Send for this Book

It tells you what your home will cost. It shows photographs, floor plans, specifications and prices for every house.



Why Pay $900 For a Home That You Can Buy For $600

Why hand over three hundred dollars of your savings to a contractor when you can keep that money by having any carpenter put up your Aladdin Readi-Cut Home? Your staunch, beautiful Aladdin Home comes all ready for building—complete to the last lock screw in the front door. It saves you money because the lumber is cut by machinery—the materials bought at wholesale. The daily capacity of our mills is 40 Aladdin Homes—we get 18% more out of our lumber than any builder. This great saving becomes YOURS.

Sturdy as a Rock

Aladdin Readi-Cut Homes are made to last. Not portable houses, but sturdy, handsome homes whose parts fit together with the beautiful accuracy of a watch—better-fitting, more cold- and weather-proof than any house your carpenter can build.

Evade High Building Costs

Of course, the cost of living has been raised. And so has the cost of building. Yet, you can avoid these higher prices by eliminating waste. The Aladdin Readi-Cut System of Construction eliminates the usual 18% waste of lumber, waste in measuring, cutting and fitting. This saving matched against wasteful methods offsets the higher price of building materials. Twenty feet of lumber from a sixteen-foot board—the Aladdin catalog tells how.

Inspect Your Neighbor's Aladdin

There is an Aladdin Home near you wherever you live. Let us direct you to it. Look it over, inside and outside. Talk with the owner. Let him tell you about its stanchness, convenience—about the quality of material—the knotless lumber—the big saving in money—the big saving in time. Ask us for the name of the Aladdin Home Owner nearest you. Read the Dollar-A-Knot Guaranty.

WHAT YOU GET Aladdin price includes all lumber, millwork, flooring, outside and inside finish doors, windows, shingles, lath and plaster, hardware, locks, nails, paint, varnishes. Your home is shipped in a sealed box car, complete, Readi-Cut, ready to erect. Safe arrival of the complete material in perfect condition is guaranteed. Floor plan arrangement and complete description of the house shown above will be found in the Aladdin Book of Homes. Send stamps today for the book, "Aladdin Homes," No. 214.

ALADDIN READI-CUT HOUSES Sold By the GOLDEN RULE

THE ALADDIN COMPANY

Homebuilders to the Nation

215 Aladdin Ave.

Canadian Branch
SOVEREIGN CONSTRUCTION CO.
C. P. R. Bldg., TORONTO, ONTARIO

Bay City, Mich.

THE ALADDIN CO., 215 Aladdin Ave., Bay City, Mich.
Enclosed find stamps for a copy of your book "Aladdin Homes" No. 214.
Name ....
Street ....
City ....
State ....

Send this Coupon today

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
NEW YORK, JANUARY 10, 1917

VOL. 40 -NO. 2. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

© Underwood & Underwood

A JEWISH SCRIBE OF TODAY IN HIS WORKROOM

"Exide"

The Power Behind Your Starting & Lighting

THE satisfaction you derive from your automobile starting and lighting system is dependent upon the infallibility with which it performs its work. That work in turn is largely dependent on the excellence of its power-source—the storage battery.

The "Exide" Battery is today the preeminent starting and lighting battery among experienced motorists. Its extra large plates, its unit cell construction, its flood-proof filling plugs are features which make the "Exide" powerful in performance and easy to care for. It is the battery that will give you continuous satisfaction, no matter what make your car, what type your starting system.

"There's an "Exide" Battery for every car"
"The Giant that lives in a box"

THE ELECTRIC STORAGE BATTERY CO.
The oldest and largest manufacturer of Storage Batteries in this country
1888 PHILADELPHIA 1917
New York Boston Chicago Washington Denver San Francisco St. Louis Cleveland
Atlanta Pittsburgh Detroit Rochester Minneapolis Toronto
"Exide", "Ironclad-Exide", "Hycap-Exide" and "Thin-Exide" Batteries for Electric Vehicles

for additional overtures, and the gateway to peace has not been closed. Now, if Germany will progress a step further in her overtures, and the neutral nations continue to press for a peace conference, an end of the war is not far distant."

One senator, whose name is not given, is quoted in press dispatches as saying: "The reply means that the Allied governments are taking the position that they will not make peace until Germany is beaten to the ground. They may find that they cannot do that, but their attitude is going to imbue both belligerents with the same spirit of complete revenge. With that situation existing, whatever may have been the merits of the two sides at the beginning, the war has become an undisguised struggle for commercial supremacy, but with neither side maintaining the consideration that it professes for high-minded ideals. Such an attitude on the part of both belligerents spells danger to American interests, and from now on we must keep watch of the moves on both sides."

AT the Germany embassy at Washington it was strongly intimated that, while the President's peace efforts seem to have failed through the rejection by the Entente governments of Germany's offer to discuss terms with her enemies, it was still felt that a chance for peace had been left by the Entente, and it was suggested that President Wilson was the one person who could keep the peace movement alive. The official copy of the Entente reply not having reached Germany, although a press copy had been received in Berlin by way of Paris, no comment by the German press has as yet been telegraphed to America. ing to a holiday and the suspension e newspapers, the tenor of the note s not even known to the general ublic, but a wireless dispatch from lin to Sayville stated that the general ression in official and semi-official rters in Berlin is that the Entente swer to the sincere German offer, while verbose, is nevertheless a flat refusal to end the war. It is also pointed out as specially remarkable that the Entente note mentions the right of nationalities, although one of the avowed war purposes for which it is fighting is the conquest of Constantinople and the Strait. The Chicago Herald says editorially: "The answer is not only a reply to the enemy countries; it is also an appeal to world opinion outside those countries. The Allies have resented the German effort to put them in the position of wantonly continuing the struggle; to counteract it they reiterated the principles that they are fighting for. They emphasize the need of stronger guarantees than Germany's sword or any peace made on the present war basis could furnish."

The Toronto Globe says: "The people of Canada would feel that blood and treasure alike had been expended in vain were the end of it all to be a patched-up, inconclusive peace which would leave Germany supreme in central Europe, sponsor for a revivified Turkish empire with its bestiality and blood-lust unsated." The New York Herald says: "There is a possibility, even a probability, that the reply of the Allies will prove a distinct step forward toward peace despite, and because of, the positiveness of its rejection of what it rightly terms the pretended propositions of peace advanced by Berlin." The New York Tribune interprets the note to mean that the war must go on. The New York Sun says: "The note reads like an indictment, because the governments from which it comes and their peoples are unshaken in the belief that they are the servants of justice in the punishment of the wrong-doer, a belief that has not been impaired in the slightest since Germany provoked the war."

The New York World interprets the note as not closing the door upon peace, but as most emphatically closing the door upon any peace offer on the pretense that Germany is victorious. The London Daily Chronicle is quoted as declaring that guarantees of peace must be material; that verbal guarantees will not be again accepted.

THE right of neutrals to compel peace is thus discussed in The New York American:

The neutral nations of the earth have more than a sentimental interest in the restoration of peace in Europe and the reconstruction of civilized conditions throughout the world.

The material welfare of all the neutral nations is threatened by the continuation of devastating war, and the territorial integrity, the political independence and even the actual existence of some of the neutral nations are seriously and immediately menaced.

For our own sake and safety, as well as for the welfare of the peoples of Europe, the Government of the United States should compel the cessation of the war at this time, if it is within the power of our Government to do so.

The neutral nations of Europe are even more concerned in a speedy termination of the war than we are. They face not only the dangers that threaten us, but the imminent likelihood of more dreadful calamities which might, in all possibility, overwhelm and destroy them.

Probably war-crazed nations are not able to see anything clearly or to deal with any situation intelligently, but there is no reason why calmer neutral nations should not see clearly and act intelligently for their own welfare and for the welfare of the world.

There is no reason why Norway and Sweden and Denmark should allow a situation to develop which may menace their integrity and independence.

The Scandinavian alliance would be amply justified in telling Germany that unless her peace terms were just and proper, the alliance would proceed promptly to annex Schleswig-Holstein to plundered Denmark and to make the Kiel Canal the northern limit of Germany's aim and activity.

They would be equally or even more amply justified in notifying the Entente allies, who are now so stupidly and cynically opposed to peace, that unless peace is forthwith concluded the Scandinavian alliance will proceed energetically and immediately to protect itself from Russian greed by liberating Finland from Russian domination and making that state a part of the alliance and a buffer and a barrier to Russian aggression, exactly as Germany is proposing to restore Poland to liberty and international usefulness.

The United States, too, should protect its people and do its part toward reviving the rule of reason and of civilization throughout the world.

The United States should refuse to deliver food, funds or arms to any country which insanely insists upon a protraction of this bloody and debasing war.

The peaceful peoples of the world have rights which these fiercely fighting nations are outraging. They have priceless political privileges which these frantically contending nations are heedlessly jeopardizing. They have civilized achievement and laboriously builded property and prosperity which these demoniac nations are recklessly undermining and endangering. It is the pre-eminent duty of the peaceful nations of the world to protect their rights and liberties, their possessions, their prosperity, the creations of their labor and intelligence, the institutions of their civilizations from wanton destruction.

The neutral nations can compel peace, and in the interest of their own people, and of all humanity they should compel peace.

Berlin's peace hopes are dispersed, according to Carl W. Ackerman, United Press Staff Correspondent. Now it is war to the last ounce of human blood. The Allies' note is not deserving of a written rejoinder. Summed up, that is the Berlin press opinion—and it typifies the opinion of the man in the street.

Privately the editors of Berlin newspapers are even more bitter in their denunciation of the Entente's course than their printed statements. One of these editors—the man writing the editorial for the Lokal Anzeiger—was asked what Germany would do.

"Hold out," he flashed back. "It is insanity for Europe to bleed to death—but the Allies refuse peace. Only one reply can come—and that from our armies. Let Hindenburg answer."

"None ought to be surprised at the action of the Entente nations in rejecting peace proposals," said the Lokal Anzeiger, "but it is surprising that ten men should sign such a document without any foundation, a frivolous, lying document constituting the last kernel of untruth."

Herr Bernhard, in the Vossiche Zeitung, declared today:

"After this insulting refusal there is only one answer—energetic fighting until our cold steel forces the enemies' feverish temperature down to normal."

In the course of a very long article in the New York Times, Hall Caine, the famous English author, speaking in general upon the situation, says:

"Let me speak for my own countrymen and say without hesitation that we do not wish to see America in the war at all. Not even to shorten it—though we would give so much to do so—to defend the interests of civilization and to uphold those principles of humanity which this appalling European conflict has cast into the furnace, could we desire that the wild, mad, devastating struggle which has laid waste so much of the fairest part of Europe should extend to the American continent.

"We have a material interest in seeing America preserve her neutrality—of course, we have. But God grant that down to the last days of the hellish tragedy, there may remain on this planet one great home of civilized man untouched save in sympathy by sorrow. If America is forced into the war it will assuredly not be by any act of the allied nations or (short of refusing to make a premature and therefore a calamitous peace) by any failure to perform an act which would keep one-half of the horrors which have already overwhelmed the other half.

"For good or for bad, for better or for worse, in spite of the bitterness of hatred engendered by this cruel and in the highest sense fratricidal war, we of the British nation shall have to live in the same world with the German nation and the German nation in the same world with us. And even if we refuse throughout the lifetime of the generals now living ever to take hands with our enemies again, steeped as they are up to the armpits in the blood of our children, we shall surely cross hands with each other over the hands of the American people. The open door has hitherto been a passageway to British prosperity and power and influence in the world and we are certainly not waging this war to close it."

An Extraordinary Ministerial Protest

IN a signed document addressed to the nation, more than fifty prelates and laymen of various denominations and from many sections of the country have united in a warning against what they declare may be a premature peace in Europe which "may bring a curse instead of a blessing." Among the signers of the document are Lyman Abbott; President Hibben of Princeton; former Attorney General Bonaparte; Winston Churchill, author; Dr. King, president of Oberlin College; Gifford Pinchot; George Wharton Pepper, Philadelphia; the Rev. William (Billy) Sunday; James M. Speer, chairman of the Laymen's Missionary Movement; the Rev. K. C. Nelson, Episcopal Bishop of Atlanta; the Rev. Joseph F. Berry, Methodist Episcopal Bishop of Philadelphia; the Rev. Philip M. Rhinelander, Episcopal Bishop of Pennsylvania; the Rev. William Lawrence, Episcopal Bishop of Massachusetts; the Rev. Harry E. Fosdick, of Union Theological Seminary; the Rev. Charles P. Anderson, Episcopal Bishop of Chicago, and the Rev. William T. Manning, rector of Trinity Church, New York.

The protest reviews the horrors of the war and asks who was responsible for them. It puts its signatories in the attitude of judges, rather than of advocates of humanity. The statement proceeds:

> When war drenches Europe in blood it is natural that we Americans should shudder at the sight. To call upon the combatants to stop the carnage is an impulse so strong that it even tends to displace judgment and distort values. We are apt to forget, at any rate, for the time being, that there are conditions under which the mere stopping of warfare may bring a curse instead of a blessing. We need to be reminded that peace is the triumph of righteousness and not the mere sheathing of the sword. To clamor for an ending of the present war without insuring the vindication of truth, justice, and honor is not to seek peace, but to sow disaster.

To the great majority of Americans this attitude on the part of a group of American prelates and pastors must bear a striking resemblance to the attitude of the militant churchmen of the various denominations in Europe who, from the very outset, did not fail to encourage the war in every way possible, thus greatly adding to its intensity and to the heavy sorrows borne by the suffering populations. At a critical time when the church in Europe might have accomplished much for the cause of humanity, it was found preaching militancy and giving the war the character of a divinely ordained crusade.

The statement or protest cannot be regarded otherwise than as an attempt to stampede the Christian churches of America into the ranks of those who are urging a continuance of the war, rather than to remind the churches that it is their duty, and that of their congregations, as followers of the Prince of Peace, to strive by every means to lessen suffering and to restore peace and order to the world.

Is not the correction of the wrongs which they mention, which wrongs all alike deplore, to come through peace rather than continued war? Every day of war only adds to horrors which all Christians should pray may be stopped and amended as soon as possible.

The document further declares that the signers > view with some concern the organized and deliberate efforts now being made so to stampede Christian sentiment as to create a public opinion blindly favorable to stopping hostilities without adequate consideration of the issues which the war involves.

Where is to be found "adequate consideration of the issues which the war involves"? In continued carnage, additional atrocities and further degradation, or in a peace conference?

Protest against peace seems to us peculiarly inopportune just at this time. This is clearly the view taken by the American people, from President Wilson down. A just peace can never be premature. How may any one know that the negotiations, unpromising as they may be at the present stage, may not eventually lead to a just peace? How is peace ever to be arrived at except through conference and comparison of terms? A complete crushing of either side by the other, in this decade at least, is an idle dream of fanatics. It is the result of what scientists call "homicidal emotion," from which the Church cannot divorce itself too quickly.

Righteousness and reason must end the war, or else unrighteousness and unreason must hurl civilization to destruction.

Justice has nothing to lose in a peace conference. It has much to lose in continued war.

America is at peace with the world. Should it ever be drawn into the international strife, the climax will have been hastened by the attitude of that section of the clergy who urge on the war, as though it were divinely appointed instead of being a work of the enemy of souls. The whole spirit of Christianity is opposed to war. These ministers of the Prince of Peace and his Gospel forget the words of Scripture: "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? Ye lust, and have not: ye kill, and covet, and cannot obtain; ye fight and war; yet ye have not, because ye ask not."

Does the Note Block Peace?

THE reply of the Allies to the German note, proposing a conference of belligerent powers with a view to the discussion of terms of peace, is now before the world.

Its tone is direct and aggressive, and its refusal to consider the conference proposed is so emphasized that its meaning and purpose cannot be misunderstood. It indicates the essential terms which, in the opinion of the Allies, must be agreed to by the Central Powers before any movement looking toward peace can begin. This includes reparation, restitution, and guarantees and safeguards for the future.

At first glance, the Allies' note seems to close the door to peace absolutely. Analysis of the note, however, modifies this view.

The refusal, definite though it seems, is not necessarily final. It leaves the door open for the next step, which may be followed by still others before the end of the discussion is reached.

There are many who, remembering Premier Lloyd George's recent speech in the House of Commons, recall his memorable declaration that those who, without sufficient cause, prolonged the war, would be guilty of "a crime that oceans could not cleanse," and knowing of the deep undercurrent among the warring peoples of Europe in favor of peace, they cannot but feel that the situation has still in it elements of hope. It may even be, as some have suggested, that the Allies' answer has been so framed that, the door being still open, "diplomatic conversations" may go on until the basis is reached which would lead to a conference. Diplomacy has its own peculiar methods and language, which, as a famous statesman once remarked, are designed to conceal rather than to reveal the thought and end in view.

Another reason for the belief that peace overtures are not wholly closed by the reply of the Allies to Germany is that the note can be regarded as affording ground for further representations from the neutrals, including our own government. Under the Hague Convention of 1907, which defined the rights and duties of neutrals in time of war, the neutral governments cannot be denied a voice in the readjustment of an upheaval that has affected the whole world by its infringements of international law.

When President Wilson sent his note to the belligerent powers, he was exercising the right and performing the duty laid upon a neutral by the Hague Convention. This fact is recognized by jurists, and is expressed by that influential journal, the London Nation, which adds that the President's communication has been stupidly misconstrued by British critics. It finds his note completely devoid of offense to the Entente Allies, who, it holds, can have no quarrel with an effort which seeks to end an interminable war; and it adds: "IF THERE IS A FORCE BEHIND PRESIDENT WILSON TO ARREST WAR AT THE POINT OF SECURITY AND FIX IT THERE, HE GOVERNMENTS MAY NOT NOW WHAT TO SAY TO IT, BUT LLIONS OF FATHERS AND OTHERS WILL CALL IT BLES- ."

resident Wilson has counselled no that would lower the dignity of any r. He has given no suggestion as nditions of peace. He has simply the belligerents to submit their , in order that the way might be d to a sincere effort at reaching a which might result in an eventual understanding. To his mind, and that of the American people, the war has drifted along to a point where such an understanding ought to be possible. We see Europe going to wreck and ruin, her population perishing by millions in battle and by starvation and exposure. More money has already been spent on this war than on the twenty greatest wars during the last hundred years!

How, then, can we be silent now, if any word of ours can aid in saving Europe from complete disaster?

Therefore, while we as a nation value Europe's good opinion and the friendship of its governments, even these cannot be permitted to stand in the way of what may become our plain duty. We have seen Germany's note and the answer handed back on the point of the sword; but the voice of official Europe is not the voice of her suffering peoples. And if, acting within our rights as a neutral government, we can serve to bring about conditions that would lead nearer to peace, the step will assuredly be taken, with full confidence that in so doing we shall enjoy the divine approval and the cordial support of all the neutral Powers.

WE are at heart a God-fearing nation. Our greatest Presidents in times of crisis have not failed to acknowledge the Omnipotent rulership. There are emergencies to which human wisdom is wholly unequal; but the nation that relies on God and asks his guidance will be safely led through all difficulties. We believe that if Congress and the President were to do this publicly and officially, a great blessing would follow. Under God, our beloved country would become a power for righteousness and justice and peace on earth. "In all thy ways acknowledge Him and He shall direct thy paths."

The Allies to the Central Powers

THE Entente governments, in replying to Germany, declare that they refuse to consider Germany's insincere and ineffective proposal for a conference.

The suggested conference without conditions is not a peace offer, the note says, but is rather a war manoeuvre.

The text of the note follows:—

"The allied governments of Belgium, France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Montenegro, Portugal, Roumania, Russia and Serbia, united for the defence of the liberty of their peoples and faithful to engagements taken not to lay down their arms separately, have resolved to reply collectively to the pretended propositions of peace which were addressed to them on behalf of the enemy governments through the intermediary of the United States, Spain, Switzerland and Holland.

"Before making any reply the allied Powers desire particularly to protest against the two essential assertions of the note of the enemy Powers that pretend to throw upon the Allies responsibility for the war and proclaim the victory of the Central Powers.

"The allied governments cannot admit an affirmation doubly inexact and which suffices to render sterile all tentative negotiations.

"The allied nations have sustained for thirty months a war they did everything to avoid. They have shown by their acts their attachment to peace. That attachment is as strong to-day as it was in 1914. But it is not upon the word of Germany, after the violation of its engagements, that the peace broken by her may be based.

"A mere suggestion, without a statement of terms, that negotiations should be opened, is not an offer of peace. The putting forward by the Imperial government of a sham proposal lacking all substance and precision would appear to be less an offer of peace than a war manoeuvre. It is founded on calculated misinterpretation of the character of the struggle in the past, the present and the future.

"As for the past, the German note takes no account of the facts, dates and figures which establish that the war was desired, provoked and declared by Germany and Austria-Hungary.

"At the Hague conference it was a German delegate who refused all proposals for disarmament. In July, 1914, it was Austria-Hungary, who, after having addressed to Serbia an unprecedented ultimatum, declared war upon her in spite of the satisfaction which had at once been accorded.

"The Central empires then rejected all attempts made by the Entente to bring about a pacific solution of a purely local conflict. Great Britain suggested a conference; France proposed an international commission; the Emperor of Russia asked the German Emperor to go to arbitration, and Russia and Austria-Hungary came to an understanding on the eve of the conflict. But to all these efforts Germany gave neither answer nor effect.

"Belgium was invaded by an empire which had guaranteed her neutrality and which had the assurance to proclaim that treaties were 'scraps of paper,' and that 'necessity knows no law.'

"At the present moment these sham offers on the part of Germany rest on the war map of Europe alone, which represents nothing more than a superficial and passing phase of the situation and not the real strength of the belligerents. A peace concluded upon these terms would be only to the advantage of the aggressors, who, after imagining that they would reach their goal in two months, discovered after two years that they could never attain it.

"As for the future, the disasters caused by the German declaration of war and the innumerable outrages committed by Germany and her allies against both belligerents and neutrals, demand penalties, reparation and guarantees. Germany avoids mention of any of these.

"In reality these overtures made by the Central Powers are nothing more than a calculated attempt to influence the future course of the war and to end it by imposing a German peace. The object of these overtures is to create dissension in public opinion in the allied countries. But that public opinion has, in spite of all the sacrifices endured by the Allies, already given its answer with admirable firmness and has denounced the empty pretence of the declaration of the enemy Powers.

"They have the further object of stiffening public opinion in Germany and in the countries allied to her—one and all severely tried by their losses, worn out by economic pressure and crushed by the supreme effort which has been imposed upon their inhabitants.

"They endeavor to deceive and intimidate public opinion in neutral countries, whose inhabitants have long since made up their minds where the initial responsibilities lie and are far too enlightened to favor the designs of Germany by abandoning the defence of human freedom.

"Finally, these overtures attempt to justify in advance in the eyes of the world a new series of crimes—submarine warfare, deportations, forced labor and forced enlistment of the inhabitants against their own countries and violations of neutrality.

"Fully conscious of the gravity of this moment, but equally conscious of its requirements, the Allied governments, closely united to one another and in perfect sympathy with their peoples, refuse to consider a proposal which is empty and insincere.

"Once again the Allies declare that no peace is possible so long as they have not secured reparation for violated rights and liberties, the recognition of the principle of nationalities and of the free existence of small states; so long as they have not brought about a settlement calculated to end once and for all forces which have constituted a perpetual menace to the nations and to afford the only effective guarantee for the future security of the world.

"In conclusion, the allied Powers think it necessary to put forward the following considerations, which show the special situation of Belgium after two and a half years of war. In virtue of the international treaties signed by five great European Powers, of whom Germany was one, Belgium enjoyed before the war a special status, rendering her territory inviolable and placing her, under the guarantee of the Powers, outside all European conflicts. She was, however, in spite of these treaties, the first to suffer the aggression of Germany. For this reason the Belgian government think it necessary to define the aims which Belgium has never ceased to pursue while fighting side by side with the Entente Powers for right and justice.

"Belgium has always scrupulously fulfilled the duties which her neutrality imposed upon her. She has taken up arms to defend her independence and her neutrality violated by Germany and to show that she remains faithful to her international obligations.

"On the fourth of August, 1914, in the Reichstag, the German Chancellor admitted that this aggression constituted an injustice contrary to the laws of nations and pledged himself in the name of Germany to repair it. During two and a half years this injustice has been cruelly aggravated by the proceedings of the occupying forces, which have exhausted the resources of the country, ruined its industries, devastated its towns and villages and have been responsible for innumerable massacres, executions and imprisonments.

"At this very moment, while Germany is proclaiming peace and humanity to the world, she is deporting Belgian citizens by thousands and reducing them to slavery.

"Belgium before the war asked for nothing but to live in harmony with her neighbors. Her King and her government have but one aim—the reestablishment of peace and justice. But they only desire peace which would assure to the country legitimate reparation, guarantees and safeguards for the future."

The Reception of the Allied Notes

DISPATCHES from London on December 31 reported that the English public hailed with satisfaction the Entente reply to the German note of December 12. It was said to be the general feeling that the year 1916 had brought about a thorough-going change in the relative position of the two sets of belligerents, and that the year was being rung out with a resolute note of determination to carry the war to a point where peace can be attained without the sacrifice of those objects of restitution, reparation and security which the chief spokesmen of the Entente Powers have outlined. Most of the expressions of opinion available are from sources on this side of the water. Very little of the English press comment has been telegraphed to this side, and most of what has been telegraphed is largely an elaboration of the statements of the note itself and a corroboration of the report of English feeling given above.

J. L. Garvin, editor of the Sunday Observer, takes pains to call attention to the fact that this note is a reply of the Allies to Germany and not to President Wilson. He suggests that premier von Bethmann-Hollweg's anticipation of the American initiative had prejudiced Mr. Wilson's policy and had to a degree neutralized the American effort. The feeling held on this side of the water seems to be that while the note presages another era of fierce fighting, it nevertheless has not completely closed the door, but has left the way to peace open. Representative Flood, Chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, is reported to have said: "I believe that peace is coming within a reasonably short time. A careful perusal of the reply to the German note reveals that a loop-hole has been left for a further communication, and eventually a peace conference. I have not abandoned today my belief that peace is on the way."

Representative Cooper, Republican member of the same committee, said: "It may take a little time, but I believe the world is going to have peace. I have carefully read the reply of the Entente Powers. On its face, it seems a flat rejection of the peace proposals, but there is here and there an opening

THE·CHRISTIAN·HERALD
·AN·ILLUSTRATED·NEWS·WEEKLY·FOR·THE·HOME·

"When Jesus Came Into My Heart"

By JOHN G. HALLIMOND

IN considering the worthwhileness of the work of the Bowery Mission and other similar institutions, the fact should never be forgotten that when a man falls he is not the only, or the chief, sufferer, but the dire consequences of his wrongdoing involve the innocent members of his household. When he is restored to an upright manhood, these poignant miseries come to an end, and a happiness, far beyond words to express, once again reigns in the formerly devastated home.

Many beautiful stories are told illustrating this fact. Letters arrive frequently at the Bowery Mission from men who have gone back to their families in distant places. Every now and then a well-dressed stranger appears at our meetings and tells us of a happy home in a far-away state that years ago received back its bread-winner, whom drink had ruined, but whom the grace of God had restored through the instrumentality of the mission.

At Thanksgiving and Christmas times especially, when memories of home pervade the atmosphere of the place, the "testimonies" take on this complexion, and thrilling stories are told of renewed joys in once desolate families.

Sometimes—nay, very often—the one soft and tender spot in an otherwise hard and calloused heart is a man's love for his children. It is the little green oasis in a weary waste of depraved personality. Parental affection is a sublime principle that rarely, if ever, dies in a man's heart.

A tramp was picked up dead a few years ago on the turnpike road near Trenton, N. J. He had died there utterly friendless and penniless. In searching through his ragged garments for tokens of his identity the people came upon a little parcel tied up with what had once been blue ribbon. It contained a little baby's crumpled shoe. What a story it told! Despite his sins, through all his sorrows, he had carried this little memento of the child he loved.

A few years ago a poor, weak-willed, drinking man said to me in my office: "Mr. Hallimond, whenever I pass a little girl in the streets, I cannot help it, I follow her, sometimes for blocks. She reminds me of my own child, who I imagine is about the same age, and whom I have not seen since she was a baby. Oh, how I love her!"

And so we encourage our brethren to bring out the fact in their testimonies of how their homes have been blessed by their conversion. It strikes a tender chord, and in hundreds of cases produces music of the most thrilling kind.

I remember a wan-faced, hopeless drunkard who was wonderfully saved a few years ago by hearing another man tell how he had spent his first Thanksgiving at home since his conversion, with his children around him. This poor despairing fellow immediately thought of his two little girls, mere babies when he left them ten years previously, and a great hope sprang up within his breast. Wonderingly and tremblingly he uttered his first prayer in the Bowery Mission, that God would restore them to him. It saved him. He never drank again. The next Thanksgiving and every Thanksgiving since, he spent with them at home, a rehabilitated man.

The other day I received the following letter from one of our boys who is unable at present to attend our meetings, but who, not wishing to allow the anniversary of his conversion to pass unnoticed, sent this written testimony. I hope space will allow of its being printed, because on one or two occasions I have been permitted to visit his home in England, and I know something of the joy his conversion brought to the gray-haired father and mother, and to his devoted sisters.

"DEAR SIR: You may remember, perhaps, that on December 9, 1900, a man came forward in the mission at one of Mother Bird's Sunday morning meetings, to start to lead a new life with God's help. I am that man, and although sixteen years have now passed away since that day, I can remember it; it seems to me as if it were only a few weeks ago.

"I shall never forget the first Christmas I spent in the Bowery Mission. What a grand time we did have, to be sure! Christmas Eve most of us converts were at the mission helping to trim Mother Bird's Christmas tree for the poor children. Then, on Christmas, what a lot of youngsters! Almost a riot!

Why should any man get to look like this?

A former bum who has turned his back upon the saloon and the "boys"—what do you think of the change?

"I remember how kindly dear Mother Bird came down off the platform after the meeting, and spoke to me of my own mother, many thousands of miles away, and told me how nice it would be for a Christmas present to let her know I had started to try and live a Christian life. As I happened to have eight cents in my pocket at that time, I bought a five-cent stamp and wrote home the good news. With the other three cents I bought a two-cent cup of coffee and a penny cake. The next morning I went over to Moler's barber school on the corner of Canal Street and West Broadway, and got a shave and a hair-cut free. As I had been told to come to the mission Monday morning, I wanted to look as decent as possible, and as I had no underclothes, I was given a suit, for which I was very thankful. Then I was put to work in the basement with Mike Murphy, shoring up the floor of the mission.

"I remember, with a great deal of pleasure, the many happy hours I have spent in the Bowery Mission, trying to do my little part. A number of us converts used to be around the mission until eleven or twelve every night, personally talking to the new men. Some of us would go out into the Bowery after the meeting, and hunt up some of the poor fellows who had fallen by the wayside, and try and win them back.

"Then came the Brotherhood. I remember the night it was started. Probably none of us had any idea it would get to be such a large affair as it afterward became, and be of such help. Mr. Balevre deserves credit for the development of the movement. By his untiring efforts, in spite of many difficulties, he stuck to the work, and brought it up to its present condition.

"I take this opportunity of wishing yourself and family a very pleasant Christmas, and a very happy and prosperous New Year. Trusting that God will bless you and the work you are engaged in, I am

"Yours very sincerely,
"JOHN BOYNE."

Frequently, men come a considerable distance to celebrate the anniversary of their conversion, and on these occasions we get a glimpse of their restored home life, which is very refreshing. Thomas Greene is an engineer, an employee of one of the departments of the city of Philadelphia, and is regarded by his employers and his neighbors as an eminently respectable citizen. A few years ago he was, as he himself tells us, a hopeless drunkard and a conspicuously profane man, even in the Bowery—a place proverbial for its profanity. He had been obliged to leave Philadelphia for having broken his police parole, and did not dare return for fear of arrest. I remember his appearance at the Bowery Mission, because, even in the shabbily dressed crowd, he was again conspicuous by being the shabbiest. He literally had not a coat to his back.

Although floating into the mission without any particular object except to get an hour's rest during the meeting, and although he was absolutely indifferent to the spiritual aim of the workers, his attention was caught by hearing a man tell of being restored to his wife and family after fifteen years' separation. "Well," he said, "I'm not so bad in it as that, for it's only five years since I was bounced out of my home." And he left the meeting thinking. He could not forget the story. He came back and sought out the man who had told it, and he found that, beyond all peradventure, it was a fact. Then he came to a quick decision. He had had Christian parents and a Christian education. It was terribly overladen with a hard materialistic experience; but, away down in his subliminal mind, it was there, a wonderful store of Scripture truth and happy home memories. He knew well enough Who was "the Way, the Truth, and the Life," and humbly but determinedly he turned away from his evil life, and laid hold on the One who is "mighty to save." After living a splendidly consistent life for over a year he ventured back to Philadelphia to see his wife. She was exceedingly doubtful about the story he told her and decided to come personally to the Bowery Mission to verify it. She sat upon our platform and heard her husband testify. Then she heard others tell of his changed life, now so full of usefulness and charm. She returned, convinced of Tom's transformation, and arrangements were soon made for his return. For three years his life and the lives of his dear ones have been filled with joy. He is entitled each year to a week's vacation, which he spends celebrating his anniversary at the Mission.

ANOTHER anniversary always held in the Bowery Mission in December is that of Mr. William H. Stewart, who lives in a suburban town, and is so busily engaged in church work there that he can seldom be with us. He is a splendid business man, and a local preacher in one of the evangelical churches. Twenty-three years ago he was a poor broken-hearted, broken-spirited man, on his way down the Bowery with the distinct purpose of committing suicide, when he noticed the open door of the mission, and heard the singing of the men inside. He entered. Hope sprang up within his heart. He accepted Christ. He became "a new creature." What this twenty-three years' happy Christian life has meant to his wife and eight children could be in some degree realized by those who, a few nights ago, saw the shining light in the eyes of his eldest son, who sat on the platform and heard his father tell the wonderful story of his own redemption.

The only kind of a hand-out any man need ever require—if all of us will do our duty

A few Sunday mornings ago the Mission workers were agreeably surprised by the appearance on the platform of a little party from Middletown, Conn. It was "personally conducted" by a handsome, broad-shouldered business man from that town, in whom the workers recognized "Fred" Parmelee, a convert of several years ago. He is a Christian of a very sturdy, straight-forward kind. He makes no pretense of being an orator. No one would charge him with being over-burdened with sentimentality, and I doubt if he has much poetry in his make-up. He is a matter-of-fact man: he strikes straight from the shoulder. He relies on facts. One of the party was his pastor, the pastor of a Methodist church, and the others were his daughter and his son-in-law. His object in bringing them was evidently twofold. He wanted his Middletown friends to know something of the instrumentality God had used in his conversion, and he wanted his Bowery friends to know something of the consistent life he was now living in Middletown. Who could bear witness to that better than his pastor and his daughter? He accomplished both purposes.

One night three years ago, a man spent the night on the benches in Union Square Park. He had been to the Bowery Mission meeting and the Gospel seed had evidently fallen on good ground, for he had accepted a Brotherhood card of invitation, and he was thinking it over. He had, moreover, heard in the meeting testimonies that had touched him to the quick. He had listened to men who had given up evil and selfish lives, and had been brought into right relations with the families they had neglected and wronged. Months previously, he had abandoned a wife and four little boys in a Southern state. Cruelly had he left them without means of support, and had never even written to them to tell them of his whereabouts. He was utterly miserable and desperate. Poverty, homelessness, hunger, like so many grim fiends, dogged his footsteps. And now conscience, formidable, rose menacingly before him. What must he do? He could do nothing. He was up against a blank wall. His nerves jumped like live wires; his blood surged stormily through his veins; his heart was breaking. But the white card in his hand told him of a power and a peace that might be his for the asking, so, holding it close to his breast, he sank from the bench to his knees, and poured out his soul to God in a passionate plea for mercy and help. The answer came instantly.

Next night he was at the Mission with his signed card, and ever since he has been one of our faithful workers. Can you imagine the joy-bringing effect of the news to the anxious wife and the wondering children? Within a month or two they had been brought to New York City, where a humble home was re-created. The whole family are members of the Calvary Protestant Episcopal Church, the boys are in the classes, clubs, and choir, and the father spends his leisure within the reassembled family circle, or at the meetings of the Bowery Mission.

I wish it were possible for readers of the Christian Herald to visit our Sunday evening meeting, if for no other purpose than to become acquainted with the many fine fellows who have come up out of the depths where thousands still are plunged, and learn from their own lips—and eyes and shining countenances—what happened when Jesus came into their hearts.

Japan Seeking Toward Christ

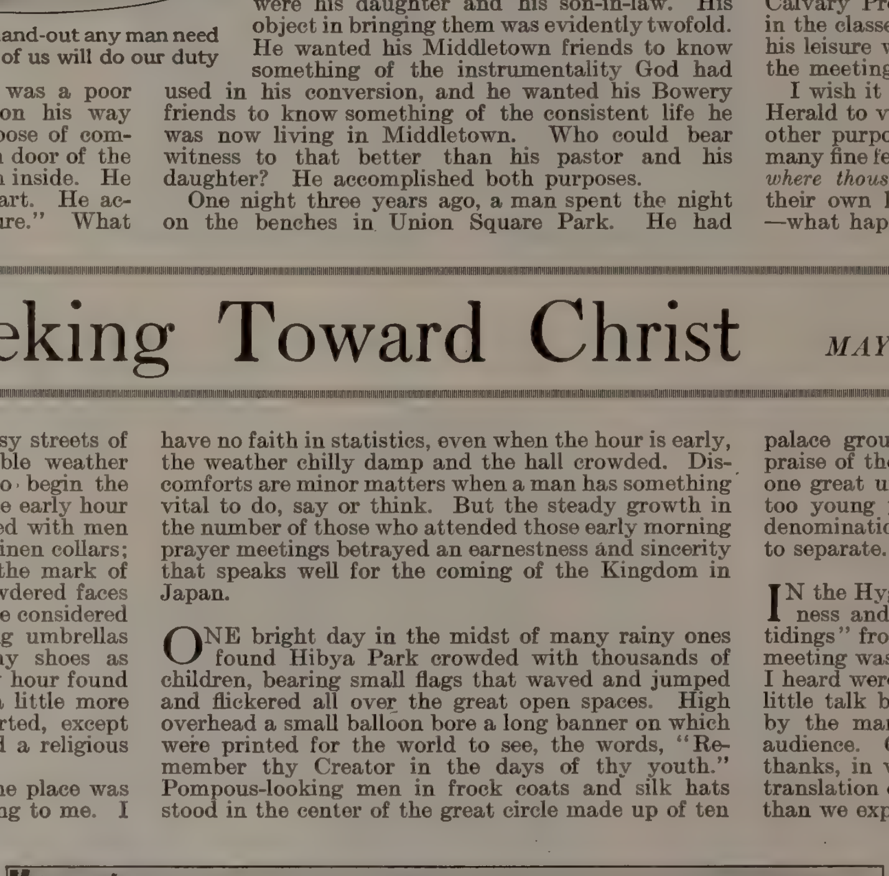
By
MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

A LIGHT rain was falling in the busy streets of Tokyo. It was dark, disagreeable weather and the city seemed reluctant to begin the work of the new day. Even at the early hour of half-past five, the street cars were filled with men in coarse cotton blouses and men in fine linen collars; women whose sallow, round faces bore the mark of low-class stolidity and women whose powdered faces and oiled hair proclaimed their desire to be considered members of the "lady" class. Dripping umbrellas emptied rivulets of cold water into my shoes as newcomers boarded the car and the early hour found me desirous of getting back to bed for a little more sleep. The hotel lobby had been deserted, except for some moppers, when I left to attend a religious meeting.

I could not find a seat in the hall. The place was crowded. At first it seemed a dull meeting to me. I could not understand the prayers that were said. But gradually I became aware that there was a tremendous earnestness in that large hall, filled as it was with bowed figures, huddled together in the chill dampness of early morning. These humble people were praying for a new Japan, and the wickedness, lack of conscience, and indifference to moral wrong of their country was bearing heavily on their hearts.

The last Tokyo meetings of the Three-Year Evangelistic Campaign were opening with prayer meetings by believers. Man after man rose in his place and waited to pray as soon as another had finished. Sometimes two prayed at once. Once there were three men, all praying at one time, earnestly, rapidly, fervently.

Then a spellbinder got up and started to deliver an oration. Did you ever attend a prayer meeting where there wasn't some one pious soul who wanted a monopoly for an interminable time? Once, when he paused for breath, the moderator or leader, as leaders sometimes do, said "Amen," in the hope of bringing his harangue to a close. Finally the speaker had the grace to sit down and there was a hymn of praise and thanksgiving. Scores of Japanese then lifted their voices in prayer for Japan. If I had known the language well, I could have understood little, for there was an air of hurry, as though souls were being lost, even as the meeting continued, and several prayed at once. The unstudied confusion of their sincerity was dramatic in its intensity.



"And be baptized . . . for the promise is unto . . . all that are afar off"

The statistician met me when the meeting was over. "Seven hundred and ten up to six-forty," he said. I wondered whether he had counted the prayers. I have no faith in statistics, even when the hour is early, the weather chilly damp and the hall crowded. Discomforts are minor matters when a man has something vital to do, say or think. But the steady growth in the number of those who attended those early morning prayer meetings betrayed an earnestness and sincerity that speaks well for the coming of the Kingdom in Japan.

ONE bright day in the midst of many rainy ones found Hibya Park crowded with thousands of children, bearing small flags that waved and jumped and flickered all over the great open spaces. High overhead a small balloon bore a long banner on which were printed for the world to see, the words, "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth." Pompous-looking men in frock coats and silk hats stood in the center of the great circle made up of ten thousand bare-legged Sunday school children, met in a great rally. Up on a platform two leaders in the singing swung their megaphones to the good old tunes of some of our dearest Christian hymns, while, in admirable unison, those ten thousand children's voices were lifted in songs of praise. Outside the circle of the initiated, thousands of onlookers watched the unusual sight of children singing of a Saviour and a God that the old people do not yet know. When God had been praised in song and speech, the great mass of children moved over to the palace entrance and gave three "Banzais" for the Emperor, who was probably a mile away in some distant part of the palace grounds. I think God heard the pæans of praise of those masses of children who were joined in one great unit through a single Saviour, as they are too young yet to divide into the score of religious denominations into which they may be later expected to separate.

IN the Hygienic Society Hall several hundred business and professional men came to hear the "glad tidings" from foreigners and Japanese, but the whole meeting was in charge of the Japanese. The speeches I heard were very good, I am told. My own colorless little talk became a vivid sermon, when interpreted by the man who put it into the language of the audience. Only the other day I got a nice letter of thanks, in which the dear friends, according to the translation of the hotel clerk, said, "It was even more than we expected."

In one of the largest halls of the city, more than a thousand women listened to the Christian teaching of the equality of woman. It was a wonderful meeting. The strictest of attention was paid by those who listened to the pronouncement of the emancipation of one-half the human race from the spiritual and social nonentity with which heathenism clothes them. Rich women, poor women; women with babies, women whose "babies" must have been grown up for many years; young students and society dames in their elaborate coiffures—all were there, listening to the straightest kind of Christianity, but expounded by men. Some day Japanese women will lead their own meetings, and be the spiritual guides of their own sex. The preacher in the present instance shook his hand in the faces of the women and laid down the law to them with the arrogant superiority of his sex.

I was only one of three men in that crowded hall, and I had to depend for all knowledge of what was going on upon two young Japanese girls, whose English was as good as mine. One phrase impressed me.

"He says," whispered the girl, "that women have a firmer faith than men. But," she added modestly, "I don't know whether it is true." The equality of woman in Japan has reached the oratorical and epigrammatic stage, but it has only reached that stage in Christian circles. In heathenism, a woman, as a spiritual being, simply does not exist.

These were four of the meetings that I attended, but there were many more. In the open air and in the largest halls of the city, there were meetings nearly every day for two weeks. At fourteen places in the city there were outdoor meetings, and in every Christian church in Tokyo special meetings were held. Decisions were not asked for in the large union meetings; but in one of the small churches there were forty-three decisions in a single session. The harvest of many years' sowing is now coming in.

Doesn't seem to be caring much what happens

Not only was Tokyo the scene of this great stirring. In Yokohama other meetings are being held. In north Japan and down in Kyushu the United Evangelistic Campaign is going on with wonderful results. The Kingdom is coming in Japan.

THREE years ago, there was a union conference to which even High Church and Catholic workers came to meet with John R. Mott. As a result of the interest aroused, the Japanese members asked for a big three-year campaign to redeem Japan from licentiousness, superstition and indifference. Right there was where the trouble started. "Do something?" asked the High Church; "why, we understood that this was only a conference, an interdenominational oratorical contest, as it were. We really cannot cooperate if any one is going to do anything." But the Japanese contingency came back with the reply: "What Japan needs is not spread-eagle rhetoric and long-winded oratory, but Christ, and we want to take him to the people in a big three-year campaign."

The result was that, out of deference to a desire for unity, the plans for doing anything by the joint conference were given up, to prevent the High Church from climbing some convenient pillar in lonely solitude. But the Japanese continued to plead for a campaign for Christ that would do something to save Japan, and finally the campaign was begun. It cost America $12,500 and Japan raised a like amount. According to one of the leaders in Japan, that was the greatest bargain American Christians ever got in missionary investment.

In two years of the campaign, there were 3,293 meetings held, attended by 566,852 hearers, and resulting not only in 21,644 inquirers but in a vastly advanced position for Christianity in the religious life of the nation. The third year seems to be even more successful than the two preceding, and next February will probably show a wonderful growth in active, direct interest in Christian affairs. But the interesting feature is that this entire campaign, financed largely by America and the American missionaries on the field, is in its inception and administration almost entirely a Japanese enterprise.

In no other mission field in the world, I am told, does a like condition of affairs exist. The Japanese body is not only not dominated by foreign influence, but is not even directly affected by the foreigners, who have their own body; the two separate bodies often combining, but on terms of absolute equality, America furnishing the money and Japan the men.

In most mission fields there is one mission body, dominated by missionaries. In Japan there are two—one Japanese, one foreign—acting together in the most perfect unity and harmony, not from compulsion but from desire. Union through action is their achievement, and it deserves a monument as unique in the mission world.

I have heard criticism of the Japanese on the ground that they want to be in the saddle, even though America furnishes the funds. They do. I have seen enough elsewhere of the cringing, boot-licking dependence upon American missionary direction, so that I welcome as a most hopeful sign any attempt on the part of the indigenous population to dominate their own work as soon as they are in a position to do it. The real leaders at the forefront of the Christian movement in Japan are Japanese. This is the most hopeful sign I have yet seen in the mission world, not only because the Japanese are willing to lead, but because they are intellectually and spiritually fitted to lead. We are no longer in the Carey and Judson days of missions, and world missions can no longer be an American luxury, when they become to such a wonderful extent a spiritual and social necessity to the "heathen" peoples of the earth.

Dear little kindergarten "graduates" whose feet are planted in the pathway of Christian service

In Japan, the native ordained men and mission workers outnumber the foreign workers by more than two to one; but the more important thing is that they are high-grade workers, many of them as well educated and as consecrated as the foreign workers. More important still is the fact that these native workers are not subordinate to foreign domination, but on a par through the Federated Churches, which correspond to the similar body of Federated Missions.

ANOTHER hopeful sign is that sectional divisions in America do not affect the Japanese churches associated with them. Seven sectional Methodist missions unite in the one Japan Methodist Church, which thus is not divided by North, South or Canada. While in America the Presbyterian Church, North and South, the Dutch Reformed Church, North and South, the Woman's Union and the German Reformed Church are still separated by sectional, geographical or theological differences, their Japanese brethren are a unit under the Christian name of the "Church of Christ in Japan." Thus the division of "heathen" into the myriad sects and divisions that make denominationalism a stumbling-block to missionary endeavor is being checked in Japan.

One of the most interesting features of the United Evangelistic Campaign was the newspaper evangelism conducted in connection with it, through fourteen leading dailies in Tokyo for a period of two weeks. Five hundred people are reached by this method for the cost of reaching one by direct preaching; and although the appeal is less direct and forceful, a recognized place has been won for this method, which has never been used elsewhere in mission work to anything like the same extent. The circulation of the newspapers used amounts to one and one-half million copies daily, and they reach people who could be reached in no other way, belonging to all classes of society. It may result in little in the way of conversions; but it is doing much to win a hearing for Christ in Japan, and for the Christianization of the social order, which is the most impressive form of influence of Christian missions in Japan today. A little leaven is affecting the whole lump.

A careful survey of the results of the newspaper evangelism of last year has resulted in its wider use this year and many are definitely known to have been impressed by this means to such an extent that they applied for Christian instruction. This is not church advertising, but Christian advertising, conducted by a union committee which is cooperating willingly.

Within the precincts of the great Asakusa Kwannon temple of Tokyo, the scene of perpetual festivals and worship of the Goddess of Mercy, there is a fine new preaching hall of the Buddhists, where one day I saw the sign announcing a three-sect union preaching campaign, as much removed from the superstitious rites in the great temple itself as light is from darkness. Each year, the Christians spring some surprises on the city, some new ways of appealing to moral indifference. Each year the Buddhists imitate their example, attempting to uplift the ignorant and superstitious multitudes through similar methods.

The direct results of the campaign are highly commendable and worth while. The indirect results are beyond computation, but they all lead in the direction of the coming of the Kingdom in Japan.

THUS the Japanese people are once more turning to a power outside themselves for help and strength as a nation. It is not a movement toward European dress, knives, forks and chairs, but toward Christ. The pro-foreign feeling of the early days gave place to the anti-foreign tendency of a quarter of a century ago, which was a virtual declaration of

Continued on page 50

The balloon carried a banner on which in Japanese characters was printed "Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth"

The Emperor was probably a mile away when these Christian native children, after their Sunday school rally, gave him three hearty "Banzais"

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

© Underwood & Underwood

French (at right and front) driving Germans across the shell-scarred battleground of Soyecourt, as seen from a battleplane during the action

PORTO RICANS TO BE CITIZENS. Ever since the cession of their island by Spain to the United States, the Porto Ricans have been without a country. The bill now pending in the Senate will grant to all the citizens of Porto Rico American citizenship. The bill also provides for complete home rule, the Porto Rican legislature having power to override the veto of the governor by a two-thirds vote. But the legislature is so restricted that it will be impossible for it to appropriate more money in any year than the available revenue for that year.

SENATE COMMITTEE VOTES DRY. On December 21 the Senate Judiciary Committee reported favorably the joint resolution providing for a national prohibition amendment. The vote in the Senate on Senator Sheppard's bill to establish prohibition in the District of Columbia was set for Tuesday, January 9.

AN ESTIMATED CENSUS. The Census Bureau estimates the total population of the continental United States for 1916 at 102,017,312, basing its estimates on the 1910 census, with six years' increase at the rate that prevailed from 1900 to 1910. For the United States and possessions the total is estimated at 112,444,620.

SAVING FOR SPENDING. Residents of New York State and New Jersey are said to have accumulated $20,000,000 for Christmas gifts by the Christmas club plan, under which each member of the club deposits a certain definite or progressive sum in the bank each week, beginning the week after Christmas and drawing out the accumulations two weeks before the next Christmas. [By the same plan, but letting the starving draw the deposit each week, what a sum can be given to relieve the misery of the world!]

AMERICAN PORTS WAY STATIONS. It was announced in shipping circles in New York on December 23 that Great Britain planned to arm merchantmen plying betwen America and the British Isles with guns fore and aft, these vessels to operate between Liverpool and Halifax only. The cargoes now being shipped at New York, Boston and other Atlantic ports of the United States will be shipped to Halifax on smaller steamships and transshipped there for Liverpool, while the passengers will be carried to Halifax by rail. The route from Halifax to Liverpool will be patrolled by fast cruisers, which will be ready to answer any call for assistance from the armed liners.

"THE TOWN HALL OF THE UNITED STATES." Chicago, with many years of precedence as a convention center, took this motto as its own. For 1916 New York claims to have captured the conventions if not the motto, the total for the year being 663, of which 111 were conventions of manufacturers, 46 dog, cat and chicken shows, 45 fraternal organizations, 41 educational bodies, 30 religious conventions, 31 scientific, 34 professional organizations, 32 sports, 18 civic, 16 jobbers', 15 general commercial, 14 transportation, and 14 philanthropic.

SWITCHMEN GET EIGHT-HOUR DAY. The Federal Board of Arbitration, to which was submitted the demand of the Switchmen's Union of North America for increased pay and shorter hours, reported on December 23. The switchmen demanded: 1. That eight hours or less should constitute a day's work. Granted. 2. That helpers receive forty-seven cents an hour and foremen fifty cents. A flat increase of five cents an hour for eight hours' work was granted, which will give the same pay for nine hours as is now received for ten. 3. That overtime be paid at time and a half. Overtime pay fixed on a pro-rata basis. The award also provided new rules, which were somewhat in favor of the men. The board, which consisted of two representatives of labor, two of the railways and two appointed by the Federal Board of Mediation, signed the report unanimously, but dissenting reports were submitted by both the representatives of the union and those of the railroads. The union representatives held that the full increase in pay demanded should have been granted, and that overtime pay should have been fixed at time and a half. Railroad representatives dissented from the eight-hour day. About 6,000 men are directly affected by the award, but it is expected that all the 60,000 yardmen in the union will eventually profit by this arbitration. The two neutral arbitrators also filed a supplementary report in which they expressed the opinion that a general actual eight-hour working day was not workable on American railroads.

© Brown & Dawson

A portion of the town and harbor of St. Thomas, West Indies

FOOD AT 17 CENTS A DAY. The Government Indian School at Carlisle, Pa., reports that the cost per year per pupil for subsistence is $60.63, which means that each student is fed for $1.17 a week. Clothing costs $28.43. The annual cost per pupil for lodging, board, medical care, academic and vocational training, laundry, musical, dramatic and physical training, amusements, military training and transportation to and from their homes is $210. For the present year there are 527 students enrolled, and a day's ration includes 900 pounds of bread, 380 pounds of beef, 18 pounds of butter, 80 pounds of flour, 35 pounds of oatmeal, 24 gallons of milk, 4 bushels of potatoes, 6 pounds of coffee, one pound of tea, 60 pounds of sugar, 8 quarts of syrup, 10 pounds of onions, 12 pounds of corn starch, 10 pounds of raisins, 112 pounds of corn bread, and 6 pounds of tomatoes.

PERSONNEL OF THE SHIPPING BOARD. President Wilson on December 22 sent to the Senate the following appointments to the new United States Shipping Board: William Denman, San Francisco, Bernard N. Baker, Baltimore, John A. Donald, New York, Democrats. John Barber White, Kansas City, and Theodore Brent, New Orleans, Republicans. This board will organize the shipping corporation authorized by the last Congress and will have powers over water traffic throughout the United States and in foreign commerce, similar to those of the Interstate Commerce Commission over railways. It will have jurisdiction to investigate shipping conditions and regulate and fix rates for water transportation.

FEDERAL RESERVE EXPANDS. The Federal Reserve Bank of New York. with the consent of the Federal Reserve Board, has appointed the Bank of England as its agent and correspondent to buy or sell and collect bills of exchange. The move is expected to relieve the existing international exchange situation and to stop to some degree the inflow of gold, which was beginning to worry some American bankers.

A BILLION IN PROFITS. According to a calculation by the Interstate Commerce Commission, based upon the reports for the first nine months of 1916, the year will prove the most prosperous in the history of American railroads, exceeding the former banner year 1913. The first nine months show, for all railways having an annual income of $1,000,000 or more, a combined net income of $785,558,266, and the Commerce Board's calculation gives their probable net income for the year at $1,098,000,000. The net income per month has increased 67 per cent. since January. The gross income for the first nine months was $2,654,829,647, of which freight paid $1,875,019,990. Expenses in the same nine months increased approximately eleven per cent.

FINAL ELECTION RETURNS. Complete official election returns compiled by the Associated Press and made public December 27 show that the total popular vote for president was 18,638,871, of which Wilson received 9,116,296, Hughes 8,547,474, Benson (Socialist) about 750,000, Hanly (Prohibitionist) 225,101. Wilson's plurality over Hughes is 568,822. The composition of the next House of Representatives is still in doubt. At present certificates of election have been issued to 214 Republicans, 213 Democrats, 2 Independents, 2 Progressives, 1 Prohibitionist, 1 Socialist, and contests are in progress in two districts. Neither Democrats nor Republicans will have votes enough on the assembling of Congress to control the House and elect a Speaker. About twenty seats will be contested after the House is organized, and the final balance of power will depend on the outcome of these contests.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE. For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Mexican Crisis Refuses to Stay Put. Villa forces are again said to be active, the town of Torreon being the last town taken by these bandits, who are succeeding in keeping the whole of northern Mexico in a state of unrest. In the meantime negotiations with Carranza, having passed the limit of our patience, are still continued. It was reported on December 25 that Washingington had given Carranza twenty-four hours to accept the protocol prepared by the American-Mexican Joint Comission. The twenty-four hours extended to forty-eight, and when the answer came it was a decided negative, Carranza refusing to sign the protocol as it stood, and demanding a modification which would not make it appear that he regarded the presence of the Pershing expedition in Mexico as anything other than illegal. President Carranza is acting like the head of a thoroughly independent and sovereign nation. Seventy-two hours after the twenty-four-hour limit had been set, Washington dispatches indicated that further conferences might be held between the representatives of the two nations. The American position is that Pershing was sent into Mexico to establish the order and security that the Carranza troops were unable to maintain. Carranza now says that he cannot maintain order in northern Mexico as long as the Pershing troops remain. It looks like a continuous performance. The New York Times of December 29 suggests editorially that if Washington still considers Carranza a recognizable de facto ruler, it might as well order the withdrawal of Pershing now, cease parleying, and leave Carranza to give his sole attention to the perils that confront him at home, of which there seem at present enough to keep him occupied.

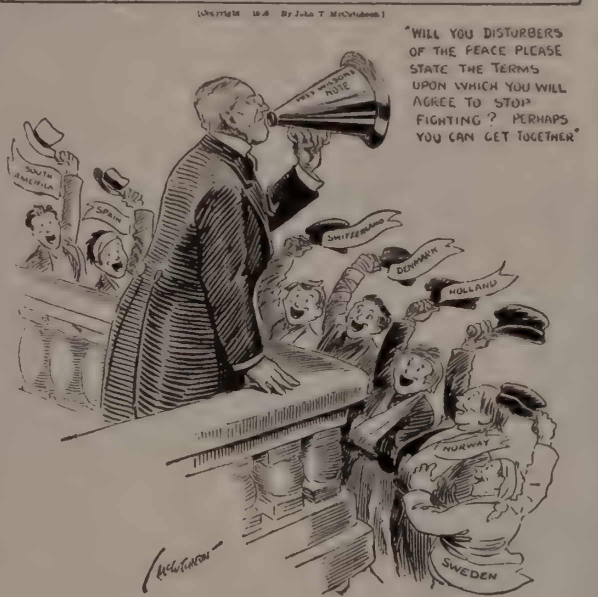
Plan a Great Army. Washington dispatches of December 27 reported that the army general staff was preparing a military bill modeled after the Argentine system of universal service. According to this bill 450,000 to 500,000 of the million boys who each year reach the age of eighteen will be given a year's military instruction, after which they will be expected to report for duty for two weeks each year for two years. In five years this system would give us 500,000 men under arms, 1,500,000 in the organized reserve, and 1,500,000 men, not organized, but ready to be called for active service. The War Department made public on December 28 a circular which shows that under the law recently passed every able-bodied citizen of the United States between the ages of eighteen and forty-five is liable to be drafted for military service by action of the President, without any further authorization from Congress.

Farm Loan Centers. The twelve Federal Farm Land Bank districts and the cities in which the farm banks will be placed were announced on December 27. The cities are as follows: Springfield, Mass., Baltimore, Md., Columbia, S. C., Louisville, Ky., New Orleans, La., St. Louis, Mo., St. Paul, Minn., Omaha, Neb., Wichita, Kan., Austin, Texas, Berkeley, Calif., and Spokane, Wash.

Fragments of News. Sir Ernest Shackleton, who late in the fall succeeded in rescuing the members of his crew marooned on Elephant Island, sailed from Dunedin, New Zealand, on the auxiliary ship Aurora, December 23 in an effort to pick up the ten men of his original party who were left behind near the Ross Barrier when the Aurora was torn away from her anchorage in a blizzard twenty-two months ago. Nothing has been heard of the men since that time. . . . American Jews are planning to raise a fund of $10,000,000 for use in 1917 to relieve the suffering of Jews in war lands. About $3,000,000 of the amount was pledged in one evening at Carnegie Hall in New York City. . . . Because of the congestion of railroads the Ford Motor Company's plant in Detroit shut down for one week beginning December 22, making 42,000 men idle, and causing a wage loss of $1,400,000. . . . The king of Denmark on December 22 ratified the treaty providing for the sale of the Danish West Indies to the United States. It is expected that ratifications will be exchanged in Washington late in January. A great naval demonstration is being planned to signalize the acquisition of the islands. It is said that the entire Atlantic Fleet will be ordered to St. Thomas. . . . Alfred C. Bedford, vice-president of the Standard Oil Company, was elected president of the company to succeed the late John D. Archbold. . . . According to the Department of Agriculture, American farmers this fall have planted 40,090,000 acres in winter wheat, which is 887,000 acres, or 2.3 per cent., greater acreage than was planted in 1915. The year 1914 holds the record of 40,452,000 acres planted. . . . William A. P. Martin, formerly the president of the Imperial University of China, and a missionary in China for sixty-six years, died December 18 at the American Presbyterian Mission in Peking. . . . Brazil and Uruguay on December 28 signed a general arbitration treaty. . . . On December 26 a tornado swept through South Central Arkansas killing upwards of half a hundred people and doing great damage to farms and towns. . . . A conference between the heads of the railway brotherhoods and the conference committee of the railways over the application of the Adamson Eight-Hour Law came to an abrupt halt on December 28, the railways refusing to put the law into effect until after the Supreme Court decision, agreeing, however, to pay back wages in case the decision upholds the law. . . . The oil steamer Maryland reported herself sinking on December 26 about 300 miles off Sandy Hook, and on the 27th the revenue cutters Acushnet and Gresham, which were hurried to her relief, reported that they found no trace of her. She carried a crew of thirty-five men. . . . Mme. A. de Thebes, the Paris clairvoyant, who prophesied a great many things some of which happened, and who claimed to have foretold the present great European War, died in Paris December 26. . . . Washington reported on December 27 that the House Committee on Post Offices had struck a snag in the Committee on Rules, in its attempt to raise second-class postage rates, the Committee on Rules having refused to give the legislative rider the special rule necessary to permit its consideration.

PRESIDENT WILSON AT LEAST MAKES A HIT WITH A LOT OF THE SUFFERING SMALL NATIONS

(Copyright 1916 By John T McCutcheon)



"WILL YOU DISTURBERS OF THE PEACE PLEASE STATE THE TERMS UPON WHICH YOU WILL AGREE TO STOP FIGHTING? PERHAPS YOU CAN GET TOGETHER"
PRES WILSON'S NOTE
SOUTH AMERICA
SPAIN
SWITZERLAND
DENMARK
HOLLAND
NORWAY
SWEDEN
McCUTCHEON

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

DURING the week (December 22-29) Switzerland and Sweden followed the initiative of President Wilson and delivered notes to the several belligerents in the interests of peace. There is reason to think that in the next few days Spain, Holland, and the remaining neutral countries in Europe and one or two outside of Europe will follow.

In its note to the belligerents, Switzerland said among other things: "The President of the United States of America, with whom the Swiss Federal Council, guided by its warm desire that hostilities may soon come to an end, has for a considerable time been in touch, had the kindness to apprise the Federal Council of the peace note sent to the governments of the Central and Entente Powers."

This statement relative to the Council having been for a considerable time in touch with the President on this subject is of importance, in that it shows that the neutral nations of the world have been for some time considering the action taken on December 20th, and that such action, therefore, is distinct and dissociated from the German peace proposals of the week before.

Continuing, the Swiss note says: "The Swiss Federal Council is therefore glad to seize the opportunity to support the efforts of the President of the United States. It would consider itself happy if it could act in any, no matter how modest, way for the rapprochement of the peoples now engaged in the struggle, and for reaching a lasting peace." The Swedish note proceeds along like lines. The significance of all these moves lies in the fact that a neutral nation rarely takes such action without having first ascertained that its offers would not be entirely unwelcome to those to whom they are addressed. We must not be discouraged if for the next three or four weeks the opposition to peace is strong on each side. This always has been the case in great wars at the inception of peace negotiations, and there is no reason to believe that the present war will be an exception.

Western France is now a network of light railways. Here is a cable road up through the difficult Vosges region

GENERAL JOFFRE has now been absolutely retired from active participation in the war. The president of France this week signed a decree, reviving the old rank of Marshal of France, abolished at the fall of Napoleon III, and appointed General Joffre thereto, at the same time by another decree removing him from the position of technical military adviser to the government, to which he was recently appointed on his removal from active command.

Conscription seems to be drawing nearer in Canada, judging from recent speeches by the premier, Mr. Borden, and unless the voluntary enlistments pick up greatly (they were only 5,374 in November, barely covering casualties) it is very hard to see how it can be avoided. The scheme of civil conscription about to be put in force in Great Britain is extremely interesting. By it all the male population from sixteen or seventeen to fifty years not in the army become industrial soldiers, and must go anywhere and do anything ordered while the war lasts.

In eastern Egypt early in the week the British reported the occupation of the Turkish fortified camp at El Arish, ninety-odd miles to the east of the Suez Canal. Apparently the position was not defended by the Turks, which seems strange, as it was a position of considerable importance. This success was followed up later in the week by a large raid by British cavalry, which captured the town of Maghadah, twenty miles to the southeast of El Arish.

There are forty-two languages spoken, it is said, among the prisoners of war now held in Germany, which include representatives, black, yellow and white, of all of the continents of the earth.

The prospects of an increase in the activities of the German submarine seems to be causing much uneasiness in Great Britain. This uneasiness is quite understandable, for on her power to keep the seas open to her merchant vessels bringing food and raw materials to the British Isles depends Great Britain's power both to feed her population and to continue her export trade to any degree, as well as to supply her army with munitions of war.

By way of grappling with this peril, no further news of the movement of merchant ships is to be permitted to leave the British Isles, and all merchant ships are to be fully armed with guns fore and aft and to have trained gun crews placed on board of them. Such procedure will probably be considered as making such merchant ships auxiliary cruisers, thereby eliminating questions of warning and search. It is further reported that the vessels of the Cunard and White Star lines now plying between New York and British ports will henceforth make Halifax their American terminus.

No news of the slightest importance came to us from the Caucasus during the past week. In Mesopotamia the British showed some activity near Kut-el-Amara and destroyed Gassabs fort, twenty miles southeast of that town. This had been for some time a base of operations by hostile Arabs.

On the western and Austro-Italian fronts little occurred other than skirmishes and artillery duels of minor importance. Comparative inactivity was the rule.

Reports have been in circulation for some time past in the French press that Germany intended to violate the neutrality of Switzerland and break through her territory into France and Italy. The Swiss Federal Council, however, announced this week that it had received the most formal assurances by Germany once more guaranteeing Swiss neutrality.

The Macedonian front shared the general dulness and, except for the repulse of some rather feeble British attacks northeast of Doiran, there is nothing to chronicle.

No news concerning Greece comes to us directly from Greece. The British Foreign Office, however, announced that the Greek government is carrying out its promise to demobilize the Greek army.

Continued on page 47

Making Over the Mountaineer

The Regeneration of the Feudist and "Moonshiner" of the Mountains

By FELIX J. KOCH

TO find oneself brought in a high-class automobile to a charming plateau in the very wilds of the mountains where Kentucky, Virginia and Tennessee come together, by a young man who proceeds to question you as to the international law involved in the very latest episode of the great war, and to find (to 'fess up to it) that he knows more about this sort of thing than you do yourself, is, to say the least, a bit disconcerting!

To dismount at a great model dairy, such as few concerns dispensing to the largest cities of the world could show, and meet young lads, mere boys, who prate to you of milk weights and ratios as between certain cattle-foods and milk yields, is to make you wonder how many farmer boys in the more—well, call it, if you must, civilized—sections can do the same.

From such homes there come many boys like this to be greeted by President Hubbell

and then work out their educational salvation by pluck and grace

You, friend reader, let's suppose, have been invited to come down and inspect the work being done for the younger mountain-folk at the big, new Lincoln University, up among the peaks, beyond Harrogate, where Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee all but meet. You accepted the invitation with peculiar zest, you remember. Ordinarily, visiting colleges is rather dry work: class-rooms, offices, a library whose books you've no time to read, a campus, with some staring students. But in this case, you would go into the heart of the wildest, most primitive of America's mountains, and children of feudists and moonshiners, youths from homes whose older folk have never seen a railway train, an electric car, would be the student body. A rare opportunity to study the most primitive of Americans. So you accepted.

Then, arrived, you wondered, as you rambled through the grounds, that none of the students seemed to measure up (or down) to what you expected. A bell sounded from the tower near, and presently charming, refined, sweet-faced mountain girls served you at table as few great hotels know how to serve.

These, then, were the mountain "types" you had come to study? These the children of feudists who, this past hundred years, have taken the law of an "eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth" and executed it to remotest kinship? In the very homes of some of these, at the moment (Uncle Sam's sleuths not being present) the moonshine and the mountain dew might be distilling, the old women going about barefoot and smoking, the men "killing time" doing nothing more than fondling their dogs.

It was startling. You tried vainly to bring it all squarely home. Then a courteous young chap, Malcolm by name, accosted you on your way out. "I'm a Lincoln student," he said, saluting. "Can I be of any service in pointing things out?"

You wanted to know about that other building on the crest, a broad, Southern residential structure, with verandas on which some tiny toddlers played.

"Oh, that's the Memorial Home," he said, and told a story that is unique among the histories of Universities.

Over the wild mountain-lands of this northeasterly Southland, it will often occur that a father is shot in some feud, a mother dies of the very hardships of life, or both parents will succumb to what exposure may bring on, and so there are half-orphans, or orphans, in the mountain cabins. All such little folk come within the fold of the University's love.

President Hubbell has arranged that here, on the big blue-grass plateau in the mountains, there shall be this "orphanage," as they call it, and the children shall be taught as children in these fastnesses have never been taught before. Not only the mental, but the physical side of the wee folk is looked after here, and the children grow up as—it may seem shame to say it—they never would have done had their natural parents had them in their care. College graduate teachers look to their education until, by and by, they go to the University itself.

BUT this University. To begin with, the train from Cincinnati, the nearest city of size, drops your special at Cumberland Gap, the nearest point with such switch, some time in the wee hours of morning, and at 6:30 you are roused for your trip through the mountains. Out the window, as you dress, you get an idea of how primitive is the country, even where the iron trail has reached it. There are mountaineers riding astride their mules with heavy saddle-bags that take you back to pioneer times. An ancient water-wheel, which any artist would delight in, turns wearily, within stone's throw of the car. High up on cliff and mountain slope you detect cabins such as Abraham Lincoln might have lived in in his childhood.

Yet right at hand automobiles wait, manned by spruce, manly, young college chaps, eager for contact with the stranger, yet reserved in their curiosity, as becomes gentlemen, and whom it seems wholly impossible to accredit to the sort of homes which you have read of as abounding in these mountains.

A little chap comes up to your car, wearing glasses with rims a few sizes too large. "Theodore Roosevelt," he tells you his name is, and to your query if he, too, is some time to become President, he answers, mountain-wise: "I dunno!"

Does he believe in college education? Is he going out in search of greatness, away from the cabin with its little patch of vegetables and the 'baccy that will feed his family, and the rifle to bring game from the wood? "I sure am going to get an education!" he answers you. Thus the leaven of the neighboring University begins.

Through the barring mountains, which for a century have hedged folk from each other, runs the road to the college. Mountain-men were out hunting for foxes, squirrel, wild turkey, as your car winds upward. Did your chauffeur hunt too? "Yes, once in a while; only one hadn't the time for this, any more, there were so many better things to do."

You passed the Grace Nettleton Home for orphan girls, kept here until of age to work their way through the college. Then over the flat-topped hill and through Harrogate village and you reached the college grounds. You were exactly 275 feet above even Harrogate here, your guide said.

To realize the effect that this college architecture has upon the folk for many miles around, you must make mental picture of the Cumberlands. Fancy mile on mile of mountain range covered only with forest, with here and there a clearing and its log hut, or a two-story cabin, or one clap-boarded round—a mark of excellence indeed. Think of a people who have never bothered with brick, until now this leaven is working. Then fancy what it means to have spacious, stately, modern college buildings, with tasty auditoriums, for entertainments free to all, where mother may come to see daughter, in her new life, or gran'pap drop in on Bill and John, right within ride of those huts in the mountains!

Here takes place the regeneration of the mountain folk. These buildings are cared for by the students, who work their way by such services. Bit by bit, the girls, the boys, get the knack of the tasteful touch; they find in themselves unsuspected love of order, tidiness and the beautiful. The log fire burns briskly in the big open hearth; bottle-gourds, filled with growing mountain fern, grace the clean windows; pictures of old mountain characters, the passing type, catch your eye; college girls step in and out. You're instantly in love with the place.

But they have so much to show you, and their pride in it all does you good to see. Wilson Allen, banner student, wants to bear you off to the library; have you ever seen such array of books as here? Remember, you are interested more in these students, these mountaineers of the near tomorrow, than in books and buildings. Before Lincoln University came, this same young man might have spent the time in trapping muskrat, hoeing corn, cutting 'baccy, that he is now giving so enthusiastically to books.

But the bell is calling to breakfast. Recollect that last story you read, that last "movie" you saw, of these mountains? There was the dirty red cloth, half torn apart, on a low deal table. There was a pone of corn-bread, a tin can of brewed coffee-essence; here known as coffee. There was a slovenly woman, wearing one garment, and a man whose face had never been shaven. It wasn't exaggerated at that, but now . . .

Well, there are tables with immaculate white cloths, and on these hand-embroidered doilies. Gourd bowls hold fern—dainty walking-fern, that trails its path through their moss. Your waitresses are the mountain girls; pictures, every one of them. Their garments are white as their own mountain snow; their hands are fresh-scrubbed; their nails manicured; their serving beyond fault. A friend says grace; then the girls bring the meal they've prepared. Just a signal from the preceptress at one end of the board, a splendid New England woman,—then . . . Really, you delay the eating just to chat with these mountain girls. You're glad that these girls will marry almost as soon as they've done here and can start new homes on such a basis as this. It won't be a mountain cabin either.

THE dairy barn is your next point of interest. Pictures would tell the story of this model structure better than words, but pictures cannot portray the enthusiasm of the students who have work here. There is one young man in particular given charge of the books that tell each cow's yield—percentages of butter fat and so on—who would be a prize for any model dairy to get. Every student in the University, you recall, does some form of work by way of pay; tuition, if you please, and snobbishness toward those who toil is thus unknown; the hardest worker gains the greatest respect.

"Idle, shiftless mountaineers . . . " Ahem!

Watch these lads in the big, airy concrete dairy, with space for 450 cows. The boys do the milking, and from a good cow they will draw twenty to twenty-five pounds of milk. No cheese is made here; but butter, in quantities, is churned, and this, too, is the work of the boys. That butter that melted to cream on your breakfast-rolls came from this dairy.

No, they want none of your praise! Instead they divert you to the cream-separators; to the automatic weighing-machine; then tell of the phases of model dairy work taught here in the fourth "prep" year.

Loiter along, and you meet other students, busy with the superintendent of the farm. Just 580 acres are in the tract of farm land used by these students, and ninety more have just recently been bought, to "open up." What do they raise? What it's well for mountain-folk to study: corn, timothy, clover and alfalfa, wheat and oats, barley and rye. Then, of course, they give attention to live stock and cattle. Come, let them show you the herds!

Once more you're in the auto and away to the Industrial Building. There's a queer open fireplace in an angle of wall, with deep, rounding bowl,—all the work of the boys. How you'd love to spend just one autumn evening around this fireplace in the gloaming listening to the college girls sing the old mountain songs, watching the red apples pop as they roast on the coals; hearkening to the mountain folk-tales, retold by the college men, and seeing the moon gild mountain peaks. Any wonder that the mountain boys, mountain girls, going home, send more and still more back to Alma Mater?

Around the building here you will find mortising-machines, "for cutting square holes," your guide explains. There are great metal joiners. There are other devices for varied woodwork, all of which have their appeal to such lads. Furniture, tables, chairs, desks, bedroom sets—all are made here; most is used by the college itself, the surplus is sold.

The mountain spirit is upon you, and you prefer walking with the "boys" to riding. You stroll past the big, open lumberyard, where practical lessons in economic timbering are given; through the sawmill and, again, to the dairy-barn. As you go, your guide tells how he's been at the college just two years now, and has been promoted to its office work. A visitor, growing interested in him, started him on his career; now he is making enough to "pay his way through," and he already looks ahead to the time when he can repay his good friend. This one lad has been an orphan since the age of four; he shows what may come of this mountain type.

After a bit you reach the post office, then a little store and then the main entry to the campus, flanked by great stone pillars topped by round balls from the rock here, all cut by the boys of 1915. Every male student, in fact, helped at cutting the stone.

On, between pillars, then, runs the main avenue of the college. Broad and smooth, it offers a lesson to road-builders in the mountains near. And up that road the uncouth freshmen come; down it the polished graduates pass into the world beyond.

No royal road to learning, the adage says. Well, perhaps not. But, to the mountain boy, the upland girl, this drive becomes a veritable royal road, one leading squarely to the cherished Mount Parnassus. A boulevard, each foot of which leads to a newer, richer sphere, the entering upon which is as new life to the sons and daughters of the "feudist" and the "moonshiner" and the one-room log huts.

Main Building and Central Campus, Lincoln Memorial University

· · ·

EDITORIAL NOTE. This delightful glimpse of a delightful institution is afforded us by an unsolicited manuscript from Mr. Koch, whose articles have appeared before in the Christian Herald. Knowing somewhat of Lincoln Memorial University and its splendid work, we welcomed the article and wish to add a word or two about the Institution.

Lincoln Memorial University grew out of a great interest which Abraham Lincoln expressed in the people of Cumberland Gap, Tennessee, to General O. O. Howard, who reports how almost the last words Mr. Lincoln spoke to him were of this people. "He wanted me to understand them and appreciate their worth." This direction given to General Howard's thoughts led at last to the founding of the University, and prayer had a large place in the initial work. This was in the very beginning of the present century.

The University owns about 700 acres of land, and quite a number of buildings devoted to the various needs of the institution. Its work is, of course, almost wholly for the mountain youth of that region, to teach them the best methods of farming and mechanical arts and provide them with normal and academic training, and, as needed, the higher branches. It began with 200 students and now enrolls nearly 700. The conduct of the work is a model of economy, and everything possible is done to place the facilities of the college within reach of the poorest. Things are reduced to such a fine point that $17.50 pays a student's tuition and room rent for three months and his board for one month. A fair proportion of this is paid by the service of the students. As President Hubbell says, "We don't like to give these girls an education. These mountain folk are full of pride, and they don't like to be given things. What we want to do is to show them how they themselves may get the education."

The president of Lincoln Memorial University is Dr. George A. Hubbell, Ph.D., and on the Board of Directors are men, eminent for their civic services, from many states.

THE spirit in which the Lincoln Memorial University, of Cumberland Gap, Tennessee, was founded, and the ideals which it has cherished, have had a decided influence upon the religious tendencies of the institution. Although non-sectarian, founded as it was by General O. O. Howard, a devout Christian gentleman, and Rev. A. A. Myers, an ardent missionary in the mountains of the South, the school has had from its very beginning a strong flow of religious devotion through all of its activities. Its faculty is Christian; its work is Christian; its student body prominently and enthusiastically Christian.

Students who have been at the school awhile are forced to return home many times because of the lack of funds, but the lessons of service and devotion learned at Lincoln Memorial implant within them the desire to carry back something worth while. Thus, it not infrequently happens that these students become leaders in their home communities. Perhaps the greatest good that the Lincoln Memorial University is doing in a moral and religious way is this training of the students who go as entering wedges into communities which have a tendency to resist outside benevolent influences.

With Christian ideals permeating every department of work, with Christian teachers whose hearts are in the task of educating the boys and girls in this neglected region and with a strong, virile, earnest, Christian student body, the institution is characterized by a harmonious, consecrated Christian life, and is marvelously effective in shaping and directing the destinies of a splendid, hopeful and resourceful people.

Whether a college in which the young man pays his own way, or one in which his father pays it for him, turns out the best leaders of men, is a question. It is no question, however, that institutions of the former character, of which there are all too few in this country, do not turn out failures. They produce stalwart characters both in men and women, and are one of the greatest assets of the nation. Those who devote their lives to carrying on the work of Lincoln Memorial University and similar educational institutions are benefactors of their country, and deserve well of their fellow men. Just now the faculty and the Board of Directors are pushing a hopeful campaign for an endowment fund of $1,000,000 for the development and maintenance of Lincoln Memorial. This fund will be paid-up capital stock which will yield dividends in young lives equipped for leadership. We often are asked for advice as to good investments. Here is one that may not be questioned.

◆

WE cannot look into the mind of any one and unerringly see the motive which impels him to action. He knows his motive, and the overruling mind of the universe knows the motive that underlies every act.

The wrong judgment of people does more harm, causes more suffering, than anything else in the world except saloons.

It is like scattering small, feathery seed in a cyclone-wind. When the fury has lulled, can you go over the storm track and gather up the seed? Can you give back the good name you have destroyed or tarnished? Would you do it if you could? M. C. K. M.

The Wicked John Goode

An Autobiography Transcribed by
HORACE WINTHROP SCANDLIN

CHAPTER XXII

THE LAST LIMIT REACHED

AND so with the best and truest intentions in the world, with the positive belief that I was safe, I left the Mission. Many a man with position, ability and education makes moves as disastrous as this one of mine. But in all such cases they are thought of as merely "mistaken judgment." In my case and in cases of others of my kind the verdict is "wilful backsliding."

I got a job in the Oceanic Hotel at Coney Island, about the worst place in the whole world for me to go. I see it now and I saw it then, just after it was too late. About all I saw was drink. About all I heard was "the ponies." I was a porter and general utility man. The pay was a dollar and a half a day and my bed. The season was just starting. The sporting, drinking and gambling part of the public had been shut in the city all winter. They hailed the opening of the beaches and the tracks with delight. For a month I stood my ground solidly. I felt justified in the move I'd made. Jane was delighted at my will power and strength. I didn't waver a bit—had not the slightest desire for drink or poolroom. Things went smoothly and well. If I had been aware of any temptation I'd a beat it away. I feel sure of this as I look back at it now.

But things couldn't go like that long. The environment was wrong and the good influence of the Mission and the men there was lacking. I was relying on my own strength, and I hadn't enough to hold me.

I fell; that's all. I didn't do it deliberately. The first thing I knew I'd been in Paddy Shea's poolroom—placed a bet—lost—and had a drink. The old life had me. It was all over! My system was on fire and I couldn't put it out. I went to the bottom—way, way down into the slime and filth of sin and shame. While it lasted I gloried in it. That must have been so, else I'd never gone so far.

You know what Jane suffered and what it cost her.

I stole all she had saved of the money I'd sent her. I hocked her insurance papers and all else she had on which "Uncle" would advance anything. It all went—every single pawnable thing! I'd go up there drunk with a flask in my pocket and go to bed, where I'd stay till the flask was empty and the drink gone.

I'd been fired from my job at the Oceanic and had got one as a dishwasher at the English Kitchen on the Brighton Pike at a dollar a day. Each night I drew fifty cents against my wage. That gave me a quarter for my bed and a quarter for booze.

Day after day this went on and August came around. It was about the tenth of the month, I think, that I went up to see Jane. I was beastly wild and drunk from the effects of an unusually hard debauch. I staggered up the steps and into the house. I went up to her room. There she lay!

Her teeth were chattering! Her arms lay helpless at her sides! She didn't know me! She was trying to speak but couldn't! The neighbors were about! All was excitement! For a wonder I came partially to my senses. I telephoned and finally an ambulance came from Seney Hospital and the brave little woman was taken away, desperately ill from a stroke.

As soon as she was gone the drunken rage returned and I broke loose more violently than ever before in my life. I ransacked the place, smashing things to bits. I found five dollars I'd missed before and stole that. As I was about

Continued on page 49

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

The World Will Know Why

BETWEEN the battle fronts the American President has set up a mighty question-mark. And the weary armies wonder. Above the tumult of warring hosts rings the inquiry, "Why?" And the people of shattered Europe hear it echo in their hearts. The neutral nations, one by one, approve the appeal for a statement of terms. Into the hate-inflamed, greed-distorted, power-obsessed, prejudice-blinded minds of contending rulers and leaders this question is forcing its way and demanding answer. The whole world is coming to realize that the purpose of the American proposal is right, that its motives are impartial, and that it can mean neither more nor less than universal good.

The resentment which confuses much of the comment on President Wilson's note is due largely to the searching nature of his inquiry. In asking that all the belligerents come forward with clear statements of their various purposes in the war and definite terms upon which they will accept peace, he has probed to the quick of the sore. Such statement of terms involves the passing of secret understandings and star-chamber treaties between nations and the coming of open diplomacy. It is by hidden understandings and alliances that the world has been plunged into this war. It is in open treaties, known to and approved by all the world, that permanent world peace may find solid and secure basis. If this is to be the last great war brought on by secret diplomacy and maintained by high-sounding generalities, then the permanent peace to follow must be founded on open dealings and clearly defined conditions. If President Wilson's efforts shall eventually result in this, he will have achieved the greatest world service of his age.

That there is settled enmity between the peoples of the warring countries is not believable. That the men in the trenches demand a war of extermination is unthinkable. But that there has been for years a growing distrust on all sides cannot be doubted; and the cause of this distrust was clearly stated by no less an authority than Lloyd George himself when, in 1908, he said that Britain's policy of "two-standard naval power" and the constant threats of the British press against Germany were causing distrust and fear between the two peoples, while increasing armament was meeting increasing armament. What a pity that Lloyd George today does not realize that this continued to be true until it brought on the war, and that the same spirit still continues as the chief obstacle to peace! *

The American note asks nothing that sincere statesmen can refuse. Certainly it contains nothing at which honesty can take offense. The neutral world, and the warring peoples themselves, have a right to know what the war is about. Generalities, by which real motives are concealed, will no longer avail. In this age the whole world is one community, a great war is a world affair, and the world is demanding to know why this war began and why it goes on. It demands that the hidden motives be brought to the surface or abandoned, and that terms and conditions which will bear world scrutiny be presented. This demand cannot successfully be misinterpreted for long. It is too clear, too reasonable, too just, too full of hope for all, to be long denied. The only answer that any belligerent nation can make is in its consent to conference and a frank, clear statement of its terms of peace.

The Revival Outlook for 1917

IN many parts of the United States there is "a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees" — the moving of the Spirit that betokens a season of widespread revival. East and West, North and South, the churches feel a thrill of expectation. There is promise that the saddest Christmas the world has ever known may be followed by a great spiritual quickening, which will dispel the clouds of depression and bring great multitudes into the light and joy of the Gospel.

More than ever the world needs Jesus now. It needs him as Saviour, Guide and King. Sick of war and sin and wordliness, it is turning toward him for pardon and comfort and consolation. Never has the church had so great an opportunity to win the people as today. May its ministers be given grace to see it, and the courage to grasp it.

America is fortunate in the fact that the churches and the evangelists now work together in better accord than formerly. Men of a high order of spiritual efficiency, like Biederwolf, Torrey, Chapman, Taylor, Oliver, Scoville, Lyon, Bromley, and a host of others find welcome in pulpits everywhere. The old-time evangelistic fire is not dead; the old yet ever new Gospel is still potent to draw men to the cross where they may find forgiveness.

Evangelist Sunday, in his approaching campaign in New York, which opens in April, will have some 400 churches in harmonious cooperation with his efforts. Soon the battle against sin will open along the whole line—the front reaching out through many states and rivaling in extent that of the European armies. The Christian Herald will devote special attention to the coming campaign for souls throughout the land, and will record its progress at all points. The prayers of our readers are invited that the efforts of the evangelists may be greatly blessed in their many fields of labor.

A Mighty Echo

SWITZERLAND is a land of echoes. There are certain places in the valleys and along the borders of the lakes where the human voice, fully uttered, comes back with amazing strength and clearness. It is as though the hidden voices of the hills needed only to be awakened by some sympathetic traveler who understood their language. Then, as if by magic, the silences become vocal, and speak to him from many points in rapid succession.

When President Wilson spoke the clear message of truth in his note to the warring nations, he reached farther than he could have reckoned. Across oceans and armies and battlefields, the voice of America sped to the heart of Europe. There were rumblings and grumblings, and then from little, peaceful, neutral Switzerland came the first clear echo, sounding loud and distinct above the discordance. It was as splendid as unexpected. The land of freedom, of William Tell, the one brave little hill-girt republic, sent back a mighty echo across half the world, approving, repeating, emphasizing the peace note of the great republic. Never since time began had the mountain silences been broken by sounds so welcome and so gladdening to the hearts of men.

And the echo will not cease with Switzerland. One by one the neutrals are repeating it. It comes booming down from the icy crags and fjords of Norway, from the lakes and hills of Sweden and Denmark, the canals of Holland, and the distant slopes of sunny Spain. And as the echoes multiply, they will be joined by the slower, heavier, deeper notes of the people of England, France and Germany, of Italy and Austria, and even of the far-off millions of Russia; for all at heart desire peace. Jarring and discord there may be for a space, as divided counsels in some lands may halt it; but by and by the clear peace note will arise in world-wide unison from everywhere. Little Switzerland sounded the key when, like a prophet on her mountain-tops, she sent forth the first note of the mighty echo that in its full diapason will be heard throughout the world, the small and the great in unison, as a prelude to the dawn of peace.

A Time for Thrift

IN the midst of the present abnormal prosperity, let us not forget to give a thought to good old-fashioned thrift. The present condition cannot always last. Against whatever may ensue there can be no material preparedness more sensible and more secure than savings retained out of the passing abundance.

Political economists are divided in opinion as to what will result to our prosperity at the end of the war. But there is no division upon the fact that eventually prices must fall, wages be reduced and many now steadily at work thrown out of employment.

The first blow will fall upon those working in factories making war supplies. Not only must the demand for their product cease, but most of these workers are poorly organized, or not organized at all. Thousands on thousands of these will find themselves in a helpless condition. And it is a deplorable fact that a great majority of these war-supply workers, particularly those in the munitions plants, who have been receiving wages they never before dreamed of, have been most prodigal in their mode of living.

The prodigality is not confined to the munition makers. Tens of thousands of wage-earners, in all kinds of employment, who used to walk to their work and carry their dinners, suddenly became spendthrifts, demanding delicacies on their tables, wearing the smartest of clothes, patronizing costly amusements and many even supporting automobiles.

It is by no means to be denied that the wage-workers are at all times entitled to the best living they can afford. But, in view of the reckoning to come, can they afford to waste money on needless luxuries?

There are indications on all sides that business men and professional men, by the hundreds and thousands, are living up to their increased incomes, or beyond them.

High prices, of course, require increased expenditures. But the high prices are no reason for, but good reason against, expenditure that is needless.

Indeed, our general extravagance as a whole people is probably the chief cause of the soaring of all prices. The reason for high prices in Europe is well understood. Millions of men have been transferred from the producing to the consuming class, coincident with enormous waste and an extraordinary demand for death-dealing supplies. But the cause of increased prices with us is not so easily recognized. Men rashly assert that this cause lies in our enormous exports. But the figures show that the increase in our exports is not out of proportion to the increase in our internal trade. Some eminent authorities in economics maintain that our increase in prices is purely fictitious and in name only, being the result of our surplus of gold—a shrinkage of the standard of measurement. But why blindly ignore the sound old law of supply and demand, as the regulator of prices? It has held good always and it holds good today. Our high prices are probably due to our own people's extravagant waste of their suddenly-acquired competence, more than to any other single cause.

Perhaps no people, in all the history of the world, were ever so prosperous as our people are now. Never before, anywhere, did wages rise so rapidly, extensively and substantially as here and now. But the abnormality in this prosperity is built upon a condition that cannot last. Already munition orders are being withdrawn from us. The recent refusal of our bankers to float British and French treasury certificates was the beginning of the end of our business in war supplies.

In the readjustment of our industrial conditions the munition makers will not be the only sufferers. According to the law of economics, every man, no matter what class of work he may perform, sooner or later must accommodate himself to the new conditions.

And when the abnormal part of our prosperity is gone, what will it have profited us? Will the millions of our people, to whom it has seemed a blessing, have saved anything out of it? Will we be provided with better homes and better spirit? Will we have made permanent provision for more comfort, more education and more real enjoyment? Will we have a more hopeful, more progressive manhood and womanhood? Or, else, shall our legacy be fixed habits of extravagance, indulgence and waste?

A large proportion of people have earnings so small that saving may seem impossible. But that is no reason for being unthrifty; on the contrary, it is reason for making the best and most of the little they have for their health, advancement, comfort and true happiness.

A few dollars in a home, or a savings-bank, or any other safe investment, are as good seed as ever was sown. Out of it grow confidence, quickened energies, firmer courage, more stalwart thought and hope, more orderly citizenship, better education for the children and the independence and self-respect that lift aimless, hopeless drudges up to the true manhood and womanhood that aspire, strive and achieve.

Light on Prophecy

WE are living in a time of prophetic fulfilment, though just how far that fulfilment may reach no man knows. It is known to God alone what he purposes to bring out of this world-war which the nations have brought upon themselves. Events may be at hand for which Christian people have been preparing for twenty centuries. Come when they may, our duty is to be spiritually prepared.

In the difficult field of prophetic exposition, there is probably no one this side the Atlantic who occupies so high a position as Dr. James M. Gray, dean of the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago. His articles in these pages during the past year have been widely read and universally appreciated. His further series of contributions on "The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy," which will appear in the Christian Herald, are certain of a still larger audience. To assure the greatest spiritual benefit to the greatest number, we would suggest to all who are interested in the subject of prophetic fulfilment to spread the news of the coming series among their acquaintance who would be benefited by reading them, that they may secure copies for themselves as they appear. This is the highest kind of missionary work, and all should have a share in it.

---

* See page 47

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D.D.

Scripture Text Halts Robbers

A YOUNG girl who is employed in Denver, Colo., lives west of Lincoln Park, and it was her custom to go home after work through the park, as it saved a walk of two blocks. As the dark comes on before business houses close, she has for several weeks gone the longer journey around. The other night she was in a hurry and plucked up courage enough to go through the park. Being of a religious turn of mind, she kept repeating to herself for comfort this part of the ninety-first Psalm: "He shall cover thee with his feathers, and under his wings shalt thou trust." As she approached some bushes near the road two robbers jumped forward with guns in their hands, which they pointed at her. "He shall cover me with his feathers," she shouted at the top of her voice at the men. The men hesitated a moment, and then one of them grabbed his pal by the arm, and said, "Come on, Jake, leave her alone," and they did so very suddenly, for they took to their heels and were lost in the darkness. The girl had pretty good physical courage or she would not have been able to whisper her text, much less shout it out. It is not likely that the robbers were scared away so much out of reverence for the Scripture or fear of the Almighty, as by the woman's yell, which might summon a policeman. It is better for a girl to walk around two blocks than go through a dark park at night in our cities nowadays. The text the young girl used as a protection against danger reminds us of the Scripture text Christ used in his fight against Satan, and suggests the Scripture as a powerful weapon in the spiritual warfare thus commended by the apostle: "And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." (Eph. 6 : 17.)

Culebra Island's Ant-Nests

THE ant-nests of tropical climates are a most wonderful object lesson. They vary in their construction from the simple one made of loose material to the house of elaborate construction. The insects sometimes build their home in the ground under a rock, sometimes weave a hanging nest, sometimes bore into a stump and cut it into tunnels, sometimes make their house with leaves glued together. Certain species make an underground nest which looks like a little grassy mound, perforated with innumerable passages, and sometimes a foot or more in height. To the naturalist the nests of the flying ants of Culebra Island, in the West Indies, like those of other tropical countries, speak wonders that would fill a volume. The nest is a village with streets laid out; with rooms nicely furnished; with work appropriate for each one, even to the undertaker, who gathers up and buries the dead; with a queen, and the short-lived males, and those who do the work; with an orderly government and happy community; with grain and other food laid up in store, and "cows" which secrete a substance like milk. Some ants are soldiers, drilled to fight hostile tribes, and to defend themselves, and capture slaves, whom they train to work. The nest of the Culebra Island ant is a city rather than a village. It is likely that it contains as many inhabitants as Chicago and Philadelphia together. Bees and other flying insects, which carry the fertilizing pollen from one plant to another, have played an important part in the evolution of the floral realm. But ants, which belong to the same order as the bee, have a different effect on flowers. They take the honey and give back no compensation. God has made many plants with protections against ants. Those of the West Indies not only take the honey from the bloom, but often the fruit itself. These flying ants of Culebra Island often get into the fruit trees by the millions, and damage, and sometimes destroy the crop. In the temporal and spiritual world it might be well to take heed to the lessons, taught by the ant's nest, of intelligence, of providence, of care for the young, of an orderly and happy community life, and above all of indomitable industry. The last one is emphasized in these words: "Go to the ant, thou sluggard; consider her ways, and be wise." (Prov. 6 : 6.)

To Study African Monkeys

PROFESSOR R. L. GARNER sailed on the French liner Chicago the other day on his way to West Africa, where he expects to remain a year or two collecting specimens of gorillas and chimpanzees for the Smithsonian Institution. He said that gorillas when caught up to the age of two years could be made as docile as any household pet by kindness and firmness. C. W. Aschemaeier of Washington accompanied Professor Garner, and the other members of the expedition, A. M. Collins of Philadelphia, and Professor C. W. Furlong of Boston, will sail later. Professor Garner says a chimpanzee can be taught to speak several words. Yes, but he cannot reason abstractly nor worship God. There will ever be the missing link between the monkey and man. The monkey has no soul; man has one, for God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." (Gen. 2 : 7.)

Asked to be Electrocuted

CHARLES KUMROW, aged twenty, who killed a tugboat captain in Buffalo, and Stanley J. Millstein, only nineteen, who murdered a policeman in Utica, amazed Warden Moyer of Sing Sing Prison, New York, by asking that they be put to death on Tuesday, December 19, instead of on Friday, the 22d, so that their parents and other relatives might not be saddened more than was necessary on Christmas Day. In accordance with the request, they were electrocuted early on the morning of the 19th. The request showed that there was something good left in the boys. If they had been as anxious about the feelings of their parents and friends before their crime as they were after their conviction, there would not have been the murders and the punishment. The young boys and girls who go out to lives of vice and crime have miseries untold, but they are nothing to the unutterable sorrow that parents and the rest of the family feel at their wrongdoings and disgrace. The parental sorrow the boys desired to assuage is thus expressed by a father over the untimely death of a wayward boy: "O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!" (II Sam. 18 : 33.)

France Against Alcohol

A BILL was introduced into the Chamber of Deputies in Paris the other day by the cabinet to confer on the government larger powers according to a plan outlined by Premier Briand. Mr. Briand's statement as reported in the official journal was: "The government will ask you to give it the power to solve by decrees all questions of interest in regard to the nation's defense which the laws are too slow to regulate. A particularly grave question which can only be regulated in war time, the solution of which involves the life of the country and its salvation, is that of total abstinence from the consumption of alcohol." The term alcohol as used in France refers to strong drink with a high percentage of alcohol, and does not include wine or beer. The premier's remarks demanding this authority for prohibition were greeted with loud applause from many of the benches. Deputy Mayeras inquired, "In the army also?" "Yes, in the entire country," the premier answered. Alfred Capus, editor of the Figaro, writes: "It is not possible to contest the proposed reforms of Premier Briand, especially that concerning alcohol, which the government has engaged to carry out in the shortest possible time." This is strong language the premier uses that the prohibition of strong drink at once is necessary to the life and salvation of the nation. If the premier's plea shall be granted, a long step will have been taken toward national prohibition. The demand of the premier is from the conviction that "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever deceived thereby is not wise." (Prov. 20 : 1.)

Seven Wonders of the World

THE Buffalo News says there are three sets of wonders of the world: "The wonders of the ancient world were the pyramids of Egypt, Pharos of Egypt, Hanging Gardens of Babylon, temple of Diana at Ephesus, statue of Jupiter by Phidias, mausoleum of Artemisia and Colossus of Rhodes. The seven wonders of the middle ages were the Coliseum of Rome, Catacombs of Alexandria, Great Wall of China, Stonehenge, Leaning Tower of Pisa, Porcelain Tower of Nanking, and Mosque of St. Sophia of Constantinople. The seven natural wonders of the new world are Niagara Falls, Mammoth Cave, Grand Canyons of Colorado River, giant trees of California, Yellowstone Park, Yosemite Valley, and Natural Bridge of Virginia." As we behold God's wonders in creation, in his providence, and in the provisions of redeeming grace, our hearts could fittingly take up these words: "I would seek unto God, . . . which doth great things and unsearchable, marvelous things without number." (Job 5 : 8, 9.)

$3,000,000 for Girls' Home

MONEY is made in this country in such prodigious quantities, and so generally, and so quietly, and often is given to good causes so bountifully, that the announcement that $3,000,000 has just been left to found a Girls' Home claims only an inch of space by measurement in a cosmopolitan daily newspaper, while the theater has columns and the markets and games have pages in the same paper. This was the information given. More than $3,000,000 was left for the founding of a home in Detroit, Mich., for young girls by Elizabeth M. Palmer, formerly of Great Neck, Long Island. The will stated that if the trustees could not carry out this work, it should be left to the Circuit Court of Wayne County, Mich. The family had been amply provided for. It is a beautiful thing to take care of one poor fatherless, motherless girl, to feed, clothe and fit her for duty and happiness. What of the beauty and glory of taking care of hundreds and hundreds of homeless, helpless girls, of housing, clothing, warming, feeding, educating and preparing them for positions of usefulness, honor and happiness, for generations to come? It would have been joyful for the benefactor to have built the home while she was alive and seen the grateful, happy faces, and felt the thrill of divine joy as she saw the girls coming up into a beautiful young womanhood. But as it was, it was a monumental and wisely planned charity. Rich people who will not help the poor will be pitiable paupers themselves in the next world. We do not have to have three millions to help the poor; who may have a claim on us. What opportunities the new year will offer to unselfishness, and to sweet charities! This is the charge to the rich which Paul gave through Timothy; "That they do good, that they be rich in good works." (I Tim. 6 : 18, 19.)

The Tribute

FLOWERS and tears. She was a widow of France. Robed in the deepest mourning she had sought out in the great ever-growing military cemetery the mound of earth that covered her Jean. She knelt, arranging with trembling fingers a small bunch of white flowers which should testify to Jean of her remembrance. But ere the flowers were fully placed there came the muffled tread of men bearing another soldier to his place among the dead. An English chaplain headed the silent march. Rising shyly, the little French woman followed the somber procession. Kneeling reverently during the brief service, she waited. The solemn "dust to dust, ashes to ashes" had been spoken. The bearers turned away. The little woman rushed forward, dropped into the grave her white flowers, and returned, empty-handed but with a heart overflowing, to kneel again beside her grave. God's word is full of promises to those who mourn; "The Lord shall be thine everlasting light and the days of thy mourning shall be ended." (Isa. 60 : 20.)

The Potter and the Wheel

A SERMON BY REV. JOSEPH W. KEMP[*]

TEXTS—Jer. 18 : 4. "And the vessel that he made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter; so he made it again another vessel." Isa. 64 : 8. "We are the clay, and thou our potter; and we all are the work of thy hand." Rom. 9 : 20, 21. "Nay but, O man, who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, Why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter power over the clay, of the same lump to make one vessel unto honor, and another unto dishonor?"

POTTERY is an art that has undergone very little change in the course of the centuries. Things are pretty much the same today as they were in Jeremiah's day, as you may see if you visit the potteries of Staffordshire in England, or the potters' villages of India, where the Hindus are incessantly at work on the thousands upon thousands of vessels which, on account of the ceremonial laws of their faith, are used but once and are then ceremonially unclean and abandoned. It is a figure frequently used in the Scriptures, by writers who are characterized by a strength of utterance almost bordering on severity. Isaiah uses it, so does Jeremiah. It is used also by Zechariah, and among the New Testament writers we find Paul making mention of it. Rightly understood, there is a blending of tears with the severity, and mercy is mixed with judgment.

Let us visit the potter's house. What do we see there and what lessons are to be learned? We see there the potter, who, with a truly marvelous dexterity, manipulates the clay upon the wheels. We next see the wheels upon which the worker works out some fine cunning design. Last of all, there is the clay, the material with which the potter works out his purpose. Let us study for a while this parable of the potter and his wheel.

THE Potter—whom does he represent but God? And the attribute which stands out prominent in the figure is assuredly his divine sovereignty. I know it is not fashionable to speak of God's sovereignty in days when we have such a slim hold upon the great doctrines which our fathers held so tenaciously; but there it is. It comes out again and again. "O house of Israel, cannot I do with you as this potter?" "Behold, as the clay in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel." Then, again, think of that classic passage in Paul's letter to the Romans: "Who art thou that repliest against God? Shall the thing formed say to him that formed it, why hast thou made me thus? Hath not the potter right over the clay?" Here, surely, is sovereignty if anywhere. It is the right of the Creator over the things which he creates. Insistence upon this is necessary, since a refined sort of atheism has crept in which would politely bow God out of life. We have not to fear now the gross, vulgar and blasphemous atheism of the Ingersoll-Bradlaugh type that gave God, if he existed, five minutes to strike the challenger dead—as though the infinite patience of the Eternal God could be exhausted in five minutes. No, that is not the thing we have to combat today. It is the spirit of independence which, by its actions, shows its desire to get on without God.

This is a spirit we all know something about. It plans for itself. It acts upon its own impulses and desires. It makes its own program, without regard to him who is Lord over all. Such a line of conduct is perilous. A friend of mine, for many years leader of a most blessed evangelistic movement in the southeast of London, has put it on record that he knew a man in London who, in his early years, was a devoted servant of Jesus Christ, but became exceedingly prosperous in business and allowed his prosperity to come between his soul and God. He prided himself on being the architect of his own fortune; his success was phenomenal. Everything he touched seemed to turn to gold. He was accumulating a great fortune and built himself a splendid mansion in the suburbs and went there to live. Without any warning, he was seized by what proved to be a fatal illness. He telegraphed from that sick-room to a friend, who, on receiving the news, hastened to that home of luxury. As he entered the sick-room, that shrewd man of business said to him: "Oh, sir, I find that I have been putting the wrong world first." Amid the darkness and shadows of that fatal illness he found out the great mistake of his life. "The architect of his own fortune"—yes, that phrase indicated his fatal mistake. He took the place of the potter, while he was the clay, and he learned his sad lesson too late.

LET it be remembered that our Lord exercises his sovereignty according to the principles of love. A recognition of that fact would do much to suck the bitterness out of us, and take away the tendency we have to murmur when the great Potter is exercising his own will. In every heart there lurks the tendency to hostility to the will of God. Alas! how little we trust Him! How pronounced is our rebellion! We have interpreted his acts as those of a despot, working arbitrarily and capriciously for his own ends, instead of owning the hand at the wheel as the hand of love.

Into the home of a very dear friend of mine was born a deformed child. The mother's joy was immediately turned into grief, and the sadness of the parents deepened into bitterness and rebellion. Evil intentions toward the child were contemplated, but ultimately abandoned through the wise, prayerful and faithful intervention of a godly pastor, who pointed out to the grief-stricken father and mother that the child had a ministry, and when that was fulfilled, the Lord would take it to himself. Under the influence of the Spirit of God, those hearts, which had been so hostile to the will of the Lord, were made submissive, and they learned that the Potter's name is Love. We can submit to love. He governs the wheels as well as the clay. Oh, how those hands have pressed! And if by the pressing he break, it is but to make; and if he crush, it is but to create.

The great purpose which this sovereign love has in view is the working out of his plan. As you stand and watch the action of the potter, with eye and hand upon the wheel, what do you think he is attempting to do? "Behold, he wrought his work on the wheels." He has the thought in his mind, and he is attempting to transfer that thought to the clay by means of the wheels.

William Morley Punshon, one of the most brilliant Methodist preachers of the nineteenth century, was visiting a French pottery in company with a lady. The potter was engaged on a piece of beautiful work of such wonderful design that the lady was under the impression that there must be somewhere, within range of vision, some copy from which he was working. At last Dr. Punshon said to the potter: "The lady wants to know where your pattern is." The man raised his hand and put it for a moment on the top of his head. The pattern was in his mind, and as his hands rest on the clay he translates into it the thought of his own heart. I may not know what the Divine Potter means, but he knows, and faith rests there. Paul declares, "We are his workmanship"—his poem—his work of art. Have we caught the divine intention? Under the touch of his fingers we are to be conformed to the image of his Son.

"And the vessel which he made of clay was marred in the hands of the potter." Yes, but if the work has been marred, the design has not. The clay in the hand of the potter may not have been sufficiently tempered and prepared, and therefore it refuses to respond to the touch of the potter's fingers. "Look," said a potter to a friend who was watching him at work; "I will thrust a bit of untempered clay into this prepared lump and I want you to watch the result." As the clay was flung upon the wheel, the friend watched its action under the potter's hand. The vessel, like a living thing, seemed to be growing into shape and beauty when, without a moment's warning, it bulged and became a shapeless heap. "I knew it," said the potter; "that bit of unprepared clay did it." How often there has been some undisciplined thing in our lives that has hindered the working out of the Lord's plan in us, and instead of being "vessels unto honor, sanctified and meet for the Master's use," we are "vessels wherein is no pleasure." Have we been marred? Let us put ourselves into the hands of the Master Potter to be "made again."

"In thy strong hands I lay me down,
  So shall the work be done;
For who can work so wondrously
  As the Almighty One?
Work on, then, Lord, till on my soul
  Eternal light shall break,
And, in thy likeness perfected,
  I, satisfied, shall wake."

WE come next to consider the Wheels. These are what Browning has termed

"this dance
Of plastic circumstance;
. . . . .
Machinery just meant
To give thy soul its bent."

The potter takes the lump of clay and places himself near two wheels, which are connected in such a way that, by revolving one with his foot, he sends another revolving with great rapidity. On the upper wheel, the beautiful productions of his art are being carried out. Let me repeat it: the potter controls the wheels, and the wheels are—what? To quote the words of John Watson: "As for the innumerable and inexplicable circumstances of life, they are simply the whirling wheel on which the clay is changed and shaped till the Potter's design is finally accomplished." It takes a long time for some of us to understand the function of our perplexing and trying circumstances. They are rough and hard, but "most skilful and adaptable machinery," by which God changes a lump of clay into a vessel fit for the finest service. I do not know how otherwise we are going to reconcile the varying and conflicting circumstances of life than by a recognition that, through all, he is working out his great purpose for us. It may be strange schooling, and the lessons hard and bitter to learn. Our deep graves, disappointed hopes, the thwarting of cherished plans; our sicknesses, sorrows, sadnesses, adversities, and misfortunes alike can have but one meaning in the light of our text. God is seeking to conform us to the pattern. Frances Ridley Havergal has thus put it:—

  "The ills we see,
The mysteries of Providence deep and long,
The dark enigmas of permitted wrong,
  Have all one key:
This strange, sad world is but our Father's school;
All chance and change his love shall grandly overrule."

Thus all our circumstances assist us in the development of the Christlike character. It does not need that our circumstances should alter, but only that our attitude to these circumstances should alter. Cast your souls into God's hands, and all that is around you of disasters, difficulties, and perplexities will undergo transformation.

THE clay is that out of which the potter molds his results, whether these be marred in his hand or nobly finished. It is the thing with which the potter can accomplish his purpose. It is plastic and easily molded. Whatever be the designs of the potter, they are all evolved from one and the same source. Differences there are of rank, position, wealth, knowledge and the like, but these are superficial; the truth is that, no matter how men differ in outward marks, they are at the root of one common stock. "God hath made of one blood all nations of men." "Great men and little," wrote the illustrious Pascal, "have the same accidents, the same tempers, the same passions; but one is on the felloe of the wheel, the other near the axle, and so less agitated by the same revolutions." Till the end of time the lives of men will differ, not because of any difference in the common lump of clay, but because of their obedience or disobedience to the will of God. The irresponsive clay has no power to resist, or to put off the hand that touches it, but you and I have. The clay has no will, but you and I have. It has no power of choice, but you and I can choose; and the tragedy of the situation is that we can refuse to allow him to go on with his work of conforming us to the image of his Son. Let us gladly put ourselves at his disposal, and the touch of those hands "nailed to the wood of shame on our behalf" will make of us a joy and a thing of beauty forever.

---

[*] Pastor, Calvary Baptist Church, New York.

CONSIDERATION

By Ralph M. Thompson

BECAUSE he was a friend in need
  To earth's down-trodden brotherhood;
Because he recognized no creed
  In his attempt to do some good;
Because his every thought and word
  And act disclosed to all his clan
That he, by noble motives stirred,
  Was one who loved his fellow man—
God would not let pain rack his breast
  When his soul struggled to be free,
But, folding his worn hands in rest,
  He sent death for him quietly.

FOR EVERY DAY
IN THE
YEAR

DAILY MEDITATION

Revs.
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
C. C. Albertson, D.D.
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Like the Waves

SUNDAY, January 14. Isa. 48 : 18. "O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments! Then had thy . . . righteousness been as the waves of the sea." So that is what our rectitude is to be like: it is to possess an irresistible energy which will make it like the waves of the sea. I am writing these words in mid-Atlantic, and I have just been watching one gigantic wave which has hurled itself against our boat with terrific force and made it tremble from bow to stern. But we need not be a thousand miles away on the Atlantic to experience the power of the waves. We have watched the common breakers as they emptied their floods upon the shore, smashing up every impediment, and carrying every opposing thing before them as they raced along the beach. They toss heavy beams about like shuttlecocks, and they take up boulders and throw them hither and thither as a very little thing. And our righteousness is to be like that—tremendous and imperative.

But our righteousness is too often like a tiny runlet which has scarcely outlasted the drought. There are streamlets which just creep along in indolence as though at any moment they might lose themselves in the sands. A little child can turn them aside. Make a little channel with your foot, and the water takes the new course. You can lead them where you please; they have no power, no imperative trend, no uncompromising destiny. And the righteousness in some lives is just like these faint and easily diverted streams. It is a mere rill of loyalty, and anything and anybody can change its goings. An opposing difficulty arises, and the feeble conviction seeks an easier way. If Vanity Fair interposes, or the mysterious enticements of the Enchanted Ground, this anemic righteousness is entirely lost. It has no force, no inherent and unbribable energy: there is nothing imperative about it, nothing glorious and irresistible.

It is God's will that our righteousness should be like the waves of the sea. Think of our moral energy advancing against temptations with the power of an advancing tide! Think of our encountering moral obstacles and "impossibles" with the mighty strength of racing waves! And think of the cooperative strength of the righteousness of the Church of Christ attacking social evils with all the tremendous assault of a great sea! Too often we only tickle evils, we do not smash them! We flow lazily around them. We do not sweep them away!

"O that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments!" Then this mighty wave of power would have been ours. But this "hearkening" implies divine communion. It is the listening of reverence, it is the mood of reception. This sort of hearkening makes the soul hospitable to the divine, and the great God enters in. And it is the God within us who makes our righteousness like the waves of the sea. "I can do all things in Christ who strengtheneth me." With God within we are irresistible. J. H. J.

The Pattern in the Mount

MONDAY, January 15. Heb. 8 : 5. "For, See, saith he, that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount." These words take us back to the book of Exodus, in which is related the story of God's revelation to Moses respecting the religious and social life of the Hebrews. The third chapter, relating to the construction of the tabernacle, is most interesting, even though somewhat technical. It gives us God's ideal of a place of worship. The tabernacle was not large, and it was movable; but small and transient as it was, it was beautiful, which is a presumptive evidence of its divine origin. We sometimes make the temporary character of our work an excuse for inferior workmanship. That is not God's way. "Whatsoever God doeth, it shall be forever: nothing can be put to it, nor anything taken from it; and God doeth it that men should fear before him."

That tabernacle was a type of human life. He who planned it has a plan for us. The tabernacle was to be God's peculiar dwelling-place. So are our lives to be. "Ye are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." The perfect life existed in the mind of Jesus as truly as the perfect tabernacle in the mind of God. And Jesus lived it. The perfection of his life is unimpeachable. After eighteen and a half centuries God points still to that Perfect Life, that life so beautiful and so serene, and says, "See that thou make all things according to the pattern showed thee in the mount." The life of the Master is at once our classic and our model. It is likewise a type of our coming glory. "We shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." Nor should we think of this transfiguration as belonging to the future life alone. By his good grace we are to be like him now. The pattern in the mount is for this world through which we pass on our way to the other. C. C. A.

Followers as Children

TUESDAY, January 16. Eph. 5 : 1. "Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children." The admonitions which Scripture addresses to its readers are remarkable for the high and noble ends at which they aim. They all tend toward perfect purity of affections, and holiness. But they are also remarkable because of the motives which they inculcate for every good action. They place before us the highest and grandest examples. Not only the saints of God are held up to us as patterns of correct and virtuous living, but God himself and Jesus Christ are proposed as models for our conduct. It is as if we were to be incited not only in an abstract way by the sublime goal for which we are to strive, but also in a very concrete manner by the excellent company which we are to join.

The word that has been translated "followers" in our text really means "imitators." The apostle wants Christians to reflect God himself in their lives. In the original state the divine image adorned man. It was lost in consequence of the fall, but it is restored in us by divine grace, which not only absolves us from guilt but reclaims us from the wreck which sin has made of all our powers. Living under grace means living under an influence that makes men God-like, that conforms them to the image of the Son of God.

Another remarkable feature of the admonitions of Scripture is the tenderness with which they are ringing. In this text the apostle addresses the Ephesians as "dear children." How much love can a parent convey only by those two words, and what a strong impulse to obedience do the children receive from them! In this text God does not issue a peremptory demand in stern voice, but he puts his arms about us as it were and says: "You know how much I love you; now show that you love me by being like me." W. H. T. D.

For His Sake

WEDNESDAY, January 17. I John 2 : 12. "Your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake." Bishop Cranmer was saved from prison and death because he held up to the gaze of the judges the signet ring of King Henry VIII. Who shall lay anything to the charge of those who wear the ruby signet ring with the white stone setting and with the crimson signature of the King written thereon? Who is he that condemneth when Jesus' blood hath paid the price? God the Father, for his Son's sake, hath given us full and free pardon. If there are those who will not come to Christ for their own sakes, for husband's or wife's or children's sake, come for Jesus' sake, whose wounds, received on Calvary, plead for you, and whose prayers and intercessions are now before the throne for your redemption. Our Lord loved us so that he left the throne to find us; he endured the cross to win us, sent his Spirit to awaken us, made his angels ministering spirits to woo us to him. Such loving kindness should melt the hardest hearts and bring lost loved ones to the Father's arms.

Do we not often soliloquize: "He became poor for my sake; made himself of no reputation, became in fashion a man, for my sake; shall I not then suffer the loss of all things for his sake? Live for him who died for me? Love him with all my soul, might and strength?" E. W. C.

The Anointing of a King

THURSDAY, January 18. I Sam. 16 : 13. "Then Samuel took the horn of oil, and anointed him in the midst of his brethren; and the Spirit of the Lord came upon David from that day forward." An attractive story out of the ancient world. It is fresh and sweet, though the other records of that past are dim. It reminds us of the beautiful youth whom Jesus loved. There is something lovable always in David. The lad is anointed and then goes back to his sheep, the same boy, but with a new horizon. The roof of his life has lifted. Not many know the secret of the anointing, but David knows, and God knows.

John Milton knew he was anointed the poet of the Lord. Dante knew he was anointed to speak the mysteries of the world to come. Anointing is a thing of the Spirit. The circumstances do not so much matter. Abraham Lincoln had his anointing and his vision while he wore coarse garments and read his Bible by the light of the cabin fireplace. Nehemiah had his vision while cup-bearer to the king of Persia. Thereafter no tempter could turn him from his course. Jesus had his vision at the Jordan. Thenceforth he set his face steadfastly toward the Cross.

This is the anointing and this the vision the recognition of one's birthright and destiny and the high resolve to do the thing God wills. It is a great day in our lives when we awaken to life's true meaning, when we perceive that life is more than eating and drinking, more than dancing and music, more than building and weaving; that it is an appointment, a designation, a mission and a ministry. No one succeeds who does not see this; no one fails if he does see it and try to achieve it. The voice may be that of a prophet, preacher, teacher or parent, but the vision is of God. C. C. A.

The Shepherd Gives Shelter

FRIDAY, January 19. Ps. 4 : 8. "I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety." Sleep is here represented as occurring by human resolution. David proposes to do two things: 1. "I will lay me down." We all do that when the time for retiring has arrived. 2. "I will sleep." That is something which not all of us can do, at least not always. Luther in the prayerbook which he appended to his Small Catechism gives this direction: "Say your prayer; then go to sleep at once and in good cheer." Ah, if we could only do that! When the languor of weariness comes over us, and nature registers urgent calls for repose, what a boon it would be to have sleep at our beck and call!

Perhaps our method of going to sleep is wrong. David laid down "in peace," in peace with God through the Messiah, in peace with all men, because of his forgiving heart. He would not let the sun go down upon his wrath. A good conscience is the very best of pillows. Such a conscience only the God of mercy can give. When we merge the shortcomings of the day that is spent in Jesus' prayer for forgiveness, and refresh our soul again with the assurance that God accepts us as his children because of the atoning sacrifice of his Son, a great peace comes into our hearts, and with it rest. "He giveth his beloved sleep." And while we sleep in the peace of God, angel guards are around our bed, keeping watch and ward over our slumbers. The righteous sleep in safety even without bolts and bars on their doors; the Lord makes them dwell in safety. They have taken shelter in the arms of the Almighty; they take their rest under the eyes of the Shepherd of Israel, who neither slumbers nor sleeps. The Father has put his children to sleep. Blessed privilege that! W. H. T. D.

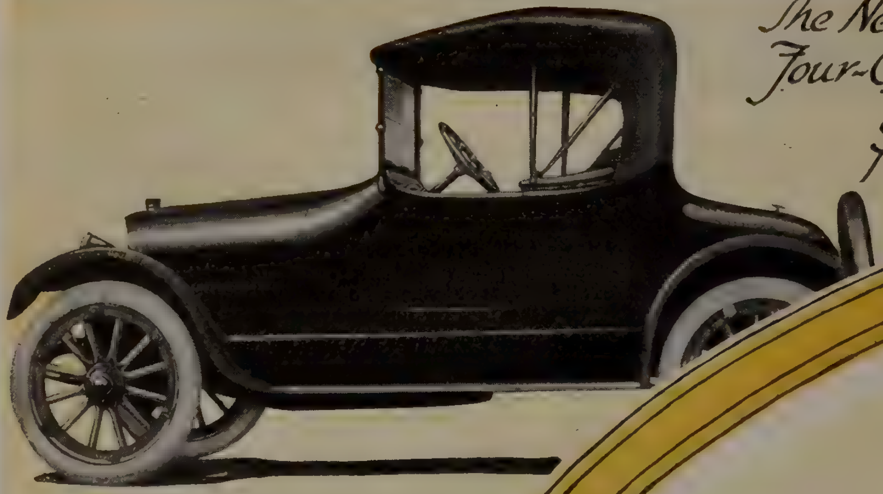
The Way Unto Life

SATURDAY, January 20. John 5 : 40. "And ye will not come to me that ye might have life." The battle of life is in the struggle to obey Almighty God, or to indulge the passions of sinful self. With Esau it was birthright or pottage; with Judas, silver or Saviour; with the great apostle, Saul or Paul. With all humanity today the great question is, soul or sense? It is an irrepressible conflict, for when you would do good, evil is present with you. It is an angel or a devil that will finally win supremacy in the soul of every man, where divinity or depravity will become enthroned forever. We are the architects in the building of our own being. The battle is not a game of chance, for the human will is ever uncoerced, the monarch of the soul's domain.

Mankind need not become derelicts or driftwood, aimlessly floating to doom; but we may be a loaded lifeboat, headed for the harbor. The umpire of the will decides for the supremacy of the passions or for purity; for glory and greatness, or for magnificence in ruins.

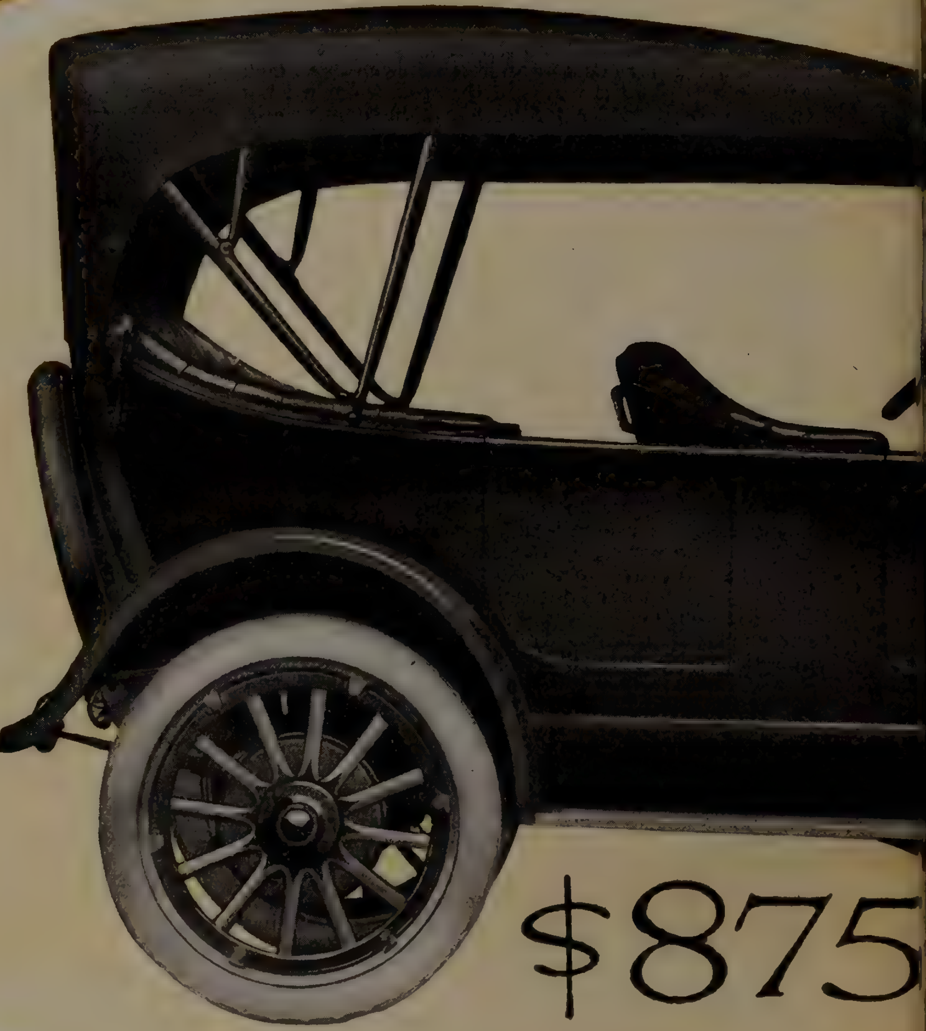
We cannot put the blame upon the shoulders of heredity, environment, or inherent appetite. The heavenly Father would not suffer his children to become the hopeless sport of devils, the helpless plaything of passion, without giving the power to become victors over all our foes. You have the key to the citadel, and must choose whom to admit, the devil or Christ. The divine Redeemer alone can so deliver you that you can shout victory over all evil, and realize that nothing shall separate you from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord.

E. W. C.



The New 3-Passenger Four-Cylinder Roadster $875 f.o.b. Lansing

THE GOLD
OF V



$875

In These Essentials—Long Life; Low Upkeep; Consistent Perform

WE REO FOLK make this assertion in the firm belief that it is one hundred per cent true;—that you can drive a four-cylinder Reo—world-famous as "Reo the Fifth"—longer, farther and for less cost of operation and upkeep than any other five-passenger car in the world.

THAT IS A BROAD STATEMENT—we fully appreciate how sweeping. And yet we have no hesitancy in signing the Reo name to it. And you know what the Reo word is worth.

WE BASE THAT ASSERTION on the experience of the seven seasons that this Reo model has been made in practically its present form, and on the statements of thousands of dealers who have sold, and tens of thousands of owners who have driven, this car.

DOES NOT THE VERY FACT that we have continued to make this model year after year that long time—just refining and improving details as our engineers or body designers found opportunity—

DOES NOT THAT FACT PROVE our sincerity and our great faith in this model?

JUST THINK BACK over those years and recall, if you can, the many, many new models that have come—and gone; the many "revolutionary" inventions that failed to revolutionize; and changes that failed to endure.

AND STILL, AND STILL REO THE FIFTH has retained in its original form, its perpetual supremacy—has enjoyed each succeeding season, an increased popularity—an almost hopeless over-demand.

WE ASK YOU as an experienced motorist, what are the prime essentials in an automobile?

ANSWER THAT out of the fullness of your long experience—for it is a fact that few "new" buyers select Reos. This car is most popular among the most experienced. These have learned one great fact—namely—

THAT FIRST COST IS NOTHING—it is a consideration of not even secondary importance.

THESE ARE THE ESSENTIALS, and we submit that, within reasonable limits, first cost should not be the deciding factor.

FOR OBVIOUSLY 'T WERE IMPOSSIBLE to put into a motor car that quality that is Reo—the materials and the workmanship and the liberal quantity of both—that guarantee Reo reliability and low upkeep cost and yet compete on a price basis.

"50 PER CENT OVERSIZE in all Vital Parts"—that well-known Reo standard, should cost 50 per cent more. As a matter of fact it does not cost that much more, nor do you pay 50 per cent more. Only about 15 per cent. Reos are sold on a small margin of profit per car.

SO SMALL, BY THE WAY, that it may be necessary at any moment to increase it—which we reserve the right to do without notice. Any Reo sold at this time is sold with the expressed understanding that the sale price will be the list price at time delivery is specified.

REO MOTOR
LANSING,

ANDARD
JES

Reo the Fifth 5-Passenger Touring with All-Season Top
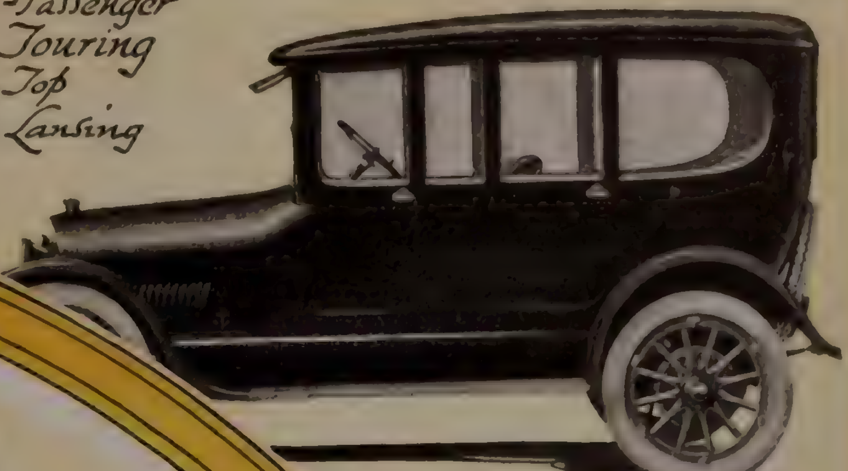
$1025 f.o.b. Lansing



Reo the Fifth
"The Incomparable Four"

f.o.b. Lansing subject to increase without notice

ce and "Used Car" Value—Reo the Fifth Is Verily "The Incomparable"

THE ONLY WAY TO BE SURE of getting a Reo the Fifth at the present price is to buy it and take delivery now—if your local Reo dealer can supply you.

YOU HAVE THOUGHT that the Reo slogan, "50 per cent oversize," was a mere advertising catch-phrase or a kind of harmless exaggeration, we suggest that you go into the matter fully—it is important that you inform yourself—that you know. And you'll find that it is, in fact, an under-statement of the facts—very much so.

OW YOU CAN'T BUILD that kind of a car and sell it at the price of a light "skimpy" car. You can't put Reo strength, Reo quality into it and yet meet a price competition. You can't put super-quality, super-strength and super-service into an automobile and yet meet a price of mediocrity.

E HAVE NEVER TRIED TO. Never intend to. Reo prices like Reo quality, are made here and without regard to—without even considering—prices other makers set on their product.

ND REO LOW UPKEEP COST is a result. The price you are able to obtain for a Reo of any vintage in the "used car market" is a result. The fact that the first Reo the Fifth ever made is still doing xcellent service is a result; and the consistency of performance of all Reos—the enthusiastic endorsement of all Reo owners—is another result of that Reo policy.

E HAVE NEVER STRIVEN to make all the automobiles—only he best. Never tried for vast quantities—only better quality. Never tried to make a dollar out of Reo stock save as it came legitimately from the making of Reo cars and trucks—and as it increased with the increase of reputation and consequent demand.

WE HAVE BEEN CALLED "OLD-FASHIONED" and sometimes even a Reo dealer whose standing in his community is the result of selling this sterling product, importunes us to change—to make lighter, more flashy, more sensational performers—and to get into the mad price-race.

TO WHAT END? WE ASK—to what end?

HAVE WE NOT ACHIEVED that which is—or should be—the highest ambition of an engineer or a manufacturer or a salesman—a sterling product whose merit is universally recognized and acclaimed—by ally and rival alike

WE THINK SO—and are content. For many years to come we hope to make this great model—always a little better—never skimping to meet a price.

THE GREAT SPRING DEMAND is already upon us. There won't be enough Reos to go round—never have been. So don't delay ordering lest you'll be disappointed.

ORDER—AND GET DELIVERY—as soon as possible. We shall not strive to meet the whole demand—only to fulfill your ideas and ours of what constitutes a good automobile.

AR COMPANY
ICHIGAN

THE WORKERS OF THE WORLD

For the woman at the switchboard, for man or woman in all employments that call for sustained mental alertness and physical endurance, for all work that pulls tensely on tired nerves,

Shredded Wheat

is the ideal food because it supplies the greatest amount of nutriment with the least tax on the digestion. For breakfast eat it with hot milk or cream. For luncheon eat it with baked apple, sliced bananas or other fruits. It is ready-cooked and ready-to-eat. A deliciously nourishing meal for a few cents.

Made only by

The Shredded Wheat Company

Niagara Falls, N. Y.

Food Only for the Starving

MR. HOOVER of the Belgian Relief Commission recently had a heart-breaking experience at a relief station near Brussels. He was watching a line of 1,200 children, none over fourteen years of age, each with her meal ticket and each happy in the prospect of getting something to eat.

Suddenly he saw one of the Belgian women workers of the committee step over to a child in the line and drag her out, the child resisting, screaming and fighting to get back. Other helpers removed other struggling victims from the line.

Mr. Hoover could not understand it and asked one of the women why it was done.

"They are of normal weight," she said, "and cannot have food today. They must wait until their weight is reduced; maybe one, perhaps two or three days. Only those who are under weight and are facing starvation may have food."

Mr. Hoover asked if it was really true that children must be starving before they could be fed, and the woman answered,

"Yes. That is so. We cannot feed so many mouths with so little. If we had the food we would give it to them—but what can we do? If America would only send it to us, we would see that all these children had at least enough to keep them at normal weight. As it is, we are powerless, and those who do not show signs of starvation must stand aside for less fortunate ones."

Oh, readers of the Christian Herald! You whose little folks have not only enough to eat but candy and movies and toys and happy days! Can you look at this picture unmoved? The question answers itself. You cannot and you will not. You have given and you will give again and again until no child shall starve in Belgium or Poland or Serbia or Armenia.

We urge you who can to join the Monthly Offering Club. It is a business-like and definite way to meet this distress that never lessens and that should be constantly relieved. At this writing, December 22, there were 134 members in the club, and the total of the pledges was about $200 a month or $2,400 a year. This is a good beginning, but not such a showing as might be and will be. Talk it over at home, pray over it; a human life may hang upon your decision, for each day some die who might have been saved.

New Gifts for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Jas Hewitt	$5.00
Clara M Rupp	5.00
Mr S P Kane	5.00
D Larson	5.00
W C Boughton	5.00
Martha Johnson & Daughter	5.00
Mrs H Downie	5.00
S S, So Rehoboth, Mass	5.00
United Presby. S S, St Charles, Iowa	5.00
Mrs Martin Hanson	5.00
Mrs L B Hunter	5.00
H E Barlow	5.00
A M Norman	5.00
Ida M. Lovett	5.00
Mrs L L Gordon	5.00
Lilah A. Lelean	5.00
Mrs Irene W Healy	5.00
Miss Jessie Taylor	5.00
Mr & Mrs Madison Edwards	5.00
Mrs Leslie Patterson	5.00
Sympthizer, Southern Pines, N C	5.00
Levi Lewis	5.00
Marie C Cellarius	5.00
Friend, Syracuse, N Y	3.00
B Rosted	3.00
Friend, Ontario, Calif	3.00
V R Benham	3.00
Mrs H G	3.00
Mrs Maude Kreider	3.00
Mrs J M Dillon & Mrs A T Johnson	3.00
Mrs Wm Crees	3.00
Bethel M P Ch, Reinersville, Ohio	3.00
Houser Lake S S, Post Falls, Idaho	3.00
Mrs Julia Goodrich	3.00
Mrs D Reeves	3.00
Mr & Mrs Ira Weldy	3.00
J E Young	3.00
Friends, Kendrick, Fla	2.50
B E Holcombe	2.50
Two Friends, Wichita, Kans	2.50
Mt Pleasant S S, Dixon, Ohio	2.50
Miss L Williams	2.50
M D K	2.00
Mrs Helen Nealley	2.00
August Bousman	2.00
Annie Tiberg	2.00
Mrs Geo W Mathews	2.00
Mrs John Beeler	2.00
Union S S, Mt Olive, Ark	2.00
L C Porter	2.00
Mrs W H Bliss	2.00
Mrs B F Ray & Mrs Cora Birchfield	2.00
Friends Ch, Quilcene, Wash	2.00
Mrs W C Martland	2.00
Samuel T Miller	2.00
——, Orland, Calif	2.00
Mr & Mrs Dane Kemp	2.00
Mrs R A Willcox	2.00
Geo S Gass	2.00
S S, Spring Run, Pa	2.00
E V Skinner	2.00
F W Carson	2.00
Bertha Nieman	2.00
Mrs L L Sessions	2.00
Mr & Mrs F A Rand	2.00
Two Friends, W G	2.00
Friend, Bloomington, Ills	$2.00
Mrs A Farnsworth	2.00
Friends Bible School, Pittsfield, N H	2.00
Corson S S, Choteau, Mont	2.00
A H S	2.00
Friend, Lesueur Center, Minn	2.00
Clover Valley S S, Wells, Nev	2.00
Anna R. Tappan	2.00
Grace Boice	2.00
Miss F Wetmore	1.50
B L McGonegal & F Van Dusen	1.50
Mrs Harriet M Wetmur	1.00
E S Joyner	1.00
A O Ebert	1.00
J H Scott	1.00
Mrs L M Tingley	1.00
W N De Vine	1.00
Mrs N W Nelson	1.00
Florence Nelson	1.00
Mrs A E Hewitt	.00
W E Parrington	1.00
Henry C Miller	1.00
A Christian, Brooklyn, NY	1.00
Helen L Sutherland	1.00
Mrs G A Bacon	1.00
Mrs M E Kibbe	1.00
Susan Langtree	1.00
Friend, Heuvelton, N Y	1.00
Mrs Martha Walker	1.00
Joel B Bowman	1.00
Friend, Livonia, N Y	1.00
Ellen L Chambers	1.00
Mrs Helen Estes	1.00
——, Glens Falls, N Y	1.00
Mrs Mary Martin's S S Class, Batavia, N Y	1.00
M McLeod	1.00
Union S S, Brundage, Texas	1.00
Mary L Downie	1.00
J T Lowe	1.00
M H, Newark, N J	1.00
Mrs A H Field	1.00
Mrs D W Jones	1.00
Mrs Carrie Haeckes	1.00
Mrs Chas Roads	1.00
Miss Laura A Buckley	1.00
Mrs Louis Vander Meer	1.00
A N	1.00
Mrs A F Bonham	1.00
Mrs Martha Drake	1.00
Elmer Jacobson	1.00
"Hired Man"	1.00
Mr Wickstrom	1.00
Chas A Lundin	1.00
Chas Smith	1.00
Axel Pearson	1.00
Mrs Pearl Sanders	1.00
Mrs Ellen Meyers	1.00
E S Brott	1.00
Mrs N Jacobson	1.00
Albert Jacobson	1.00
Rose Jacobson	1.00
Reader, New Albin, Iowa	1.00
Subscriber, Oakland, Calif	1.00
Mrs May Thompson	1.00
Mrs F E Corbin	1.00
L D Newton	1.00
Subscriber, Needham Hgts., Mass.	1.00
Mr F R Jones	1.00
Mrs C C Rockwood	1.00
Mrs Florence E White	1.00
Mr Clarence W Jones	$1.00
Mrs H Lawrence	1.00
Mrs Alice E Ford	1.00
——, Sarasota, Fla	1.00
I T Y	1.00
S R	1.00
Katie Kennel	1.00
Mrs D W Jones	1.00
Edna Jones	1.00
Mrs J Anderson	1.00
Miss Annie Anderson	1.00
A M Dauphin	.50
Helen P. Slafter	.50
Mrs J Jerson	.50
Mrs E Tamm	.50
Rev J F Golightly	.50
Mrs R C Johnson	.50
Miss M Anderson	.50
Sister in Christ, Coullerville, Calif	.50
Friend, Brooklyn, N Y	.25
Mrs E H Smith	.25
Mrs E Thonell	.25
Mrs A P Rutan	.25
Mrs J A Roy	.25
Mrs Sullivan	.25
Mrs Jones	.25
Mrs Lillie Johnson	.25
Master Gerald D Millard	.25
Mrs F Dunn	1.00
Claude De Lair	1.00
J A Carter	1.00
Mrs E J Wilbourn	1.00
Sivert Erickson	1.00
Mrs R V Moseley	.25
A Ingle	2.00
I M Galbraith	2.00
Mrs M C Moser	2.00
Mrs Merilla N Shaler	2.00
Mrs Matilda Rees	2.00
Alvin Elton	2.00
Mrs D C	2.00
Mrs Hudson M Havens	2.00
N A Voorhist	2.00
Laura E Copeland	2.00
Mrs Hannah M Randall	2.00
Mr & Mrs G W Brooks	2.00
Mrs R H S	2.00
Mrs Sarah J & Miss Alice Richerson	2.00
Mr & Mrs W H Cox & others	2.00
C J McEwen	2.00
R J W	2.00
John D Williams, Sr	2.00
C W	2.00
Mrs F B Rockwell	2.00
Mrs W P Link	2.00
Mrs C M Fisher	2.00
Mrs E H Burnison	2.00
Mr & Mrs O C Borth	2.00
Mary Hamilton	2.00
Friend, Columbus, Ga	2.00
Simpson Union S S, Dodgeville, Wisc	2.00
Jas A Brown	2.00
Mrs Anna Wine	2.00
Mrs Eliza Wilson	2.00
Miss A J S & Mrs E J S	2.00
W W Wyland	2.00
L B Hays	2.00
Friend, Lorain, Ohio	2.00
Emma King	2.00
Mrs Alice A Davison	2.00
F B Lyon	2.00
M E S S, Lakewood, N Y	2.00
Mrs J D Washburn	2.00
R T Lane	$1.50
Mrs May A Bailey	1.50
David D Gibson	1.50
Mrs H I Churchhill	1.50
Hannah Hope	1.50
Mr & Mrs W J Hope	1.50
Mrs F A Wardle & Mrs J C McCurdy	1.50
Mrs A Moremen	1.50
Mission S S, Roswell, N Mex	1.50
Bapt S S, Naco, Ariz	1.50
Annie L Brubaker	1.00
——, Montgomery, N Y	1.00
Lillie F Steele	1.00
Mrs M & Daughter	1.00
Mrs C Brown	1.00
A Student	1.00
Mrs Rumford & Mrs Pedrick	1.00
Dora Broeker	1.00
Mrs J D Van Hollen	1.00
Carl Munson	1.00
John Nordstrom	1.00
Henry Matthies	1.00
Ben Peterson	1.00
Carl Broeker	1.00
Lizzie Matthies	1.00
A Friend, South Portland, Me	1.00
Mrs Isa D Knapp & Family	1.00
Mrs J E Miller	1.00
J E Miller	1.00
Mrs J R Deeds	1.00
B C Watson	1.00
Mrs Geo Bulmar	1.00
Mrs E B Miller	1.00
Mrs J H Burgess	1.00
——, Brownsville, Tenn	1.00
G D Mersereau	1.00
D H K, Millville, N J	1.00
Chas P Schaffer	1.00
Miss Mary Nair	1.00
Rosa Mertens	1.00
Reader, Scales Mound, Ill	1.00
Helen Shannon	1.00
Julia Dudley	1.00
Miss P M Ross	1.00
M R Little	1.00
In His Name, Albuquerque, N Mex	1.00
Henry Elton	1.00
T O Elton	1.00
Thor Boen	1.00
Anton Kopperud	1.00
Mrs A C Potter	1.00
Mrs M A Powell	1.00
Mrs John Wagner	1.00
Mrs Carl Johnson	1.00
M D Hay	1.00
Mrs D M Hay	1.00
Miss Florence Wooten	1.00
Two Readers, N Y	1.00
Mrs R A Milner	1.00
——, Delevan, N Y	1.00
Mrs J A P	1.00
Mrs H T Turner	1.00
——, Perry, N Y	1.00
Mrs Mortensen	1.00
John D Williams, Jr	1.00
Mrs Nicholas Heyns	1.00
——, Berthoud, Colo	1.00
Friend, San Diego, Calif	1.00
Mrs J L Russell	1.00
H J Pilgren	1.00
Mrs Lewis B. Ely	1.00
A H	1.00
Elizabeth Taggart	1.00
J F Stewart	1.00
Alberta B Stewart	1.00
Mrs J M Robertson	$1.00
E G W	1.00
Friend, Morristown, Tenn	1.00
Chr. Petersen	1.00
Mrs Rachel Nelson	1.00
Miss Esther L. Strom	1.00
Mrs E A Clark	1.00
In His Name, Healdsburg, Calif	1.00
Mrs D Hutchinson	1.00
Friend, Clay Center, Kans	1.00
Mrs S M Bryant	1.00
Mrs Catherine Wacker	1.00
Mary A Wilson	1.00
L H Haskill	1.00
Friend, Wakefield, Mass	1.00
Mrs Frank Whitney	1.00
Mrs Jos La Hue	1.00
Mrs E E Thornton	1.00
Mrs A C Thornton	1.00
——, East Rochester, Ohio	.50
Florence Matthies	.50
Rose Peterson	.50
G E Snyder	.50
Harriet Vance	.50
Jas A Hanna	.50
R H Stone	.50
Little Tots in La Fayette, Ala	.50
Mrs T O Elton	.50
Mrs Thos Willis	.50
——, Fredericksburg, Va	.50
Veo Shrader	.50
Mildred Shrader	.50
Harold Byron	.50
Albert Kloekorn	.50
Scott Whitesel	.50
Friend, Laurel Hill, N C	.50
——, Charlestown, Mass	.50
Presby S S, Sunset, Texas	.50
Mother & Daughter, Colfax, Iowa	.50
Miss Sue Gilchrist	.25
Jim Burns	.25
Mrs Voit	.25
Marvin Motsinger	.25
E F Clodfelter	.25
Dr J W Harvey	.25
M F Dorsey	.25
Mrs Mae Marsh	.25
Mrs Julia Darron	.25
Mr W Carlson	.25
Miss M C Hamilton	4.00
Nellie Watson	.10
S S, Homedale, Idaho	8.00
E A Moffitt	30.00
Highland Center Cong Ch, Cortland, Nebr	8.00
Pupils & teachers of Portlock School No. 5, Norfolk, Va	7.00
Helping Hand Prayer Circle, Angelica, N Y	6.00
Pleasant Valley S S, Eva, Okla	5.25
Rustin Ave M E S S, Sioux City, Iowa	5.06
Bapt S S, Estelline, Texas	3.33
Friendship S S, Boone Co, Mo	12.81
M E S S, Mill Creek, Pa	4.00
Lutheran Ch, Argyle, Wisc	21.85
Union S S, Rodeo, Calif	$1.30
Friends Ch, West Newton, Ind	5.60
Robt M Brown	.35
—— Port Royal, S. Car	4.55
M E Ch, Lane, Idaho	8.65
Hyde Park Rf'd Ch, East Orange, N J	15.86
Mrs Geo S Reid & Daughter	6.00
Mr & Mrs G H Cowherd & Son	4.00
First Brethren S S, Washington, D. C.	13.00
Glaze, M E S S Cainesville, Mo	7.78
Union S S & Ladies Aid, McCabe, Mont	31.00
Miss Mary A Pestana & Sister	8.00
Mrs R E Sparks	3.50
Swedish Mission S S, Gresham, Oreg	9.00
S S, Silver Lake, Oreg	16.00
S S, Hutchinson, Minn	12.00
Olive Branch S S, U B Ch, Rossville, Kans	7.00
Presby Ch & S S, Camden, Ala	17.02
Osceola Union S S, Marvin, S. D	3.50
School Children, Hyattville, Wyo	8.00
United Brethren S S, Pixley, Calif	4.57
Miss Culley James & Pupils	1.65
Mrs Isabella Porter	40.00
Salado S S, San Antonio, Tex	1.20
Madison School for boys, Seattle, Wash	7.05
G A G & W D Griffith	4.50
Prairie Flower Friends Ch, Haviland, Kans	6.00
Friend, Union Church, Miss	5.25
Mrs Lawrence Smith & Family	3.25
Mrs Nic Middelkoop & daughter	2.20
Friends Sunnyside S S, National City, Calif	1.54
Mt Olivet S. S, Taylor, Mo	9.00
Progressive S S, Billings, Mont	13.00
Liberty S S, Boyd, Okla	5.11
Pleasant Grove S S, Williamsburg, Iowa	7.56
Mrs N A Dobson	25.00
J H Pull	25.00
Martha E Dole	25.00
Mrs A H Carey	25.00
Sallie K Simpson	25.00
O N Bartholmew	20.00
E A Willoughby	15.00
D C M Laren	10.00
Nannie R Glass	10.00
Howard L Kay	10.00
S S, Passadena, Fla	10.00
C. T. Hammond	10.00
John N Wall	10.00

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

The Most Interesting Race Under Our Flag

By FRANK G. CARPENTER

Copyrighted, 1917, by Frank G. Carpenter

Looking pleasant, please

FOR the past month I have been traveling among the Eskimos. The general idea is that the most of our Eskimos live along the coast of the Arctic Ocean. This is not true. Four-fifths of them are to be found south of the Arctic Circle and the most on the coastal plains that slope down to Bering Sea. There are said to be thirty-five hundred of them on the Seward Peninsula, and this number is perhaps one-third of all the Eskimos under the American flag.

So much has been published about the Eskimos one might think them an important part of the human race. The truth is they number, all told, not more than 30,000, and of these ten or fifteen thousand are to be found in Alaska. Of the remainder there are a few thousand in Greenland, some of whom are civilized; a few in Labrador, also civilized, and a greater number scattered through the northern part of the Canadian Dominion from Hudson Bay to the mouth of the Mackenzie River. There are also a few in Siberia, but nowhere are they of importance except as a race curiosity, and in a small way as trappers of furs for the markets of the world.

The Eskimos about Nome make their living by fishing and hunting and selling ivory carvings. They have a village on the edge of the town. It is made up of frame shacks and cabins, constructed of all sorts of material from driftwood logs to galvanized iron. These are the abandoned homes of the miners who came here to wash gold from the sands of the seashore. There are also many tents of white canvas. The tents rest right on the sand, with skins as carpets. There are no streets to speak of, and the houses are jumbled together as though they had been pitched out of the sky and let fall where they would.

These Eskimos are dressed in half-civilized fashion. Many of the women have parkas of calico, trimmed with fur, and hoods of cloth with a fringe of wolverine standing far out around their copper-skinned faces. Under the calico parka, cloth trousers and long boots or mukluks of hide are to be seen, the leather reaching half way to the knee. Other Eskimos will be clad all in fur. Some will wear fur suits and cloth caps, and some American clothes from head to foot.

Many of the Eskimos now speak English, and their children go to the government schools. Twenty-one schools are maintained on the peninsula, and about eight hundred Eskimo children attend them. The teachers tell me that the children have more than ordinary intelligence. Some of them have good minds and many reach a high proficiency in reading and writing. One of the little girls recently went from here to Plattsburg, N. Y., where she entered the fifth grade. In a class below her in the same Eskimo school here in Alaska were two boys, one a full-blooded Eskimo and the other the son of a white man. The white boy had been to school in the States, and he thought he could easily beat the Eskimo. At the end of the first week the Eskimo was at the head of the class, and he held that place throughout the year. That boy studied arithmetic, including percentage, interest, commission, freight and profit and loss. He could calculate the cost of whalebone from the time it came from the whale until it was turned into goods and brought back to Alaska.

I wish I could show you the Eskimo babies. They are the brightest, sweetest, and I might say also the dirtiest little pieces of human clay that I have yet met with in my travels over the world. They are full of fun and they romp about, mimicking their fathers and mothers and everything else under the sun. The most of them are dressed in furs, and some look like large fuzzy balls. Their parents have a superstition that if the children be photographed their souls will be under the control of the photographer, even though he be far away; and they run from the camera. It required considerable coaxing for me to get my Eskimo photographs, and I was able to succeed only by pointing the camera in another direction and then turning quickly and making the snapshot before they understood they were being taken.

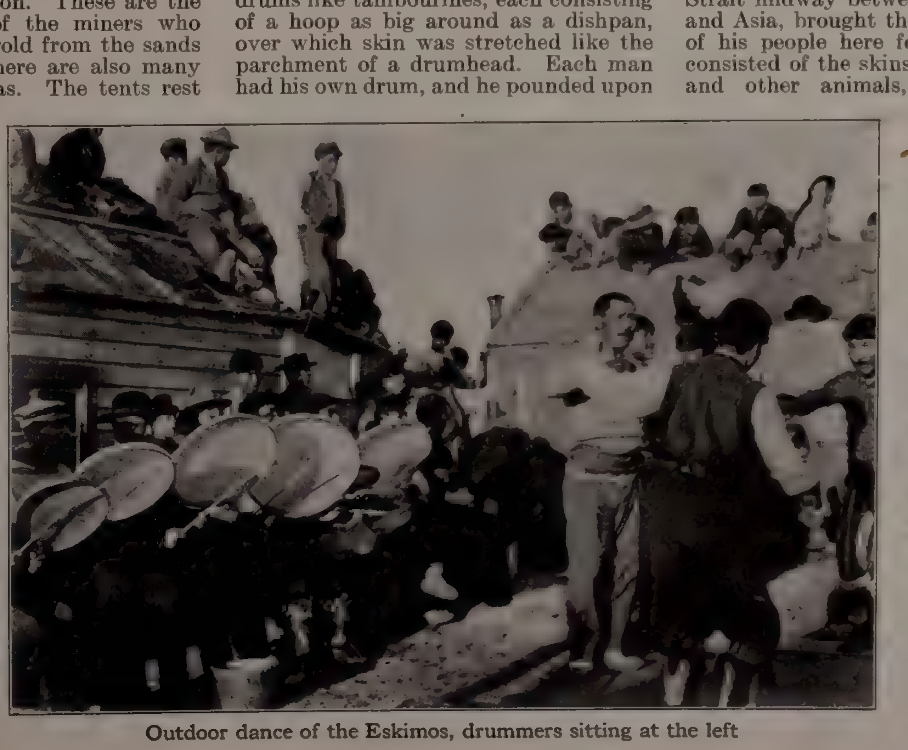
I went last night to one of their dances held in an old schoolhouse not far from the Eskimo section of Nome. The schoolhouse has but one room about thirty feet square. It is walled with windows, and the light of the midnight sun made the interior as bright as day. On a bench under the windows sat the musicians, eight Eskimos dressed in native costume, and the room was filled with dancers. The music came from drums like tambourines, each consisting of a hoop as big around as a dishpan, over which skin was stretched like the parchment of a drumhead. Each man had his own drum, and he pounded upon this with a lithe white rod of the length of a walking-stick. They sang as they played and kept perfect time.

The first dance was by five sturdy young men, clad in long skin boots and trousers and shirts. All wore gloves of skin or fur, and all were bareheaded. The dancing was largely a series of postures. The men pounded the floor with their feet, they sprang into the air, and swung their arms this way and that, keeping time to the music. They sang the while in loud raucous tones, their voices changing in expression according to the story of the song. Now they seemed angry, as though singing of war, and again laughing, when the tale was perhaps of a more comic nature. Later women and girls entered the dance, and at one time a young woman, with a baby on her back, stood in the center and like a musical director led the dancing.

I cannot describe the enthusiasm of the Eskimo audience during the dancing. Around the walls, standing up or sitting on their heels, were scores of these copper-skinned people, their slanting eyes ashine, and their hands clapping as they lost themselves in the music. The features of all changed with the songs, and the crowd was more appreciative than any I have ever seen at a concert or dance in the States.

After the dancing was over, we went outside the schoolhouse and had an exhibition of blanket-tossing as played by the Eskimos. In this twenty or thirty of the natives surrounded a tanned walrus hide about ten feet square, holding it low with their hands. Then an Eskimo boy jumped into the middle of the hide. He stood on his feet, and at a word they jerked the hide taut, sending him up into the air. As he fell they came closer together and then again threw themselves back, tossing him higher and higher, and continuing to do so as long as he could keep his feet. Later an Eskimo girl took the boy's place, and then one or two of the strangers stepped on the hide, and were tossed to the sky amid the hilarity of their Eskimo friends. We took up a collection, and the amount was distributed among the performers.

THE Eskimos are rapidly learning the value of money. The day has long gone by when they would give a polar bearskin or a bale of foxskins for a fish-hook. They now know the value of their furs, and bring them to the best markets. During my stay the king of the Diomede Islands, which lie in Bering Strait midway between North America and Asia, brought the annual fur catch of his people here for sale. The furs consisted of the skins of fox, polar bear and other animals, and the whole amounted in value to some thousands of dollars. I watched the sale, which was held in the hotel at Nome. The skins were spread out over the tables, and the old chief, clad all in furs, sat half doubled up in a chair, accepting or rejecting the bids. His face was seamed with wrinkles, as though with tattooing, and he reminded me of the Maori chiefs I saw in New Zealand. His skin was dark brown, but his hair was as white as the fur of his polar foxskins, and it stood out like bristles over his head. I asked the fur dealers as



Outdoor dance of the Eskimos, drummers sitting at the left

3 IN
Try it on your Piano
A little 3-in-One Oil on a damp cloth will restore the lustre and cause surface scratches to vanish. Do a small area at a time and polish with dry soft cloth. The resulting finish can more easily be kept free of dust and finger marks. On pedals and other moving parts, prevents squeaking.
3-in-One Oil is a pure highly refined oil compound without a trace of acid or grease.
All stores, in bottles; 10c, 25c, 50c. In Handy Oil Cans, 25c.
FREE Sample and Dictionary of Uses.
Three-in-One Oil Company
42CH. Broadway New York

These Superb Pansies with their delicate colors and velvety petals can be yours this year if you sow the seed early. We will send one full-sized packet of mixed colors for 10 cents and will also send our new catalogue of Seeds, Plants, Roses
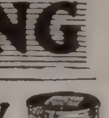
200 pages of text and pictures of the best Flowers, Vegetables, Shrubs, Fruits for home garden planting. We sell direct to you, pay the postage, guarantee delivery. For 63 years the leading seedsmen and plantsmen. Write today for the catalogue—it's free.
The Storrs & Harrison Co.
Box 339, Painesville, Ohio

Low Cost Heat
Get Our Wholesale Price
On this unbeatable quality hot air furnace. Quick shipment direct from manufacturers. We Pay Freight. Heats the whole house through one register. Separate cold air returns. Easy to install. Powerful and healthful heating plant at money-saving price, cash or credit. Satisfied owners everywhere. Write today.
Ask for Catalog No. 927
KALAMAZOO STOVE CO.
Manufacturers, Kalamazoo, Mich.
A Kalamazoo Trade Mark Registered Direct to You

SPRAY!
Spray for better fruit, larger crops, bigger profits. For fast work, fine, clinging sprays and long-lived outfits, spray the DEMING WAY. Send for the Deming 1917 Catalog, a 40-page guide to 25 types and sizes of sprayers. It's free.
THE DEMING COMPANY
138 Depot St. Salem, Ohio
Pumps for all farm uses.
DEMING



HatchEggsNewWay
New kind of Incubator. Built round like hen's nest. No cold corners. Only 1 gal. of oil, 1 filling of lamp to hatch.
FREE BOOK Describes 16 wonderful features. Mail postal today before you forget
RADIO-ROUND INCUBATOR CO., 431 Main Street, WAYNE, NEB.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 3 free books: inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge.
RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.

FAIRBANK'S
GOLD DUST
Washing Powder

GOLD DUST
The Busy Cleaner

Millions of housewives choose Gold Dust to clean and brighten everything. They know it does its work busily and thoroughly. It will do the same for you in your home.

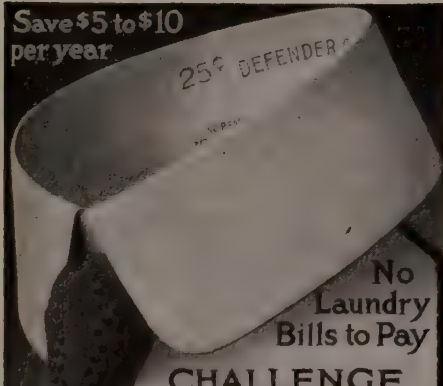
For sale everywhere in five-cent and larger packages. Follow the simple directions.

THE N.K. FAIRBANK COMPANY

'Let the GOLD DUST TWINS do your work'

GOLD DUST
GOLD DUST



No Laundry Bills to Pay

CHALLENGE CLEANABLE COLLARS

Come in 15 handsome styles. A fine linen cloth and stitched edge finish. Pure white. Absolutely proof against water, perspiration, velvet collar crocking, and street soot. Instantly cleanable, off or on the neck, with soap and damp cloth. 25c each, one year's supply, $1 50. At your dealer's, or mailed postpaid upon receipt of price. Be sure to state size. Other styles in a booklet sent free upon request

DU PONT THE ARLINGTON CO.
725 Broadway, New York

Make your cakes better by using "Eagle Brand." It also improves your tea, coffee, chocolate and cocoa.

Gail Borden
EAGLE
BRAND
CONDENSED
MILK
THE ORIGINAL

to his character. They told me he was honest and much respected. They said he was wealthy, from an Eskimo standpoint, being worth perhaps as much as $10,000, and owning a schooner that cost him $3,000.

All of the Eskimo carving today is done with steel tools, but there is work in existence that dates back to the stone age. The older Eskimos say that their ancestors used tools of flint, and it is known that they have been carving ivory for many generations. They have a way of softening the bone, horn or ivory before they work it, and to make the carvings more distinct they etch lines on the surface with a black paint made of a mixture of gunpowder and blood. This, when put on the freshly cut bone, makes a permanent stain.

The Eskimos of today are rapidly changing. They live differently from those described in the books of arctic travel. On the Seward peninsula they have houses of wood and skin, and the snow house is comparatively unknown, except in the heart of midwinter. Most of their winter houses are cellars dug out of the ground. This cellar is usually four or five feet deep and twenty or twenty-five feet square. Poles of driftwood are laid about it to heighten the walls and timbers are placed across the top. Then dirt and sod are piled around the hole, until they have what looks like a great mound of earth. In the center of the top is an opening, about as large as a page of a newspaper, across which is stretched a sheet of seal or walrus bladder. This is transparent and it gives light to the house below. The house is entered by a tunnel, which is connected with a shaft or well six or seven feet deep. In the well is a rude ladder, up which the people climb after crawling through the tunnel, when they wish to go out of doors. Around the walls of the living room is a platform, which is the sleeping-place of the family. Such houses are so warm that the Eskimos often go almost naked while indoors. The dwellings are dark and badly ventilated. They are often infested with vermin.

Some of the Eskimos near the white settlements are changing the style of their architecture. They are building homes above ground, buying window sash and window glass and doors like ours. Many of them are now using cook stoves in place of the old seal-oil lamps, and the white traders tell me that the Eskimo women are learning to cook. They bake an excellent bread with the aid of yeast made from hops, which they buy at the store.

I asked a trader to tell me what goods he sold to the Eskimos. He replied:

"Everything under the sun. The staples are sugar and flour, and especially sugar. They like sweets and one Eskimo will eat more sugar than a whole family of whites. We sell them all sorts of canned goods, such as peaches, apricots, jams and preserves. Of late they have been buying clothes, including underwear and socks. They even buy thermos bottles to take along with them on their sealing trips. They want steel fishhooks and the best of guns."

The First Disciples of the Lord Jesus

International Sunday School Lesson for January 21. John 1:35-51

Typical Methods of Enlisting for Christ

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

IN this chapter of John we have set before us the way in which the first disciples came into contact with Jesus. It is a beautiful and significant Scripture to read and to think upon. One might consider the diverse characteristics of these men in the light of all that the New Testament tells about each and see clearly the universality of the Gospel appeal. Christians need not be all of one type. God can use all sorts of temperaments. We might take time to compare the accounts in the Synoptic Gospels with this and find much food for thought. But let us rather look upon these incidents as illustrations of the ways in which Jesus used to gain followers and of some of the ways in which the Kingdom of God is extended today.

I. Pointed to Christ by a Preacher

IT is interesting to see that these first disciples were influenced by a man who gave his life to the work of preaching. This vindicates the usefulness of those who dedicate themselves to the ministry of the Word. Every sincere preacher is a John the Baptist pointing his hearers to One greater than himself. Sometimes we despair of the success of the pulpit and feel the taunt that was flung at Paul concerning the "foolishness of preaching," but from John's time to the present a vast multitude have been led into the Kingdom directly by men set apart for this function. Not all are qualified for this task, but there is always need for choice young men of our churches to equip themselves to render the world this service.

Investigating for Themselves. The Baptist prepared the way, John and Andrew verified the message for themselves. No true preacher stands between the soul and Christ—he leads the soul to Christ and then steps aside as did the Forerunner. There is no room for priestly pretension here, but abundant testimony to the true priesthood, open to all, of reconciling the world to God. The messenger of the Gospel is happy when his challenge to the heart results in a searching investigation of the message. He has no fear that the Christ will fail to meet the test of sincere soul needs. Sherwood Eddy and John R. Mott adopted this course in China in their evangelistic meetings, asking only a pledge to study the New Testament and become acquainted with its central Figure.

Abiding with Him. "What seek ye?" was the gracious word of the Master to those who had heeded John. Their hearts were too full to tell it all. They sought an answer to the riddle of life; they sought a revelation of the Father; they sought a cure for sin and fear. They wanted no momentary interview—they felt they needed time for this acquaintanceship. "Teacher, we want to abide with you for a time, to catch your spirit, to listen to your words, to think your thoughts after you, to know you." All this Jesus realized was in their eager query, "Where dwellest thou?" "Come and see" is always his attitude to inquirers. They abode with him that day. What an experience, ever to be remembered—the red-letter day of a life!

This is our need—to go apart for a season and fellowship with the Lord. To listen to the voice of the Spirit. Not to go to any special sort of meeting, or service, or place, but to go where we can be close to Jesus and learn of him.

II. Sought and Won by a Brother

IT is sweet to consider the fact that each of these first followers brought his brother to Jesus. Yet what more natural, more beautiful, more inevitable, one is tempted to say. However, family life has not always meant mutual building up in religion and character. Alas! There must be real brotherhood and there must be responsiveness to the fraternal influence. A delightful experience befell me not long ago. A young man came with burdens and problems oppressing his mind, and with all the tact and consecration I could summon I showed him Jesus. Next day he brought his brother and left him with me. The brother had much the same difficulties and he too decided to enlist for Christ in the church and to live the Christian life. This went on till there were five strong young men, five brothers, each led by the next older. This is making the family a field for Christian service!

Brothers on the Quest. Peter was seeking light, as well as John, you see. If he had not been, he would not have left his nets and gone out to John at the Jordan to be baptized in repentance for his sins. Even then he was unsatisfied—an eager, questioning, impulsive man. He cherished the Messianic hope and often discussed it with his brother. When Andrew burst in upon him with "We have found the Messiah," he responded instantly and accompanied his brother to the place where Jesus dwelt.

Jesus' Discernment of Character. To each man Jesus gave a different message. His ability to read character is noteworthy here when he prophesied that Simon son of John should become a Rock. Many good judges of character would never have discerned that possibility. And such a word Peter needed to reach that ideal. He adopted the name and never forgot the incident. "He calleth his own sheep by name and leadeth them out." Coming to Jesus means something individual and different to every sincere convert though the great fundamental basis of need is the same. Many, many of us need to have Jesus lead us out in new avenues of expression, in new possibilities of character, in new lives of service.

III. Found of the Lord Himself

THERE are some Christians whom no intermediary led to Christ—they were found of the Lord himself, as was Philip. In his own way, in his own providence, he came at just the critical juncture and spoke to the heart. For his own purposes "he was minded to go forth into Galilee," and found a man whom he wanted. This is true sometimes of those who are very far down in the mire of sin, as in the case of an old man I knew. At the age of forty-five something within his breast rebuked him for his drunkenness and lack of purpose in life. Though past seventy he had never touched liquor since and lived a fine Christian life. It is also true of some who seem to be serene and fortunate, but whose hearts are dissatisfied. Such was Francis of Assisi. Or those who appear to be destitute of spiritual life. Such a man may Levi the publican have seemed as he sat at his tables when Jesus appeared in the doorway of his booth with that same command, "Follow me."

The Divine Imperative. What a remarkable word Jesus chose for these men! "Follow me." No creed, no argument, no emotional appeal, but an absolute call for a new beginning. Just a simple act was asked—the rest succeeds naturally. This is the simplest test of discipleship. The most ignorant or the most sinful can start where he is and make the attempt to follow that divinely compelling leader. Hearing it, countless men have entered upon the life worth while.

But this simple command becomes the severest of all tests when you know where he is going. If he is going to defy the strong and the cruel, if he is going into suffering and self-sacrifice, if he is bound for a death on a cross—then "follow me" is the highest, hardest and holiest of all the commandments that he has given us.

IV. Enlisted by an Acquaintance

THE broadening scope of evangelism is noticeable even in these few paragraphs. Now Philip finds Nathanael—an acquaintance, doubtless, but not even a fellow townsman. He seems to have been the first man Philip encountered after his enlistment. There was not quite the same community of interest here—there seldom is perfect contact in our search for disciples for Christ. Nathanael's home and work and social position may have been very different from that of the fisherman of Bethsaida. But he also was desirous of the promised Messiah. And we must learn that men of every type and place and experience need the same Lord and their hearts' yearning is at bottom one.

The First Objection. Naturally there is more room for discussion when the circle of appeal broadens. Peter followed Andrew unquestioningly to see for

Continued on page 44

Built by John W. Bate
in the Model Efficiency Plant

Mitchell SIXES

$1460 For 7-passenger Six—48 h.p. 127-inch Wheelbase.
$1150 For Mitchell Junior—40 h.p. 120-inch Wheelbase Six.
Both prices f. o. b. Racine.

Still More Extra Value

100% Over-Strength 8 New-Style Bodies
24% Extra Luxury 31 Extra Features

John W. Bate, the great efficiency engineer, still devotes his whole time to the Mitchell—15 hours a day.

This whole model factory, covering 45 acres, was built and equipped by him. It is run under his direction. His methods here have cut our factory cost in two.

Those factory savings pay for all the Mitchell extras. They amount to full 20 per cent. For no other factory we know could build a car like the Mitchell at anywhere near our cost.

Now Double Strength

Years ago Mr. Bate fixed for Mitchell parts 50 per cent over-strength. The result has been wondrous endurance. Seven cars so built have averaged 175,000 miles apiece—over 30 years of ordinary service.

But three years ago, after one year in Europe, Mr. Bate doubled that standard. Part by part he has now attained 100 per cent over-strength. That is, each part is twice as strong as need be.

Now, for the first time, we announce a car completely built under that standard.

Lifetime Service

The purpose is lifetime service. Also safety, low upkeep, minimum repairs. The Mitchell is the first American car, at any price, to announce this double strength.

Mr. Bate has worn out 50 cars to learn the strength requirements. He has factory tests to prove the strength of every vital part.

Now over 440 parts are built of toughened steel. Important parts are all built oversize. All parts which get a major strain are built of Chrome-Vanadium steel.

Take springs, for instance—the Bate cantilever springs. They are the most comfortable springs in the world. You ride as in a cradle. Yet in 18 months, on many thousand cars, not one leaf of one spring ever has broken. Did you ever hear of such a record?

Every part in the Mitchell is now built to those same extreme standards.

Added Luxuries

Now we have our new body plant, covering 14 city blocks. The Mitchell becomes the first fine car to build all of its bodies. Under Mr. Bate's efficiency methods this will save hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Out of this saving we add 24 per cent to the cost of finish, upholstery and trimming. This will make the Mitchell, in every touch and detail, the luxury car of its class.

Now our finish coats are fixed by heat in enormous ovens. Thus we get a deep, rich, lasting lustre—a finish to last for years.

We have added 50 per cent to the cost of our leather, the same to the cost of our cushion springs. We give you better upholstering.

So in a hundred details. You have never seen such beauty, luxury and comfort as we now show in Mitchell cars.

31 Unique Features

The new Mitchell includes 31 extra features—things which nearly all cars omit. Things like a power tire pump, reversible head-lights, ball-bearing steering gear, a new-type control. There's a light in the tonneau, a locked compartment in front, an engine primer at the driver's hand. The Mitchell dealer will show you 31 such extra features.

These, like all Mitchell extras, are paid for by factory savings. They are due to John W. Bate, whose methods make these savings. They are due to this mammoth efficiency plant, which builds 98 per cent of this car.

You are bound to want these extras—this over-strength, this added luxury, these 31 extra attractions. They are necessary to a lifetime car, and a car to take pride in. Let your nearest Mitchell dealer show them to you. If you don't know him, ask us for his name.

MITCHELL MOTORS COMPANY, Inc.
Racine, Wis., U. S. A.

TWO SIZES

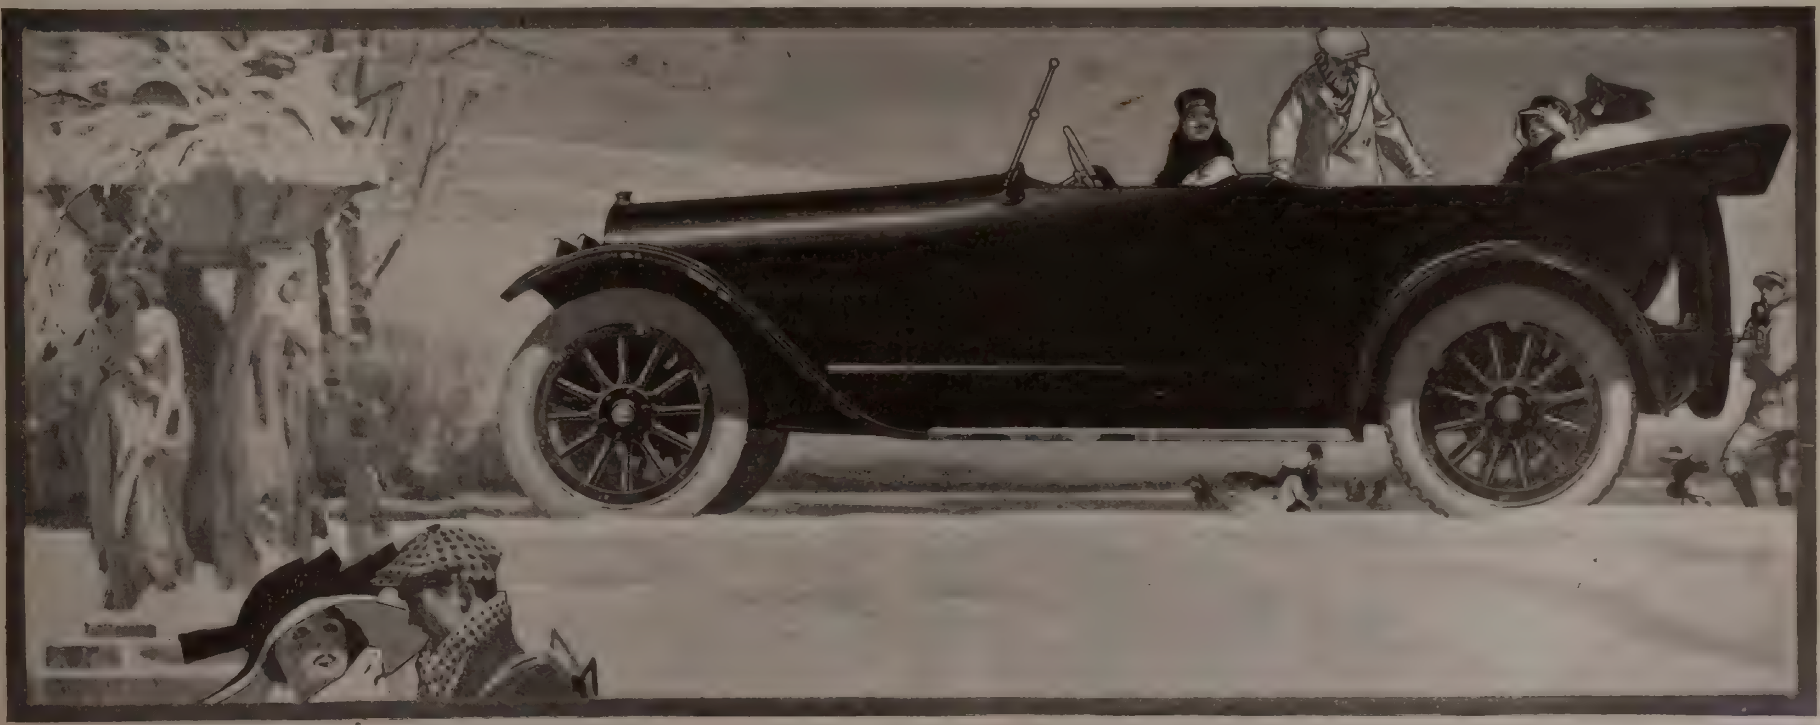
Mitchell—a roomy, 7-passenger Six, with 127-inch wheelbase. A high-speed, economical 48-horsepower motor. Disappearing extra seats and 31 extra features included.

Price $1460, f. o. b. Racine

Mitchell Junior—a 5-passenger Six on similar lines, with 120-inch wheelbase. A 40-horsepower motor—¼-inch smaller bore than larger Mitchell.

Price $1150, f. o. b. Racine

Also all styles of enclosed and convertible bodies. Also demountable tops.



Continued from page 42

himself. Nathanael demurs, however. The experiment may be a mere waste of time. The first objection is raised: the lowly origin of the Son of man. It is the world-old mistake—failing to see the possibility of the divine in the nearby and the known. Many in America today would think the Christain teaching marvelous if it were not that they have heard it since youth. Yet with Nathanael there was no ill-will, only honest skepticism. There were many false Messiahs abroad!

The Absolute Test. The same word, the absolute test, is given, "Come and see." It is the call of the Bible throughout. "Oh, taste and see that the Lord is good." It is an appeal to faith sufficient for a trial; it bases all on personal experience; it is willing to rest the efficacy of the Gospel on the honest endeavor of any soul. The Scriptures are caricatured by dogmatism, demanding blind and unreasoning acquiescence in its formulas. The Bible religion is based on the witness of the Spirit to the individual.

A Convinced Doubter. Nathanael might never have yielded to argument—few doubters are thus won. Instead he was persuaded to see Jesus for himself. His heart was guileless and therefore the Messiah could speak directly to his deepest self. What Nathanael was doing under that fig tree we do not know: perhaps praying earnestly, or repenting bitterly, or consecrating himself to some high cause. Jesus knew. No man can come honestly to God in fervent prayer, and seek the face of Christ in the Gospels with an open mind, without finding all he seeks in the Redeemer of the world.

The Leaven at Work. So must the Kingdom ever grow, person to person, life to life. Religion is contagious. Consecration evokes consecration. There is no other universal principle of evangelism, one might say. Whether a flaming prophet stirs the multitudes to repentance or humble toilers promise to "catch my pal," the realm of the Christ life is extended by that mysterious thing we call personality, the Spirit of God in the soul of man.

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

How to Plan for Decision Day—Continued

4. Decision Week

THE week before Decision Day should be used in careful preparation for the day. The following plans are suggested:

(a) Rev. E. Winslow Brown, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Spirit Lake, Iowa, one year prepared the scholars during Sunday school week by afternoon talks, using such topics as "My Father," "My Sins," "My Saviour," "My Faith," "My Confession," "My Work," "My Church."

(b) The meeting of the teachers during Decision Week or before should consider such topics as "How Can I Help My Scholars to Feel the Lesson Is for Them?" "How and When to Make the Personal or General Appeal to My Class?" "How Can a Scholar be Helped to Believe in Jesus?" "How Can a Christian Scholar Be Helped to a Greater Love for Christ?" "How Can the Parents Be Best Approached by the Teacher?" "How Should the Scholars of the Junior, Intermediate and Senior Departments or Classes Be Severally Approached?"

(c) The Saturday evening of Decision Week should be a time of special prayer by officers and teachers.

(d) The pastor's prayer meeting topic in that week should bear upon this theme, and special prayer should be offered for parents, scholars and teachers.

(e) A letter may be sent by pastor or superintendent to parents, asking their cooperation with the plans for decision, and appealing to the parents, if they are not Christians, to make the decision for themselves.

5. Decision Day Letters

One most helpful plan is for the superintendent to send letters to teachers and scholars before Decision Day. In many cases these will be form letters personally signed by the superintendent. May I suggest a few paragraphs from letters which have been actually used.

(a) From superintendent to scholar:

Dear Friend:—I am deeply interested in your life. It has great possibilities. You are at a point of life where you are thinking and deciding. You wish to make of your life one that shall be pure and strong and true, one that will respond to the best. May I as your friend ask that in this time of the making of life's ideals, when you are laying the foundation of your character and destiny, you will make one choice, one decision, that will mean the happiness, the success, of all the years that follow, and that you will make it now? . . .

There are many questions that may come to your life after you begin to follow Him, but there is one safe way in which you can have them decided: "What would Jesus do?"

I am very anxious for your sake, and for the sake of the Master, who needs your life, and who tenderly pleads for you, that before the New Year has grown older you should record your decision to be his, and let me know it on the enclosed card. Will you kindly, thoughtfully, after prayer, fill out the card and hand or send me by Sunday, February 4, which we are all looking forward to as a great Decision Day? . . .

(b) From superintendent to teacher:

During the week following January 21 I shall send to all the scholars in your class who are not on our church books as members or probationers a personal appeal to decide to live a Christian life. With that appeal I will enclose a decision card which I shall ask them to sign and hand or mail to me by Sunday, February 4, which we hope will be a great Decision Day in our Intermediate and Senior Departments. May I ask that during these next few weeks you will be much in prayer for your scholars, remembering them daily by name, and as opportunity comes, in the lesson and individually, bear home lovingly, wisely, the claims of the Master for their love and life and service, and their need of him?

6. Forms of Decision Cards

The following forms have been used with excellent results:

Receiving Jesus Christ as my personal Saviour, I covenant with him to be his obedient disciple.

I do acknowledge Jesus Christ as my Saviour. It is my honest purpose to serve him all my life.

I have decided to receive Jesus Christ, the Son of God, as my Lord, and to trust him as my Saviour. I have determined with God's help to obey his commandments and follow his example to the end of my life.

7. Suggestions for the Day Itself

On Decision Day officers and teachers should meet for ten or fifteen minutes of earnest prayer. In the school the opening exercises should be brief, the prayer tender and direct, and the responsive Scriptures may include such passages as Psalm 51 or 91, Isaiah 55, or parts of John 14, 15 and 16. The lesson should have brief study. A Decision Song may be sung. After a brief, loving appeal by pastor or superintendent a song or solo may be sung. "I Surrender All," "Ninety and Nine," "Ashamed of Jesus."

Decision cards should have been distributed to the teachers. After a word of prayer these cards should be distributed by the teachers to the scholars, the leader should read the form of the decision, and the scholars asked to sign them, while many are engaging in silent prayer that the right decisions shall be made.

The scholars signing the cards should be asked to remain after service for a few moments of prayer and instruction, or the pastor may write to them to meet him at an appointed time and place for a greater length of conference and counsel.

8. After Decision Day

The training of young people for church membership and Christian service will be made the subject of a later contribution.

The Great War and the End of the Age

To the Editor of the Christian Herald:

I NOTICE in your issue of December 20 the publication of my letter under the title, "God's Purpose in the War." Your comment upon the same put me in a stronger position than I desire upon one point: a prolongation of the war is not desired by those who take this point of view. On the contrary, its end is desired as speedily as possible; but it is held that the paramount desire on the part of the Christian should be that God's purpose concerning the war be accomplished, and that this should be his chief prayer and desire, rather than that the war should end without any interest or solicitude as to whether God's purpose has been accomplished. The prayer should be that God's purpose be quickly accomplished, in order that the war may end the more speedily.

Now that Germany has ventured a peace proposal and President Wilson has sent a note to the belligerent powers, there may be some prospect of an end. And if such should be the case, students of prophecy will be more than interested as to whether this war marks the end of the present dispensation and the beginning of a higher and far more beneficent era. There is still a Providence presiding over the affairs of men, and though some who seek to bring about peace appear to have no concern as to his purpose in this war, we believe that God has a purpose concerning it, and that he will bring great results from this greatest of catastrophes with which man has afflicted himself, and which God did not bring on, is not carrying on, and is not prolonging.

There are now indications that the nations are getting enough of war. The Central Powers some time ago let it be known that a large majority of their people were tired of the war and were longing and praying for peace. In the midst of the recent successes of the Germans in Rumania, the Imperial Chancellor, von Bethmann-Hollweg, announced that Germany was willing to enter into a pact with other nations to prevent future wars, declaring that such a catastrophe as the present war should be made an impossibility in the future. The future historian will attach more significance to this "moral victory for peace" than to the physical victory of the Germans over the Rumanians. When the German peace proposal first reached Washington, the German embassy announced that one of the most important subjects for discussion at a peace council would be that of limited universal disarmament. Thus we see, as one of the results of this war, the drift of the strongest militaristic nation toward "lasting peace."

This is one of the purposes of God concerning the war. In my former letter, it was pointed out that Jesus said that the Kingdom of Heaven would be more fully, if not completely, established on earth after a great world war, which we believe is now taking place: that the Kingdom of Heaven, as described by Jesus, will consist of a new era of peace, righteousness and social justice, to follow the present era, and that it will have an economic as well as a spiritual side. These, I hold, are the purposes of God concerning the war as foretold by Jesus.

There are very plain signs and indications that these purposes are being worked out. These signs are: first, an insistence on the part of the Allies on a permanent peace; second, a quickening and deepening of the religious life of the nations at war, already taking place; third, drastic changes in the industrial life in England, pointing to a new social régime.

From these signs, now apparent on the surface of things, there is good reason to believe that a new and far more beneficent era will be the result of this greatest of world calamities; that the Kingdom of Heaven, in both a spiritual and economic aspect, will become more fully, if not completely, established. Toward this great end all Christians should direct their prayers and lend their efforts at the present time.

THOMAS J. HUGHES.

Greenville, Ohio.

HOUSEHOLD DUTIES AND FAMILY CARES severely tax a woman's strength and when wife or mother complains of fatigue, nervousness, loss of appetite or energy, she needs rest, out-of-door exercise and building up.

The first thought should be Scott's Emulsion, which is medicinal food free from alcohol or narcotics. Its nourishing force quickly fills hollow cheeks, builds healthy tissue, enriches the blood, restores the healthy glow, overcomes languor and makes tranquil nerves.

Nothing equals or compares with Scott's Emulsion for just such conditions, but insist on SCOTT'S. At any drug store. 13-114

SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD N J

Why Be Thin?

I can improve your figure—build up your strength—make you weigh what you should. I know I can, because I have helped over 35,000 women gain 10 to 35 pounds—not only gain flesh, but they are now, oh, so well—and rested!

One pupil writes: "One year ago I weighed only 100 pounds—now I weigh 126, and, oh, I feel so well!"

I want to help you attain your proper weight. In your room. Without drugs. By scientific, natural methods such as your physician approves.

If you only realized how surely, how easily, how inexpensively your weight can be increased, I am certain you would write me at once.

You will surprise your family and friends.

Do write! I want so much to help you as only a woman can. I've had a wonderful experience. Let me tell you about it. Write for my Free Booklet, No. 22.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 18. 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago

Do You Love FLOWERS?

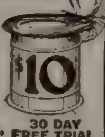
A new full sized packet of each of the following: New Red Sunflower—a great novelty; Gypsophila "Baby's Breath," white; Pyrethrum, golden yellow All for 10c

Headquarters for Bulbs Unlimited variety of flower and vegetable seeds. Catalog free. Write today.

Miss Mary E. Martin, 235 Jericho Road, Floral Park, N.Y.



INDOOR CHEMICAL CLOSET

NO SMELL—NO GERMS—SANITARY

Use in any room. Needs no plumbing, sewerage or running water. Chemicals in closet kill germs. Fine for the sick and old folks.

Destroy Outdoor Closet

Put in a warm Indoor Sanitary Closet. Empty twice monthly. Only attention necessary. Satisfied users and Boards of Health endorse it. Fully guaranteed. Write now for free literature.

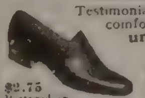
Sanitary Closet Co., 41 Colton Bldg., Toledo, O. $10 30 DAY FREE TRIAL



Ladies EASE YOUR FEET!

Testimonials from every state prove the surpassing comfort-bringing qualities of our line of unlined vici kid, O'Sullivanized

PILLOW SHOES

Neat, Long-wearing, Restful, Sensible

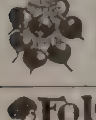
Foot Comfort is our first consideration. Write today for our catalog of Pillows for Winter, Summer, outdoor and home wear.

$2.75 Postpaid in U. S. or possessions

Pillow Shoe Co., 184 Summer St., Dept. 3, Boston, Mass.

Bicycle Book FREE

A book to delight boys' and girls' hearts. Save money! Offers guaranteed bicycles—$19.95 and up. Write nearest house. Montgomery Ward & Co. Dept. G169 New York, Chicago, Kansas City, Ft. Worth, Portland, Ore.



SAMPLE OUR SEED

Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c. One packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Earliest Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce, 10c to new customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG FREE.

C. N. Robinson & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore, Md.

Folding BATH TUB

Costs little, no plumbing, little water. Weighs 15 pounds, folds into small roll. Full length baths, far better than tin tubs. Lasts for years. Write for special agents offer and description.

Robinson Bath Cabinet Co., 4521 Factories Bldg., Toledo, O

HIGH-VALUE PATENTS

—the ONLY kind Wanted and BOUGHT by Manufacturers. Send 8c postage for new book of Extraordinary Interest to Inventors

R. S. & A. B. LACEY Barrister Building, Washington, D. C.

Slippery Weather

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

JUST ahead of us a stout man stood gravely on one toe, whirled around like a strange human marionette, hesitated, poised uncertainly, and then crashed down to the sidewalk. Some one rushed to his side, helped him up, and he walked off, limping resentfully. With the picture of his rather dangerous fall before our eyes, we skirted the bit of icy sidewalk carefully and went forward, with our eyes down, looking for other icy stretches. Once my friend slid, and I clutched her arm. She righted herself and laughed shakily.

"I wonder why it is that I hate so to fall?" she questioned.

"Everybody hates to fall," I answered her. "It might hurt, and it's rather—humiliating. Everybody hates to fall."

We walked a few blocks in silence. And then I slipped. My friend clutched my arm and I balanced, righted myself cautiously.

"Oh," said my friend, half angrily, "I hate this slippery weather!"

When one also hates slippery weather—and when one is trying, desperately hard, to play the glad game, it is hard to make responses, sometimes. But—

"Anyway," I answered, "slippery weather is good for us, once in a while. It makes us much more careful!"

LIFE had always been a rather comfortable journey to Annette Brown. She had been born into a world of ease and plenty and affection. The only child of wealthy parents, she was indulged and petted and consulted. In other words—

I have always wondered why unlimited indulgence and petting and consideration do not invariably make the recipients thereof particularly sweet-tempered, loving, considerate persons. But I've discovered that they don't. They often tend to make them just the opposite, rather snappish and inconsiderate. Too much of anything, no matter how pleasant the said anything may be, is apt to be bad for one. In other words, Annette Brown was spoiled.

Even wealthy parents sometimes cease to be wealthy. It was comparatively easy, when Annette was small, to satisfy her slightly whiny demands for doll houses and imported doll babies to fill them. When she was in her early teens it wasn't hard to keep her at the most expensive school and pay for vacation trips, heavily chaperoned, to Europe. But when she made her bow to the society of her city, when she dashed radiantly into a whirl of pleasure and extravagance, it became harder—very hard, indeed. There must be a car and much entertaining. Then another car was needed, and a larger house, so that the entertaining might be carried on in a royal way. Then there were week-end parties, and a country home to stage them in became necessary. Also a box at the opera, caterers, and gowns from foreign costumers.

And then, to keep up with it all, Annette Brown's father began to dabble in stocks—that is, he began to dabble at first. Then he plunged. Have you ever seen a timid child go in swimming; first thrusting one pink foot into the water, then the other, and then suddenly, recklessly, darting in? It was like that with Annette Brown's father. Only, unlike most timid children, he waded out too far. And when a huge wave crept in to engulf him, he was all unprepared. The wave struck him. That was all.

People called it heart failure. A few, who knew, left the heart out of it and called it failure. After the funeral, Annette Brown found herself with only a small income—scarcely more to live on than she had spent yearly on silk stockings and dainty lingerie. The wave that had carried off her father had swept town and country houses, opera boxes, expensive gowns, and many other things in its wake. After a while, Annette Brown discovered that a number of friends had gone with the houses.

It was slippery weather for Annette. Like the stout man, she stood gravely on one toe, tried to balance herself, and, like a pitifully human marionette, crumpled up in a heap. And, unlike the stout man, there was nobody to help her up. She had to get up by herself. She didn't fall once, either; she fell many times. It was very slippery weather indeed for Annette Brown.

AND then, sore at heart, and discouraged in spirit from the whacks that fate had been giving her, Annette Brown sat down beside the slipperiness of life's sidewalk to think it over. And as she sat there, she realized that other people had been sliding and slipping and falling down just as she was doing it, all the while that she had been sheltered and considered and loved. And it occurred to her that many more would be slipping and falling if they didn't walk in a mighty careful manner. And she decided that she, too, would walk carefully. Slippery weather, though she hated it, taught her to understand the meaning of life.

She cut down expenses, and bought only cheap, very necessary, clothes. And she spent her surplus—which was small—going to business college. She came in contact with girls who had lived in a world as cold and slippery as ice all of their lives. She got to know them, and as she knew them her selfishness and snobbishness fell away from her. It never came back.

She graduated from business college and began to make good in the business world. And then, suddenly, in an almost story-book fashion, she married. The announcement of her marriage flashed from the front pages of many papers, for it was a rich man—a very rich man—who married her. And erstwhile friends flocked back to her standard. They flocked eagerly.

But Annette Brown, who was no longer Annette Brown, had lived through a very slippery, wintry period of life. And she had learned to walk carefully. So she was coolly sweet to her erstwhile friends, and pleasant to the tradespeople who had snubbed her, and forgiving to the shops where credit had been refused. But that was all. She didn't do much entertaining, and she was not extravagant or wasteful. She didn't forget girls who, as clerks and stenographers, had been her friends. She ran her home herself, and, in consequence, it was a real home.

THIS is the story of Annette Brown. If the very rich man had met her before her father's death, he would have married a dressed-up doll with a very uncertain disposition—if he had married Annette Brown. As it was, he married a girl with a character—a girl who had learned to walk carefully.

Slippery weather is unpleasant. We have all, at one time or another, found that out. But it is useful, and instructive, and good for one. Unpleasant things often are good for one.

For slippery weather teaches one to walk carefully, and though there may be many bumps during the learning-to-walk period, when one has once learned to walk carefully it is worth every bump, every jar, every fall!

◆

REV. JOHN HOSKING, pastor of the Congregational Church, Nogales, Ariz., writes to the Christian Herald: "There are many destitute and sad cases here on account of the large number of Mexicans coming over into American territory for protection. A great number are in a very sad plight. The Ladies' Aid of the Congregational Church here, at their meeting last week, decided to try and get old clothing and cast-off garments and remodel them for the children for the coming winter. We have an estimated population here, at Nogales and vicinity of 20,000. This includes a large number of soldiers, who are here to protect us against the unruly and bandit class of Mexicans. Our people are taxed to their utmost to cope with the present unfortunate conditions here. Our sole purpose is to help the poor and needy. We are anxious to get parcels of clothing. Will any of your readers help to administer help to the destitute, regardless of creed or color?" Packages of clothing may be sent, charges prepaid, to Mrs. Bristol, Nogales, Ariz., president of the Ladies' Aid, or to Pastor Hosking at the Congregational Church, Nogales, Ariz.

Your Grandfather Knew These Rubber Footwear Trade Marks

CANDEE TRADE MARK

BOSTON RUBBER SHOE CO. BOSTON U.S.A. TRADE MARK

HUB MARK

AMERICAN RUBBER CO. TRADE MARK

GOODYEAR'S RUBBER GLOVE CO. TRADE MARK

WALES GOODYEAR SHOE CO. TRADE MARK

WHEN he bought a new pair of rubber boots, the thing he was most particular about was to see that one of these trade-marks was plainly stamped on each boot.

Their names are names to conjure with; each one of them represents a modest beginning, a remarkable growth, a continuous record of quality production, coupled with honorable tradition.

The thought of making any article in any way or from any materials that were not the very best for the purpose would never have occurred to any of these great manufacturers.

To-day, these same trade-marks are on good rubber footwear for your guidance in buying. Only an expert can distinguish good from poor rubber footwear by external appearance and touch. Thus it becomes a matter of self-interest and self-protection for you to make certain that any rubber footwear you buy is marked with one of these famous brands.

Seventy-four years of successful manufacturing and the experience of forty-seven great factories are back of every pair of rubber shoes, overshoes, arctics, boots, etc., produced by the United States Rubber Company, the largest rubber manufacturer in the world.

Rubbers that fit wear twice as long as rubbers that do not fit

United States Rubber Company

UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY US RUBBER SYSTEM AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

GUNN OFFICE DESKS
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Prices Lower than Others because of Freight

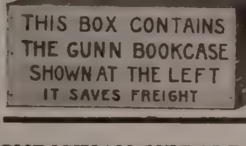
Besides getting the highest quality (we were awarded first prize at the Panama-Pacific Exposition) you save money in buying

GUNN Sectional Bookcases

Are Lower in Price than Others

because the units are shipped in a condensed, freight-saving, knock down form, about 1/4 the shipping size of any other case.



Write for our free new catalog in colors showing handsomely finished, dust-proof Colonial, Mission, Clawfoot, etc., styles in mahogany and oak. Also "In an Emperor's Den," something very interesting.

Dealers Everywhere

THE GUNN FURNITURE CO.
1824 Broadway, Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

IN the old-fashioned Methodist class meeting there was always a time for testimony and the class-leader would call upon each member in turn to tell what God had done for him. There are not now so many formal opportunities for such witnessing. This is our loss. Our prayer meetings are often only a discussion of a topic. We go weeks and weeks without acknowledging to ourselves or to any one else the goodness of God wherein we are blessed. This week, as the editor looked through the letters from the members of the League, he began to think he was back in the class meeting. Letter after letter praised God for answered prayer.

Mrs. A. C. W. thanks the Heavenly Father for many answers to prayer during the past year.

A. B. writes, "God has bountifully answered my petition which was presented through the League. He says 'I will,' and I've proved him over and over. I love him and he knows it, and I pray for all."

L. T. rejoices that her little nephew, who was very sick, is improving, and she asks prayer for her mother that she may have strength to endure and for the physician that he may have wisdom to apply the treatment which they hope will cure eye trouble of fifteen years' standing.

Miss E. W. tells of financial aid received in answer to prayer, for which she thanks the League. She testifies of many prayers answered and affirms her belief in prayer.

M. C. K., who was sick and unable to walk, praises God for healing and strength. She feels that her physicians were but instruments in God's hands.

L. H. R. is happy in the recovery of a friend for whose health she asked the prayers of the League. She asks prayer for the conversion of her brother-in-law and for the healing and comforting of her mother, who is ill and recently widowed.

L. B. G. prayed for restored health and placed her faith in the Great Physician who healed all manner of diseases and who still has power to heal, and she praises his name. She asks prayer for certain members of "our church who have enmity in their hearts toward each other" that they may let Jesus cleanse them of sin.

A Believer in Prayer gratefully acknowledges many answers to prayer. She is anxious regarding dear ones and asks prayer for them.

K. B. acknowledges the goodness of God in restoring her to health after a serious illness, and she asks prayer for an invalid mother that her sufferings may be alleviated.

A mother writes that our prayer has been answered, and her boy, threatened with total blindness, has found it possible to go to an eminent specialist. She asks further prayer that God may give the physician added skill and enable him to restore the fading sight.

L. M. says, "My prayers have been answered and are being answered every day. I am gaining spiritually, physically, mentally and morally, and my family and relatives and friends are being blessed also." She asks prayer for her boy that he may escape the pitfalls of a wicked city and that he and his family may be saved in Christ.

Mrs. C. S. thanks God for answered prayer and new bodily strength and asks prayer for help in new troubles that have afflicted her. She asks that she may have more courage and greater faith. She says, "I do feel and know God's presence as my Father." She asks prayer, too, for the conversion of her daughter's family.

Mrs. E. H. H. some time ago asked prayer for her son, who was held by both the drink and the drug habit. She writes, praising God, that he has now quit both and "the Lord has most wondrously changed his heart."

Mrs. J. F. M. asks prayer for a sister-in-law that she may recover from a serious stroke of paralysis.

Mrs. E. T. again asks prayer for her wayward son. She asks earnest prayer that he may realize his danger before he breaks his parole and it is too late.

Mrs. L. V. T. asks prayer for the conversion of her husband, and for his salvation from the drink habit, which is ruining his life and hers.

Mrs. O. M. asks prayer for financial help to cover the expense of a pending operation, and for recovery of health that she may be spared to her four little daughters.

L. A. H. asks prayer for her brothers, two of whom are in the hospital but recovering slowly, and the other of whom has recently failed in health and in business and is trying hard to get a new start and to repay every dollar of his debts. She asks prayer for the recovery of the two, and that the third may find a business in which he can succeed.

Mrs. L. B. A. S. of Fayette, Me., sends this original poem to the Prayer League:

MUSIC

THERE'S music on the hilltop,
There's music in the glen,
There's music on the war-path
From lips of wounded men.
The infant coos its music
Upon the mother's breast,
And every voice holds music
Although with care oppressed;
There's music in the grass-sod,
There's music in the air;
There's music in the tree-tops,
There's music everywhere.
But greater far the music
Suspended high in space—
The Holy Spirit's power
To souls of human race:
That music which Christ's chosen
Can truly call their own—
The Music of the ages
Around the Great White Throne.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Roanoke, W. Va.; Alvo, Neb.; Kiona, Wash.; Greensboro, N. C.; Noble, Ill.; Kansas, Ohio; Lititz, Pa.; Regina, Canada (that many may be saved during revival); Rhinelander, Wis. (that many may be saved during revival in the Methodist Church); Ravena, N. Y. (that many may be saved during revival); Raymond, N. H. (in the Methodist Church); Allahabad, India (pray for the evangelistic work in India); Leominster, Mass. (that all the states in the Union may vote prohibition); Owosso, Mich. (pray that many may be saved during revival); New Brunswick, N. J. (pray for the success of our evangelistic campaign beginning December 31).

A reader, Greensboro, N. C., asks prayer "that a Spirit-filled minister may be sent to our church here."

Two wives ask prayer that their husbands' minds may be restored; L. B., that sister's and daughter's minds may be restored; L. D., that father's mind may be restored; nine friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for themselves, friends and relatives.

S. O. G. asks prayer that cataracts may be removed from mother's eyes; R. A. C., that three children's sight may be restored; Mother and Mrs. L. A. P., that their sons' sight may be restored; four friends ask prayer that their sight may be strengthened; seven friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for friends or relatives.

Forty friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

A Sorrowful Wife asks prayer that husband and son may be delivered from the liquor habit.

Two parents ask prayer that their sons may be delivered from the liquor habit; two wives, their husbands; twelve, that other friends or relatives may be delivered from this habit.

X. Y. Z. asks prayer that two may be cured of the drug habit.

Nineteen parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons, including Mrs. O. C. S., that two sons may be saved and live together in harmony; another, L. M., that son may be saved and return home; another, Mrs. E. T., that son may be saved and not break his parole; nine wives, their husbands; thirty-nine for other relatives or friends, including Mrs. R. T., that seven children may be saved; another, M. A., that a young man may be saved and strengthened to bear the next two years of his prison life, and to bear the loss of his mother, which has occurred since he was in prison.

Eleven readers ask prayer for special blessing for others.

Sixty-one ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including a friend, that a friend may be cured of cancer and health restored; forty friends for healing for themselves, including Mrs. J. Z., that health may be restored without an operation; another, O. S. K., to be cured of an affliction; another. M. M. P., that I may be cured of eczema. Nine friends ask prayer for restoration of hearing for themselves or others.

Twenty-one friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs; including a Troubled Mother, who asks prayer for son who has lost his sight entirely, that he may make a living in a new venture he has undertaken.

Thirty-three friends ask prayer for the granting of various desires and needs, including A Believer, who prays for the safe return of a dear friend who after a year in the trenches in safety is reported missing now.

THE Prayer League Blue Book, "The Miracle of Answered Prayer," by Rev. J. G. Hallimond, is now ready and can be procured by sending 75 cents to the Christian Herald Book Department. A copy of this wonderfully helpful and inspiring book should be in the hands of every member of the Prayer League. They will find it especially helpful.

◆

AN appeal from the mountaineers of Kentucky, North Carolina and Tennessee, addressed to each of the 5,000 Presbyterian women's missionary societies in the country, was met by the Presbyterian Women's Board of Home Missions by the sending on November 21 of four representatives on a tour of inspection of the mountain country. They will acquaint themselves with the work of the mission schools, and will investigate conditions preparatory to an educational campaign which is to be made in answer to the appeal. It is claimed that in the thirty-five mountain counties of the South there are about 350,000 school children, and that only one out of every 400 ever finishes the grammar grades. There are 2,000 teachers, but only sixteen have state diplomas; and of the 900 preachers, many of whom have had scant schooling, about eighty are unlettered.

THE John Goode story which has been running in the Christian Herald has elicited many letters, and we quote from one which was received by John Goode himself from a former chum. The letter is a personal one on various subjects, and tells of a conversation with a third man about the writer's struggles against evil tendencies, whereupon the third man is quoted as exclaiming, "You ought to read the life of John Goode, published in the Christian Herald. God was merciful to him, and you will certainly have a chance."

WE find strength and comfort in the Christian Herald. It exemplifies Christian Service, and takes the right stand on the Peace question. The Sunday School Lessons, daily readings, news of the world, are helpful and in all ways it is to be desired. S. W. O.
Santa Rosa, Calif.

"Wet Feet" the Only Discomfort If You Give Him LUDEN'S

After playing outdoors without "overshoes"—the children need Luden's. Quick relief from coughs and colds. No coloring—no narcotics.
In "Yellow Box"—5c
Wm. H. Luden
Reading, Pa.

LUDENS
MENTHOL CANDY COUGH DROPS

MAKE CHRIST KING, COMBINED
(Orchestrated)
Just Published
Edited by
Prof. E. O. Excell, Dr. W. E. Biederwolf, Dr. H. W. Stough, Dr. M. H. Lyon and 70 other leading evangelists.
The Latest, Best and Most Popular Hymn Book
Combines the best songs in "Make Christ King" and the "New Make Christ King," with the latest and best copyright hymns.
Regardless of expense, the best song book ever published. Send 15c for sample copy.
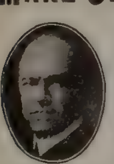
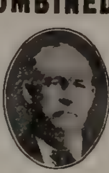
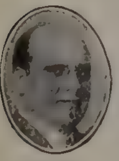
THE GLAD TIDINGS PUB. CO.
Lakeside Bldg., CHICAGO, ILL.



BIEDERWOLF

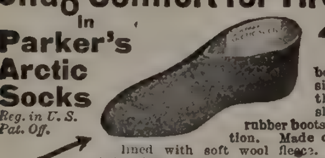


EXCELL



STOUGH

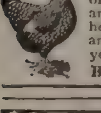
LYON



Snug Comfort for Tired Feet
In Parker's Arctic Socks
Reg. in U. S. Pat. Off.
Warm, restful, healthful, for bed-chamber, bath, sickroom. Easier than stiff-sole slippers. Worn in rubber boots absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric lined with soft wool fleece. Washable, unshrinkable. Parker's name in every pair. In all sizes at dealers or sent postpaid for 85c a pair.
J. H. PARKER CO., Dept. C, 25 James St., Malden, Mass.

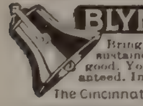
POMPEIAN
OLIVE OIL
SALAD DRESSING
MADE WITH POMPEIAN OLIVE OIL - TRY IT

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.
Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 150 Lima, Ohio



GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE
of fine bred poultry for 1917; 67 breeds illustrated and described; information on poultry, how to make hens lay, grow chicks—all facts. Low price on stock and hatching eggs. Incubators and brooders. 25 years in business. This book only 10 cts. Send today.
B. H. GREIDER, Box 14 Rheems, Pa.

$25 A WEEK IN CASE OF ACCIDENT OR ILLNESS
Paid by our new Premium Dividend Accident and Health Policies. $5000 for Death. Premium $15 or $20 yearly. We want Agents everywhere to sell these policies. Big money can be made by hustlers. For particulars write
North American Accident Insurance Co., Dept. F. Newark, N. J.



BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS
Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.
The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

HOME WEAVING LOOMS only $8.50
Big money in weaving rugs, carpets, etc., from rags and waste material. Be sure to send for free loom book. It tells all about weaving and our wonderful $8.50 and other looms. UNION LOOM WORKS, 256 Factory St., Boonville, N. Y.

Egg-o-hatch applied to eggs during incubation strengthens the chick and weakens the shell. It supplies free oxygen, absorbs the carbon dioxide and rots the shell. Makes better hatches of stronger chicks. Booklet free. Sample, treats 100 eggs, 10 cents. Package, treats 600 eggs, 60 cents postpaid.
Geo. H. Lee Co., 533 Lee Bldg., Omaha, Neb.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay
Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

STOP! Don't Go Out in the Cold
Don't go out through the snow, cold, slush or nasty weather to the old unhealthy, unsanitary open privy. Let the children, ladies or the old folks enjoy the comfort and convenience of a warm, clean, odorless sanitary indoor closet. The unsightly germ-breeding, disease-spreading outhouse is a menace to your health.
WOLVERINE Chemical Toilet
protects your health, saves you money. Pays for itself many times in a year. No water, sewer or cesspool. Endorsed by health officials. No more coughs, colds, lumbago, rheumatism, or neuralgia caused by unnecessary exposure. No more big doctor bills.
Easy to install. Costs less than a cent a day upkeep. Cheapest closet on the market. Thousands now in use. FREE BOOK tells all.
DAIL STEEL PRODUCTS CO.
404 Main St., Lansing, Mich.

REVERSIBLE "Linene" TRADE MARK
Send 2 Cents in U. S. stamps to pay postage and we will send you FREE a SAMPLE COLLAR of our New Style "Copley." State size wanted. REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. T, Boston, Mass.

A War of Fear

David Lloyd George (Present Premier of England) in 1908 Foretold Result of World-Armament

THAT there is in the great war no clean-cut quarrel between Britain and Germany, no direct clash of real interests, and that no specific aggression was needed on either side to bring it on seems an amazing assertion. That such an assertion was clearly made by David Lloyd George, the present British Prime Minister and leading opponent of peace, is even more amazing still.

Only eight and a half years ago, on July 28, 1908, Lloyd George, then Minister of the Exchequer, made a great speech at Queen's Hall, London, in which he declared that continued British preparedness for war and British press threats were the greatest menace to world-peace. Lloyd George said at that time:

It really seems incredible when you begin to reflect upon it, that it should be necessary in the twentieth century of the Christian era to hold a meeting in a civilized country to protest against the expenditure by Christian communities of £400,000,000 (two billion dollars) a year upon preparing one nation to kill another. (Hear, hear.) It is still more amazing that the leaders of opinion should be more concerned with the perfecting and the rendering more deadly of the machinery of human slaughter than with setting up some tribunal for the possible adjustment of disputes between nations. (Applause.)

. . .

Now why do nations assume this murderous attitude toward each other? Why cannot they settle their disputes in the way they settle them as individuals? If one statesman had a dispute with another about any matter, he would settle it by referring it to some tribunal, or to arbitration, or to conference; but the moment that statesman begins to settle it for other people, he at once resorts to the machinery of assassination. But why? Do nations hate each other? Do the people hate each other? In Germany you have got a number of laborers who are producing beet. They sell masses of it to us. Well, why should they kill their best customers? That is the worst way of getting on in business. (Applause.)

. . .

Now just consider for a moment. You say, "Why should Germany be frightened of us? Why should she build because of us?" Let me put two considerations to you. We started; it is not they who have started. We had an overwhelming preponderance at sea which would have secured us against any conceivable enemy. We were not satisfied. We said, "Let there be Dreadnoughts." What for? We did not require them. Nobody was building them; and if anybody had built them we could easily have outbuilt them. . . .

Well, let me put another consideration before you which I don't think is sufficiently pointed out. We always say we must have what we call a "two-Power standard." What does that mean? You must have a navy large enough to oppose a combination of any two naval Powers.

Look at the position of Germany. Her army is to her what our navy is to us—her sole defense against invasion. She has not got a two-Power standard. She may have a stronger army than France, than Russia, than Italy, than Austria, but she is between two great Powers who in combination could pour in a vastly greater number of troops than she has.

Don't forget that when you wonder why Germany is frightened at alliances and understandings and some sort of mysterious workings which appear in the press, and hints in The Times and the Daily Mail.

I remember motoring on a Sunday morning in Germany, and I picked up a German newspaper, and the only words I could read were Observer, and Daily Mail; so I asked a friend what it meant, and he said it was an extract full of menaces to Germany, and the German paper had copied it. All that means something in Germany.

Here is Germany, in the middle of Europe, with France and Russia on either side, and with a combination of their armies greater than hers. Suppose we had here a possible combination which would lay us open to invasion—suppose Germany and France, or Germany and Russia, or Germany and Austria, had fleets which in combination would be stronger than ours.

Would not we be frightened, would not we build, would not we arm? Of course we should. I want our friends, who think that because Germany is a little frightened she really means mischief to us, to remember that she is frightened for a reason which would frighten us under the same circumstances. . . .

There are people in this country, and people in a very exalted position, and people of great experience, who are firmly under the impression that Germany means to attack us.

There are people in Germany who are equally convinced that we are preparing to attack them. And from fear of each other we arm, and rush to the very quarrel which we are afraid of. . . .

What you want is a clearing up of misconceptions. All I say in conclusion is this: that it is deplorable that two great progressive communities like Germany and Britain should not be able to establish a good understanding. We have done it with France, we have done it with Russia, we have done it with the United States of America.

With all these countries we have had our feuds, troubles, and suspicions; but now we are on terms of cordiality with all three. Why not rope Germany in? We are spending in this country, every year, £60,000,000 ($300,000,000) on preparing for war. I am not going to point out what a stupendous waste that is, and what might be done with it.

But are there not plenty of things for us to fight; worse enemies than Germany—intemperance, ignorance, crime, vice, disease, and that most dread of all invaders that sooner or later reaches every home? Are the dominions of Death not wide enough that nations should spend £400,000,000 per year on extending them?

There were Crusades in the Middle Ages when princes and kings dropped their feuds and abandoned their quarrels for some great holy purpose.

There is a nobler crusade awaiting princes and peoples today. Let them cast aside suspicion, mistrust, quarrels, feuds, and unite in redeeming humanity from the quagmire where millions are sunk in misery and despair.

The War in Europe

Continued from page 31

On the Russian front in Europe only very minor skirmishes took place; even in the wooded Carpathians, the scene of so much fighting lately, the week was a quiet one.

This year, in contrast to the two previous ones, there does not seem to have been any formal or informal suspension of hostilities on any of the fronts on account of the Christmas holidays.

In Rumania the week has been quite animated and the fighting severe. A short description of northeastern Rumania will perhaps help to understand the military movements.

From Buzeu a line of railroad runs north to Rimnik, and another northeast to Galatz, these two lines forming two sides of a triangle whose third side is formed by an east and west line drawn from Galatz to Rimnik. This triangle is divided practically in halves by the Buzeu River, which runs east and then northeast from Buzeu, finally falling into the Sereth to the west of Galatz. Much more than half way between the town of Buzeu and the river Sereth, on the river Buzeu and directly to the west of Braila, lies the town of Rakovitzcheui.

This town was captured by the Teutons on December 21, who thus secured a foothold on the Galatz-Rimnik line. They then began an advance along the Buzeu-Rimnik railroad toward Rimnik, but shortly before reaching that town found their way barred by a large force of Russians, who had entrenched and fortified themselves.

A five-day battle ensued, which was finally won by the Teutons, who drove the Russians out of their entrenchments and back to and through the town of Rimnik, which town the Teutons occupied. About 10,000 Russians were captured. This victory put the Teutons in possession of the western end of the Rimnik-Galatz line, and they immediately started in pursuit of the Russians and to the northeast of Rimnik, between that town and Focsani, inflicted another defeat on them, capturing a further 3,000.

While these things were taking place around Rimnik, another Teuton force following the railroad running from Buzeu reached, attacked and took the village of Filipechti, which the Russians had fortified, taking some 5,500 Russians with the village.

Thereafter the army continued to move to the northeast along this railway, and as this record closes, it is reported to have reached the outskirts of the city of Braila itself, whose capture is said to be imminent, as it is threatened not only from this side by this army, but by another army on the other side of the Danube operating from Macin in the Dobrudja.

In Dobrudja the Russians have been driven back completely into the northwest corner of that province. Tulcea on the Danube, between the point where the Danube splits into the Kilia and St. George branches and the point where the Sulina branch splits off from the St. George branch, and Isaccea, farther west, on the east bank of the river, directly opposite Braila, have fallen into German hands. There is no bridge over the Danube either here or at any point on its course to the east to the Black Sea. It will therefore be quite interesting to see how the Russians, penned as they are in a small triangle, succeed in escaping if they do.

Heat Your Home Nature's Way-with Warm Moistair

Protect your family!

When the blizzards rage, and your family is [illegible] indoors, you don't need to worry about [illegible] draughts either—not when a trusty Round Oak Moistair Heating System is doing duty down cellar. It permanently solves the healthful heating problem.

When you replace your present plant, or build, insist on a

ROUND OAK
Moistair Heating System

Automatically Humidifies The Round Oak System supplies a constant current of warm fresh air, which is always free from dirt, dust and gas. But unlike any other system, it automatically humidifies this air making it a hundred times more healthful to breathe.

You know the Round Oak STOVE. This heating system is made by the same folks and has over 46 years' experience behind it. Durable, like Round Oak STOVES—built for generations of service—simple, convenient, responsive—easiest to operate and to keep clean—and absolutely dependable.

Saves Fuel by the Ton Because of the humidifying feature and other exclusive improvements listed here, the Round Oak is the most economical home heating plant money can buy. Proved by more than 60,000 enthusiastic users. Round Oak Systems are fully explained in our new book which is FREE! Write for It!

With book we'll send blank which filled out by you and returned to us will enable us to draw up a Complete Heating Plan to meet your needs! Plan is FREE—places you under no obligations. Compare cost and efficiency with all others! Write for book NOW. With it goes name of nearest Round Oak dealer.

Genuine Round Oaks sold Only with the trade-mark of Round Oak Indian. Many dealers sell on easy terms.

The Beckwith Company
Round Oak Folks
24 Front Street, Dowagiac, Mich.
Established 1871

Five Star Points of Round Oak Supremacy

Health [illegible] ventilates and HUMIDIFIES.

Comfort Delivers pure, warm, ever-changing [illegible]

Economy Longest fire travel [illegible] King, [illegible] fire pot, [illegible] combustion chamber [illegible] perfect [illegible] heat [illegible] fuel.

Convenience Single [illegible] to operate.

Durability Materials used stand highest [illegible] drilled [illegible] guaranteed [illegible]

SMITH BROTHERS'
S.B. COUGH DROPS

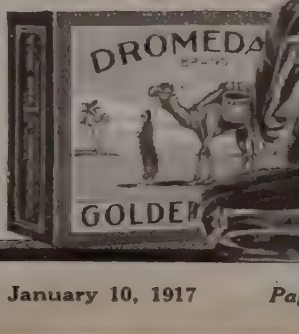
Absolutely Pure. Just enough charcoal to sweeten the stomach.

ONE NICKEL

Put a Drop in your mouth at bedtime to loosen the phlegm

Made by the Makers of S. B. Chewing Gum and Lasses Kisses

SMITH BROTHERS'
S. B.
COUGH DROPS.
S. B.
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
TRADE MARK
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.
COUGH DROPS.
SB



Dromedary Dates

Eat Dromedary Dates daily—as a food, a dainty, a confection. These are the finest fruit of the Arabian palms brought to you in individual, dust-proof packages.

THE HILLS BROTHERS COMPANY
Dept. S. 375 Washington Street, New York

BIBLE PICTURE STUDY

We confidently expect to announce the winners in the First Bible Picture Contest not later than February 14, and we may be able to do so in an earlier issue

THE VIRTUE OF PATIENCE

WHEN the participants in the first Christian Herald Bible Picture Study were sending in their encomiums, they told of numerous features in which the experience had proved of value to them.

All agreed, of course, that the competition gave a delightful impetus to the study of the Bible.

Many told how it had strengthened their memory; others spoke of their improved vocabulary and general literary style.

Numerous subscribers wrote enthusiastically of the entertainment that had been provided by the contest. There were others who praised it for the aid it had given in teaching them to concentrate. Improvement in spelling was widely acknowledged.

The awakening of the sense of visual perception, education in analysis, and the practical exercise of perseverance were among the benefits freely applauded.

But nobody, so far as we can recollect, has extolled the first Bible Study in connection with the cultivation of that beautiful virtue, patience.

So we take this opportunity to tell the contestants how wonderfully well they have proved their possession of this virtue. They have been exceedingly patient. Indeed, we have been very proud, while taking careful notice of the equanimity of the multitude of those who have waited with such praiseworthy patience for the final report.

Few have made any complaint at the delay which all knew was beyond control. We venture to say that only the subscribers of the Christian Herald could evince such a splendid solidarity in the exercise of patience under the existing conditions. All have had faith in us. All have known that we were doing our best to facilitate the final decision and report.

Every participant who devoted hours to the working out of solutions in the first contest has numerous reasons to hold himself, or herself, in good esteem; for with all the other benefits acquired, it is certain that the test of patience has been exceedingly valuable.

As we reported last week, the Judges have made their joint decision. They worked conscientiously, as everybody knew they would. They are all busy men, and it so happened that they were unusually occupied during the past few months, aside from having the responsibility of the Christian Herald Bible Picture Study on their minds.

However, the complete schedule of Bible selections is now in the hands of the examiners. Each and every Reply Book, or other form of list, is being inspected with thoroughness. The interests of all contestants are being—and have been—carefully safeguarded. Costly precautions have been taken that the average person would probably consider unnecessary. But that is the Christian Herald's way of doing things.

It is expected that the examiners will have finished their important duties so that a complete report can be published in one of the February issues. It is conjectured that this will be the one dated February 14; yet it may be the last issue of next month, or it may be as early as the second number.

The pictures will probably be reprinted in miniature with the best fitting verses that were submitted from "Gems from the Bible." The names of all the winners will be made public. If ties should be found by the examiners, the same amount of cash reward will be given to each.

Christian Herald readers are gently but firmly requested not to write us about the First Study until the whole report is published. There is nothing that we can say or do in the interim.

The second competition is announced. The title has been changed to the Christian Herald Second Bible Picture Study. The first of the pictures will appear next week.

There will be a notable improvement in the closing features of the forthcoming Study. By a new system of checking and a verification plan on the part of the participants, as well as by arranging for a committee that can hold sessions in New York City, it is expected that the final report will be published within a comparatively short time after the sets of verses are in. Therefore, the virtue of patience will not be so impressively taught in the new competition; and we opine that our friends will be glad to waive this notable detail.

Those who participated in last year's Study will surely enter the present one.

SECOND BIBLE PICTURE STUDY

A Delightful Home Pastime Open to All Members of the Household

Only a Week to Wait Now

HERE is information that will add to your enjoyment. We give you essential details of the new Bible Picture Study which starts next week. Whether or not you participated in last year's Contest, you should read every word of this.

A Fascinating Home Study

One thousand rewards will be given to the thousand persons who send the most complete lists of best verses. Wherever two or more lists are found equally meritorious, the reward will be duplicated for each.

Sixty Pictures Needing Verses

Sixty Pictures will be printed in the Christian Herald in the issues beginning January 17 and ending May 30, 1917. You will find these illustrations interesting.

The Study will consist of selecting Bible verses that best fit the pictures.

"Pearls from the Bible"

The Verses are to be selected by each participant from a book entitled "Pearls from the Bible." This contains about 2,000 verses. It is compiled from the Old and New Testaments, and embodies prophecies, precepts and promises. You will find them particularly interesting as well as inspiring.

"The Answer Book"

The verses may be written by participants in a specially printed pamphlet termed the "Answer Book." As many as five verses may be submitted for each picture.

How to Obtain an Outfit

THE Bible Picture Study Outfit consists of "Pearls from the Bible" and the Answer Book. An Outfit can be obtained on the terms given below:

With Renewal of Subscription

You can obtain the Bible Picture Study Outfit, in combination with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.35.

Or you can obtain the Bible Picture Study Outfit by securing for us one NEW six months' subscription to the Christian Herald at $1.00.

Great Cash Distribution

The minimum total sum that we promise to pay is $5,628 in cash on the thousand rewards. This sum will be increased to whatever extent the number of winners is increased by ties.

Definite Closing Date

The last pictures will be printed in the issue of May 30, 1917, and no lists will be received before that date, nor will any Record Books (or lists) be accepted unless they are either in the offices of the Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, before 3 P. M. of June 27, or unless provable by postmark, or otherwise, that a Record Book was deposited in a post office or an express office before the date above specified.

Exclusive Attention of Judges

The Committee of Judges will consist of persons of integrity and capability, who will be engaged to hold sessions as often as feasible, so that their decisions may be rendered at the earliest practicable date after the close of the Study.

The Rules are in the Answer Book. You should read the announcements that appear in each issue of the Christian Herald hereafter.

Principal Reward $1000 in Cash

The main cash reward is one thousand dollars. The privilege to gain this is just as freely open to you as to any one else. A reward of $1000 gained by you and invested in a 5 per cent. bond or mortgage means practically a dollar a week in interest. At 6 per cent. it would mean about $1.20 weekly. Figure what you could do with this steady income, and bear in mind that your principal is intact.

Prospectus Mailed Free

The prospectus, giving more detailed information about the Christian Herald Second Bible Picture Study, will be mailed free on request. Ask for the Bible Picture Study Prospectus. Address:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

MAGAZINE BARGAINS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has made arrangements with the publishers of other magazines whereby our readers can obtain two or more magazines in a club at a considerable saving over the price if ordered singly. The prices given here are for one year (new or renewal) and can go to different addresses, except in a few cases noted otherwise. No one can fill your order for these magazines at any lower prices. If the magazines wanted are not given below, ask us for special quotation. Canadian postage, 50c additional; foreign, $1.00.

Christian Herald... McCall's (pattern)..	$2.00 .50	$2.00 Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... Today's (pattern)...	$2.00 .50	$2.00 Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... Woman's World....	$2.00 .35	$2.00 Save 35 cts.
Christian Herald... Ladies' World......	$2.00 1.00	$2.25 Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Every Week........	$2.00 1.00	$2.25 Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Boys' Magazine (or Boys' Life)..........	$2.00 1.00	$2.25 Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Today's (pattern)... McCall's (pattern)..	$2.00 .50 .50	$2.25 Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Modern Priscilla...	$2.00 1.00	$2.35 Save 65 cts.
Christian Herald... Etude (Music).......	$2.00 1.50	$2.50 Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Little Folks.........	$2.00 1.00	$2.50 Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... Mother's Magazine	$2.00 1.50	$2.50 Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Garden Magazine..	$2.00 2.00	$2.50 Save $1.50
Christian Herald, 1 yr. Am. Poultry Ad., 2 yrs. Book—200 Eggs a Year per Hen....	$2.00 1.00 .50	$2.50 Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Modern Priscilla... Home Needlework..	$2.00 1.00 .75	$2.75 Save $1.00
Christian Herald... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.50	$2.75 Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Delineator..........	$2.00 1.50	$2.75 Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... American (or Everybody's)....	$2.00 1.50	$2.75 Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... Pictorial Review...	$2.00 1.50	$3.00 Save 50 cts.
Christian Herald... Ladies' World...... Mother's Magazine.	$2.00 1.00 1.50	$3.00 Save $1.50
Christian Herald... McCall's (pattern).. Youth's Companion	$2.00 .50 2.00	$3.50 Save $1.00
Christian Herald... *Woman's Home Companion..... *American......... (*Must go to same address)	$2.00 1.50 1.50	$3.50 Save $1.50
Christian Herald... Modern Priscilla... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.00 1.50	$3.60 Save 90 cts.
Christian Herald... Pictorial Review... Woman's Home Companion.....	$2.00 1.50 1.50	$4.25 Save 75 cts.
Christian Herald... *Youth's Companion *Review of Reviews.. (*Must go to same address)	$2.00 2.00 3.00	$4.50 Save $2.50

CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House New York, N. Y.

The Wicked John Goode

Continued from page 33

to leave, an insane impulse seized me, and I lifted her trunk in my arms, hurled it through the door and down a flight of stairs.

OFF I went to Coney Island and began all over again. In a few days I sobered up sufficiently to remember Jane and went up to the hospital to see her. She was somewhat better, enough so that she could speak. She saw me coming through the ward. Throwing her arms about my neck she cried in agony and despair:

"Oh God, what will become of me now?"

That scene and that cry and the look on her face struck terror to my heart. At once I was dead sober—as sober as I am now. I was a thinking man again. And then my head swam. Perspiration stood out in beads on my forehead. My wife was going to die! No! No! it couldn't be! It mustn't be! There must be something I could do. And then it flashed across my mind. The Mission! there I could get help! I'd ask them. I'd write Dr. Hallimond!

All the way back to Coney Island I thought of what I'd done. I cried to God for wisdom, for help—for the life of my dear wife. For the first time I felt that I had offended God—that God cared what I did. That feeling was very strong in me as I sat down and wrote to Dr. Hallimond.

In the letter I made a full, frank statement. I told him of the dastardly things I'd done. I asked him for help—for something—anything for my wife. "For God's sake do for her—save her life." For myself I asked nothing save forgiveness. I did ask that—I asked him to pray for me.

FOR several days I awaited a reply from him. None came! What could have happened? Surely he was not throwing me over. No, I knew better. My anxiety was making me ill when a letter came postmarked Brooklyn. Who in Brooklyn would write me? Hastily I tore open the envelope and read the signature. The letter came from one of the members of the Wednesday Night Bible Class and his wife—Mr. and Mrs. Putnam. So long as God gives me the power to remember, this sentence from that letter will stay with me: "If you don't come up to our house, and that right away, we'll have to come down there to you."

There indeed was friendship and love and kindness. Dr. Hallimond, when my letter reached him, was laid up temporarily. At once he wrote to Mr. Putnam to get on the job, and he hadn't lost a moment in doing so. Instinctively I knew that whatever there was to do for Jane had already been done. My relief was overpowering! I went all to pieces! I couldn't answer that letter, it broke me up when I tried to. Then another one came much like the first, and I went up to their home—up Flatbush way somewhere.

On bended knees we prayed long and earnestly.

When I reached Coney Island again a great load had been lifted from my mind. With Mrs. Putnam on the job I knew how Jane would fare. And until the day Jane passed away Mrs. Putnam was the good angel. Countless kindnesses and loving attentions she showered on my wife and became closer to her than any woman friend she ever had. Such is the power and love in the religion of Jesus Christ.

With a set jaw I returned to my dishwashing and behaved myself. I finished the season at it, and I finished without once side-stepping in any way. Jane recovered shortly sufficiently to be moved to her brother's house, and I again began sending her what money I could spare from my seven dollars a week.

For some time before the end of the season I had longed for the Mission and its good friends, for the influence it exerted, but I wanted to get on my feet without their aid. At the close of the Mardi Gras I was glad to get away from the Island. The call of the Mission was strong upon me and I wanted more money. Jane was stronger and I wanted her to have her own home. That desire was stronger than it ever had been before.

To be continued

Young People's Topics for January 21

Seeing the Good in Others

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Phil. 2 : 1–11.

THERE is a tale of two men who were walking across country on a hot summer day. One of them burst out with the exclamation, "Did you ever see such dust?" and the other replied, "Why, I hadn't noticed it; but just see how the sun brings out the colors on that hillside over there." In our walk through life we can see the dust, the mire, the soiled spots on the characters of other people, just as they can see the flaws in us; but there is neither profit nor joy in the sight. But if we wish, we may see the play of divine light on the hearts and minds of the people about us. We can see one overcoming temptation, another living at peace among contentions, another giving unselfish service, one standing firmly for absolute truth in every element of business though competition seems to gain by compromise, and still another suffering personal loss that the Kingdom may go forward. We shall see some bearing pain with a smile and others doing the hard thing cheerfully and enduring weariness willingly. If we look for it, we shall see much of God in the lives of men and women, and God is good. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus, who . . . took upon him the form of a servant . . . and . . . humbled himself. . . . Wherefore God hath highly exalted him." Often it is our pride that blinds us to the good we might see; but if, humbled by the sight of the evil in ourselves, we apprehend, even in part, the mind of Christ, the world will be glorified for us through the good that gleams, like threads of gold, in every strand of the life about us.

"Star" Christians

Epworth League Topic. Dan. 12 : 3; John 15 : 8–16; Matt. 13 : 43.

LIGHT always means work. The light of the sun is a part of the manifestation of solar energy. Electric light glows because a dynamo is being driven by an engine somewhere. Each reference given to aid the study of this lesson lays stress upon service. "They that be wise shall shine." Yes. But "they shall turn many to righteousness." And if you think turning many to righteousness isn't work, well, just watch Billy Sunday's collar melt. "Herein is my Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit. So shall ye be my disciples." "I have chosen you, that ye should go and bring forth fruit." "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the Kingdom." This last verse is at the end of the explanation of the parable of the wheat and the tares. The righteous shine forth only after the angels have cast out "all things that offend and them that do iniquity." You remember John and James wanted to be "stars" in the kingdom. They thought they were willing to pay the price. Are you? The price is lifelong, unselfish service, fruit-bearing. Has your Christian life borne fruit? Has one other life been brought nearer to God because of your faith and your loving guidance? Or have you prayed God to send forth laborers into the harvest and then stood calmly at one side to watch the procession? Does your life show forth your Christ? Are you a living epistle known and read of all men, or do people wonder at your assurance when you stand up at the general call of Christians to their feet? The message of this lesson might be expressed as "Get busy."

Deformities of the Back

Greatly benefited or entirely cured by the Philo Burt Method.

The 25,000 cases successfully treated in our experience of over fifteen years is absolute proof of this statement.

No matter how serious your deformity, no matter what treatments you have tried, think of the thousands of sufferers this method has made well and happy. We will prove the value of the Philo Burt Method in your own case.

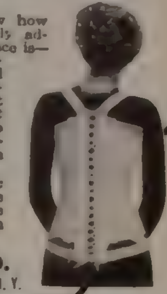
The Philo Burt Appliance on 30 Days' Trial

Since you run no risk there is no reason why you should not accept our offer at once.

The photographs here show how light, cool, elastic and easily adjustable the Philo Burt Appliance is—how different from the old torturing plaster, leather or steel jackets. To weakened or deformed spines it brings almost immediate relief even in the most serious cases. You owe it to yourself to investigate it thoroughly. The price is within reach of all.

Send for our Free Book today and describe the nature and condition of your trouble as fully as possible so we can give you definite information.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO.
Odd Fellows Temple, M 207 Jamestown, N. Y.



SMYTH'S 60 INCUBATOR
ALL STEEL

ON 30 DAYS' FREE TRIAL $3.92
HOLDS FULL 60 EGGS

$3.92 60 EGGS

To quickly popularize SMYTH'S All Steel 60 Egg Incubator, we will sell 5,000 at only $3.92 each. Guaranteed to hatch as large a per cent of strong, healthy chicks as any incubator made, regardless of name, make or price. Made of polished steel; with double walled air chamber, 1917 improved disc regulator, standard thermometer visible through glass damper, best safety metal lamp, heat distributing drum around outer edges, water jacketed heat flue and automatic heat regulation insuring even temperature and moisture in every part of egg chamber, and proper heat to eggs all the time. Full directions with each incubator. SEND $1.00 deposit and we will send you this high-grade, latest improved SMYTH'S all steel 60 egg incubator by express, subject to examination. Pay balance $2.92 and express charges to agent after you find the incubator perfectly satisfactory and the greatest incubator bargain in the world, then take it home and TRY IT 30 DAYS at our risk and if you do not find it as good a hatcher as you ever saw or heard of, regardless of price or make or if for any reason you are dissatisfied, return at our expense and we will refund your $1.00 and freight charges. If you want incubator sent by PARCEL POST send $3.92 and enough money extra to pay the parcel post postage and we'll send on same liberal trial offer as above. Shipping weight 15 lbs. We make very low prices on larger incubators, brooders, and poultry supplies of all kinds in our big free Incubator Catalog sent you free upon request. Order incubator or catalog today.

JOHN M. SMYTH MDSE CO. 703-747 Washington Blvd. CHICAGO

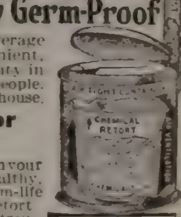
Comfort Indoor Closet
Odorless Sanitary Germ-Proof

Every home without sewerage needs one. Most convenient, meritorious home necessity in a century. A boon to sick people. Can be placed anywhere in house.

Abolish Outdoor Closet

Put a warm Comfort Toilet in your home, a guarantee of healthy, sanitary conditions. Germ-life killed by chemicals in retort. Emptied once a month—no trouble. Needs no other attention. Boards of Health endorse it. Write now for literature, prices, etc.

Wanted—Exclusive territory.
COMFORT CHEMICAL CLOSET CO.



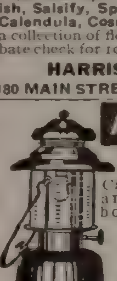
SENT ON 30 DAYS FREE Trial

Agents
541 Factories Bldg.
TOLEDO, OHIO

20 Packets Seeds—10c.

We want every reader to test "HARRIS SEEDS THAT HUSTLE." Send 10c. now — before you forget—for this mammoth collection. We send you 20 separate packets finest varieties—one each of Beets, Carrot, Cabbage, Celery, Cucumber, Lettuce, Cress, Muskmelon, Watermelon, Onion, Parsley, Parsnip, Radish, Salsify, Spinach, Tomato, Giant Mixed Poppies, Calendula, Cosmos; also Children's Botanical Garden, a collection of flower seeds. With this collection we send rebate check for 10c. and big catalogue of world's finest seeds.

HARRIS BROS. SEED COMPANY
180 MAIN STREET MT. PLEASANT, MICH.



ACORN UNI-LITE FREE

Turns night into day. 300 candle power. Carry as a lantern; use anywhere as a lamp. Weatherproof. For house, barn, garage, camp and around the farm. Write for big, free offer. Special opportunity to farmers, stockmen and motorists. Agents make big money. Write tonight for new 1916-1917 offer.

ACORN BRASS MFG. CO., 182 Uni-Lite Bldg., Chicago

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

Lasts a lifetime—all steel. Handsome, costs less than wood, more durable. We can save you money. Write for free catalog and special prices.

KOKOMO FENCE MACH. CO.
499 North Street, Kokomo, Ind.

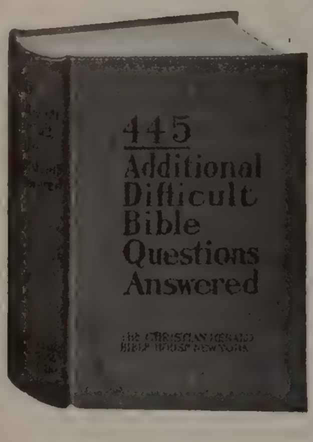
Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it, write THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N.Y.

CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOKS

445 ADDITIONAL DIFFICULT BIBLE QUESTIONS ANSWERED

A HELP OVER THE HARD PLACES



WHEN the earlier volume entitled "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered" was published, it met with such an enthusiastic reception that we have been encouraged to follow it with a second volume. Like its predecessor, it forms a compact repository of information, invaluable to pastors, scholars, students, laymen and the general reader. It illuminates and explains a large number of obscure passages, many of which might be misunderstood by the average reader.

Presenting the work of the ablest and soundest expositors in all the denominations, the new book will be found a help to many inquiring souls over the "hard places" in the Bible, and a comfort and encouragement to all who are earnestly striving to learn the truth as presented in the Word.

We will send a copy of "445 Additional Difficult Bible Questions Answered," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.35.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.

THE MIRACLE OF ANSWERED PRAYER

By REV. JOHN G. HALLIMOND, D.D.

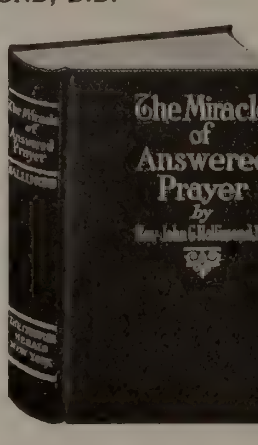
A Book With a Message for Every Soul

THINK of hundreds of authenticated answers to prayer, multiplied in the course of a year to thousands. This is the story told in "The Miracle of Answered Prayer." It is a recital of tremendous and conclusive importance to the Christian world and one which cannot be controverted. It is a book that no one can read without becoming convinced of its truth and of the wonderful goodness of our Heavenly Father toward all who seek Him in the spirit of faith and contrition.

"The Miracle of Answered Prayer" should be in the hands of every Christian in America. The facts it sets forth furnish absolute evidence of the literal fulfillment of the Saviour's promise to his followers: "Whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name He will give it you." "Ask, and it shall be given you. . . ."

We will send a copy of "The Miracle of Answered Prayer," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.35.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.



THEODOSIA'S HEARTSTRINGS

MISS THEODOSIA'S
HEARTSTRINGS
ANNIE HAMILTON
DONNELL

IN this irresistible novel of happiness, Miss Theodosia Baxter wandered up and down the world for three years in search of something to interest her, only to come home and find it on the upper step of her own front porch. What she found was a very much surprised child who was holding a baby on the small area of her knees. They were two of the Flagg children who lived in the house next door—Evangeline the voluble and little Elly Precious, who possessed six toes. Ere long Miss Theodosia made the acquaintance of Stefena, the eldest of the Flagg children, and little deaf Carruthers. How this quartette of youngsters reached the heart of the staid and travel-worn woman and eventually brought a romance into her own life is set forth in Mrs. Donnell's characteristic style.

We will send a copy of "Miss Theodosia's Heartstrings," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.50.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.

JUST DAVID

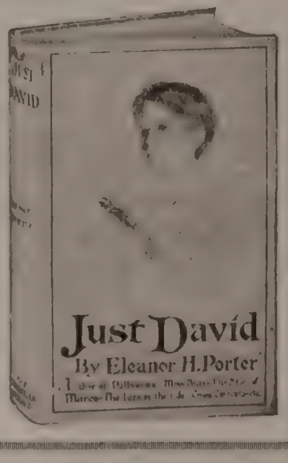
By Eleanor H. Porter, Author of "Pollyanna"

EVERYONE who has read "Pollyanna" should read "Just David." He is as lovable as the heroine of the Glad Book. Mrs. Porter believes that the idea of the possibility of happiness should be held up to people, but she does not attempt to preach about it. She simply lets her characters speak.

"Just David" is not only a story of amazing popular appeal, but in its way a genuine masterpiece as well. Everyone who reads it has the same enthusiasm. David is one of those characters that seem too real to stay inside a book. It is safe to say that every single reader will regard him as a cherished friend. "Just David," bound in cloth, with frontispiece, postpaid, $1.25 net.

We will send a copy of "Just David," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.50.

Or, we will send a copy of "Just David," postpaid, to any present subscriber as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription accompanied by $2.00.



THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, N. Y.

Merry Moments

WHEN the Merry Moments column was started we announced that we could only return contributions when postage was enclosed. Some contributors, evidently forgetting this, have written inquiring as to the non-return of their contributions.

FINAL ACTION. As vice-president of the Pullman Company, General Horace Porter used to receive numerous complaints from supersensitive military men who had occasion to travel in the company's cars.

One of these, riding on an extra train hurriedly added one day in a holiday rush, deemed the negro porter negligent in some small details and demanded his instant discharge.

Realizing that, in the circumstances, the employes had been excusable, the General replied simply that investigation was being made. Again the protest came. Then again and again, each more violent, vehement and vindictive than the last. Attempts to mollify the complainant failed utterly and he wrote finally with such ferocity that the General dictated this response:

"Sir: Thanking you for your favor, permit me to say that we have hanged the porter, shot the conductor, burned the cars and discontinued the line. I trust that this will be entirely satisfactory to you."

A TRIAL BALANCE. When Jonah's fellow-passengers tossed him overboard they evidently regarded him as neither prophet nor loss.

PERHAPS A SETTING HEN. The teacher had recited "The Landing of the Pilgrims." Then she requested each pupil to draw from imagination a picture of Plymouth Rock. Most of them went to work at once, but one little fellow hesitated, and at last raised his hand.

"Well, Willie, what is it?" asked the teacher.

"Please, Ma'am, do you want us to draw a hen or rooster?"

WORKED BOTH WAYS. "Madam," said the conductor during the recent infantile paralysis epidemic, "you cannot travel on this train unless you have a health certificate for your child."

"The law does not require a child of 16 to have a certificate," said the mother as she tossed her head and entered the car.

When the conductor again confronted the haughty mother he returned to her a half-fare ticket which she had just tendered for the child, making this observation:

"But the law does require that children over 12 years of age pay full fare."

The woman's eyes flashed fire, her bosom registered her emotion, her hands clinched and her feet tapped—but she paid.

AND A MEMBER OF THE FAMILY TOO. Helen, aged seven, was feeding the cat at the dinner table. Her father told her that the cat must wait, whereupon the small girl answered, "I think it is a shame, just because she is a poor dumb animal, to treat her just like a hired girl."

A SIMPLE TRANSPOSITION. Little four-year-old Bessie was putting on her shoes for the first time and got them exchanged.

Going to her mother, she said triumphantly, "See, Mamma, I got my shoes on."

"Oh!" said Mamma, "but you have them on the wrong feet."

Bessie looked down doubtfully and said. "I don't see how that can be. These are all the feet I got."

Japan Seeking Toward Christ

Continued from page 29

independence from foreign domination, and this is being succeeded by a social reorganization, founded on Christian influence. Christ is doing for Japan what the Occident and the twentieth century could not do. Formalism and denominationalism on the part of Christian countries have met their defeat in an impact with the heathenism of a medieval nation, secluded until threescore years ago, but now eagerly reaching out, not for foreign leadership, but for enlightenment. Meiji has given place to Taisho, enlightenment to righteousness, as a national ideal.

Japan has had her enlightenment as to the benefits and disadvantages of Western civilization, and is now turning to righteousness as the force that can carry the sun flag to the ports of the world and prevent millions of thinking, reading, oppressed laborers from using anarchy as a means of securing the rights of manhood. Foreignization has failed because of its faults, but there is a wonderful turning toward the Fatherhood of God, the brotherhood of man, the equality of woman, the redeeming power of a living Christ. Formal Christianity is relatively weaker than it was a quarter of a century ago. The greatest Christian leaders I have met in Japan have been Japanese.

The millennium has not come. We must admit that sin is still rampant; indifference to vice is nation-wide; pessimism rules the educated classes and agnosticism permeates all the strata of society. Superstition still crowds heathen temples and commercial dishonesty is causing grave fears to the leaders of the nation. Japan has great need of Christ and great need of foreign help to provide new outfits for a native church that has outgrown its swaddling-clothes, but is still too poor to provide all the means of growth that are needed. American Christians have a great opportunity in Japan. A thousand doors are open to Christianity. This is the testing-time. Christianity will win on its merits, or lose because of the defects or the indifference of those who bear the name of "Christian."

In one of the missionary homes in Tokyo twoscore or so university men were singing, "I surrender all." This is a new sentiment in those who have shouted "Banzai." But in one corner of the room was the winged figure of the Samothracian Victory, typifying to that open-minded group of enthusiasts the victory that comes from complete surrender to God. Japan will never willingly surrender to foreignization, either in politics, education, or religion. But some day she will surrender all to God, for the Kingdom is coming in Japan.

New York a Manufacturing City

FIGURES have just become available of the output of the city of New York in 1914. According to this compilation, there were in the city 585,279 workers in 29,621 establishments, earning in wages $357,498,000 a year, and producing from raw materials worth $1,229,155,000 finished products worth $2,292,832,000. Women's clothing headed the list, employing 104,834 persons and turning $180,778,000 worth of raw material into $340,000,000 worth of merchandise. The men's clothing industry employed 56,853 persons and produced goods worth $192,112,000 from raw materials worth $95,144,000. Next to the clothing business, the printing and publishing business is the greatest in the metropolis, employing 48,348 persons in 3,185 establishments, turning out a product worth $215,571,000 from raw materials worth $56,186,000. The meat business turned $97,457,000 worth of material into $110,707,000 worth of products. Bakeries employing 19,870 persons made $80,056,000 worth of bread and cake from $42,550,000 worth of material. Fifty-three establishments, employing 6,283 persons, turned $15,887,000 worth of good materials into $56,312,000 worth of beer and liquors. Materials worth $12,799,000 were turned into $30,156,000 worth of patent medicines and druggists' preparations. And these are only the principal industries of the greater city, which include, besides the manufacture of machinery, brass, bronze and copper products, cigars and cigar boxes, brushes, buttons, railway equipment, chocolate and cocoa products, roasted coffee and ground spices, confectionery, copper, tin and sheet-iron products, corsets and cotton goods, flavoring extracts, food preparations, men's furnishings, hats, caps, hosiery, ice, printing ink, jewelry, labels and tags, leather goods, mirrors, mucilage and paste, pianos and other musical instruments, optical goods, paint and varnish, fountain pens, ships, silks, soap, stoves and furnaces, typewriters and supplies, umbrellas and canes and undertaking goods.

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

H. P. A., Newark, N. J. In Paul's defense before Agrippa (Acts 26 : 28) Agrippa says, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian." In our Bible class, our leader held the opinion that Agrippa said this in sarcasm, pronouncing the word "Christian" with a sneer. Our leader said that the name "Christian" was bestowed upon the followers of Christ in derision, as persons entitled only to contempt, and that therefore Agrippa, a Jew by blood and a Roman in sympathy—and especially in the presence of Festus—would not be likely to make such a remark in any other way.

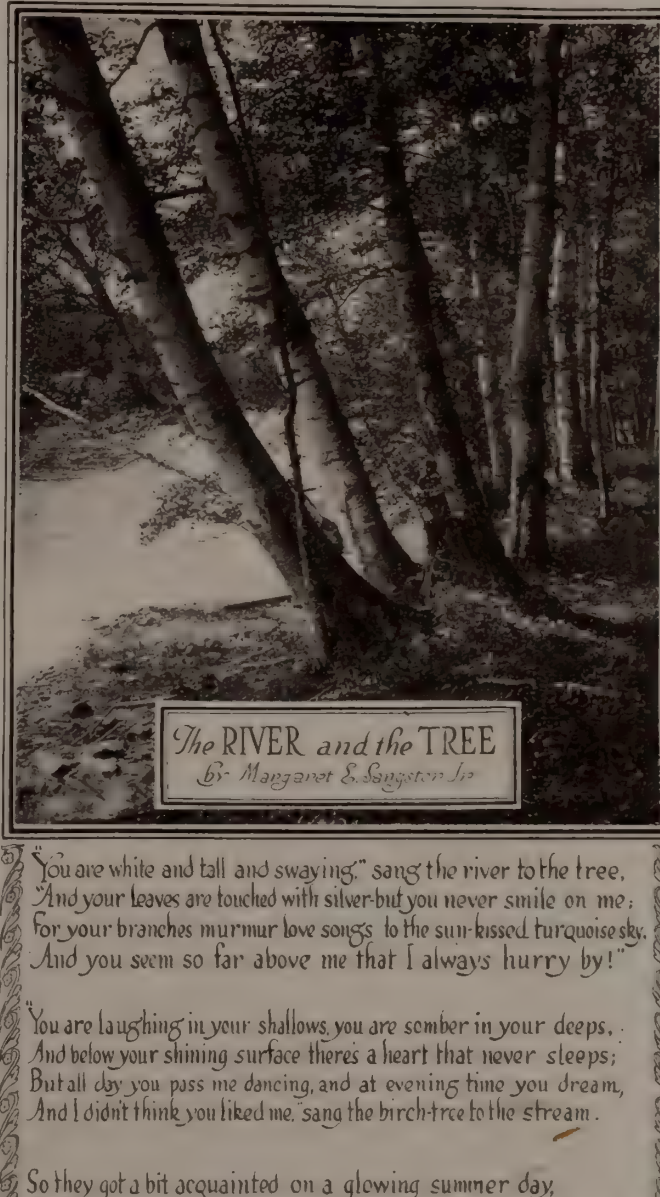
The best commentators take the opposite view, that Paul's argument was so clear and convincing, his sincerity so evident and his eloquence so powerful, that the monarch was struck with the force of the presentation, and in token of his appreciation said that he himself was "almost persuaded" to accept the faith Paul had so ably explained and defended. The name "Christian" was first applied to believers at Antioch, it is said, as a term of reproach and contempt; but it would hardly be used as a taunt by a dignified and serious ruler on an occasion such as that described in Acts. Besides, Paul's reply shows his interpretation of Agrippa's words, and there is not even the slightest imputation of a taunt in them.

A. L. W., Council Grove, Kan. Your sorrow will draw you nearer to God, who gives comfort and consolation to the bereaved heart. It would almost seem that your dear one's last message was intended specially for you. There is always "light up there," however dark and depressing our immediate surroundings may be. If you have given your heart to God, accepting Christ as your Saviour and Guide, with a sincere desire to live a Christian life henceforth, you assuredly will find that He is faithful that promised, and that you will not be rejected. Ask for strength to overcome all doubts, and to take hold of the promises, and it will be granted. "Whoso cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out," and "Whosoever will, may come"—that means you. Assurance comes with increase of faith; pray for faith, and you will find your sorrowful burden lighter and your pathway brighter day by day. Let your little lad's message be a talisman, and a very precious one. That was your wonderful experience, although you may not have recognized it just then; for it will be a blessing to your whole life.

A. P., South Tacoma, Wash. 1. It is the experience of those who are living close to God that the conscience is quickened and the choice of the good instead of the evil is made unhesitatingly. An unawakened conscience will not always warn us, although it may upbraid us afterward; but in the case of one who waits on God, and who asks him for guidance and direction in all the affairs of life—and especially for divine strength to discern and resist temptation—in such a case, conscience is a faithful monitor. 2. The fact that we are divinely led and kept from day to day does not absolve us from doing our full share in the battle with sin and temptation. We pray to the Saviour not only to save but to keep us, and so he will; but we may gather from many passages in his teachings that we must be valiant in the fight. All of Christian experience shows this to be the case. By our own strength and merit we cannot win salvation, which is God's free gift; but when all our energies, our desires and our prayers are consecrated on the "one thing" needful, then divine reinforcement supplies the rest, and our weakness is made strength. We would add here that one who is living the Christ-life will not be doing real service until he begins to live not for himself, but for others. It is wonderful how quickly all doubts and questionings disappear when we feel that we are doing loyal service for the Master, no matter how humble it may be, and that our efforts are being blessed in the lightening of sorrows, the cheering of gloomy lives, and possibly even the winning of souls. Paul was brought up a Pharisee, straitlaced, precise in all matters of ecclesiastical law, surrounded by prayer, and laying claim to the possession of the highest virtues. All of these ideas vanished when Christ came into his life. The Pharisee was now the "chief of sinners," but redeemed through grace. Forgotten were the old prayers, the ceaseless, self-centered, personal solicitude, the phylacteries, and the many empty forms and ceremonials. He had begun to realize that to follow in Jesus' footsteps, and to spend himself for others, was the noblest life to live, and that it led to the greatest soul-happiness. Yet even Paul was not without his "thorn in the flesh," and indeed few Christians are without it. But he did not worry about it: at all events, it nowise marred his splendid, self-sacrificing life-work.

Mr. J. T. Bougher, Philadelphia, representing, no doubt, many others who are deeply interested in prophecy at this time, sends this letter: "I am greatly pleased to note in your issue of November 29 the announcement of your intention to devote more space during the coming year to the Prophetic Word. Dr. Gray is the right man to pass it out. We live in an age of most wonderful unfolding; yet the world sleeps on. 'But as it was in the days of Noah,' etc. Our Lord's dear ones everywhere are longing for light. Many of them have never had the opportunity of intelligent instruction in 'things which shall be'; hence, as they see the 'signs of the fig tree' all about them, and the entire earth apparently groaning in travail, awaiting to be delivered, perhaps, it is quite natural for inquiries of this kind to appear in your inquiry columns. As one contemplates the great value your paper could be, and its tremendous responsibility, it causes me to rejoice that such a man as Dean Gray is to be given space as 'this present evil age' approaches its awful crisis for the rejectors of Christ (Matt. 24 : 21) and the glorious crisis for those who are His (I Thess. 4 : 17, 18)."

G. H. B., Akron, Ohio. There is at present no national law prohibiting the shipment of arms and ammunition on board of passenger vessels to any of the belligerent countries. Such shipments are made at carrier's risk, both as to the danger of fire and explosion, and the chances of the vessel being sunk by any of the combatant navies.



The RIVER and the TREE

By Margaret E. Sangster Jr

"You are white and tall and swaying," sang the river to the tree,
"And your leaves are touched with silver—but you never smile on me;
For your branches murmur love songs to the sun-kissed turquoise sky,
And you seem so far above me that I always hurry by!"

"You are laughing in your shallows, you are somber in your deeps,
And below your shining surface there's a heart that never sleeps;
But all day you pass me dancing, and at evening time you dream,
And I didn't think you liked me," sang the birch-tree to the stream.

So they got a bit acquainted on a glowing summer day,
And they found they liked each other (which is oftentimes the way);
And the river got so friendly, and it ran so very slow,
That the birch-tree shone reflected in the water down below!

J. A. H., Emmett, Idaho. What do you think of the eternal future of the Gentiles who died before their day of opportunity? Also, what of the future of the heathen of our time, who know not the Gospel privileges?

God is just and certainly will not punish any one who did not know better. The immoral heathen will certainly not be punished according to the rigors of the written law, as in the case of disobedient Jews and unfaithful Christians, but merely according to their light. The passage in Rom. 2 : 12 means just this: that as a man soweth, so is he judged.

Reader, Greensboro, N. C. Please explain, in connection with Lev. 11 : 6, 7, whether it is wrong for us to eat pork.

The ceremonial law is obsolete for Christians. At what is known as the first church council (described in Acts 15) the decision was definitely made that Gentile Christians were absolved from the Jewish ceremonial law. The great burden of Paul's preaching was that we are saved not by keeping the law of Moses, but by faith in Christ. Together with the observance of Jewish holidays and feast days, all the strictly outward observances of the Jewish religion have fallen before the truer spiritual religion of Christianity, in which man has absolute freedom to regulate fasts, foods and holidays not in accordance with any prescribed form but only agreeable to that truly Christian freedom to do aught that does not offend against Christ's teachings and a brother's conscience.

G. M. H., Sacramento, Calif. Your question is a controversial one.

Solo, Colchester, Canada. Please explain I Cor. 7 : 36.

It must be remembered that in the early days of the church many questions arose that seemed vital then and are not so now. Verses 34, 35 and 36 of this chapter are merely directions to the Christian father with respect to his unmarried daughters. In the matter of marriage, the father—according to the custom of those times—had supreme control over his daughter, and hence the apostle gives him directions pertaining thereto. Many of these extraneous matters are helpful to us at the present time, but in no wise binding over us.

A Reader, Lititz, Pa. Please explain I Cor. 11 : 1–17.

Our space forbids a lengthy exegesis. A well-known commentary has this on the subject: "To those who, in a narrow spirit, insist on having divine prescription for the most insignificant details of religious life and public worship, this appeal to 'nature itself,' as a great guide in relation to the decencies of public worship, should read a wholesome lesson. Nature, though uniform in its essential features, varies in all that is subordinate in different regions and at different periods. In matters of feeling, taste, and decorum, as to the way in which the relation of the sexes should be expressed, Eastern and Western ideas notoriously and widely differ, and they should be allowed their natural and proper development. This applies to all arrangements for public worship as well as social usage. Whatever in church organization and public worship is injurious to vital Christianity—to spiritual life—is to be discountenanced as sacrificing the end to the means; but within those limits not a little variety, suggested by national taste or climatic conditions, is surely admissible."

Dr. J., Hoboken, N. J., sends this interesting note to the Mail-Bag: "The inscription, 'E Pluribus Unum,' on the new dime shows that the tied fasces with the ax were believed by the artist to symbolize union. But this was not the Roman idea of it. They were the signs of men of consular rank, and were carried before them in public by the lictores, and were the symbols of absolute judicial power—to flog or to kill." If our correspondent is not mistaken, there would seem to have been an error somewhere in official circles.

Mrs. J. W. T., Blackie, Alberta Canada. Dr. Geikie's Life of Christ would be profitable reading to such a person as your note describes. Many of the best utterances of the ablest theologians may be found in our book, "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered." The preacher to whom you refer is probably a Unitarian.

Ada B. R., San Diego, Calif. 1. Thanks for your kindly letter. 2. We are not familiar with the Southcott prophecies.

Rev. Frank W. Pimlott, Colo., writes calling attention to the fact that the present population of Greater Detroit is in excess of 800,000. The figures given in a recent issue referred to Detroit before its expansion and increase of population.

S., Panaca, Nevada, writes to the Mail-Bag that Pioche, the county seat of Lincoln County, Nevada—an old mining town with a population of about 600, and with many ranches scattered around—has no church and no pastor and needs both. She pleads that some missionary, or some one else who is competent, may undertake to establish a church there. Here is an opening for an enterprising young preacher. Any Christian minister who may feel interested will be put in communication with the proper authorities on dropping a postal to the Christian Herald.

C. W. R., Philadelphia, writes us apropos of a recent article by Professor David Smith, of Londonderry College, which he thinks criticized somewhat harshly the "conscientious objectors" in declining military service. While we do not think Professor Smith capable of an injustice we must agree with C. W. R. when he asks: "Did Christ command us to slay our fellows, or to love them? The curse of this age is a spurious, hypocritical Christianity, which is no longer Christian because it has forsaken Jesus, and is allied with the world and the devil. In England we see the strange spectacle of the church blessing cannon and war banners, and urging men to enlist in the armies to slay the Germans, and in Germany the same thing is done by the churches there against England, and so it is in all the warring countries."

Mrs. B. C. W., Holcombe, Wis. Please explain Isa. 11 : 6.

In this passage each animal is coupled with that one which is its natural prey. The whole passage is emblematic of the reign of the Prince of Peace, when all differences, even of nature, will be wiped away, and all nature, including man, will be in harmony with the Creator, rendering perfect obedience to the Divine will, "for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."—Verse 9.

1917–A Garden Year

At no time in many years has the importance and the necessity of the home garden been so great as this year.

Peter Henderson

OUR country is facing a critical situation in the matter of food supply, and yet a partial remedy is in the hands of most every individual. One-half of your summer living expense is for vegetables that should come out of your own garden. A space even as small as 25 x 50 planted with seeds of a high quality such as Henderson's is sufficient for a family of six throughout the entire season. Fresh, crisp vegetables every day should be reason enough, but in addition the saving makes it of the greatest importance.

To get the full results from your garden you should plant the best seeds obtainable. Seventy years of successful seeds growing and selling make Henderson's the standard. Henderson's Seeds are Tested Seeds.

"Everything for the Garden" is the title of our 1917 catalogue. It is really a book of 208 pages, with 32 colored plates and over 1000 halftones, all from actual photographs. Our annual catalogue is always exceptional, but this year we believe it the most beautiful and complete we have ever published.

A Remarkable Offer of Henderson's Specialties

After all it is actual results which count, and to demonstrate the superiority of Henderson's Tested Seeds we have made up the Henderson Collection, consisting of one packet of each of the following six great specialties:

- Ponderosa Tomato
- Big Boston Lettuce
- White Tipped Scarlet Radish
- Henderson's Invincible Asters
- Mammoth Butterfly Pansies
- Spencer Mammoth Waved Sweet Peas

To obtain the largest possible distribution for our annual catalogue, "Everything for the Garden," we make the following unusual offer: Mail us 10c and we will send you the catalogue, together with this remarkable "Henderson Specialty Collection," and complete cultural directions.

Peter Henderson & Co.
35-37 Cortlandt Street, New York City

I enclose herewith 10c for which send catalogue and "Henderson's Specialty Collection," with complete cultural directions, as advertised in The Christian Herald.

____

____

____

Every Empty Envelope Counts as Cash

This collection is enclosed in a coupon envelope which, when emptied and returned, will be accepted as 25c cash payment on any order for seeds, plants or bulbs amounting to one dollar, or over. Make this year a garden year.

PETER HENDERSON & CO.
35-37 Cortlandt Street, NEW YORK CITY

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

NEW YORK, JANUARY 17, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 3. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

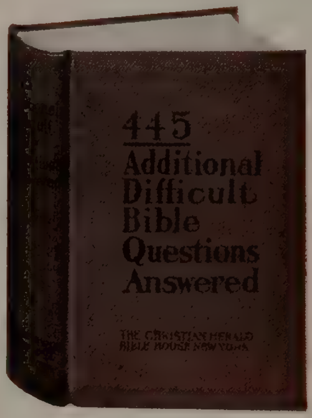
From a photograph by the American Colony at Jerusalem

RAMALLAH WOMAN IN THE COURT OF THE AMERICAN COLONY AT JERUSALEM

CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOKS

445 ADDITIONAL DIFFICULT BIBLE QUESTIONS ANSWERED

A HELP OVER THE HARD PLACES



WHEN the earlier volume entitled "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered" was published, it met with such an enthusiastic reception that we have been encouraged to follow it with a second volume. Like its predecessor, it forms a compact repository of information, invaluable to pastors, scholars, students, laymen and the general reader. It illuminates and explains a large number of obscure passages, many of which might be misunderstood by the average reader.

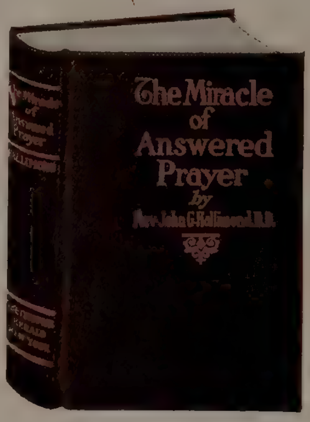
Presenting the work of the ablest and soundest expositors in all the denominations, the new book will be found a help to many inquiring souls over the "hard places" in the Bible, and a comfort and encouragement to all who are earnestly striving to learn the truth as presented in the Word.

We will send a copy of "445 Additional Difficult Bible Questions Answered," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.35.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.

THE MIRACLE OF ANSWERED PRAYER

By REV. JOHN G. HALLIMOND, D.D.



A Book With a Message for Every Soul

THINK of hundreds of authenticated answers to prayer, multiplied in the course of a year to thousands. This is the story told in "The Miracle of Answered Prayer." It is a recital of tremendous and conclusive importance to the Christian world and one which cannot be controverted. It is a book that no one can read without becoming convinced of its truth and of the wonderful goodness of our Heavenly Father toward all who seek Him in the spirit of faith and contrition.

"The Miracle of Answered Prayer" should be in the hands of every Christian in America. The facts it sets forth furnish absolute evidence of the literal fulfillment of the Saviour's promise to his followers: "Whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name He will give it you." "Ask, and it shall be given you. . . ."

This book contains authenticated instances, not ancient, but happening in our own time—now—of answered prayers, all of which are presented in the name of Jesus, and submitted to the Divine Will. There is hardly a conceivable situation in human experience which is not included in this wonderful book.

We will send a copy of "The Miracle of Answered Prayer," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.35.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.

JUST DAVID

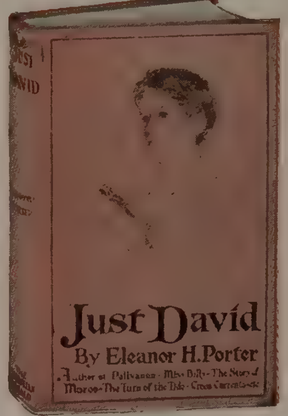
By Eleanor H. Porter, Author of "Pollyanna"

EVERYONE who has read "Pollyanna" should read "Just David." He is as lovable as the heroine of the Glad Book. Mrs. Porter believes that the idea of the possibility of happiness should be held up to people, but she does not attempt to preach about it. She simply lets her characters speak.

"Just David" is not only a story of amazing popular appeal, but in its way a genuine masterpiece as well. Everyone who reads it has the same enthusiasm. David is one of those characters that seem too real to stay inside a book. It is safe to say that every single reader will regard him as a cherished friend. "Just David," bound in cloth, with frontispiece, postpaid, $1.25 net.

We will send a copy of "Just David," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.50.

Or, we will send a copy of "Just David," postpaid, to any present subscriber as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription accompanied by $2.00.



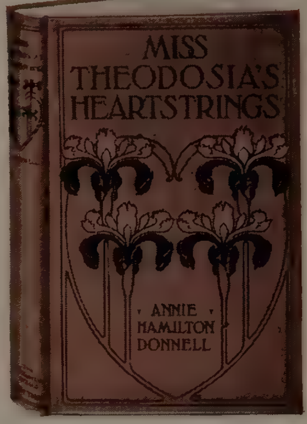
THEODOSIA'S HEARTSTRINGS

IN this irresistible novel of happiness, Miss Theodosia Baxter wandered up and down the world for three years in search of something to interest her, only to come home and find it on the upper step of her own front porch. What she found was a very much surprised child who was holding a baby on the small area of her knees. They were two of the Flagg children who lived in the house next door—Evangeline the voluble and little Elly Precious, who possessed six toes. Ere long Miss Theodosia made the acquaintance of Stefena the eldest of the Flagg children, and little deaf Carruthers. How this quartette of youngsters reached the heart of the staid and travel-worn woman and eventually brought a romance into her own life is set forth in Mrs. Donnell's characteristic style. The thousands who have read her story about a little girl named Rebecca Mary, in the popular book bearing that title, will be all the more ready to love the irrepressible Evangeline, the ambitious Stefena, and the diminutive Elly Precious.

"Miss Theodosia's Heartstrings" is a book that no one who loves children can resist; the little Flaggs are a constant delight.

We will send a copy of "Miss Theodosia's Heartstrings," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.50.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.



A STORY FOR THE FAMILY CIRCLE

LITTLE SIR GALAHAD

Little Sir
Galahad
A Novel by Phoebe Gray

LITTLE SIR GALAHAD is a boy every bit as wonderful and with as high ideals as those of the ancient Knights, but he is an up-to-date hero and a very real little personage, quick-witted, clever and amusing, and, together with his youthful friends who come under the magic spell of his influence, he goes through many exciting experiences and keeps the reader's interest absorbed right through the story.

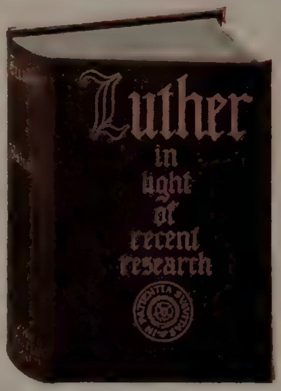
"Little Sir Galahad" has quite a variety of friends, including stanch little Mary Alice, who grows up to a winsome womanhood, and poor Lem Brown, who had to be helped ever so often. Then there is a big background of old and young folks who must certainly have been drawn from actual life, as we have all known just such people. Besides, there is a big-hearted millionaire—but we must not anticipate. There is much that is charming and humorous and intensely human in the whole story.

We will send "Little Sir Galahad," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.50.

Or, we will send a copy of "Little Sir Galahad," postpaid, to any present subscriber as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription with $2.00.

MARTIN LUTHER ANNIVERSARY BOOK

"Luther in Light of Recent Research"



WHILE there are several lives of Luther, Professor Heinrich Boehmer's famous work, which has attracted universal attention in Europe, is one of the best that has ever appeared. It comes most opportunely in view of the celebration of the Four Hundredth Anniversary of the nailing of Luther's famous theses on the gate of the old castle church at Wittenberg, which was the beginning of the Reformation.

The Christian Herald has had the work translated by Professor Carl F. Huth, Jr., of the University of Chicago, who has succeeded in preserving the spirit and the expression of the original in a remarkable degree.

This great book, which should be read by every Protestant in America, is supplemented by a series of eighty-one Luther pictures, all of them from the most authentic sources, and the whole forming a Luther Picture Gallery.

We will send the "Life of Luther," handsomely bound in cloth, postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.75.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $4.00.

40,000 BEAUTIFUL QUOTATIONS

SOME years ago the Christian Herald published a work entitled "Forty Thousand Sublime and Beautiful Thoughts." It was composed of a collection of the best sayings on every conceivable subject which the compiler could come upon. It was a remarkable compilation, and it was used largely in public as well as private libraries.

In the course of time, the edition of this book became exhausted. We had so many inquiries for the work that we have republished it, thoroughly revised.

The mission of this work is to supply a universal need which is felt by the multitude of busy men and women of today, who, while eager to be initiated into the society of the great masters of literature, find it impossible to devote the time necessary to accomplish that result.

We will send "Forty Thousand Sublime and Beautiful Thoughts," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $3.50.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $4.00.

TWO BOOKS BY A FAMOUS PASTOR

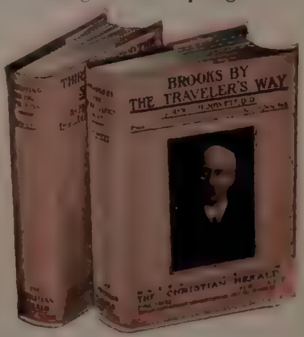
Rev. J. H. Jowett, D.D.

DOCTOR JOWETT has been aptly described as "the most spiritual preacher in America." He has written these two volumes, "Thirsting for the Springs" and Brooks by the Traveler's Way," in his happiest vein, and the gift of felicitous expression shines out on every page.

The reader is carried along through gardens and woodlands, as on a pleasant journey. He is in a rarefied atmosphere and is buoyed and uplifted unconsciously at every step. The varied experiences of life, its trials, allurements, disappointments and surprises, pass before him like a moving picture.

These two volumes, aggregating 530 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent together with the Christian Herald for one year, postpaid, for $2.50.

Or, we will send a copy of each volume to present subscribers as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.



The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York

THE·CHRISTIAN·HERALD
·AN·ILLUSTRATED·NEWS·WEEKLY·FOR·THE·HOME·

A Thousand Million Voices for Peace

By DR. WASHINGTON GLADDEN

Dr. Washington Gladden

I SAY "Amen" to President Wilson. I want to associate myself with all my heart and mind and soul and strength with his great message to the belligerent nations and to the whole world.

For whom has he spoken? I think that he has spoken for the people of the United States—for one hundred million of them. I have heard few dissenting voices. There are those who doubt whether his word will be heeded; there are not many who deny that it represents the deepest wish and the clearest conviction of the American people.

I think that he has spoken for fifty-six millions of the people of the South American continent who, because they are human, have been looking with bewilderment and dismay on the other hemisphere, and waiting and longing for the misery to come to an end.

I think that he has spoken for the four hundred millions of China—a peaceful multitude, many of whom but dimly discern the meaning of it all, but to whom the confused noises and the garments rolled in blood must have brought many a shuddering apprehension.

I think that he has spoken for four million Danes and two and a half million Norwegians, and six millions of Swedes and four millions of Switzers, and twenty millions of Spaniards, and seven millions of Hollanders, and seven and a half millions of Belgians—all of whom have been standing for two years and a half under the baleful shadow of this desolating war, waiting in a nameless dread until these calamities be overpast. Some of these have spoken for themselves—weighty words, appealing words—but most of them are glad that this nation has spoken, and are praying that its word may be with power.

Nay, may we not believe that there are millions in all of the belligerent countries who are weary and sick of the carnage; who are convinced that it can never be ended by force; who see that, though it may be prolonged for months or even years, the long-drawn agony can only pile misery on misery, disaster on disaster, despair on despair; digging deeper the gulfs of resentment that separate people from people, poisoning the sources of good will, putting farther off the time when peace shall come to stay, and making no less strait the gate through which they all must pass to find it.

ALL this is plain today to those who have eyes to see; and though nations at war are always hopelessly blind, there must be among those infatuated people some from whom the truth is not hidden, though they dare not speak it; some who are waiting as those who watch for the morning, for the day when the nightmare shall be lifted, and the spell under which European civilization now lies prostrate shall be broken. We shall not hear their voices; they will be silent. But they will hear, and they will give thanks that this nation has made real the protest of humanity against the continuance of the damaging scourge. And a great cry of thankfulness will be heard, all around the world, from lands and peoples that have been scathed by this eruption of diabolism.

For the terror and the peril have fallen on us all. There is no continent and no island that this war has not invaded. These belligerents must not say that this war is no concern of ours. It is not possible for fourteen of the nations on this planet, including most of the mightiest, to hurl themselves against each other for two years and a half with all the tremendous force of destruction with which science has equipped them, without making the planet a mighty unpleasant place and a mighty dangerous place for human beings to live on, and especially for those human beings whose nerves are most sensitive and whose participation in the human organism is most vital. These fourteen nations have no right to launch themselves on such a world-racking enterprise as they are now engaged in without taking counsel of their neighbor nations. Some of them are very big and very strong; but there are a good many other people in this world who have rights here—more than a thousand million of them! It may be confidently predicted that the day is near when all the nations of the world, small and great—these belligerents among them—will join in solemnly declaring that such a disturbance of the peace of the world as is now raging in Europe must never again begin. If the nations are getting ready to say that such a thing must never again begin, it cannot be bad morals or bad manners for the thousand million or more of the neutral nations who are not in this mêlée to say that it ought to stop now.

> THIS stirring Peace Message, which should spread from ocean to ocean, was delivered before a great audience in Washington Square, New York, on New Year's Eve, while similar meetings were being held in Chicago, Denver and San Francisco, all being under the direction of the American Neutral Conference Committee. Dr. Gladden's eloquent address must be ranked as among the ablest efforts ever made in behalf of world-peace.

WE have a right to say this. In saying it we are not meddling with somebody else's business; we are strictly attending to our own. This war is to all of us an infinite source of pain, loss, suffering, sorrow, shame. It is devastating, depopulating, impoverishing the earth—our earth. It is blotting out a large part of the heritage of beauty which belongs to all of us. It is loading the whole race with burdens and impediments under which it must stagger for centuries to come. It is making the world a less desirable dwelling-place for our children and our children's children. We have a right to cry out against it, and, by all that is sacred and precious and memorable and benign in history and humanity, to appeal to the belligerents to cease from their madness and to seek with humble and contrite hearts for ways of putting an end to it.

And it is only meet and right that our nation, which is counted as the strongest of the neutral nations, should be first to give voice to this appeal.

It is not our business to decide who is to blame for the beginning of the war; we do not assume to judge or punish the sins of other nations. Indeed, we may have our doubts whether there is any nation on the earth good enough to execute the death penalty on millions of the people of other nations for their sins. It is their assumption of this prerogative of omniscience which keeps these nations at war today. We are not going to climb into the judgment seat. For we are sure that to nations as well as to men the caution is spoken: "Judge not, that ye be not judged."

THIS war will never be well ended by force. Force never permanently settles anything. It will never be well ended until reason and justice and good will are brought in. And the door is wider open today for reason and justice and good will than it will be a year from now or two years from now.

Is it not true, fellow men? We beseech you to consider well if it is not true. To the reasonable remnant in all the warring nations we make our appeal. The President of the United States, the people of the United States, have no sinister or selfish interest in making this appeal. The sympathies of some of them have been with the one side or with the other; but as the months have gone on, and the agony and horror and misery of the struggle have grown fiercer and more heart-breaking, the one desire into which we are more and more pouring our hearts is that this war may cease.

We want the war to cease because we want all wars to cease. All the warring nations unite now to say that they want all wars to cease. But some of them are saying: "We want first of all to end this war by force, by the subjugation or annihilation of our enemies; when this is accomplished, we will consent that reason and good will should be brought in to make future wars impossible." That has a hollow sound.

THIS war can be ended now by reason and good will in such a way as to make future wars practically impossible; but if it is ended by the subjugation or humiliation of either of the combatants, it will be psychologically difficult if not impossible, for years to come, to establish permanent peace.

It is the clear apprehension of these probabilities which prompted the message of our President to the belligerent nations. We think that he had a right to speak it; but we want him to know, and we wish that all the world might know, that

"Our hearts, our hopes, our prayers, our tears,
Our faith, triumphant o'er our fears,"

are all with him, in his prayers and endeavors to bring peace to earth, and good will among men.

This training ship is looking ahead to keep Japan supplied with sailors

Japan's Need of Expansion

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

"THE change of ministry in Japan promises well for friendly relations in China. Of course, none of us can say exactly what will take place, but the probabilities are that the new premier should at least not have been condemned before he assumed his office," said Mr. Eki Hioki, whose work as minister to China makes him one of the best authorities on the relations between the wo countries.

Our meeting was due to the fact that Mr. Hioki had cooperated with the late Dr. Louis Klopsch in carrying on Christian Herald relief work in Japan at the time of the famine in the northeast provinces, fourteen years ago. As a diplomat in Petrograd, Seoul and Peking, he has come into close touch with conditions in the borderlands between China, Russia and Japan, and has studied them with care. He is perfectly frank in stating that Japan must expand. He emphasizes the fact that the Land of the Rising Sun is doing everything possible to expand in commerce and industry.

Mr. Hioki sat forward in his chair, and his voice took on the tone of a professor.

"Japan," he said, "is strengthening her position in Manchuria to guarantee her own safety and not in any sense to embroil herself with China, which, fifteen years ago, contemplated the advisability of making Manchuria an international territory rather than leave it in the grip of her big northern neighbor, whose heavy paw was beginning to make its weight felt, and from the pressure of which China considered it impossible to liberate herself without outside assistance.

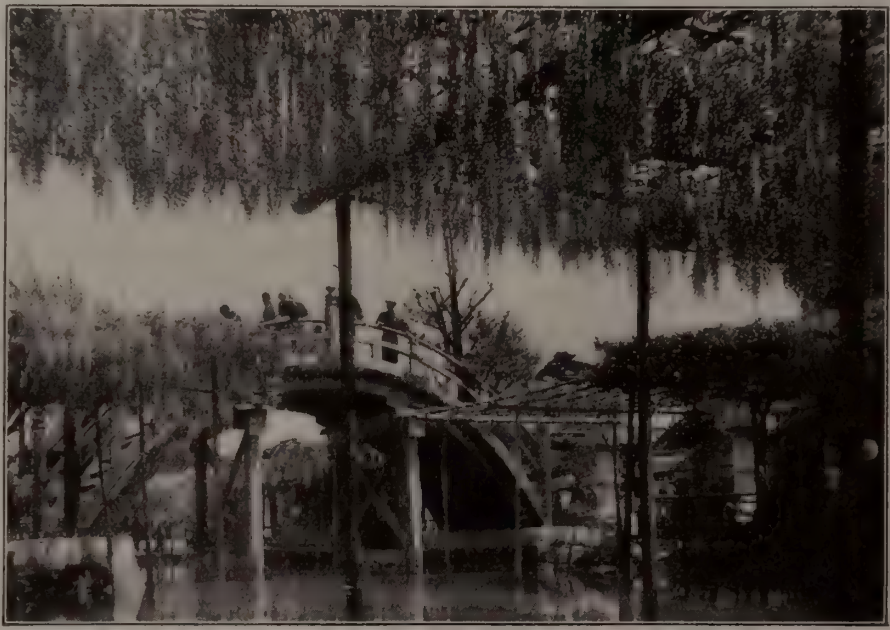
"At that time, the strength of Japan had not been tested. She was considered a second-rate power. The Sino-Japanese War had shown China's weakness, but it did not reveal to a little-interested world the right of the Island Empire to be considered a first-class power. A series of events, centering around Manchuria, led to the Russo-Japanese War of 1904–05, which resulted in restoring Manchuria to China, and in Japan's getting special privileges there. Thanks to our present friendship with Russia, which we hope and trust may be permanent, the danger which drove us to fight her twelve years ago has passed. But the geography of the region has not changed. It is the Balkan Peninsula of East Asia. Treaty or no treaty, Japan must remove the danger which an unfriendly and troubled Korea and Manchuria offer to her subjects, isolated in their island homes.

"Japan has sought to have China give effective policing to the South Manchuria district. This China would not and could not do. In view of the rapidly increasing number of Japanese settlers and equally rapidly growing interests in Manchuria, it is natural that Japan should be particularly anxious to have an effective police system established in that province. Japan will not cease her efforts until permanent order and effective policing are secured in Manchuria. Japan has no desire to alienate China. She has every reason for desiring her friendship and cooperation; but friction between China and Japan will exist as long as Manchuria is subject to disorder and trouble.

"Japan is seeking an improvement of the Manchurian police system in the interests of both countries," he went on to explain. "We must have a perfect understanding in the matter, and Count Terauchi will effectively enforce discipline among his own people, while at the same time demanding from the Chinese government maintenance of order and peace in that province. Terauchi is a master of men. But, better than that, he is a master of situations. Any act that may lead to the breaking up of China would be contrary to Japanese interests. Friendship between Japan and China is a business proposition, not a matter of sentiment, and we must have it. But we must also have protection in Manchuria, and we must be assured that trouble there does not endanger our domestic safety.

"Count Terauchi has shown his ability to carry justice to the Koreans while extending Japanese power in Korea. Japan has no desire to look down upon the Korean. We want to make Korea an integral and prosperous part of our land. There is no intention to keep Korea in the position of a weak buffer state, prevented from ever gaining strength and power."

THE boy appeared with Japanese tea, and as we sipped the steaming hot beverage from the tiny cups, we chatted on less important matters for a while. Then Mr. Hioki said:



The Japanese know how to grow wistaria; and isn't this bridge a delight?

"Do you know why sentiment against Yuan Shi Kai was so strong and universal in Japan? What was the real secret of that?"

Only the frank friendship of the former minister to China made it possible for me to answer as I did.

"Popular gossip says that as Yuan Shi Kai was the strong man of China and the only one who could build up a strong nation, and as Japan did not want to see a strong China, she plotted against the only man who gave promise of helping China out of her weakness. That is not entirely my opinion; but I have never heard the other side explained," I answered.

The ex-minister watched me closely during this blunt statement, but his smile was frank and open as he replied:

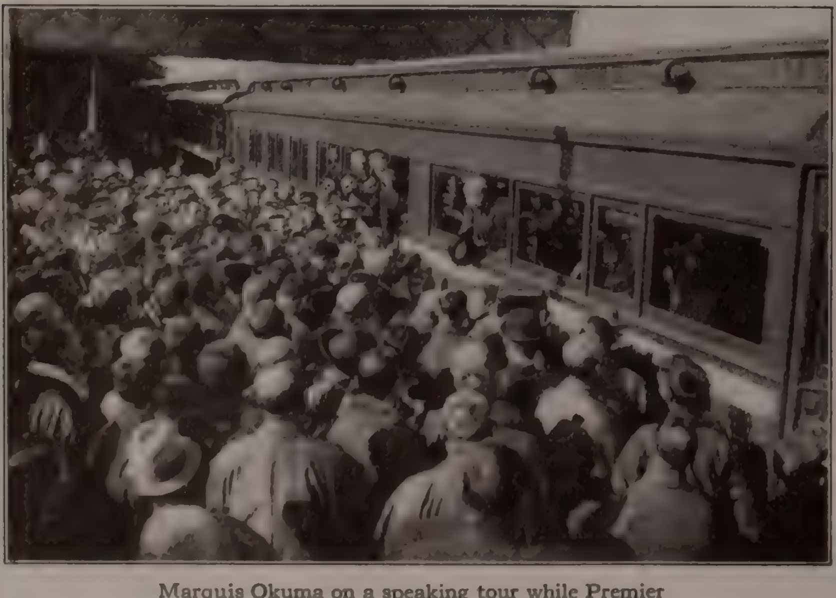
"You doubtless know how Yuan Shi Kai won his place as president of the republic of China. When the revolution broke out in 1911, Yuan was in a state of exile in his native home, having incurred the displeasure of his august master the emperor, who was really only the regent. Finding itself at its wits' end to cope with the violent revolutionary movement, the imperial court sent for Yuan and the august master humbled himself before this haughty mandarin, and flatly asked him to rescue the imperial family from danger. Thereupon, Yuan, with the perfect confidence and trust of the court, assumed control of the army, which meant control of the government. He soon managed to make himself sole master of the situation. He could not only fight out the revolution, but he could also make and unmake emperors.

"How did he use his power and the confidence reposed in him by his master, the emperor? He represented to the emperor that defeat was inevitable, and that the only thing the court could do was for the emperor to abdicate and let a republic rise in the place of the ancient empire. He succeeded in carrying out his plan and then engineered himself into the position of president, which he later tried to convert into that of emperor. Public sentiment in Japan revolted at this attitude of Yuan. In Japan there can be no higher crime than disloyalty to the emperor. Nothing could convince the Japanese that Yuan, at this juncture, did not abuse the trust and confidence of his master.

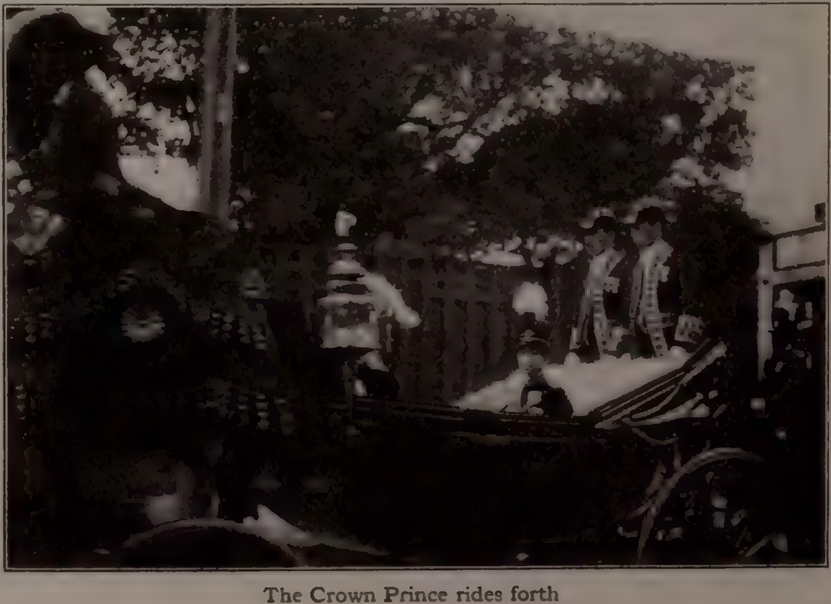
"The Japanese emperor is sacred. The Japanese people have a like reverence for other emperors and rulers who owe their position to legitimate means. But they could not tolerate the thought of having a traitor or usurper sit at the head of the neighboring nation. To the day of his death the Japanese people never forgave Yuan for that act.

"Although the Japanese government was careful to do nothing to interfere with the Chinese government, the sentiment of the people was against Yuan, and outcasts from China were freely welcomed by sympathizers in Japan. They had a right to be here, and, as the government took care to suppress any plots, they were unmolested.

"The hereditary house of a traitor, as our people thought, was to be established in the land of our big neighbor, and the indignity of carrying on relations with one who owed his position to such trickery was too much for our people. The opposition was open and determined. Our people could not stomach the idea of having the upstart Yuan claim equality as an emperor with our sacred ruler. It was unthinkable to have such a man shake hands, so to speak, with our divine leader, and call him 'brother.' That was too great a desecration,



Marquis Okuma on a speaking tour while Premier



The Crown Prince rides forth

Photo by T. Takagi

On this picture is written "A farmer"

and we protested. Yuan's death removed the cause of the trouble on that side of the water, and friendship with China and order in the borderlands—where expanding peoples are sure to meet—can now be looked for by every one who takes the trouble to examine the whole situation."

Mr. Tsunejiro Miyaoka is the clearest thinker I have met in Japan, a man whose perfect command of English imposes no impediment in transmitting his thoughts to an American. His office is a busy place. Baskets of correspondence and legal papers are hurled at him in the politest possible way, and his trips to the telephone booth were frequent during our conversation.

He is a lawyer in general practice and a director of the Japan Peace Society, as well as special correspondent of the Carnegie Peace Endowment. His acquaintance with many leading Americans, among whom he remembers the late Dr. Louis Klopsch with admiration, has given him a thorough understanding of the American viewpoint.

Mr. Miyaoka has served his country as a diplomat and counselor in the United States, Germany and Belgium. He represented Japan before the International Arbitral Tribunal of The Hague during the Russo-Japanese War and at the International Opium Conference in Shanghai. Since 1909 he has been unconnected with politics, and has thus been free to write and talk on national and international affairs.

"The choice of Count Terauchi as premier of Japan," he told me, "was a personal victory of Prince Yamagata, one of the Elder Statesmen, over the retiring premier. It involves no question of more or less democracy in Japan." Count Terauchi is likely to be in every way as able and friendly as was Marquis Okuma.

"The emperor can do no wrong. Mistakes in government are not due to lack of judgment on his part, but on the part of the responsible ministry. He acted in accordance with the advice of the four elder statesmen, in whom he has confidence and whose advice he sought before entrusting to any one the task of forming a cabinet. The Genro, or Elder Statesmen, now composed of Prince Yamagata, Prince Oyama, Marquis Matsukata and Marquis Saionji, are not recognized by the constitution. They are an extra-constitutional though not an unconstitutional body, inasmuch as there is nothing to prevent the emperor from taking or acting upon the advice of any one he pleases."

Here Mr. Miyaoka drew a diagram on his pad, which is always at hand, and on which every idea takes visible form in lists of names or charts of the situation. Then he continued:

"In Japan it is possible for a man to become premier first, and find the majority in the House of Representatives to support him later. In order to do this, since he has no majority in the lower House, he must satisfy the demands of the majority to obtain their support. They, in turn, are influenced by the fact that in case of disagreement the parliament may be dissolved, thus subjecting each of them, even if he regains his seat, to the expense and trouble of reelection. Thus the government, in trying to win the support of the party commanding a majority in the House of Representatives—which in the present instance are the Doshikai or Unionists, led by Viscount Kato—has to adopt some of their planks.

"But all this is internal politics and not vital to outside nations. The question is how the change of premier may affect Japan's foreign policy. There seems to be some feeling of regret in America that the Okuma ministry has been overthrown. But neither in the method of his choice nor in the character of Count Terauchi is there ground for alarm. As his record in Korea shows, he is a man of broad vision. He will readily see what would alienate the sentiment of China toward Japan, or what would arouse the antipathy of America and the envy and suspicion of Europe. There is absolutely no reason to fear that he will deal harshly with China."

A memento of friendship which Russia unintentionally gave to Japan

IN a previous interview we had discussed the question of Christian missions and religious matters. He is not a Christian, yet he believes that mission schools produce men of superior moral training, for the reason that the teachers in those schools are in closer touch with their students.

Mr. Miyaoka has no doubts as to the existence of a democratic tendency in Japan, using that word in the sense of the power of public opinion over the policies of the government.

"The franchise, or the right to vote in the election of the members of the House of Representatives," he said, "is broad enough to include all male adult citizens who pay at least five dollars yearly as a national tax, and thus includes even fishmongers and ricksha coolies. The government is limited in its expenditures by the appropriations authorized by the Imperial Diet, and is therefore powerless to wage war, unless appropriations can be made and the support of the financiers can be obtained."

Mr. Miyaoka is a lawyer, not a prophet, but his observations and his writing-pad are instructive.

BENEATH his flying pencil appeared a list, headed by "emperor and empress" and going down the pyramid in successive steps, first officials, civil and military, second farmers, third artisans, and fourth merchants. Such was his depiction of the social order in feudal Japan. A second sweep of the pencil, and fifty years pass. The merchant class jumps into a place very near the highest class, which, due to the world-wide rise of commercialism and materialism, it will continue to hold. Flop went his pencil straight at this wedge in the social scheme which wealth had won, thus placing the representatives of modern industrial Japan on a plane equal to that held in feudal times only by the high court functionaries and the military seigneurs. Today there are more than seven hundred millionaries in Japan.

"There," said the clear-eyed man with the glasses, "is where the power to make or prevent war lies. When it comes to war measures, the government cannot act without the active support of these men. The most militaristic and autocratic premier must know that he will be supported by those men as well as by public opinion before going to war. The object of our militaristic party is not war, but efficiency in the army; not a larger army, but a better one. In America you have certain men and corporations who would profit from a national disaster on the battlefield. You have gigantic armor and ammunition factories in private hands. I don't say that they are working to bring on a war. But they would gain financially from a war. None of our business men are similarly placed.

"Almost all our ammunition is made in government plants. Our steel industry is in its infancy, and we are dependent on other countries for almost all our iron. The rich men, whose support must be enlisted before our government can float a war loan, would, to a man, lose, whether Japan were successful to a degree, or left the war an absolute loser. I am now dealing with America. Every controlling interest of the financial, commercial and industrial class is against war. If war comes, America will have to start it."

They are heading rice,—but perhaps a romance is starting, too

The Reorganization of Methodism

By
J. F. HEISSE

ON December 27, 1784, in the Lovely Lane Church, Baltimore, Md., the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church was completed, and Francis Asbury as general superintendent, or commonly known as bishop, was consecrated to the episcopal office. Methodism grew with amazing rapidity. At the death of Asbury in 1816 there were many thousands of adherents along the Atlantic seaboard and beyond the Alleghanies.

The bisection of this great church took place in 1844. Bishop Andrew had married a slaveholding woman. This occasioned much unrest and debate throughout the connection, culminating in the exciting controversy which rent asunder the New York General Conference of 1844. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was formally organized on May 1, 1845. Some attempts were made to establish fraternal relations between the two Methodisms, but the passion of war and overlapping territorial occupation were among the contributing causes to seriously interfere until the appointment of the well-known Cape May Commission of 1876. The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church held in 1848 for certain reasons declined to enter into fraternal relations with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. No official communication between the two churches took place until 1869, "when the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church invited the bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to confer on the propriety, practicability, and methods of reunion." The succeeding chapter, containing the history of the seven years' pleasing effort at fraternity, is of absorbing interest, the chief event being the appointment of five commissioners each by the General Conferences of both churches.

These commissioners met at Cape May, N. J., August 16, 1876. They were in session seven days. The following agreement upon the basis of fraternity was reached: "As to the status of the Methodist Episcopal Church and of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and their coordinate relation as legitimate branches of Episcopal Methodism, each of said churches is a legitimate branch of Episcopal Methodism in the United States, having a common origin in the Methodist Episcopal Church organized in 1784; and since the organization of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was consummated in 1845 by the voluntary right of the Southern Annual Conferences, ministers, and members to adhere to that communion, it has been an evangelical church reared on Scriptural foundations, and her ministers and members, with those of the Methodist Episcopal Church, have constituted one Methodist family, though in distinct ecclesiastical connections."

Since those days pleas for a reorganization of Methodism, pleas coming from ministers, laymen, the religious press, conferences and other agencies, have been insistent. This article cannot outline every effort made. The outstanding and commanding endeavor has just found voice in the joint commission which closed its initial sessions in Baltimore on Tuesday afternoon, January 2. The Oklahoma General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held in 1914, adopted unanimously some preparatory measures for reorganization, and authorized the appointment of a commission. The General Conference of the sister church held at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., last May, with an almost unparalleled outburst of the enthusiasm characterizing such religious assemblies, adopted likewise a tentative and comprehensive program, and also authorized the selection of a commission. During these intervening days the papers of both churches, Annual Conferences, gatherings of laymen, meetings of various kinds, have united in an overwhelming plea "to get together." And a great "getting together" will be the devoutly wished outcome.

On Thursday morning, December 28, 1916, these commissioners, five bishops, ten ministers and ten laymen from each church, gathered appropriately, in the splendid First Methodist Episcopal Church, the direct descendant of the Lovely Lane Meeting-house. Because the date selected, December 28, was so near the one in 1784 when Methodism was organized, this gathering has been pleasantly called "the second Christmas Conference." Scholarly and earnest men they are. Among these fifty delegates sat Charles W. Fairbanks, former Vice-President of the United States. Bishops, pastors, college presidents, editors, lawyers, judges, merchants, a noble body of distinguished servants in the Kingdom, charged with grave responsibilities, listened to a sermon preached by Bishop Warren A. Candler, of the Church South.

As all of the sessions were executive in character, and for wise reasons, it was anticipated that the Joint

Continued on page 78

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

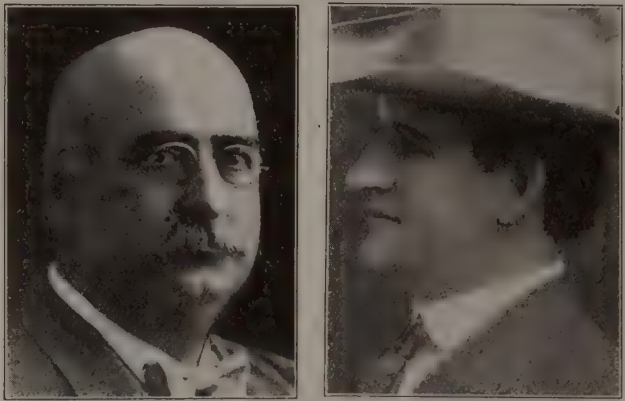
Edmund Schulthess

New President of Switzerland



G. W. P. Hunt

Thos. F. Campbell

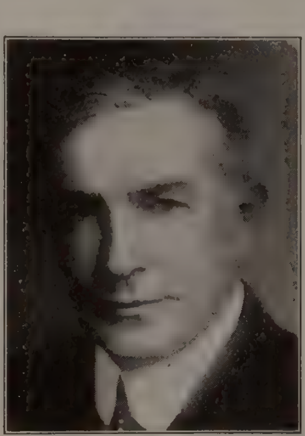
Contenders for the Governorship of Arizona

M. Pokrovsky

Russia's new Foreign Minister

On the 1916 Ledger. At the end of every year it is customary to cast up the balance sheet and see where we stand. For the United States, 1916 has been a year of almost immeasurable prosperity. Although the year closed with 63 railroads, operating 34,559 miles of line, in the hands of receivers, the net profits of all the railways have exceeded $1,000,000,000. The steel industry has had the largest trade in its history. In addition to unexampled domestic business, there has been the tremendous foreign demand for steel for munitions. Gold has flowed into the United States until our stock on December 1 was $2,741,669,491, and our total circulation, including gold coin and bullion, was in excess of $4,850,000,000, over half a million above any previous record. Our total foreign trade for 1916 was $7,825,000,000, the excess of exports over imports being $3,097,000,000; and our trade at home among ourselves reached the tremendous total of $45,800,000,000, an increase of 40 per cent. over 1915. These increases in gold and trade are reflected in an increase in the loans of the national banks, which on November 17 had reached the total of $8,345,000,000, a sum in excess of our total foreign trade. The resources of all the national banks on November 17 were given as $15,520,000,000, exceeding by one billion dollars the combined resources of the Bank of England, the Bank of France, the Bank of Russia, the German Reichsbank, the Bank of Italy, the Bank of Spain, the Bank of the Netherlands, the Bank of Denmark, the Swiss National Bank, and the Imperial Bank of Japan. The bank clearings for the year increased 39 per cent. to $261,000,000,000. Commercial failures decreased 35 per cent., liabilities being a trifle under $200,000,000. Manufacturing profits in 51 industries increased 140 per cent., iron production 32 per cent., steel orders 84 per cent., total coal production 27,000,000 tons, reaching a total of 597,500,000 tons, building permits 20 per cent., and the output of the farms 4.7 per cent. The average price of twenty-five leading food-stuffs increased 38 per cent. and the average weekly wage, as reported to the New York Times Analyst, 12.6 per cent. For the first time in many years there has been, and still is, an actual scarcity of labor, manufacturers finding it impossible to employ competent help to increase their establishments as fast as increasing trade will warrant. The United States, which three years ago was a debtor nation in the sense that its promises to pay held abroad were in excess of the debts due it from foreign countries, has now become distinctly a creditor nation. Since the outbreak of the war we have repurchased from foreign holders $2,100,000,000 worth of American securities, in addition to which $800,000,000 in gold has been sent to America, and we have taken as well $2,500,000,000 worth of the securities of belligerent nations. Our imports for 1916 have exceeded any year in our history, reaching $2,360,000,000, of which $1,014,000,000 represents crude materials used in manufacturing, and stands against an export of manufactures of $3,590,000,000, which is the largest item of our export trade of $5,300,000,000. The munitions business seems to be on the decline with us, recent British orders having been placed in Canadian plants and orders to American mills being largely for steel bars and copper. Of the total foreign commerce, approximately one-half was handled through the port of New York.

The value of the output of American mines in 1916 is given by the Geological Survey at more than $3,000,000,000, of which copper alone furnished $300,000,000. According to the Chicago Daily Tribune, 1916 saw gifts and bequests to charities, educational institutions, religious institutions, museums, art galleries, municipal purposes, and libraries of nearly a billion dollars. Lynchings in 1916 numbered 58 against 98 in the year before, the low record being 54 in 1914. Legal executions numbered 115; in 1915 there were 119. Suicides numbered 14,965, an increase of about 800 over the year preceding. Murders numbered 9,850, an increase of about 600 over the year before. Marine disasters apart from war causes cost 3,136 lives, and floods, fires, and accidents of all kinds outside of actual fighting took a toll of 23,063 lives. Embezzlements increased $1,831,375 over 1915, the total being in excess of $15,000,000. Fire losses amounted in round numbers to $197,000,000, an increase of about $32,000,000 for the year. Railway accidents killed 6,900 trainmen and passengers, and injured 68,700. The year closed with American industry running at high pressure, with a market waiting for everything that we can produce from our fields and factories, and our government leading the world in its consideration both of present peace and future guarantees.



Henry P. Fletcher

American Ambassador to Mexico
Reported in conference with the President preparatory to the taking of his post

Russia Cold to Us. Washington dispatches of December 29 reported that the Russian government had declined to negotiate a new commercial treaty with the United States to replace the treaty abrogated during the Taft administration. It is said that Petrograd refuses for two reasons; first, that she will never accede to the American proposal that she honor all American passports, and thereby admit American Jews to her dominions; and second, that she feels that since she entered into the economic alliance with the other Entente Allies at the Paris conference, she would prefer to consult Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan before discussing a commercial treaty of any character with the United States. The lack of a commercial treaty seriously handicaps American business in its efforts to enter the growing and very profitable Russian market.

Alcohol for Industry. Figures given by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for the year ending June 30, 1916, show that the quantity of distilled spirits produced in the fiscal year of 1916 was 249,123,921.8 gallons, an increase of about 117,000,000 gallons. The amount withdrawn from bond for consumption was 133,025,969.4 gallons, an increase of about 12,000,000 gallons over the year before. The amount withdrawn for denaturing for industrial uses was 84,532,253.1 gallons, an increase of about 59,000,000 gallons. The amount withdrawn from bond for export was 39,011,143.3, an increase of about 37,500,000. The amount remaining in bonded warehouses was 232,402,878.3 gallons, a decrease of about 21,000,000 gallons. The alcohol withdrawn for export is said to have been used largely in munitions.

Good States for Boys. On January 1, 1917, there were nineteen prohibition states, as follows: Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Kansas, Maine, North Dakota, Iowa, Idaho, Oregon, Washington, Colorado, Mississippi, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Virginia, West Virginia, Arizona and Arkansas, with laws approved and not yet effective in Michigan, South Dakota, Montana and Nebraska. In addition to these, the territory of Alaska voted for prohibition on November 7, but Congress must put the policy into effect. Utah has elected a legislature pledged to pass a prohibition law, to become effective August 1, 1917. Florida also elected a legislature pledged to prohibition, an amendment to be voted on in 1918; the Wyoming legislature is similarly pledged, and New Mexico is expected to vote also in 1918.

The Texas legislature is under instructions to submit the prohibition question on July 28, 1917. The Minnesota legislature is reported to have a dry majority, which will probably mean prohibition in 1918, and it is practically assured that Kentucky and Nevada will vote upon the question within the next two years. A strong effort is to be made in both Missouri and Indiana to induce the legislatures to enact statutory prohibition laws.

Easy Going in the Canal. The Panama Canal Record of December 20 reports the channel in the Culebra Cut in better condition than ever before, with a minimum depth of 33 feet and a thirty-foot channel, at no place narrower than 180 feet. A rock known as Gibraltar, standing at the foot of the East Culebra slide and extending 110 feet into the channel for about 200 feet on the axis of the canal, is the only obstruction at present in the canal, and it is rapidly being blasted and dredged away.

Scientists in New York. About 5,000 members of the American Association for the Advancement of Science met in New York during the week of December 25 for the society's sixty-ninth convocation.

Nation to Issue Bonds. President Wilson was reported on December 29 to have given his tentative approval to a plan for a bond issue to meet the probable deficit at the end of the next fiscal year, estimated in the neighborhood of $185,000,000, part of which is due to the expenditure for preparedness, part to the purchase of the Danish West Indies, and part to the expenses of the army and the National Guard on the border. It is expected that the amount of the bonds to be issued will be in the neighborhood of $220,000,000.

Sobering Up. A prohibition wave is said to be sweeping Great Britain, and Lloyd George is expected to put through the government acquisition of the liquor trade, of which he was in favor two years ago. It has been estimated that the purchase of the liquor interests of England and Wales alone would involve a sum in the neighborhood of £300,000,000. Aside from the moral and economic reasons that might govern in peace times, England is becoming convinced that liquor now stands in the way of victory. The island of Newfoundland set the pace for the parent isle by going bone dry at midnight, December 31.

Another Meanest Man. A clerk in the Hudson Terminal branch of the New York Post Office was arrested on December 30 for stealing money addressed to the Dollar Christmas Fund for destitute Belgian children.

A State Doubly Governed. Governor Hunt of Arizona, who was officially declared defeated for reelection, but

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City, Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

who is testing the result of the election in the courts, refused to turn over the office and seal of the governor to Tom Campbell, Republican governor-elect, on January 1. Mr. Campbell, however, took the oath of office and was inaugurated as governor, establishing his headquarters temporarily in an office building. Postal authorities have decided that Governor Campbell shall receive all mail addressed to the governor of Arizona.

Mexico in President's Hands. Sessions of the Mexican-American Peace Committee will not be resumed. The American commissioners turned over to the President on January 4 what is termed the "true story of Mexico," a story which they had wrung from the Mexican commissioners themselves in the weeks of conference. This story is said to picture Mexico as a starving country overrun by bandit gangs who fight that they may eat, a nation without work, governed by a régime only partly in control of affairs, without a stable currency, scourged with the most loathsome diseases and in danger of dissolution unless quick change comes. It is said that Ambassador Fletcher will proceed to Mexico City at once, and that the President will take immediate steps for the withdrawal of the Pershing expedition, which army officers are said to consider as occupying a position strategically less valuable than would be created by the disposition of the same body of troops on the American side of the border. On January 3 Juan T. Burns, Carranza's consul general in New York City, was arrested under three Federal indictments charging conspiracy to violate and actual violation of the President's proclamation placing an embargo on the shipment of arms and ammunition to Mexico. The Federal secret service has been following up the conspiracy for a number of months. Munitions were shipped as pianos, typewriters, plumbers' supplies, paper-cutting knives, candy manufacturing machines and as other varieties of hardware, the ruse having been discovered by the breaking open of a case in process of unloading at Vera Cruz. Latest reports indicated success for the Carranza forces in several conflicts with Villistas.

Trade Commission Chairman Resigns. Impelled by the needs of his personal business, Edward N. Hurley, chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, resigned on January 4, resignation to become effective February 1. Commissioner Rublee having failed of confirmation in the Senate, this resignation leaves the commission short two members.

Pope Moves Toward Assimilation. News dispatches of January 4 indicated that the Pope was about to appoint a commission of four cardinals, who would be expected to renew a movement begun by Pope Leo XIII, abandoned by Pope Pius X, looking to a reunion of Christianity and the cultivation of friendly relations with the Anglican Church. Pius X issued a papal bull, the "Apostolicae Sevis," in which he denied the validity of Anglican or Episcopalian ordinations. Rome is said to have been moved to a reopening of the case by the rapprochement of the Russian and English churches and by the movement initiated by the American Episcopal church in the call for the conference on church unity which met at Garden City this past summer.

Fragments of News. In order to prevent an interim in which there will be no chief executive of the nation, President Wilson will take the oath of office on Sunday, March 4, although the inaugural ceremonies will be held on Monday. . . . The striking tailors in New York voted on January 3 to return to work. The tailors are to receive a dollar a week and cutters two dollars a week increase, and the forty-eight-hour week is to go into effect. . . . Shark skin is recommended by the Bureau of Fisheries as a substitute for leather. The skin is said to be very tough and durable. . . . The Philadelphia mint broke all its coinage records during 1916, producing 238,469,769 domestic coins, ranging from one-cent pieces to half dollars, and valued at $9,344,266; 31,376,328 coins were minted for Central and South American governments. . . . The biggest life insurance policy ever written went into effect January 1. It was taken out by the Union Pacific Railroad, insuring approximately 35,000 employees in an amount approaching $30,000,000, the annual premium being in the neighborhood of $750,000. . . . The annual jack rabbit drive in the Panhandle of Texas is reported to have accounted for 10,000 of these modified marathon experts. . . . President Wilson on January 3 nominated Lieutenant Colonel Chester Harding of the Engineer Corps of the Army to be governor of the Panama Canal, succeeding General Goethals. . . . The discoveries in rail manufacture of Dr. P. H. Dudley, the rail expert of the New York Central line, are to be made available for the use of all railways. Dr. Dudley believes that by the improved method of manufacture which he has worked out, flawless rails will be possible. Defective rails in the last thirteen years caused 3,500 railroad accidents, 200 deaths and a property loss approaching $5,000,000.

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE peace movement inaugurated by President Wilson seems on the whole to have grown in strength during the past week. Norway, Denmark and Greece have formally adhered to Mr. Wilson's initiative, while Spain has refused to do so on the ground that the present is not the proper time. The action of Norway is peculiarly significant and important. In many ways Norway is what might be called a British appendage, not only in the family connections of its royal house, but also in the feeling of the mass of its population, and it seems highly probable that Norway would not have taken any such decisive step without sounding in some discreet way the British government and being sure of its approval first.

Paris had a New Year's present in the shape of increased taxes, and much of them on those articles which everybody uses. For instance, letter postage has gone from two to three cents; tobacco pays 20 per cent. more; telegrams have followed the general trend; carfare likewise; theater tickets of all kinds pay more. The customary New Year's festivities, New Year and not Christmas being the great holiday in France, are practically done away with.

Reports from the Central Powers indicate that all available labor is being concentrated on the production of artillery and ammunition, which is being turned out in far larger quantity, these reports assert, than ever before. Particular attention is being devoted to the production of machine guns.

In the middle of the week the Germans captured the Dutch steamer Oldamdt in the Channel, loaded with contraband for England, and took her into Zeebrugge. This vessel was captured by them once before, but on her way into port was rescued by the British.

The French Admiralty announced the loss of the old battleship Gaulois, 11,200 tons, through the attack of a submarine. Nearly all her crew escaped.

An animated discussion is taking place in Europe as to whether the eastern or western front is, in the present phase of the war, the most important. The generality of opinion among the military experts writing in the journals of the neutral countries of Europe seems to be that this war, if it continues to a decision, will be decided on the eastern front and not on the western front.

Their argument runs about as follows, in support of this proposition: As a physical fact, the Teutons today hold firmly the whole of Central Europe and Asia Minor, from Hamburg to Bagdad, and the Teutonic dream of past years has now become an actuality. Unless the Allies are able to break the line of communications of this far-stretching empire, the Central Powers will come out of the war self-contained, possessing a large area of the best land in the world, which does and can produce practically all the raw materials, agricultural and mineral, of which its western industrial portion stands in need, and with means of communication between all parts of this vast area so located as to be beyond the reach of a sea power.

Recent events on the Somme and elsewhere have shown that to drive the Teutons out of Belgium and northern France would cost the Allies more men than they can bring to bear on that front, and consequently these critics argue that all the Central Powers have to do henceforth is to stand on the defensive purely in the west, reserving the greater portion of their strength for continuing and completing the Rumanian campaign and hitting Russia at every available opportunity. Not one of these critics seems to regard and there are good military reasons for this view Sarrail's army in northern Greece as an important factor in the eastern situation.

In Great Britain the adherents of the two theories seem about equally balanced, while in France, apparently, the advocates of the eastern front are in the majority. Of course Russia favors the eastern. In England the advocates of the western front, who are supported by several newspapers of more or less influence, are demanding that the Allies withdraw completely from their Macedonian front and transfer the troops there to the western front, thus concentrating their strength.

No doubt Greece would approve heartily of this program; but then how would Russia look at it, and if it were done, what would become of the government of Venizelos at Salonica?

Looking at this question from a detached standpoint, it seems very difficult to decide which would be the best thing for the Allies to do. On the one hand it seems clear that their only chance of decisively winning the war is to break up the Berlin-Bagdad combination, which is undoubtedly a physical fact, and they can only do this by recovering control of Serbia and Rumania and by obtaining control of Bulgaria and then mastering Turkey.

On the other hand, their military position on this front, outflanked completely as they are on their right wing, is so bad that it seems impossible for them to strike till they drive the Bulgarians and Turks out of their outflanking position on the Seres-Kavala, which would be an enormously expensive operation, and would probably require more men than the Allies now have altogether on this front.

Very little indeed outside of desultory artillery bombardments took place on the Austro-Italian front this week. The British report minor progress on the Mesopotamian front, but there is no news of any importance from the Caucasus.

Great Britain has prohibited the export of coal to Norway. The cause of this is said to be dissatisfaction with Norway's methods of exporting ore and fish. The result is that the Norwegians are considerably alarmed at the prospects of a coal famine.

On December 29 the Germans on the western front made a successful raid on the French positions on Hill 304 and Le Mort Homme Hill, and brought back some 200 prisoners and seven machine guns, besides capturing a French trench. On the rest of this western front, a little bombarding and a few trench raids were the only happenings.

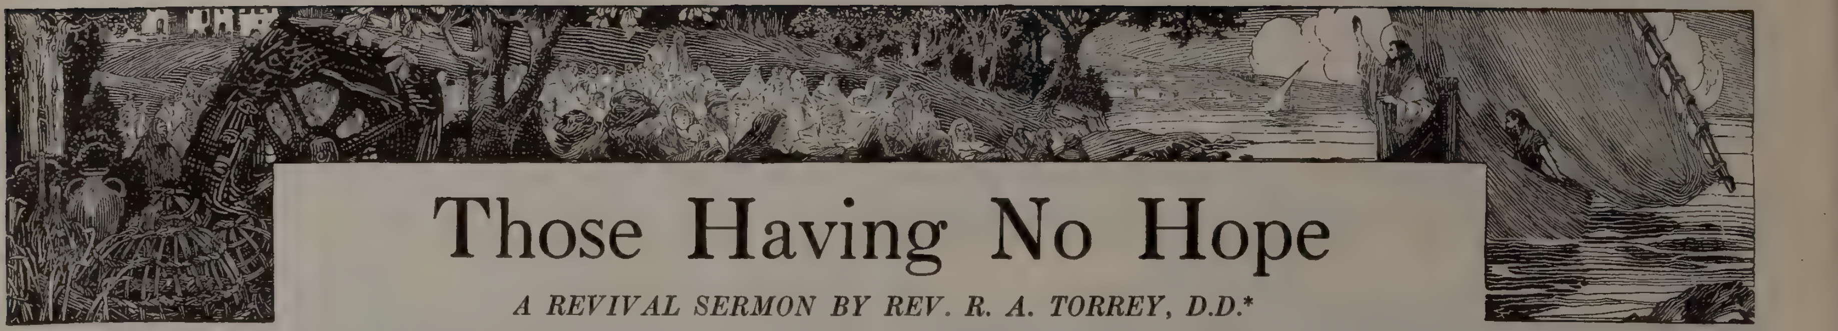
General Haig issued during the week a long report on the Somme offensive,

Continued on page 75

Rumanian troops retreating from Dobrudja, crossing the Danube on a pontoon bridge. Latest reports indicate the complete clearing of this province of Rumanians and Russians

Underwood & Underwood

A French motor trench-digger. Scoops on an endless chain dig the trench and construct breastworks of the earth, as shown



Those Having No Hope

*A REVIVAL SERMON BY REV. R. A. TORREY, D.D.

TEXT—Eph. 2 : 12, R. V. "Ye were at that time separate from Christ, alienated from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of the promise, having no hope, and without God in the world."

THESE words describe the appalling condition of the Ephesians before they were saved, but tonight I wish to impress upon you just three words in this dark picture: "Having no hope."

There are no words in the language more dreadful than those two words, "no hope." A doctor stands beside a bed upon which lies a man who is very ill. The doctor's finger is upon the sick man's pulse; he is looking intently into the sick man's eyes; he is eagerly watching every movement and the way in which the sick man breathes. The sick man's wife and children are gathered around the bed, looking anxiously first at the husband and father, and then at the doctor. At last the doctor looks up and says, "No hope."

A ship has sprung a leak in mid-ocean; the sailors are working with all their might at the pumps; the water from the hold dashes across the deck into the ocean. An officer stands by, now and then dropping a line into the hold, measuring the depth of the water, seeking to find if it is falling or increasing. At last he looks up and cries, "It is no use, boys; there is no hope!"

A man has been making every effort to keep off financial ruin, but at last he is obliged to throw up his hands in despair and cry out, "No hope."

AH, those are dark words, but they are darker yet in the connection in which we find them in our text. Better be without anything else than be without hope. We may be in great present distress, but if we have a good and sure hope for the future, it matters little. We may have great present prosperity, but if we have no good hope for the future, it is of little worth.

There are three classes who have no hope. But what do we mean by hope? Desire, no matter how strong it may be, is not hope. Mere expectation, no matter how confident it may be, is not hope. We use the word hope in a very careless way in much of our modern speech, but in the Bible the word is used with great care. Hope is a well-founded expectation for the future. Any expectation that has not a sure foundation is not really hope.

FIRST of all, the man who denies or doubts the existence of a personal God, a wise, mighty, loving Ruler of the universe, has no hope. He may cherish fond wishes about the future; he may even entertain confident expectations about it; but wishes are not hope, and expectations, no matter how confident, are not hope. His expectations are not well founded, and therefore they are not hope.

Man's only rational foundation for hope for the future is the existence of an intelligent, beneficent, and omnipotent God, ruling nature and the affairs of men. Atheism and agnosticism are unspeakably dark faiths, if any man has the courage to think them out to their logical conclusion; most atheists and agnostics dare not do it. But some agnostics and atheists have done it. Listen to the words of two men who were agnostics and who have thought through their creed of unbelief toward its logical and utterly dark conclusion. First of all, listen to the words of David Strauss, who began by questioning the miraculous and by trying to reconstruct the life of the Lord Jesus from the Gospel material, eliminating the supernatural and having the character and conduct left, but who wound up in blank agnosticism. He says: "In the enormous machine of the universe, amid the whirl and hiss of its jagged iron wheels, amid the deafening crash of its ponderous stamps and hammers, in the midst of this whole terrific commotion, man finds himself placed with no security, for a moment, that on an imprudent motion a wheel may not seize and rend him, or a hammer crush him to powder." That is an awful picture, but if there is no personal God, no God wise enough to know what is best, loving enough to desire what is best, and powerful enough to carry out what is best—no such God as the Bible presents—then Strauss's conclusion is inevitable, only he has understated rather than overstated the darkness of the outlook.

Now listen to another, Morley: "The millions of hewers of wood and drawers of water come upon the earth that greets them with no smile, stagger blindly under dull burdens for a season, and are then shoveled silently back under the ground, with no outlook and no hope." Pretty dark, is it not, this creed of agnosticism? But if there is no God, these statements, terrible as they are, appalling as they are, full of utter despair as they are, are understatements of the hopelessness and blackness of the outlook.

THE man who denies the truth of the Bible has no hope. It does not necessarily follow, because a man denies the truth of the Bible, that he does not believe in the existence of God. A man may believe in God, he may be a theist, and yet not believe the Bible. But even though a man is a believer in God, if he rejects the Bible, he has no hope; that is, he has no expectation for the future that has a solid and certain foundation underneath it. The conception that one gets of God from mere philosophy and pure reasoning is altogether too inadequate to form a rational foundation for an intelligent hope. Furthermore, the God of philosophy is necessarily an ever-vanishing quantity, for philosophy is always in flux. Philosophy never reaches conclusions that are final and settled.

I once was very fond of the study of philosophy; I waded through the teachings of the great philosophers, from the time of Socrates down to the time of the modern German philosophers; it seemed a fascinating study. At times I thought I had reached settled conclusions; but at last I discovered what every other thoughtful student of philosophy discovers sooner or later; that one philosopher comes upon the scene to demolish all who have come before him, only in turn to have his own conclusions demolished by those who follow him. The only conception of God that gives a man a good basis for expectation for the life that now is or the life which is to come is found in the Bible. It is true, many who reject the Bible borrow their idea of God from the Bible and build up a superstructure of hope upon the conception of God which they have borrowed from the Bible, and then fancy they have reasoned it out, and then they go on to discredit the Bible and throw it away, but by so doing unwittingly they tear out the very foundation of their own faith. If you give up the Bible you must logically give up the contents of the Bible, the teachings of the Bible; and if you give up the teachings of the Bible you must give up hope. There is no hope for the man who discards the Bible; that is, no well-founded expectation for the future.

THE man who believes in the Bible but does not accept and confess the Christ the Bible presents as his own personal Saviour and Master, has no hope. Many a man fancies he has a ground for hope because he is not an infidel or an atheist. Many a man says to me, "Why, I believe the Bible"; but that is not the whole question. Have you accepted the Christ of the Bible as your own personal Saviour, and are you confessing him before the world as your Lord, and are you proving that to be an honest confession by doing as he says? The Bible holds out absolutely no hope to any except those who accept the Saviour whom it is its main purpose to reveal. In this Bible which you profess to believe, we read in John 3 : 36, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." And still further we read in this Bible which you profess to believe: "If we sin wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins, but a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries. He that despised Moses' law died without mercy under two or three witnesses; of how much sorer punishment, suppose ye, shall he be thought worthy, who hath trodden under foot the Son of God, and hath counted the blood of the covenant, wherewith he was sanctified, a common thing, and hath insulted the Spirit of grace?" (Heb. 10 : 26–29). The one who believes the Bible but rejects the Saviour whom the Bible presents has every vestige of hope swept away by that very Book he believes. The man who believes the Bible but rejects the Christ of the Bible has no hope; the future has in it nothing but the blackness of utter despair.

We see, then, that the atheist and the agnostic have no hope; that the infidel and skeptic have no hope; that the orthodox believer in the Bible who rejects Christ as a personal Saviour and Lord has no hope. In what sense have they no hope?

THEY have no hope for the life that now is, no well-founded and sure expectation of blessedness for the life that now is. In the first place, they have no guarantee of continued prosperity. They may be very prosperous today, they may have perfect health, a comfortable income, hosts of friends, every earthly thing that heart would desire; but unless they are right with God, unless they have accepted his Son Jesus Christ and therefore have a right to claim the promise of the Bible as their own, there is absolutely no guarantee that these things which they now possess will continue to be theirs twenty-four hours. A thousand things may occur to change it all. Upheavals of nature may come, such as laid San Francisco in ruins a few years ago, wrecking the fortunes of thousands and bringing bereavement to many homes; social upheavals may come, political catastrophes may come, war may come; indeed, the black portent of war overhangs every people on earth today. Innumerable other adverse occurrences may come. A thoughtful man can conceive of many things that might occur that would sweep away in a few minutes the vast fortunes of even a Rockefeller or a Morgan. In the next place, they have no guarantee of continued capacity to enjoy prosperity, even if it continues. A man's prosperity may continue and he may lose all capacity to enjoy it. When I lived in Chicago, one of its wealthiest men had been for several years in a madhouse. His business continued to prosper enormously, but what good did that do him? He had no capacity to enjoy what he possessed. No man out of Christ has any guarantee of continued capacity to enjoy the things of the life that now is. No, the man out of Christ has no hope, no well-founded expectation for the life that now is. Furthermore, the man out of Christ has no guarantee of continued life. It takes but one little snip of the shears of fate to sever the cord of life. Of course, if a man is a true Christian this fact has no terrors for him; for what men call death is simply departing to be with Christ, "which is very far better." No man out of Christ has a good hope for the next ten minutes.

BUT infinitely worse than this is the fact that they have no hope for the life that is to come. This earthly life is but a brief span at the very longest. Earthly life, when I was a boy, appeared very long to me; but the other day I was reading some words that I wrote about twenty years ago. I said, "Life used to appear long when I was a boy, but now that I have just passed the fortieth milestone and feel confident my race is more than half run, it seems very short, very short." But now that twenty years more have passed, it seems shorter still. It seems shorter every year. I never knew time to fly as it has the past month. We are hurrying on toward the grave and eternity faster than the automobiles the other day whirled around the course in the Vanderbilt race. But eternity is long; how it stretches out! Let us stand now and look out down through the stretches of eternity. Look yonder; a thousand years have passed; are we any nearer the end of eternity? No. A million years have passed, and still it stretches on before us; a billion, a trillion; are we any nearer the end? Ah, no! On and on and on! The farther we look ahead the longer it stretches out. It is an awful thing to have no hope for eternity. The man out of Christ has no hope of blessedness after death. No, there is no light in the grave for the Christless man. There is no hope of glad reunion with friends who have gone or who may go. The believer loses his friends, but he does not sorrow as those who have no hope (I Thess. 4 : 13); he knows that the time is fast hurrying on when the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and when his loved ones who have gone before shall be raised, and when he shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall they ever be with the Lord and with one another (I Thess. 4 : 14–16). Ah, Christless man, you will never meet that sainted mother again. Christless woman, you will never meet again that sweet and innocent babe who has departed to be with Christ. Oh, Christless husband, how dear and noble was that woman who for some years walked by your side, and then she was called away and now she is with Christ in glory; but you will never meet her again. No; there is for the man out of Christ no hope of happy reunions in that world where there is no sorrow, no pain, no sickness, no death, no separation.

BEFORE we close, let it be said that the believer in Christ has hope.

First, he has hope for the life that now is. It is true, he does not know what the future may bring; but he has the sure Word of God for it that it will bring nothing but good; he knows that all things work to-

Continued on page 74

---

* Dean of the Bible Institute, Los Angeles, Calif. Preached in the Auditorium of the Institute, November 26.

FOR EVERY DAY
IN THE
YEAR

DAILY MEDITATION

Revs.
J. H. Jowett, D.D
C. C. Albertson, D.D.
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

A Divine Hatred

SUNDAY, January 21. Rev. 2 : 6. "This thou hast, that thou hatest . . . which I also hate." Here is a character much of which is soft and corrupt and degenerate. It is like a house, much of which is rotten and crumbling, but which retains one or two oak beams of splendid work. There are failings, and disloyalties, and vices, but amid the moral ruin there are some things as rare and precious as sound and fine-grained oak. And among these healthy remnants is a healthy hatred. "This thou hast, that thou hatest." I am not concerned to know the detailed nature of the hatred. It is sufficient to know that in this otherwise questionable character there was a healthy power of repulsion, a certain single moral recoil in which it retained fellowship with God. "This thou hast, that thou hatest . . . which I hate."

Now we are familiar with the teaching that through our love we may have communion with God, but perhaps we have not given needful emphasis to the correlative teaching that through our healthy, holy hatred we also share his kinship. We may be like him in our attractions, we may also be like him in our repulsions. A wholesome hatred is a very vital element in a sanctified life. To dilute our hatreds, to moderate our repulsions, is a sure sign of moral and spiritual degeneracy. And yet how afraid we are to show our intense dislike for the things which are dishonorable to God. We are more concerned to be "nice" than to be wholesome, to be weakly agreeable than to be invincibly loyal. The fires of our moral devotion are kept at a temperate heat; they cheer but they do not burn; they attract but they do not drive away.

But this power of repulsion is imperatively needed if we are to be the cleansing ministers of our God. There are some things which ought to be as repellent to us as unsound meat. We ought to be saved from them by the very strength of our disgust. We never think of dealing agreeably with putrid food, of handling it daintily as though it were at once both friend and foe. The way to deal with loathsome meat is to turn from it with intense physical hatred and disgust. And so should it be with all things that are morally unsound, all things dishonorable and cunning, all cruel and brutal things—we should hate them with a hatred which shares the holy fires of God. When our healthy hatreds cool into ignoble compromise we have surrendered one of our crowns. When our moral repulsions have lost their intensity, God himself will lose his attraction. We shall not be drawn unto him.

The only way to preserve a healthy hatred is to cultivate a holy love. And it is in a profound worship of the Lord that this clean and cleansing fire can be found. "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." J. H. J.

Walking in Love

MONDAY, January 22. Eph. 5 : 2. "Walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet-smelling savor." We know what it is to walk in sunshine, in rain, in a fog. If we could surround ourselves with love as with our natural element, in which we live and move and have our being, that would be living the life that God wants us to live, the life to which our profession entitles us and for which it qualifies us.

The love which the apostle would make our native element is not sentimentality, occasional generosity, sudden bursts of admiration, but something more profound and comprehensive. It is complete self-surrender in the service of another. For the perfect type of this love the apostle finds only in one being, Jesus Christ, who "hath given himself for us." He did not give us a dole of charity, a settlement for life, a great estate, but himself. He spent without stint the full strength of his manhood, supported by all the fulness of the Godhead which dwelt in him bodily, in our service. Never was a grander sacrifice kindled on any altar to God. It surpassed the offering of Noah after the flood, which delighted God so much that he had a record made of it by Moses.

John has summed up the earthly life of Jesus in the one word "love": he prefaces his account of the last act which Jesus performed for his disciples on the night of the betrayal with the words: "Having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end." That was "love divine, all loves excelling." Can this giant love ever be matched by our dwarfish hearts? Do not ask this question for the purpose of asserting the futility of the attempt; listen to the call of God: "Walk in love, as Christ hath loved," and leave your success to him. W. H. T. D.

Eloquent Silence

TUESDAY, January 23. Luke 23 : 9. "Then Herod questioned with him in many words; but he answered him nothing." Jesus was silent when speech would have been useless. Had he remained silent on the cross, it might have been interpreted as the silence of conscious defeat or the silence of helpless weakness. On the cross he spoke, revealing the fact that it was not within his heart to accuse his enemies, but to excuse them. But never was he more Godlike than when, in the presence of earthly power, he held his peace and answered not a word. Shall his example of self-restraint be forgotten by us, or remembered only as a noble sentiment? There are times in our lives when silence is golden, times when our "strength is to sit still."

Hydrographers tell us that beneath the foaming crest of the waves there is an unbroken calm. This is an example of the Christian's peace that passeth explanation—"central peace subsisting at the heart of endless agitation." Only one who knows himself in league with eternal power can learn how to be calm when others are in tumult. The psalmist was conscious of this alliance when he said, "Thou shalt keep them secretly in a pavilion from the strife of tongues." C. C. A.

The Print of the Nails

WEDNESDAY, January 24. John 20 : 25. "The print of the nails."

"Hath he marks to lead me to him,
If he be my Guide?
In his feet and hands are wound-prints,
And his side."

Once Thomas à Kempis wrote, "When thou, O my God, wouldst show thy love for the world, thou gavest it thy Son. When thou wouldst show thy love for thy Son, thou gavest him a cross." We can only say, "Herein is love"—we have no other words to use—"herein is love and awful consolation and almighty healing and hope."

When we nail our pride, selfishness and lust to the cross, we have the marks of the nails like our Lord. We must bear our cross as he did if we would have the likeness of the crucified One in our characters. We should never be ashamed of the scars of self-denial and deprivation for his sake.

The grave-clothes hid away Jesus' wounds only for a moment. When he arose, he showed them his hands and his feet. He gloried in these insignia of his suffering. Living Christians do not hide the print of the nails of their pain; only lifeless ones have covered away with a napkin and grave-clothes the beautiful evidences of their former loyalty to Christ.

The world will not believe in our Christianity unless it can see in us the print of the nails. This is the infallible proof that we belong to him. The whole Christian church must become one great Gethsemane before the world is won for Jesus.

"Behold, Christ's feet are on before!
And, other worlds of service to explore,
He went unfaltering to his quest:
And those pierced hands, last seen on Olivet,
Dowered him with passion for the people's needs."

E. W. C.

Overcoming the World

THURSDAY, January 25. I John 5 : 4, 5. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. Who is he that overcometh the world, but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God?" The great question in life is, "Shall we overcome the world, or shall the world overcome us?" The sum of all moral questions is, "Shall we ride the world victorious, or shall we let the world throw us, lame and defeated, at life's end?" The world may be overcome. We may be victorious over all the forces which conspire to defeat our highest aims. We may reach the Home of the Soul. We may come to the end of our earthly days, hopeful, confident, buoyant and glad. We all want to know how it can be done. We have but one life and we do not want to lose that. There are things which will overcome us if we do not learn how to master them. Sin will, sorrow will, passion will, the cares of life will, death will. Who shall teach us how to conquer these? These conquered, the world has nothing to terrify us, and our crown is won.

The world cannot be overcome by force. The weakest thing on earth is mere force. Knowledge cannot overcome the world. Money cannot overcome it. Faith alone is sufficient: belief in the reality of the unseen, and that belief so wrought into human experience as to make it both an affirmation and an act. The faith that overcomes is of the heart. It is deep as life. It is with us day and night. It overcomes sin by the grace of God. It overcomes sorrow by the infinite comfort of the consoling Christ. It overcomes death with the sublime assurance, "I know that my Redeemer liveth." C. C. A.

The High Court

FRIDAY, January 26. Ps. 9 : 4. "Thou hast maintained my right and my cause; thou sattest in the throne judging right." When opposing forces clash in any serious conflict, whether it be on the field of battle, or in a debate in Congress, or in the deliberations of a great council of the church, or at a famous trial in court, the interest of righteous people belongs not so much to one or the other of the parties contending as to the principles for which they contend. To the upright in heart it affords greater delight to see a righteous cause win than to see a friend win. For the cause of right is God's cause, and we must love God above all things.

It is therefore an important element of strength in any conflict to know that the cause which we represent has the divine approval. This conviction begets moral courage, calm resolve, a hopeful spirit under reverses, and trustful resignation in temporary defeat. For his own reasons God may in ordering the affairs of the universe permit even the righteous to suffer for a season. He may test our faith and school our patience in trials. But ultimately he leads the cause of right and truth on to victory. And when victory comes, as it did to David after many sore afflictions, the victorious Christian does not think of his valor, prudence, endurance, and the like, but he beholds in the decision that has been reached the verdict of the Supreme Judge of the earth. From his throne on high the just God superintends the affairs of men. Statesmen deciding upon policies, generals forcing issues, judges making awards, are but his agents. The Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Ill fares the man who does not recognize the invisible government of the world. Even the blind heathen have sought to propitiate their deities when facing grave issues.

The Christian has an Advocate with the Judge of the whole world, Jesus Christ, and the consciousness of his sympathy and friendship in our conflicts is the greatest source of our strength. W. H. T. D.

Friends Eternal

SATURDAY, January 27. Phil. 4 : 1. "Ye are my joy and crown." A Syracuse banker on hearing Billy Sunday tell of the welcome he expected to receive in heaven from those he had led to Christ, exclaimed to his partner, "There are none in heaven to welcome me, because I led them to Christ, but if God gives me another year there will be, for I am going to work for him." No doubt a large portion of the happiness of heaven will arise from Christian fellowship, and none will be sweeter than that between the saved and the saviors, the led and the leaders.

Stephen's angelic look at Saul of Tarsus, as the martyr cried, "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge," convicted the persecutor. On his way to Damascus, he could not forget the luster of Stephen's countenance. When light from heaven struck him to the ground, he was ready to cry out, "Who art thou, Lord, and what wilt thou have me to do?"

Think of Paul's meeting with Stephen at the gates of bliss! He was to be Stephen's crown of rejoicing; the martyr and the apostle were clasped in the undying arms of holy affection, while Paul's crown was full of stars from the multitude he had led to the Saviour.

"We have found the Christ," "We brought him to Jesus," are the noblest words that ever fell from the lips of the Christian worker. The name of Andrew is immortalized by his bringing Peter, his brother; for he brought one who is called the Rock, like the Rock of Ages.

Every Christian should immediately go out and win souls for their sakes, for your own sake, and for Jesus' sake. Then your entrance into heaven will not be among strangers. E. W. C.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

The Church and Peace

IN the great struggle which is now going on throughout the world to pave the way for an understanding which may result in peace, the attitude of the Christian Church is of the highest importance. In Europe, unfortunately, the church from the very outbreak of the war had weakly allowed itself to be tempted away from its true allegiance. It seemed to have forgotten that its divine Founder, in the very earliest stages of his earthly ministry, had thrust away the tempter who showed him the "kingdoms of the world and the glory of them," and offered him all, if he would fall down and worship him.

The church, Christ's representative on earth, has succumbed to temptation. It has allowed its spiritual dominion to slip away from it, while grasping for material power. It has encouraged war when it should have preached peace. It has stirred up the passions of men and fanned the flame of hatred in the hearts of the nations, and it has thus caused to be poured out more rivers of blood to mingle with the streams that have flowed over the battlefields of Europe.

Seeing the lamentable failure of the church abroad, the warning should have been sufficient for the Christian Church in America. What, then, can be thought of the attitude of those fifty prelates and laymen who lately united in a protest against the great world movement for peace, and asserted that "it might bring a curse instead of a blessing"?

Let us confess it freely and unreservedly: For the church, or any portion of its representatives, to proclaim such doctrine is a shock to the Christian men and women of our land. They feel it to be an unspeakable humiliation that the church in America, which in this greatest of all world crises ought to be the stanchest upholder of peace and forgiveness, should try to seduce God's loyal people to serve under the blood-red Satanic banner of war.

But the men who committed this grave assault on Christianity are not in any sense representative of what a true shepherd of the flock should be. Even before the issuance of that protest, the true duty of the church in the present crisis had been expressed in clear and unmistakable terms by churchmen of the highest ability and of flawless loyalty to the principles of the ministry.

Foremost among these comes President W. H. P. Faunce, the head of Brown University, who sounds this clear note:

"It is the duty of the church to drive straight at the causes of war—false ideas and ideals—and to replace them with true and just conceptions.

"1. The church must drive out hatred by bringing in love. It can show the absurdity of race hatred, since the races we most dislike are in some ways our superiors. The church can insist that love is not a sentiment, but a perception—an insight into the spiritual possessions of other people. It can show that love is based on reason, and therefore eternal.

"2. The church can refuse to appeal unto Cæsar as final arbiter in any controversy. It can refuse to resist militarism by imitating it.

"It can steadily exalt reason and conscience as first resort in every controversy. It can cultivate the 'international mind,' which is simply the Christian mind. It can lead its members out of petty provincialism into the vision of 'other sheep which are not of this fold.' It can believe and teach that nothing is settled until it is settled right, and that right can never be finally determined by bayonets or bombs.

"Here is the immediate, permanent, fundamental duty—to make love reasonable, to disavow ultimate reliance on force, to cultivate the international mind, and to lead humanity in building up a world organization to insure world peace."

Another eminent leader in the religious thought of the nation, President David Starr Jordan of Stanford University, makes an equally straightforward deliverance on the mission of the church today. In ringing sentences, which we trust may penetrate the misguided minds of the clerical signers of the protest against "premature peace," he declares:

"The clear and urgent duty of the church today is to stand for peace, justice and reconciliation in international affairs. Its platform may well be that expressed by Martin Luther nearly four centuries ago: 'The force of arms must be kept far from matters of the Gospel.' The Christian Church rests on the message of Jesus, and a large part of that message asserts that all men are children of one Father, brothers and neighbors, and that as such they should not hate each other. For these teachings the Church of Jesus must stand, else it belies its Founder and is no church of his. Opposed to these ideals in every regard is the spirit of war.

"There is scarcely a form of international misdeed which can be avenged by war without creating injustice, outrage, and suffering of such a degree that the initial outrage may be totally forgotten. All that can be done by the force of arms is to kill so many men that the survivors are paralyzed or terrorized.

"There is in war itself no redeeming quality. It is for the Christian Church to rise above it, and to take its part in saving from its ravages whatever it may of human values.

"We have seen war nakedly. We know what it means; we will do our best to keep it far from all we cherish and from all we worship."

Similar views along the same lines and equally convincing are expressed by President E. Y. Mullins, D.D., LL.D., Southern Baptist Theological Seminary; Bishop Samuel Fallows, D.D., LL.D.; Rev. Walter Rauschenbusch, of Rochester Theological Seminary; that eminent Christian scholar Dr. Junius B. Remensnyder of New York, and others whose names are each a tower of strength in Christian exposition.

If Jesus came to earth today, how would he regard the attitude of the fifty protesters against "premature peace"? Can we imagine him smiling in approval, as he hears the emphatic declaration from the lips of men pledged to teach his Gospel, that more blood must flow; that peace, if made now, would be displeasing to him; that the interminable, horrible struggle must go on, rushing multitudes of new victims into eternity? Dare any one of the militaristic ministers assert that the world's Redeemer would counsel the continuance of this frightful war?

Such a Deity would be a pagan Moloch, and not the Saviour and Pardoner of men! Jesus taught men to forgive, and even to love their enemies.

. . .

It is not too late for the Christian churches of America to counteract the false teaching of this group of war-frenzied ecclesiastics by proclaiming the doctrines of Jesus as he taught them. "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight." Let them emphasize the brotherhood of nations, the forgiveness of enemies, the un-Christianity of war, and the peaceful adjustment of all human differences, and that the church has a right and a duty to pray that God, in his omnipotent wisdom, may bring the war to a speedy close in righteousness.

The church, if it would live and retain its influence, must educate the people to see in war the worst product of pagan civilization. It should not attempt to temporize or extenuate, or to admit for a single moment the right of any power or powers to doom millions of men to death over a quarrel which an enlightened civilization is capable of adjusting without bloodshed or resort to violence.

The church cannot ignore the war or stand tamely by as an idle spectator at a time when the great purposes of God, as indicated in the prophecies, may be approaching fulfilment. The church should be in the war, but not of it. It has its own war to wage against suffering and hunger and destitution and helplessness. It can summon its legions to those blessed deeds of love and mercy, and reach out to all, friend and foe alike, who need its help. Indeed, its benevolent and Christlike action in this war should be on a scale commensurate with the evil it seeks to redeem. This is the campaign to which the church is called today—not to urge on slaughter, but to do valiant deeds of healing and succoring, and above all to lift up the Cross, in which alone lies the world's only hope.

Municipal Markets Recommended

WHEN the pinch of the high cost of living began to be widely felt, some two years ago, the Christian Herald published the views of governors, mayors and leading citizens in many states in advocacy of the general establishment of municipal markets, where the products of the farm could be sold to the consumer at fair prices. Our Eastern states, with their ponderous legislative machinery, are now beginning to see the light. Governor Whitman's New York State Market Commission has just made its report, which recommends the establishment of a State Market Department, with subordinate municipal market departments, especially in New York City. It also recommends the adoption of a system of co-operative buying and selling of foodstuffs in suitable centers, strict state supervision and licensing of all commission merchants, the centralization of all state functions relating to the food supply, and better terminal facilities on the part of the railroads to assure quicker handling of food products. These plans, if carried through efficiently and promptly, will be welcomed by both the farmers and the consumers. Any restrictive legislation now on the statute books, which would impede progress, should be summarily revoked. It is worth noting that the report of the commission points out unequivocally that since 1914 our vastly increased export of food to the warring countries has been one of the leading causes of high prices. We sent to Europe $337,000,000 in breadstuffs in 1916 as against $172,000,000 in 1914; $29,000,000 worth of dairy products as against $5,800,000, and $201,000,000 in meat products as against $97,000,000 two years ago. All the cargoes of 1916 have been sent in a period of decreased food production, when our own legitimate necessities could not have spared even as much as we exported two years ago.

The Little Things

MANY think that opportunity must be something great and unusual and that it never comes near them. But the fact is that the surest stepping-stone for any one to a higher place lies in doing better the very thing closest at hand.

The obstacles to our success usually are not big things, but little things; so little that we do not notice them, or, noting, despise them.

The world contains so much failure and pessimism largely because so many of us dream all our days of doing far-off great things, but neglect to do the little things lying right before us.

The Panama Canal was dug a shovelful at a time. Finished, it is the greatest work of civil engineering in the world; but it was accomplished only by a series of little things.

The foundation of the greatest fortunes is the careful looking after the pennies, even fractions of pennies.

The greatest scientists are not above minute study of the smallest insects and seemingly insignificant things.

The greatest buildings are laid up a single stone at a time.

It is of no avail to us that we dream of mighty structures if we have not the patience and humility to do so little a thing as the laying up of a single stone. There are no great achievements for us if we are above doing the little things.

Fine visions are good; but even an Angelo could realize his visions only by laying on his little brushmarks one by one.

It is the vision that frames our lives, but it is the little things that fill in the picture. We may make it beautiful or hideous according to our fidelity and patience in little things.

Hamilton Wright Mabie

ALTHOUGH neither a genius nor an immortal, Hamilton Wright Mabie was one of the truest forces in American literature. His ideals were high and his influence was ever uplifting. His talents were considerable, but not in excess of his robust optimism and generous, warm-hearted impulses. In this period of "clever" writing his work stands as a bulwark of solid, substantial, spiritualized humanness. As a critic, a commentator and a compiler he did valuable and permanent service, and as a lecturer and after-dinner speaker he won loving friends throughout the entire country.

Only One Kind of Failure

THERE is but one kind of failure—moral failure. Every one is required to be his own architect, and he must devise the means by which to achieve his aims. If there were any set rules by following which we might be sure to attain our ambitions, there could be no such thing as failure. But all that exists as common property are certain acknowledged principles of spiritual morality, industry and character-building, which successful architects of fate must use.

It is difficult to understand the limitations of our fellow man. How often are we agreeably surprised by the success of one we considered dull and stupid! The brilliant men in college, on the other hand, are not always the successful ones afterwards. A great many men with advantages of education or wealth or social standing gain the fatal impression that the world owes them success. The world owes nothing to any one which one does not wrest from it by his own aims and efforts. It can refuse to no one what he spiritually deserves.

The achievement of success has no standard gauge of measurement. What may be a simple calling may be crowned with the very greatest success, although it may not be fraught with great remuneration. The only real failure lies in failing to make the best of one's opportunities, whatever they may be.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D.D.

Famous Author Arraigns Rum

IN the January number of the American Magazine, the editor introduces an article by Booth Tarkington on "Nipskillions," in these words: "These are Booth Tarkington's own opinions of drink, founded upon his experience and his knowledge of the experience of men he has known well." We quote a paragraph or two of this most remarkable article: "A nipskillion, the captain said, is a man who has had all the liquor he ever wants, and because he doesn't drink any more himself, won't let anybody else have any. This definition, a weapon ready to the hands of the convivial, makes the nipskillionery of the present article seem deliberately odious, and the writer admits with timidity that he is a nipskillion. Should not the scorched child warn others against playing with fire?" The writer then expresses his opinion by putting in the mouth of an artist friend these words: "I hate it! I admit that, and so of course I can't be quite fair to alcohol; but why should a person be fair to the devil? Oh, yes, I know that's the regular old-fashioned 'temperance talk,' and the fact is that for a while in the first stages of revulsion I did come pretty near being one of these fellows that make speeches beginning, 'Boys, I carry a Bible in my hip pocket now, but last year it was a whisky flask, and a pack of cards in my breast pocket.' Well, I didn't get quite so far in oratory, and I do try to look at the question with as much reasonableness as I can. But take my case. I thought I was all right, and I was gone before I knew it. In fact, I was gone for a long while and didn't know it. Then a miracle pulled me out, an actual miracle." Then the writer devotes the rest of the article to showing what a miracle it was to quit a habit that had such a death grip on him. The human will is necessary to leave off drinking, but alcohol so enfeebles the will that divine grace and help are necessary to make reform from the drink and every other habit complete. In "Nipskillions" the man comes to himself. This coming to one's self is described by Christ in the story of the young man who awoke from an evil appetite to self-respect, to virtue and to God. "When he came to himself he said, . . . I will arise and go to my father." (Luke 15 : 17, 18.)

Keeps Young by Humor

MARION HARLAND celebrated her eighty-fifth birthday in her New York City home the other day. When asked the secret of her long life, she said: "A sense of humor and work every day keep you young. I would go to the graveyard or the insane asylum very soon if I were to stop work." She has written some forty volumes, and is still busy with her pen. The aged authoress has not only a deep sense of humor, but also a deep sense of duty in her literary work. In her passion for industrious service and the motive behind it, she copies the spirit of the Master who said, "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day; the night cometh, when no man can work." (John 9 : 4.)

$200,000 for Artificial Flowers

STANLEY FIELD gave $200,000 the other day to establish an adjunct to the Field Museum of Chicago, where the finest wax and glass imitations of flowers in America will be made, amounting to some two hundred and seventy-five of them. People can imitate, but cannot duplicate, God's handiwork in nature. The milliner can make decorations that look like flowers, but they are not flowers. If they are put under the microscope they will appear as pieces of rag stained with paint. The Creator has endowed man with the ability to copy the beauty of nature into the beauty of art, and this gift of Mr. Field's is a commendable benevolence. Artificial flowers can be made so nearly like the original that the naked eye can hardly distinguish the difference. But if they are ever so lightly touched by the fingers they are found to be dead, and the difference is at once realized. Christ thus compares the divine art in making flowers with the human art in decoration, "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, that even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." (Matt. 6 : 28, 29.)

© Underwood & Underwood

Niagara Illuminated with Electricity

ONE of the grandest spectacles that the eye can behold was the illumination of Niagara Falls recently by electricity. The Falls themselves, one of the sublimest specimens of the divine handiwork on this planet, were made resplendent by human genius in mastering the subtle current with its light and heat so as to seemingly set ablaze the falling water. When hydro-electrical force was discovered the capitalists saw the millions of horsepower in Niagara that could be harnessed up to industrial enterprises, and reached out their greedy fingers to lay hold upon it. Lovers of nature secured legislative action by which 107 acres on the American side of the Falls were acquired as a New York State reservation. Ontario bought 154 acres on the Canadian side and established the Victoria Park. Soon afterward several power companies on both sides of the Falls secured the right to use part of the flow. One New York corporation diverted enough of the water to make 120,000 horsepower. The aid of Congress was sought in the passage of the Burton Law to prevent the actual spoliation of one of the most magnificent natural pictures on the earth. Practical engineers are now talking seriously about the possibility of diverting the whole flow of water, estimated at 3,000,000 horsepower, most of the hours of the day, to turn wheels and develop light, heat and energy, and then turn the water on again and let it flow over the falls at stated hours each day, one, two or three, for the benefit of the millions of people that come to see it each year. Civilization has no right to be a vandal. It has chopped down our forests, and the state and federal governments have had to set apart forest reservations and replant the trees destroyed. It battered down the glorious Palisades on the Hudson to make pavements for the streets and material for the stone mason, and New York and New Jersey had to drive the spoilers away and reserve the scenery in a park. Now the cold proposition is not to appropriate a part of the water, but literally to ruin the Falls as a spectacle. We cannot believe that our people have become so sordid that they will consent to the destruction of Niagara. As the devout soul beholds the inexpressible grandeur of Niagara this question is instinctively asked: "Who hath divided a water course for the overflowing of waters, or a way for the lightning of thunder?" (Job 38 : 25.)

8,000 Hear "The Messiah"

IN Madison Square Garden, New York, on the night of December 26, 8,000 persons heard 1,000 singers of the New York community chorus sing Christmas carols and Handel's masterpiece, "The Messiah." The performance was a part of the "Tree of Light" celebration, and began with a big open-air festival in the park in front of the Garden, where the seventy-five-foot tree stood aglitter with color and light. At eight o'clock the chorus descended from the stand, and with boy scouts marching alongside, their wands held horizontally end to end, they proceeded to the Garden, singing Arthur Farwell's "March, March." It was a free concert, and a typical New York City audience assembled, some rich, but largely from the tenement-house districts, inhabited by many nationalities. Women from the tenements with shawls over their heads hurried in, side by side with women in opera cloaks. An old white-haired man with one empty sleeve, plainly a Civil War veteran, followed some cherry-cheeked high school girls into the Garden. An old negro crept in and asked if there was a seat for him, and received the hearty answer, "Seats for all." The chorus was led by Mr. Harry H. Barnhart. That masterpiece, sung in the Garden at the birthtime of the Messiah, should continue to ring with its melody and eloquence during the year throughout our nation and the civilized world. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." (Isa. 9 : 6.)

The Richest County

IT would hardly be expected that one would have to go to Maine to find the most productive agricultural county in America. People look to Maine for tall pine trees and good school-teachers, for the fair average Yankee farmer who owns big woods and leaves his other land uncultivated, while his children have gone West for richer land. Yet this state points to her Aroostook County as the banner county of America, having taken that honor away from Los Angeles, Calif. The wealth of Aroostook has come not from the beautiful apple, peach, pear or plum, not from wheat or corn, not from herds and flocks with pedigree, but from the homely potato. The quality, size and productiveness of the potatoes of this region are such that the whole nation is turning its eye thither for seed, which brings a very high price. It is pretty hard to beat the Long Island potato or the Long Island farmers, and yet many of them go to Aroostook County for seed potatoes. It is said that as high as $100,000 worth is sometimes marketed in one day. Columbus came west to find gold for the queen who fitted out his expedition. The Spaniards found gold, but they also found the potato, which has proven a source of wealth greater than many of the gold mines of the world. This promise of agricultural prosperity to God's ancient people is fulfilled in our history: "Honor the Lord with thy substance, and with the firstfruits of thine increase, so shall thy barns be filled with plenty." (Prov. 3 : 9, 10.)

A Strange Christmas Present

RETURNING from church Christmas morning, Mrs. Patrick W. Finn, living at Ant Hills, Pa., found a neat little package bound with red ribbon hanging on the doorknob. Opening it, she found it contained diamond rings and brooches worth approximately $5,000, which had been taken from her home by burglars on November 10. Four carpet-cleaners are now under arrest for the theft, but the case against them will be dropped. The Jewish law strongly safeguarded the right of property; the penalty against theft was very severe. Restitution was required. Whether the thieves brought the jewelry back for conscience' sake, or for fear of conviction, they concluded to obey the commandment, "Then it shall be . . . that he shall restore that which he took violently away." (Lev. 6 : 4.)

The Wicked John Goode

An Autobiography Transcribed by
HORACE WINTHROP SCANDLIN

CHAPTER XXIII

Together—at Last

BACK in New York never to leave it again! Back at the Mission! Back among my Christian friends! Back at the Labor Bureau! My strength and hope and courage returned to me manyfold, and thoroughly did I realize what it had cost—my leaving there that spring.

Jobs didn't come in very fast, and my money was almost gone when a wonderful thing happened. Wonderful, because I was nearly broke and because I chanced to be around when it happened.

The firm for whom I first went to work piling lumber needed an extra man—and as before telephoned the Labor Bureau.

"Had the Mission a man to send over?"

"Yes, the same man they sent before. Would he do?"

"Yes, he had done well. Send him over right away!"

And I went. They were busy, and for about three weeks the work was steady. Nearly all my money went to Jane, of which she saved considerable. This time the work was a little more interesting, and I became well liked by many of the men.

Each day I prayed for strength to stand for God, and also for regular employment. And then came a day when the end of the work was in sight. I got talking with Bill Quarterly about my need of steady work because of a sick wife, and he asked me why I didn't make a bid for a steady job there. I told him I didn't know why.

"If you don't, I'll do it for you," was his reply, and he did. Then and there I was added to the regular payroll.

Without the slightest warning that it was at hand my greatest wish had come to pass! I couldn't believe it! It didn't seem real! I didn't deserve it! Ten dollars a week! Five hundred and twenty dollars a year, with overtime amounting to possibly seventy-five dollars more! And all with a reliable house doing a big yearly business!

A home at last!

I didn't deserve it, but Jane did, and she would have it! And then—then—would I stick? With God's help I would. I knew that! At night I prayed to him as I'd never prayed before, that I might remain steadfast and true to him. If I did that I'd remain steadfast and true to her. I had it right this time. I wanted to aid my wife through God.

And God answered my prayer. He has kept me safe ever since. He left Jane with me for a little longer. He let me make up to her one hundred millionth part of what I owed her. He let me see her supremely happy! He let me help her make others happy! Yes, God is good!

I told Dr. Hallimond about my good fortune—about an answered prayer. I told him what I wanted to do, and the look that came into his kindly face told me to "Go ahead!" And ahead I went. I took a dingy little room in the basement of a rooming house at 210 West Fourteenth Street, quite near my work.

And then we had our honeymoon! My wife, myself and God!

There have been many honeymoons in this old world of ours, but there never was a happier one than that. The void that for seventeen years had filled her heart with anguish and sorrow disappeared. God is good! Yes, indeed, he is! He brought us together, but he spared each of us the knowledge that her illness was incurable, and that slowly but surely she must fail until it was time for her to go. He let our remaining nineteen months together be months of fuller joys than most men know. I can never thank him enough for his goodness and mercy to me.

The one room we called home I furnished with odds and ends from here and there, and we began our housekeeping. At first Jane was well enough to walk the necessary three or four blocks to do the marketing. She was a careful buyer, for well had she learned the value of a dollar. In her hands my ten dollars went twice as far as I could have made them go. Our industrial insurance was always paid well in advance! The work at the factory went smoothly along, and our happiness was complete.

It was then, immediately after our reunion, that religion became most real to me. It became a living, tangible thing, a force, a power that I could clothe myself with and make good use of each day I lived. My home, humble though it was, acted like a tonic on my tired, weary system. There was silver in my wife's hair and music in her laughter. I'd put the silver there and the music there. I couldn't take the silver away but I could prevent the musical laughter from ever going away. That was my job, and an easier one no man ever had.

"John, you're a good man now!"

Over and over again she said that, as she sat at her mending while I read.

THE Mission by now entranced me like the race tracks had done such a short while before. I became an assistant leader and then a leader.

I stood on the platform and told my story to the crowd of men in front of me, firm in the knowledge that somewhere in that crowd was a man I could touch like I'd been touched—firm in the belief that each time I told of the power of the religion of Jesus Christ I strengthened my own faith and foundation and strengthened the faith of each man who heard me.

As time went on and I began to meet more right-thinking people I became convinced that the reason men fall away from God is because they stop thinking. And so I planned what I had to say along lines calculated to make men see in themselves something I had formerly possessed. After a while I began to hear little things and see little things that made me feel that I, too, was spreading the story of love, of hope, that Jesus told; that I was helping others to something better. It made me wonderfully happy and gave me more courage and faith and strength. I went among the fellows in the meetings and learned to know them personally. And then after I'd go home Jane and I would talk over the men I'd met and wanted to help. Thus it was that God became so real to me. I saw him at work and I worked with him. I knew what he'd done for me. I could see it! My wife could see it! My friends could see it! It was real! My home and my new self were powerful testimonies to his realness! No argument could get away from those things! And I knew, too, that nowhere in the world could a man be found with a more unpromising outlook for success than I had had.

THE wonderfully beautiful part of life in that little basement room of ours were the Christian friends I'd made at the Mission. They all knew my story, and they came regularly and gladly with delicacies and good cheer for Jane.

There were rough times, too, when we'd close for a day or two at the factory. There were other times when calls on the cash were heavy for medicine. There were times when men we were interested in needed money more than we did. Many times there wasn't all we'd have liked to have, but always there was something else that all the money in the world wouldn't buy—the "peace that passeth all understanding" and the knowledge that God is all powerful.

But, as with all happy times, an end had to come. Jane grew more feeble. She could do less and less of the housework. This I did at night. Finally she could do no more than crawl about from chair to chair and watch longingly between the gratings in our only window for my return. I left home early after getting breakfast and washing the dishes and didn't return till twelve-thirty for lunch. One day on coming home the shutters were closed and I was startled. And then inside, downstairs, our door was locked from within. In a second I'd broken through it. There on the floor, in a great wide pool of her own blood, lay Jane with a two-inch gash in her head, where she had struck in fainting alone. And we sent her away to a hospital with a second stroke.

MORE feeble than ever she returned. Gracious and happy and contented she was. Not once had she ever scolded me or chided me or crossed me in any way. And here she was dying and I was helpless to save her. All I could do was to care for her in my primitive way. My friends would have sent her to a private room in a hospital, but she wouldn't leave her home or her John. They would have sent in a nurse, but she would allow no one to care for her but John. Even after she was unable to recognize them they came and came and came, these friends of ours—these friends so full of brotherly love. On the advice of at least three doctors, I kept her alive on whisky for the last few months. My wife was dying under my very eyes. I'd had to give up the little home where we'd lived and loved. I was powerless to keep her. But I bought her whisky and I fed her whisky for weeks and weeks and weeks, and not a drop of it ever touched my lips. Oh, God is good! Think what he saved that woman from as she lay there dying! God is good!

At last she required more care than I could give her—you know the rest—how we sent her to Bellevue and how she died.

. . .

John Goode's huge frame shook convulsively while unchecked tears rolled down his cheeks. They were tears of sadness and shame, of joy and victory all in one. The flood gates of an intense nature had broken open. Such tears are difficult to check even when there is a will, but there was no will now to check them. There are times when naught save tears will bring relief and this was such a time.

Instinctively my mind went back to that clear, cold October day when Jane lay so sick in Bellevue Hospital. Was it the guiding hand of Providence that had forced this man and his desperately sick wife into my mind as I worked at my desk that day? Was it the guiding hand of Providence that kept me uneasy all day until at half-past four I could stand it no longer? I put on my hat and walked over to the factory where he worked, and together we went around the corner to their dingy basement room where they had been so wondrously happy for over nineteen months. We went to that room which had been a retreat from storm and temptation for so many, many human derelicts—to that room which had shared its all with any who asked by day or by night, to that room which had seen so much of physical pain—to that room which was to be his home no longer!

Graciously and hospitably he prepared a frugal meal. The dishes we left unwashed. We hurried to the street.

Vividly I remember—remember as though it were but yesterday—how from a flower vender at Sixth Avenue and Fourteenth Street he purchased ten cents' worth of perfumed sprayed roses for the frail, sick little wife lying in her bed of pain in that ward at Bellevue. And again we had hurried on. Neither of us spoke. We entered the ward. Her bed was empty and had been freshly made up. My heart almost stopped. He did not seem to realize the significance of that empty bed.

A nurse tiptoed up and beckoned us to follow. Jane had failed rapidly late that afternoon and they had telegraphed for him to come at once. But the telegram had miscarried. Beyond the shadow of a doubt it had been an act of Providence that had compelled me to act as that telegram failed to reach him.

They had moved the almost worn-out little frame to a private room. The bed lay close to a partly opened window. Preceded by the nurse, we entered at precisely the moment that nature gave way and the poor, tired, worn-out little heart ceased its beating forever. Those flowers, which he could not hand to her now, he laid gently on her breast.

What a night that was! How brave he had been! How manly—how totally unlike the man he formerly had been—how much like the man so many of us ought to be!

We walked the streets, going nowhere, but always walking, walking, walking, till long after daylight. It was bitter cold, but he felt it not. He was fighting—fighting the biggest battle of his life. Fighting to resist the old call, the call of drink, excitement, of anything to deaden the pain at his heart.

And he won his fight.

His tears ceased and our eyes met. We read each other's thoughts. Why shouldn't we? Fate had served me as she had him. He had been to me under similar circumstances what I have been to him. Together each time we had passed through two never, never-to-be-forgotten events.

YOU know how we took her little body to the Mission that the men there might see the lesson in her life—you know the memories that service awakened in the hearts of many men long since separated from their dear ones as I had been. God alone knows how much good that service did.

You remember how we cleared the room out, destroyed what I didn't want, and gave the rest away? It was all over then. And when the excitement had passed off and the old, old wanderlust again crept into my being I packed up my belongings, for I was afraid!

With my bundle in my hand, and with the fear in my heart that I'd fall, I went back where my real, true self came from—I went back to live again at the Bowery Mission!

EPILOGUE

By Dr. J. G. Hallimond, Superintendent of The Bowery Mission

JOHN GOODE is by no means an imaginary person. His story is not, as some might suppose, either romance or fiction. The graphic recital of this man's uplifting from the lowest depths of depravity to the pure, clean heights of a thoroughly regenerated manhood is not open even to the charge of exaggeration. Speaking under the mighty stress of an exaltation and rapture unknown and unknowable except to those who have been delivered from the thrall of gross materialism, and have become "new creatures in Christ Jesus," extreme language, with an occasional trip across the border into the purely imaginary, might almost have been pardonable. But nothing but hard, cold, and sometimes cruel fact has fallen from this man's lips.

The temptation to the author, Mr. Scandlin, must also have been a very great one. The friendship between these two men has been one of the most pathetic things I have ever known. Utterly dissimilar in disposition, training, and temperament, the one a young business man, the other a hardened, crooked ex-convict, they were brought together in the Bowery Mission, learned together at the feet of the Great Teacher the same lesson of love, and formed for each other an affection and respect hardly surpassed since the days of David and Jonathan. Notwithstanding this, Mr. Scandlin has conducted the recital of this touching story without permitting a hair's breath of deviation from the line of absolute fact.

THE story could very well be extended, and something said of John Goode's life of abundant usefulness during the last few years. He is one of our most active workers, the leader of our Wednesday night meetings, and the assistant leader of the Sunday evening meetings. He is never absent from his post. He puts an amazing amount of enthusiasm into everything he says and does in connection with the meetings. When he speaks, he never remains on the platform, but walks down into the midst of the crowd, where he has his audience at close grips. His talks and testimonies are always delivered with tremendous force, and many a brand has he plucked from the burning.

His activities, however, are not confined to the meetings. If there is any poor outcast who has fallen so often that even the warm-hearted workers in our meetings have lost faith in him, it is John Goode that goes after him. If the news comes to the Mission that some man has fallen by the way, been overcome with temptation, and is in the back room of some saloon, or has been taken to the Tombs prison or the alcoholic ward of Bellevue Hospital, it is John Goode that always flies to the rescue. His own deliverance has been so wonderful, and his faith in God and man, therefore, so great, that he despairs of no one.

HE is a man of great mental ability; he has a passionate love of reading works of philosophy, poetry, and artistic literature. He has two favorites among the preachers of New York City, whom he never fails to hear when he has the chance; Dr. Jowett and Dr. Hugh Black. Readers of this little story, bearing in mind his early training and his progress through the dark by-ways of vice and crime, may be surprised to know that the two principal features of his character are his love of the beautiful and his love of little children.

There perhaps never was such a service in the Bowery Mission as the Memorial Service to his wife. He insisted upon having her body brought and placed in the middle aisle of our auditorium, and as he stood there, his huge frame shaking with emotion, his hand resting lovingly upon the casket, he pleaded with the men, especially those separated from their wives and children, to accept the same wonderful salvation that had come to him.

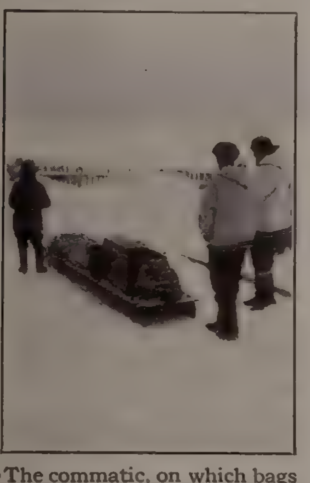
I have been many years in this work among the lowly of the Bowery, and have witnessed many pathetic scenes, but among the most impressive are those of that faithful wife in her humble home n her later days, rejoicing over the answer to her prayers, and the transformation of her husband. Over and over again, with a smile of ineffable beauty resting upon her poor worn features, would she repeat the words, "John is such a good man!"

We are praying that John Goode's life may be spared for many years. A stouter, braver life has never breasted the waves in behalf of his fellow men.

THE END

A Missionary Circuit in Labrador

By BERTHOLD LENZ, Missionary at Makkovik



The commatic, on which bags and traps are lashed for the missionary's long tours

LAST winter was milder than many that preceded it on the coast of Labrador. Winter usually begins with our people early in December, as soon as the bays are frozen over and the ice is strong enough to be used for traveling with the long dog-sledges, called "commatics." But last winter's arrival corresponded very nearly with the calendar date.

A few days after the ice has formed it becomes very wet, owing to the salt water, and if the frost is not severe, after about a week this wet film is about half an inch thick and of pea soup consistency, which hinders traveling, and as it is hard on the dogs' feet, the commatic slips ahead slowly on it. The only remedy for this is a good fall of snow and a severe frost. Then the going soon improves, and traveling can be done much more quickly. Last winter it was well nigh the end of January before traveling conditions became favorable, and I got a chance to start the visiting tours to the different bays north and south, in order to see the many outside members of our widespread Arctic congregation.

My first tour led me up Kippokak Bay, one of the narrow deep bays that are so frequent on this coast. It extends about fifty miles inland and averages two to four miles broad, but at a few places narrows down to a half or even a quarter of a mile in width. At those narrow points the tides are extremely rapid and keep the water from freezing even in the coldest weather. On the shore of Kippokak Bay live seven families, three of them about a mile distant from each other and the others from four to fifteen miles apart. When visiting them, the usual method is to stay with one family for a night, the next day to call at another house and pay them a few hours' visit, and again to pass on and camp for the night with a third family, and so on. Of course, traveling conditions are so variable that one has just to take things as they come. Blizzards oftentimes make a change in one's plans, and we may be entertained for two or three days at the same house.

The first of the houses on Kippokak Bay is about eighteen miles distant from Makkovik, at a point on the south shore of the bay. I intended to stay there for the first night. Traveling conditions were middling. A few inches of soft new snow lay on top of the hard crust, so that we went along at the rate of about three and one-half miles per hour. At half-past two in the afternoon we drew near our stopping-place and were looking forward to a warm cup of tea, as we had not taken a bite since breakfast. But no smoke rose from the sheet-iron chimney, and on coming nearer we found that the house was empty. A young couple had been living there, and as the parents of the husband were their neighbors, most likely they had gone to see them for a few days. This "next" house, however, was fifteen miles farther inland, on the north side of the bay, but we ventured to go on.

Daylight faded away. We had reached the northern shore of the bay and could just see the land from point to point, trying to go as straight as possible and avoiding the numerous coves and bights. Snow was now falling more heavily and the dogs began to get tired and unwilling to go on. The driver had to go ahead of them and with his snowshoes make a sort of path in the soft snow. At last, at nine o'clock at night, we came to a point which after some investigation my driver thought to be the one from which English River Cove branches off. From there, within another half-hour's drive, we should be at the house. Glad indeed we were, for both the dogs and we ourselves were tired out. But when at last we came to what seemed to be the bottom of the cove, we were disappointed not to be able to discover the house. It was evident now that we had turned into Shoal Cove, which lies just outside of English River Cove, divided from the latter by a narrow, but high, rocky, wooded headland. To go across it with commatic and dogs was impossible. To go around it meant another two hours' drive, which the dogs were unable to do, and which I felt incapable of attempting.

The next thing was to look out for a sheltered place where we could pass the night, for we had no tent with us. We succeeded in kindling a wood fire, and by its light we cut down a few spruce-trees, which we leaned against some others, thus forming a sort of a rude roof to protect us from the falling snow. We stamped down with our snowshoes and leveled the deep snow. A bearskin, which I usually carry with me, was spread out and served as a mattress, and upon this the sleeping bags were stretched out. But before we crept into our bags, we felt that we must do something to quench our thirst. We had sufficient provisions with us, but no kettle, and nothing save the empty thermos bottle and a mug. This latter had to serve for melting snow. A long green stick was pushed through the handle of the snow-filled mug and held over the blazing fire. It had to be filled again and again with snow, until a mugful of water was produced at last. But what water was that! Covered with ashes, yet it was sweet to us. We melted three mugfuls for each, and spent a whole hour over the task!

As soon as morning dawned we got up, shook off the snow, lashed our bags and traps onto the low commatic again, and got the dogs ready for the short journey we had before us. A two hours' drive brought us safely to the "next house" and I need not say how we relished the cup of tea offered us there.

WHEN going round to visit the people, one endeavors to bring some cheer and encouragement into their lonely and sometimes dreary places. I intended to spend the whole remainder of that day at this house in order to rest a little and be refreshed for the further visits. But this plan had soon to be given up. The first to welcome us was the old mother, who with tears in her eyes told me that her eldest son—a married man who lived about six miles farther up the bay—had gone insane a week before, and that his father was with him now to watch him. So, when we had finished our refreshing cup of tea, we got on the way again.

The sick man, fortunately, was not seriously affected. We found him lying in bed, with a frightened look and not speaking to anyone. From all I could gather, his illness had come on slowly through worry, which, in that lonely, isolated place, had steadily acted on his brain. Some flour, for which he had paid the merchant in dried codfish, had somehow not arrived, and he had to go up the bay in autumn from his fishing-place to his winter-house with little on hand to feed his family of six. He had no money to buy provisions with in the long winter. Besides, he was also of a timid nature, and what he had learned of the war had made a great impression upon his mind. He would not even let his wife go out of the house to get firewood. It was midwinter; the children were too small to cut up the large sticks of wood. They could not cook anything, nor warm the house for want of wood. At this critical time an Eskimo happened to be passing by, and as the day was cold he went into the house. He found the inmates all shivering with cold and hunger. He cut up some wood, made a fire, set the kettle to boil, and thereby undoubtedly saved their lives. Then he went and told the man's parents and the father came at once.

Little could be done for the afflicted family in that remote spot, but we did what we could. Some food was found them, of course; but we have no asylums on our coast, and no doctor within 150 miles. Some bromide of potassium, which was administered, may have done a little good. Anyhow, to the great relief of all concerned the man slowly but steadily recovered, and before spring arrived he was about his work again as usual.

We have to do our work here with small numbers. We greatly need the constant, uplifting influence from on high, else zeal and love would soon sink very low. But a single soul is precious in God's sight, and to be enabled to bring some help and cheer, comfort and hope into these isolated homes with their simple, plain inhabitants—who have the same human longing after happiness and the same need of a Saviour as ourselves—makes life worth living.

Makkovik station in summer

SECOND BIBLE PICTURE STUDY

OUR SECOND BIBLE PICTURE STUDY has now begun. In this announcement you will find the first two illustrations in the series.

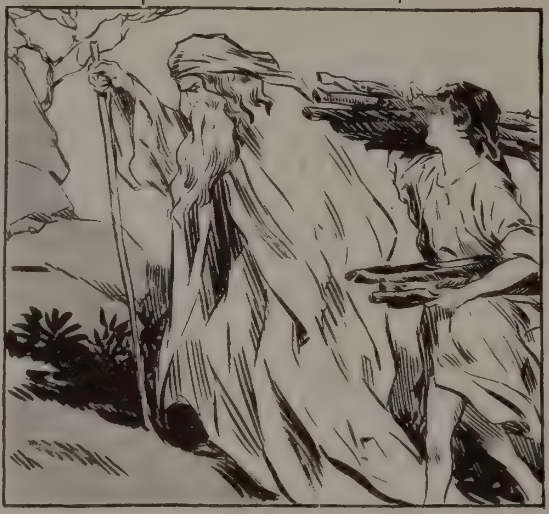
In the middle you see an example picture, with some specimen Bible verses and information about making your selection of that verse which is best fitted to the picture.

You will find this new Study very interesting and pleasant. You will understand it easily—it is so simple that a child soon knows what to do.

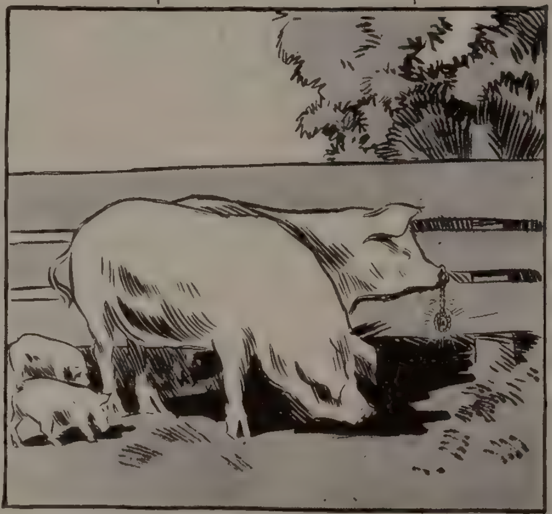
The Study will continue through twenty issues of the Christian Herald. There will be SIXTY PICTURES in all. Rules governing the Bible Picture Study appear on page 76.

Here the Pastime Actually Begins

Picture No. 1



Picture No. 2



Here are the first two Pictures. You are to select a Bible verse that is, in your judgment, best fitted to each illustration. Maybe you will find two, or more, verses that you consider equally applicable to a picture. You are allowed to enter as many as five verses for one picture.

To make the study as pleasurable and as easy as we reasonably can, we have printed about 2,000 verses in a book called "Pearls from the Bible." It is from this collection that you are to select your verses. If you prefer to hunt up the 2,000 verses in your Bible you can obtain from us, free of charge, a reference list, by book, chapter number, and verse number, of the verses that are in this collection. This is fully explained in the rules on page 76.

You are allowed to accept casual aid of friends, relatives, teachers or others, in finding verses to fit the pictures.

USE THIS FOR RENEWAL SUBSCRIPTION

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City

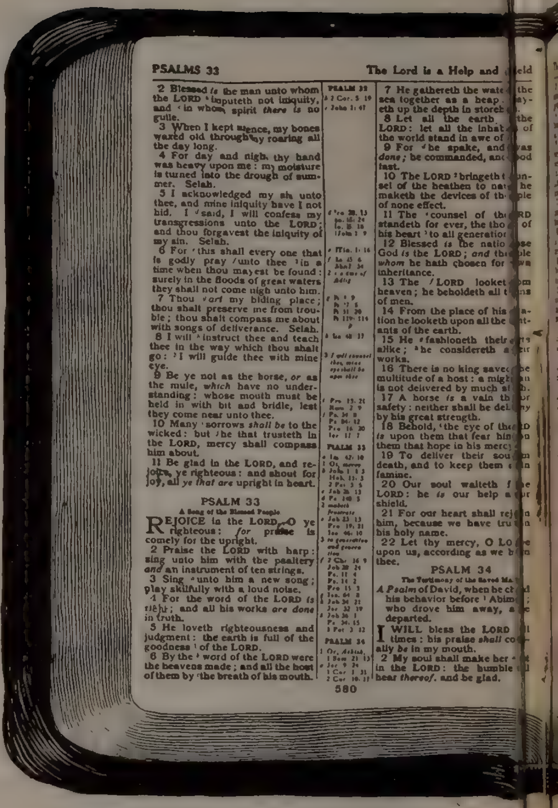
Gentlemen: Please renew my subscription to the Christian Herald for one year from the date to which it is now paid, and also send me the Bible Picture Study Outfit; amount $2.35 enclosed.

Name

Address

1-17-17

If you are now a subscriber, you may renew for another year from the time now paid to, and obtain the Bible Picture Study Outfit, by sending $2.35. Use Coupon at left, or write a letter to same purport, enclosing remittance.



PSALMS 33 The Lord is a Help and ...eld

2 Blessed is the man unto whom the LORD imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile.
3 When I kept silence, my bones waxed old through my roaring all the day long.
4 For day and night thy hand was heavy upon me: my moisture is turned into the drought of summer. Selah.
5 I acknowledged my sin unto thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid. I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the LORD; and thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin. Selah.
6 For this shall every one that is godly pray unto thee in a time when thou mayest be found: surely in the floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him.
7 Thou art my hiding place; thou shalt preserve me from trouble; thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance. Selah.
8 I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye.
9 Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding: whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto thee.
10 Many sorrows shall be to the wicked: but he that trusteth in the LORD, mercy shall compass him about.
11 Be glad in the LORD, and rejoice, ye righteous: and shout for joy, all ye that are upright in heart.

PSALM 33

A Song of the Blessed People

REJOICE in the LORD, O ye righteous: for praise is comely for the upright.
2 Praise the LORD with harp: sing unto him with the psaltery and an instrument of ten strings.
3 Sing unto him a new song; play skilfully with a loud noise.
4 For the word of the LORD is right; and all his works are done in truth.
5 He loveth righteousness and judgment: the earth is full of the goodness of the LORD.
6 By the word of the LORD were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth.

580

$5,628 in 100

1st Reward	$1,000.00
2nd Reward	800.00
3rd Reward	600.00
4th Reward	400.00
5th Reward	200.00
6th Reward	100.00
7th Reward	75.00

STILL MORE REWARDS! In case of ties,

How You

HERE'S the secret—an open secret—w

Let's take a concrete example—

Even at a first glance, you can probab picture like this will recall most vividly event This is the quality that makes the Bible Pic present preted

Th apply t carefull

And and

And gethe

Veri and John

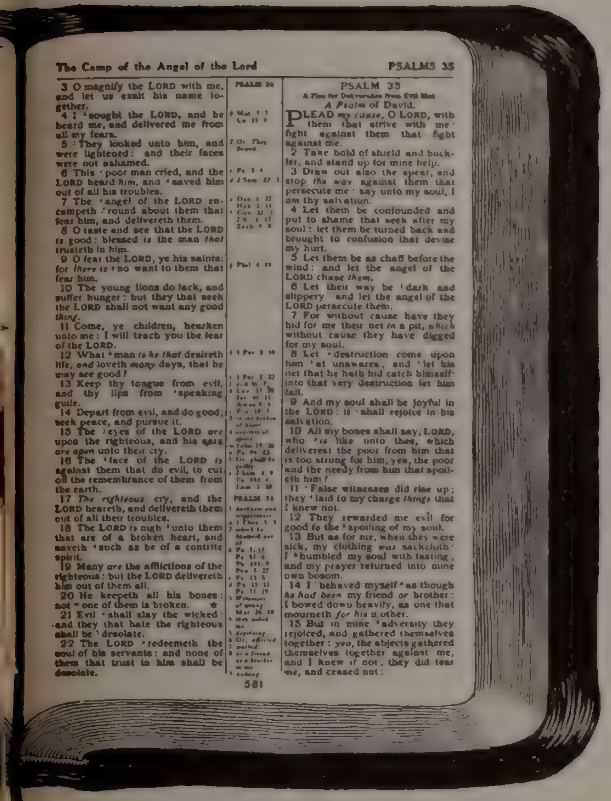
The O Go

You probably saw at first glance that

Apply the same method to the two ne that you must select from the 2,000 verses em the Bible," a reference list of which verses can b

Even if you do not understand e of information in next week's and further issue perseverance will set you right—and the materi

CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bib



The Camp of the Angel of the Lord

PSALMS 35

3 O magnify the LORD with me, and let us exalt his name together.
4 I sought the LORD, and he heard me, and delivered me from all my fears.
5 They looked unto him, and were lightened: and their faces were not ashamed.
6 This poor man cried, and the LORD heard him, and saved him out of all his troubles.
7 The angel of the LORD encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them.
8 O taste and see that the LORD is good: blessed is the man that trusteth in him.
9 O fear the LORD, ye his saints: for there is no want to them that fear him.
10 The young lions do lack, and suffer hunger: but they that seek the LORD shall not want any good thing.
11 Come, ye children, hearken unto me: I will teach you the fear of the LORD.
12 What man is he that desireth life, and loveth many days, that he may see good?
13 Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile.
14 Depart from evil, and do good; seek peace, and pursue it.
15 The eyes of the LORD are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry.
16 The face of the LORD is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth.
17 The righteous cry, and the LORD heareth, and delivereth them out of all their troubles.
18 The LORD is nigh unto them that are of a broken heart, and saveth such as be of a contrite spirit.
19 Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the LORD delivereth him out of them all.
20 He keepeth all his bones: not one of them is broken.
21 Evil shall slay the wicked: and they that hate the righteous shall be desolate.
22 The LORD redeemeth the soul of his servants: and none of them that trust in him shall be desolate.

PSALM 35

A Plea for Deliverance from Evil Men

A Psalm of David.

PLEAD my cause, O LORD, with them that strive with me: fight against them that fight against me.
2 Take hold of shield and buckler, and stand up for mine help.
3 Draw out also the spear, and stop the way against them that persecute me: say unto my soul, I am thy salvation.
4 Let them be confounded and put to shame that seek after my soul: let them be turned back and brought to confusion that devise my hurt.
5 Let them be as chaff before the wind: and let the angel of the LORD chase them.
6 Let their way be dark and slippery: and let the angel of the LORD persecute them.
7 For without cause have they hid for me their net in a pit, which without cause they have digged for my soul.
8 Let destruction come upon him at unawares; and let his net that he hath hid catch himself: into that very destruction let him fall.
9 And my soul shall be joyful in the LORD: it shall rejoice in his salvation.
10 All my bones shall say, LORD, who is like unto thee, which deliverest the poor from him that is too strong for him, yea, the poor and the needy from him that spoileth him?
11 False witnesses did rise up; they laid to my charge things that I knew not.
12 They rewarded me evil for good to the spoiling of my soul.
13 But as for me, when they were sick, my clothing was sackcloth: I humbled my soul with fasting; and my prayer returned into mine own bosom.
14 I behaved myself as though he had been my friend or brother: I bowed down heavily, as one that mourneth for his mother.
15 But in mine adversity they rejoiced, and gathered themselves together: yea, the abjects gathered themselves together against me, and I knew it not; they did tear me, and ceased not:

581

Cash Rewards

8th and 9th Rewards, each $50 . .	$100.00 cash
10th to 15th Rewards, each $25 . . .	150.00 cash
16th to 18th Rewards, each $20 . . .	60.00 cash
19th to 21st Rewards, each $15	45.00 cash
22nd to 31st Rewards, each $10 . . .	100.00 cash
32nd to 51st Rewards, each $5	100.00 cash
52nd to 1000th Rewards, each $2 . .	1,898.00 cash

h person will receive a duplicate of the sum tied for.

Are to Win

simplifies your way to the winning goal.

specimen picture shown below.

ecall a Bible scene that it fits. It is remarkable how a nd characters about which you have heard or read.
Study so delightful—the fact that it vitalizes and a concrete form scenes that interpret or are inter-
Bible verses.

ext step is to find the right verse or verses that e picture. Below are four Bible verses. Read them d determine which fits the picture best.

h said unto his brethren, what profit is it if we slay our brother, al his blood?—Genesis 37 : 26.

w and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down tod the lion shall eat straw like the ox.—Isa. 11 : 7.

ly, I say unto you, except a corn of wheat fall into the ground
abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit.
24.

es of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart,
u will not despise.—Psa. 51 : 17.

fourth verse is most applicable to the picture.

ctures shown in this announcement. Bear in mind ied in the very convenient little book, "Pearls from tained as stated, if you prefer to use your Bible.

hing clearly this week, you will find a plenitude the Christian Herald. Just a little patience and nd mental rewards are well worth your while.

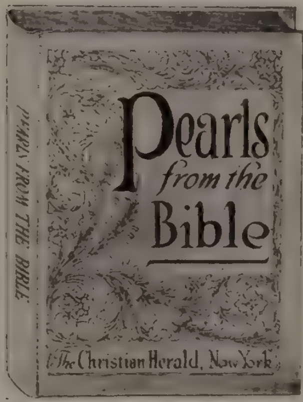
e House, NEW YORK, N. Y.

ENTRIES BEGIN THIS WEEK

YOU cannot realize how delightful the Bible Picture Study is until you have become engrossed in it. Like every other pastime, you will need to have just a little practice before you begin to enjoy it. You will find it a source of inspiration and religious stimulation.

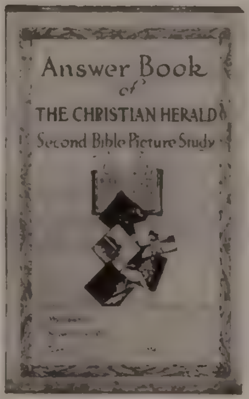
The Bible Picture Study Outfit should be your companion. You may obtain it as a reward for inducing a friend who is not now a subscriber to take the Christian Herald for six months, at one dollar. You can, of course, present this six months' subscription to a relative or friend who is not receiving the Christian Herald. Or you may renew your own subscription for another year, and have also the Outfit, for $2.35.

What the Outfit Comprises



The Bible Picture Study Outfit consists of the book, "PEARLS FROM THE BIBLE," and an "ANSWER BOOK." The Rules are also included, as well as considerable helpful information for you.

Two thousand Bible verses are to be found in "Pearls from the Bible." The collection is a valuable compilation of interesting and inspiring verses. Sacred precepts, promises and prophecies are included liberally in this worthy little volume, which may be kept in the home library for years after the Study is ended as a souvenir of a delightful experience.



The "Answer Book" is devised to simplify the recording of the verses that you choose for each of the pictures. In this pamphlet you may write as many as five different verses to any and every picture if you so desire.

The Outfit is given with subscription, as explained elsewhere in this announcement.

Outfit as a Reward for Your Services

We call your attention to our offer of the Outfit as a gift, when you send us a new six months' subscription. Why not obtain the Outfit in this way, without any expense?—we invite you cordially to do so.

You may obtain the Bible Picture Study Outfit as a premium, without cost, if you obtain one new six months' subscriber at $1.00, by using the Coupon here, or by sending a letter.

USE THIS FOR A NEW 6 MONTHS' SUBSCRIPTION

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City

Gentlemen: For the $1.00 enclosed send the Christian Herald to the following new subscriber for 6 months:

Name

Address

Send Bible Study Outfit to me for securing this new six months' subscription

Name

Address

1-17-17

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

GENUINE HAS TRADE MARK ON THE PACKAGE

To make a good cup of Cocoa Begin Right!

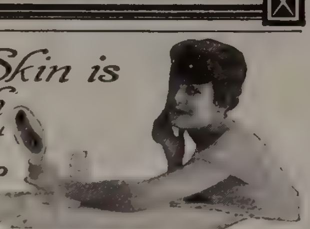
CHOOSE

BAKER'S

Prepare it carefully, following the directions on the package, and you will find that every member of the family will thoroughly enjoy this delicious and wholesome beverage. Its healthfulness is assured by its purity and high quality.

Grand Prize
Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, 1915

Made only by
WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD.
ESTABLISHED 1780
Dorchester, Mass.



"My Skin is smooth as Velvet since I've used—

CRÈME SIMON
The Velvet Complexion Maker

Made by J. SIMON & CO., Paris, France
Famous abroad over half a Century.
Fragrant—Refreshing—Beautifying.
CREME SIMON, 45c, 75c & $1.25
POUDRE SIMON (Face Powder), 40c & 75c
SAVON SIMON (Toilet Soap), one size, 50c
At All Good Dealers'
Send 2c stamp to cover postage, with dealer's name and receive a handsome and practical CREME SIMON diminution mirror.
MAURICE LEVY, Sole U. S. Agent
Dept. "G," 15 West 38th Street, New York

CHURCH FURNITURE
Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.
DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it, write
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

HIGH-VALUE PATENTS
—the ONLY kind Wanted and BOUGHT by Manufacturers. Send 8c. postage for new book of Extraordinary Interest to Inventors
R. S. & A. B. LACEY. 61 Barrister Building, Washington, D. C.

MENDETS—THE WONDER MONEY MAKERS
Mend leaks instantly in all Utensils, Hot Water Bags, etc. Simply insert and tighten. 10c. and 25c. per pkg. Postpaid. Free sample to agents.
COLLETTE MFG. CO., Box 302D, Amsterdam, N. Y.

Our Army in Alaska

By FRANK G. CARPENTER

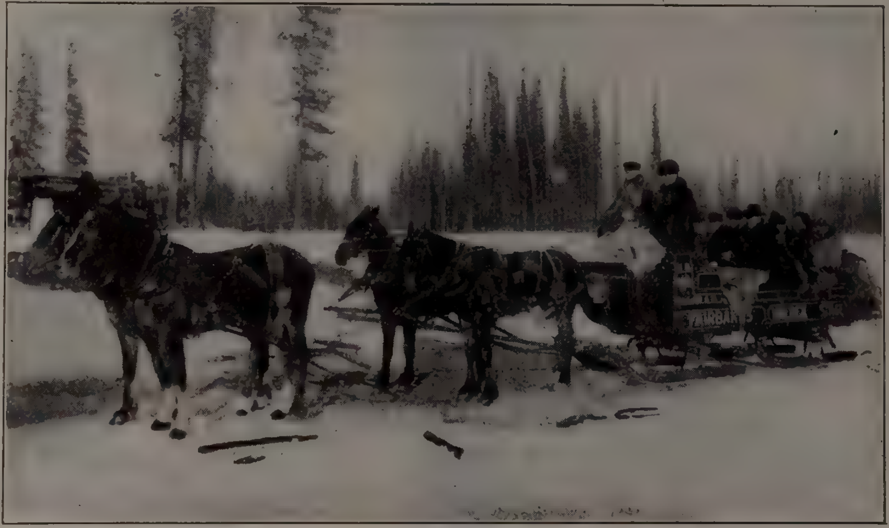
Copyrighted, 1917, by Frank G. Carpenter

ON this little island of St. Michael, situated in Bering Sea, several thousand miles from Seattle, sixty miles from the mouth of the Yukon River, I write of the army of Alaska. St. Michael is one of Uncle Sam's military reservations. The whole island has been set aside as a military outpost, and its chief buildings are those of the soldiers. It has large barracks, a hospital, a canteen and a drillroom. It has several cottages, the homes of the officers; and, apart from these, down on the harbor, are a hotel, a few stores and some houses occupied by the traders who buy and sell furs and live off the soldiers and trappers. A part of the population is Eskimo, but, all told, it does not number more than two or three hundred, and these people live here year in and year out. The island is especially dreary in winter, when for six months or more it is locked up in snow and ice, and has practically no communication with the outside world.

It is different in summer. Just now the country is as green as any part of the United States. As we approached the shores in our steamer, St. Michael rose like a green mound out of the water, and, with its American flags flying, it seemed a fortification guarding the ice-locked golden caves of the north. St. Michael has the only good harbor near the mouth of the Yukon, and a number of river steamers were lying at anchor. All the ships that steam down the Yukon end their voyage at St. Michael, and to this port come the steamers from Seattle before going to Nome.

Leaving the ship, I strolled through the settlement. It has a hotel of fairly good size, three or four stores, a post office and some warehouses. There is also a blockhouse that was built by the Russians, who used this place to support their claims to the mighty territory drained by the Yukon. The blockhouse is now deserted, but inside it may still be seen a half dozen cannon which were left by the Russians. Some of the guns even now look out of the portholes commanding the habor.

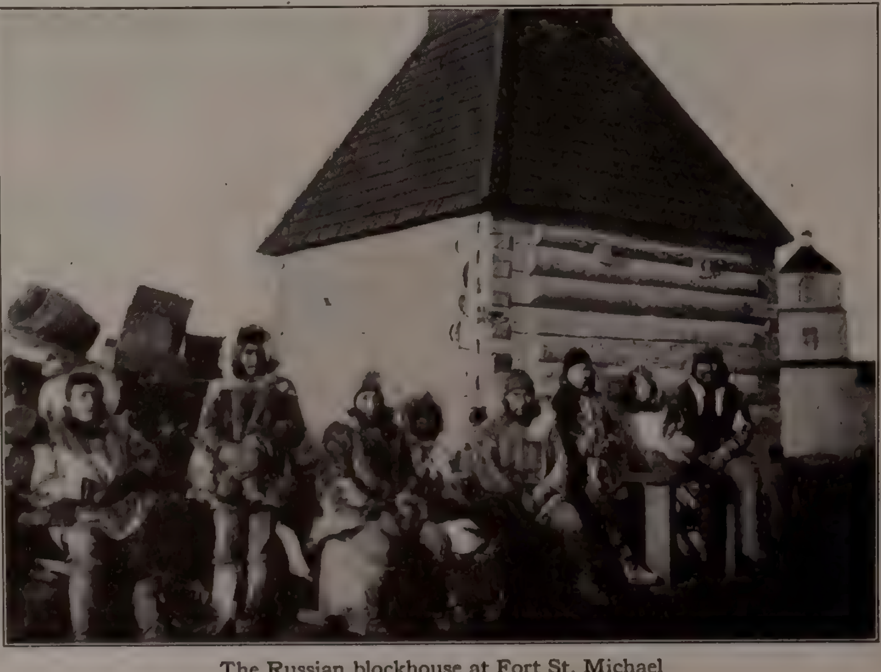
The military force at Fort St. Michael consists of about fifty-six soldiers. Its commander is Lieutenant W. F. C. Jepson, who came to Alaska two years ago, at the close of his service in the Philippine Islands. Lieutenant Jepson has his wife with him. He tells me the climate is not at all bad, although in the summer the winds are sometimes so strong that they almost blow the flowers out of the ground. The island is treeless, and this is probably due to the wind. During the winter season he takes long trips with his dogs to visit the various stations. Last year he made one of 200 miles, in a dog sled, to Old Woman Mountain. He had to sleep out in the snow, but he did not suffer as much from the cold as when stationed at Fort Lincoln, near Bismarck, in North Dakota.



This is just what it says, the Fairbanks-Valdez Stage. Room for one more if you don't mind hanging on behind

I was interested in Mrs. Jepson's description of her housekeeping arrangements. She says that most of their supplies are canned goods from the outside, but they have also wild fowl and reindeer from St. Michael. The reindeer meat is as sweet and juicy as a tenderloin steak. They have plenty of fish, and the Eskimos bring fish and berries to the house for sale. One of the chief troubles of the housekeeper is the servants. The day I called Mrs. Jepson had expected an Eskimo woman to do her washing. The arrangements had been made the day previous, but 10 o'clock came and no washwoman appeared. She was sent for. She came and worked from 11 o'clock until 3. The washing was then half done, but the girl said she had to leave, and that she could not come back on the morrow, as she had to pick berries. I am told that the Eskimos do not care enough for money to work steadily. The other day a fisherman whose nets were full could not get the Eskimos to help him pull them out of the water, although he offered them half of the catch.

The Island of St. Michael is under military rule. The storekeepers, traders and others live here merely at the will of the army, and the commander makes the laws. No liquor is allowed to be sold, and everything is under army regulations. The soldiers look well and happy. They have comfortable quarters, and what with their drilling and rifle shooting, they are kept busy.



The Russian blockhouse at Fort St. Michael

Going on down the great river, I stopped at Fort Gibbon, at the junction of the Tanana and the Yukon. This military post is one of the most important in Alaska. It is in the very heart of the territory, about half-way between the international boundary and Nome, and almost midway between the Arctic Ocean and the Pacific. Fort Gibbon was established in 1898, and the next year Congress set aside 38,000 acres of land there as a military reservation. The post is on the southeastern corner of the reservation. It adjoins the town of Tanana, which, next to Fairbanks, is the most important place in interior Alaska. It is estimated that it cost something like $1,000,000 to clear the land and erect the buildings for the post, and that it costs $500,000 a year to maintain it.

The post now has about 150 men, including the officers and soldiers of Company B of the Fourteenth United States Infantry. It has a hospital corps, a signal corps, and a quartermaster's department. All of its buildings are steam-heated, a large central plant being maintained for the purpose. It has a gas-lighting plant, but it is now planned to instal electricity, and the engineers are estimating the cost of such a plant.

THE government has now five military posts in Alaska, and its force consists of about 1,200 officers and soldiers. These men not only guard the territory, but they operate the cable and telegraph service, make and superintend the roads and trails, and have the control of all river and harbor improvements undertaken by the government. In the past they did a great deal of police work; but just now their chief business is the maintenance and operation of the cable and telegraph system. The army telegraph is the only one in the territory. It consists of about fifty stations, of which ten are wireless. There are forty telegraph offices and more than one thousand miles of land lines. The submarine cables are about three thousand miles in length, and they connect the territory with the United States proper at Seattle. The cable goes to Sitka and Skagway, and it reaches every important port from Ketchikan to Seward, the southern terminus of the new railroad. There are wireless stations at Nome, Circle and Eagle operated by army officers, and also at Valdez, Sitka, Cordova, Kadiak Island, Udatka, Dutch Harbor and Pribilof Island, operated by the Navy Department. The land lines are all under the army, and they make it possible to reach the outside world from almost any part of Alaska.

The construction of these telegraph and cable lines was undertaken as a military necessity; and it seems to be a mistake of the government in that it is now trying to operate them at the expense of the territory. The lines were first begun in 1900, and up to the present time they have cost in the neighborhood of three million dollars. The cost of operating them is nearly a half million dollars a year; and a large amount of this is borne by the territory. As a result, the cost of messages is excessive. The rate from Fairbanks to Seattle is 33 cents a word; and, as the minimum message is ten words, this makes it cost $3.30 to send the shortest telegram out of the country.

It seems to many of the people here that the government should look upon this country as a developing proposition rather than as a commercial one. Alaska has all told not more than 50,000 white people, scattered over a territory almost three times as large as Germany or France. The telegraph system is necessarily expensive, it has been built as a military necessity and is used as such, the business of the people being subordinated to it. A military message, however trivial, takes precedence of a business message.

During my stay at Fort Gibbon I had a talk with a young army officer who is now in charge of the telegraph lines and wireless stations of the valley of the Yukon, Lieutenant L. T. Mason. His district covers many thousand square miles, reaching all along the Yukon from the Canadian boundary to Bering Sea and including Nome and the Seward Peninsula. A large part of this territory is periodically visited by him. Last winter he took one trip of several thousand miles, traveling by dog team over the ice and snow. This trip took more than four months, and the whole of it was on sled or on foot. His team consisted of seven dogs, and he had only one man along with him.

Next to the telegraph the most important work of the War Department in Alaska is the building and maintenance of the roads and trails. Practically all of the wagon roads and sled roads of the territory have been built by the government, and two or three million dollars have been spent in this way within the past twelve years. The roads and trails are under the direction of Col. W. P. Richardson, an officer of the War Department who has long served in Alaska. At present there are 862 miles of wagon road, 617 of sled road and more than 2,000 of trails.

Young People's Topics for January 28

A Half Life or a Whole Life—Which?

Epworth League Topic. Luke 11 : 35, 36; John 10 : 10; 15 : 11; I Peter 1 : 8, 9; Eph. 3 : 30, 6 : 6

WE often remark that "half a loaf is better than none," and thus attempt to salve our consciences for incomplete success. But in the Christian life we must be wholly saved from sin, wholly consecrated to Christ; there can be no "half loaf" here. The gracious promises of the texts, abundant life, fulness of joy, presuppose a love for Christ that excludes all else. We cannot offer Christ a divided life or a divided heart. The term "complete consecration" seems to terrify some. They feel a great dread that if they offer their lives unreservedly to God it necessarily means the ministry or missionary work, the severing of all dearly held ties. This is a great misconception. God offers us in Christ a full and complete salvation from sin. He asks of us and rightly expects the full strength of our lives in his service. We cannot accept Christ and refuse to consecrate to him our business, or our amusements, or our friendships, or our ambitions, or any other part or element of our lives. Just to the extent that we cherish anything else too highly to yield it fully to Christ, to that extent our Christian life fails and our experience is barren. But if we put ourselves and all that we have upon his altar, we shall find our business, our amusements, our friendships and our sometime ambitions glorified by his grace, and our life will be lifted from the dead level of human striving to the heights of spiritual emulation.

The Retrospect and Prospect in Foreign Missions

B. Y. P. U. Topic (Conquest Meeting). Ps. 126 : 1–6; Joel 2 : 21

IT isn't a long view back to the beginning of our present missionary activities. That English Baptist and Protestant pioneer, William Carey, opened the first chapter of the story in 1794 in India, American Congregationalism and the American Baptist Church following in 1813 and 1814. From then on the work developed slowly with much hardship, many heartaches, multitudinous misunderstandings and very little in results that could be measured. During the years from 1865 to 1885 the churches really began to take up seriously the challenge of heathendom, hundreds of missionaries were sent out, hospitals, schools, churches were established, consecrated men translated the Word of God into the words of heathen tongues, and printing plants prepared the Scriptures for the hands of those who needed, so greatly needed, their message. Even yet results that could be measured were meager. It was a time of preparation, of seed-sowing, of cultivation. Then the harvest began to ripen; baptisms increased; native churches began to become self-supporting and themselves sent forth evangelists; times of trial, like the Boxer outbreak and the Sepoy rebellion, tried and proved true the metal of the converts; ways that had been closed began to open; hermit nations drew aside the veil; the Gospel gained free course throughout the world, and men like John R. Mott were able to see a vision of a world evangelized within a generation. Now in those mission lands, which a hundred years ago had hardly heard and had not yet heeded the message of the Christ, there are over seven millions of native Christians, this number including church members, persons baptized and converted, and persons under instruction. And the prospect? The doors are wide open. The kingdoms of this world may be the kingdoms of our Christ. May we say they shall be? Yes, if we are ready to give all that we have, even our lives; and having given all, we shall come rejoicing, bringing our sheaves with us, the sheaves that have grown from the seed which was planted and watered by those who have gone before.

Fruits of the Christian Endeavor Tree

Christian Endeavor Topic (Christian Endeavor Day). Rev. 22: 1-5

COMING, as it did, at a time when the denominations, having developed the various phases of Christian truth to which they were severally committed, were ready to lay aside contentions and strivings after precedence and to seek a more certain way to proclaim the great fundamental truths of God in Christ Jesus, Christian Endeavor served both as a unifying force and as a new inspiration. Young manhood and young womanhood had been derelicts in the streams of the church's life. The Sunday school was through with them and the church had no place to use them. They were too old to be "pupils" and not old enough to elected "deacons" and "elders"; but they needed to find some channel for their overflowing energy and enthusiasm, and they all too often found it outside of the church. Christian Endeavor bridged the gap, turned the vigor of youth into the service of the King, and saved thousands of young souls from spiritual shipwreck at the same time that it trained the same and other thousands of young lives in the work of the Kingdom. The fruits of the Christian Endeavor tree cannot be numbered. Christian comity among the denominations, missionary education and mission study, thousands of lives consecrated to special religious work and other thousands inspired toward better education and more sincere service, a quickened social life within the church, more instant recognition of the value of new ideas, new programs, and new statements of old truth, all of these are among the fruits, but they are not all of them.

-be sure you get

McQUAY-NORRIS
LEAK-PROOF
PISTON RINGS

-the genuine

Made only by the McQuay-Norris Manufacturing Co., St. Louis—the inventors. Known only by the makers' name. Constructed in only one way.

No other piston ring has any right to the name LEAK-PROOF. That is the trade-mark name of the Genuine McQuay-Norris product exclusively.

The LEAK-PROOF design can not be copied — LEAK-PROOF service can not be duplicated — LEAK-PROOF durability can not be equalled by any other make of piston ring.

Genuine McQuay-Norris LEAK-PROOF Piston Rings are made and carried in stock in over 2000 different sizes including all over-sizes in both widths and diameters. There are complete service stocks in jobbing centers from coast to coast. Your repair or garage man can install the size your motor requires at once.

This angle-to-angle interlocking construction is the distinctive feature of the genuine Mc-Quay-Norris LEAK-PROOF Ring.

Send for Free Booklet

"To Have and to Hold Power"—the standard handbook on gas engine compression. Simple, sensible, informative — of great value to anyone who owns or operates any motor or engine and is interested in economical, dependable power production. Write Dept. C. H.

Manufactured by McQuay-Norris Mfg. Co.
St. Louis, U. S. A.

BRANCH OFFICES:
New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Pittsburg
San Francisco, Los Angeles, Cincinnati, Seattle
Kansas City, St. Paul, Atlanta, Denver
Dallas

Canadian Factory
W. H. Banfield & Sons, Ltd., 372 Pape Avenue, Toronto

—and if you own a FORD
—put in a set of
LYNITE PISTONS
ALUMINUM
Completely equipped with
McQuay-Norris LEAK-PROOF Piston Rings

They reduce vibration, noise, riding discomfort, repairs. They mean speed, silence, smoothness, comfort, long life, economy.

HUDSON SUPER SIX

No Other Six Resembles Hudson Super-Six

Don't Be Misled—It is a Hudson Invention

Sixes have come into renewed popularity since the Super-Six won the top place. But the Super-Six invention—controlled by our patents—added 80 per cent to the six-type efficiency. And that 80 per cent is what gave it supremacy, when the V-types threatened to displace the Six.

Late in 1915, remember, the Six was a waning type. Even the Light Six, which Hudson gave first rank, had revealed some vital engineering limitations.

It had not solved the problem of motor vibration. It had not minimized friction and wear. Its endurance had proved disappointing.

Sixes at that time held hardly a single record. They were mostly held by Fours.

And leading engineers, including the Hudson, were seeking a remedy in Eights and Twelves. At that time the Six, for high-grade cars, seemed verging on displacement.

What Saved the Day

It was the Super-Six invention, remember, which then saved the day for the Six.

Hudson engineers discovered the shortcoming. By a basic invention they corrected the fault. They ended nearly all the vibration. They doubled the motor's endurance. Thus they created a motor which has since won all the worth-while records.

But that doesn't mean that the old-type Six is any better than it was.

'Twas the Super-Six That Won

The Super-Six, in a hundred tests, has out-performed all other motor types. It has not merely broken records. It has made new records which, a year ago, no man considered possible.

It broke the 24-hour endurance record by 52 per cent. It broke the transcontinental record twice in one round trip. A Super-Six touring car went from San Francisco to New York and back in 10 days and 21 hours.

It beat twenty famous rivals up Pike's Peak. It broke all stock-car speed records, and all for quick acceleration.

Then, after 7,000 record-breaking miles, it showed itself in new condition. Not a part or bearing showed evidence of wear.

No other motor ever built has shown anywhere near such endurance.

All by Saving Waste

The Super-Six develops no more power than other like-size motors. It simply delivers more. It almost eliminates motor friction and wear by ending nearly all the vibration.

That vibration, which wasted power, was the great fault of the Six. It is that which led to the Eight and Twelve as a possible solution. Any motor in which that fault remains can't compare with the Super-Six.

A New Gasoline Saver

The Hudson Super-Six, in endurance and performance, stands foremost in the world. The new-style bodies which we have created make the car look its supremacy. A new exclusive feature—a gasoline saver—gives it this year another advantage.

It now outsells any other front-rank car. It has 25,000 enthusiastic owners, who know that no rival can match them.

You can prove in one hour, at any Hudson showroom, that this car deserves its place. And that no other car, at any price, can be classed with it. Do that before the spring demand overwhelms us.

Phaeton, 7-passenger,	$1650	Limousine . . . .	$2925
Roadster, 2-passenger,	1650	Town Car . . . .	2925
Cabriolet, 3-passenger,	1950	Town Car Landaulet . .	3025
Touring Sedan	2175	Limousine Landaulet . .	3025

(All Prices f. o. b. Detroit)

HUDSON MOTOR CAR COMPANY
DETROIT, MICHIGAN

Reverence of Jesus for His Father's House

International Sunday School Lesson for January 28
John 2 : 13-22

Christ the Indignant Reformer

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

HERE we have an absolutely unique picture of Christ—an indignant reformer, with a scourge in his hand, driving wrongdoers in panic before him. Can this be the gentle friend of little children, the quiet carpenter of Nazareth, who taught the blessedness of the meek? We do well to inquire closely into the circumstances that could so transform him from his usual methods. We do well to keep this flaming figure in mind as a wholesome contrast to the effeminate and delicate portraits that have given us a false conception of the manhood of the Master. It will do your Sunday school class of boys a service to give them a vision of this Jesus: "When he had made a scourge of small cords, he drove them out of the temple, and the sheep, and the oxen; and poured out the changers' money, and overthrew the tables; and said unto them that sold doves, Take these things hence; make not my Father's house an house of merchandise."

The Commercializing of Religion

IT was the commercializing of religion that aroused him, the desecration of the sanctuary by profit-seeking. Just as the hypocrisy of self-righteous Pharisees was the one sin that drew his scorn and condemnation, so the abuse of the holiest place alone aroused him to direct action. Jesus never raided a gambling place or unsavory resort. He never descended on the extortionate Roman tax-gatherers in a cloudburst of wrath. But when the temple of God was polluted and abused he could not be restrained.

To put religion on a money basis is the last insult of materialism and practical unbelief. Yet again and again that very thing has been done. Vested interests in religion are continually being established. God is dishonored where the sacred responsibility of shepherding his sheep is degraded into "livings" at the disposal of hereditary nobles as in nineteenth century England, and the ill results are seen on every hand. Perhaps worse is the manner in which the high offices have become the spoils of ecclesiastical politics in many Christian denominations. And Robert Louis Stevenson in his "Inland Voyage" exhibits the recoil of a healthy mind from that other ancient perversion—buying one's way to heaven with rites and donations and prayers. Says he, "When people serve the kingdom of heaven with a passbook in their hands, I should always be afraid lest they should carry the same commercial spirit into their dealings with their fellow men, which would make a sad and sordid business of this life."

Time-Honored Abuses

LIKE most abuses of religion, doubtless this temple marketing had gradually and insidiously built its way up. There were plenty of excuses: Sacrificial animals were required; many worshipers came from a distance and could not bring their own; it was necessary to have the temple coin, instead of the Roman, for the offerings. So, under pretense of bringing in the purchased animals, sales came to be made in the Court of the Gentiles itself, until finally that court, the missionary appeal of the temple to the non-Jewish world, was filled with the noise of cattle and with bartering and sharp practice by which it is almost certain the temple authorities profited.

No doubt pious souls deplored all this—and did nothing. It takes drastic action to eradicate a time-honored abuse. The very secular authorities are most timid here. If a law has been persistently disobeyed the very police hesitate to begin its enforcement. A short time ago in a certain American city a drastic order was issued by police headquarters against all sorts of gambling. Saloonkeepers were warned that raffles, chances for valuable prizes, drawings in disguised lotteries, would no longer be overlooked. And there was appended this astounding qualification: "This order does not apply to churches!" Gambling was to be suppressed, except in churches!

What would Christ think of a church fair which was conducted as a gambling bazaar, with chances for sale, and people of principle importuned to take part? What would he think of the practice witnessed in many a church fair recently, of young boys and girls sent around to solicit the purchase of lottery tickets? There is a big field for inquiry here, with so many churches turned into "houses of merchandise" because the people will not give freely as the Lord hath prospered them, with many societies and guilds competing unfairly with stores and seamstresses to provide funds needful for the conduct of worship.

A Time for Action

JESUS chose a psychological time for his cleansing of the temple. It was a feast day. Many godly souls from afar were doubtless shocked by the spectacle of bargaining and cheating in that Mecca of all the faithful. Not a hand was raised against him. There was plenty of hatred and revenge brewing, but either conscience or policy kept men silent.

If Jesus had gone to the high priest and protested, nothing would have happened. If he had stood up and made a speech, he might have been mobbed or led into wrangling argument. Instead he did the thing that should have been done, and did it in a way to fire the imagination of the devout and convince the sincere.

There is a time for us all to act, to dare to play the reformer's part. Not thoughtlessly, nor vaingloriously, nor in ill-considered haste, but nevertheless zealously, when we are convinced of the need of thoroughgoing reform. When our Father's house is made a house of merchandise, when the cloak of religion is thrown around sinecures and ecclesiastical graft, when people's religious motives are exploited for money —then, at least, we should speak out and strike out.

Is Violence Ever Justifiable?

THIS is a question for class discussion that requires some clear thinking. Perhaps few of us would care to give a definite negative in view of all the evils there are in the world. But first of all note that Jesus used direct action and yet was not violent so much as spectacular. He did indeed drive men and animals before him and overthrow the money benches. Yet he was rather giving an object lesson than inflicting damage. He was violent in much the same way that the men of the Boston Tea Party were violent, but not in the way that John Brown fought at Harper's Ferry, calling for an insurrection of the slaves. Though John Brown's moral indignation is shared by all to-day, cool students tell us that he made a peaceful solution of the slavery problem impossible by his tactics.

Force usually defeats its own objects. But moral courage and a splendid object lesson often accomplish permanent reforms. A conspicuous example of this is the case of Telemachus, the Syrian monk who in the reign of Honorius rushed into the Roman arena and forbade the gladiatorial combat. He was stoned to death by the populace, but never again did that bloodthirsty entertainment delight the people of Rome. It had once for all been shown up for what it was: an inhuman and cruel appeal to all the brutal instincts which Christianity was striving to conquer and tame.

On the other hand Lincoln was right when he restrained his feelings upon seeing for the first time a slave auction at New Orleans. He realized his impotence at the time, and according to the story told his kinsman John Hanks that if ever he had a chance to hit that thing he would hit it hard. His chance came. It is wise to discern the signs of the times. It is well to know when your hour has not yet come.

Are We Cowards?

IS it because there are so many moral cowards among us that time-honored abuses flourish? Is it possible that thousands of statesmen, public officers, clergymen and everyday citizens have had their chance to register a mighty and effective protest against wrong and have flinched? Is the Great War due perhaps to the moral cowardice of Someone? Will Congress pass a Public Buildings Bill that merits the condemnation of the thoughtful, a "pork bill," because the abuse is old and men are afraid? Are churches often dominated by outworn and bigoted conceptions of religion because the young, clear-visioned, Christ-filled reformers keep silent in meeting?

When Tetzel toured Germany selling his pernicious indulgences, Martin Luther arose and nailed his ninety-five theses to the church door at Wittenberg. He little realized where his declaration against Tetzel's "senseless chatter" would lead him, but step by step he played the moral hero. Confronted by all the august powers of the empire assembled to enforce the anathema of the Pope, he said, "Here I stand; I can do no otherwise; God help me." There stood a true follower of the Indignant Christ, aroused by the abuse of the Church of God. Because he registered his mighty Protest half the Christian world calls itself Protestant today. But there are other wrongs to be righted still. We must not be content with Luther's protest or Christ's reverence for the Father's house, when the time comes for our protest and our reverence for the temple of the human soul.

The Heroic Christian

THE heroic form of the Reforming Christ is an eternal call for heroic Christians with consecration enough to let their conviction lead them anywhere, as did Luther. It is a rebuke to the slothful Pharisee at ease in Zion when the very church of the living God is endangered. It is a challenge to leave the superficial and the childish in religion to labor and sacrifice for the deep and the essential, for lack of which the world sins and hates and dies.

"Rise up, O men of God!
  Have done with lesser things;
Give heart and soul and mind and strength,
  To serve the King of kings.

"Rise up, O men of God!
  The church for you doth wait,
Her strength unequal to her task;
  Rise up and make her great."

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. Brown, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

After Decision Day, What?

IF there is a wholesome, natural, spiritual atmosphere in the Sunday school the year around, and if the lives of superintendent and teachers make the Christian life attractive, the Decision Day appeal is likely to be responded to by the scholars, especially by those under sixteen. After sixteen the decisions are more cautiously made.

The question of what shall be done with those who decide is of as great importance as that of enlisting them for Christ. As young soldiers they must be equipped and trained for the King's service.

1. First Steps. Right after Decision Day, those who have made decisions should be reached by a joint letter from the pastor and superintendent, commending them for the step taken, enclosing some encouraging literature, and inviting the scholar into relationship with Christ's church.
2. Preparatory Classes. These young people must be trained for church membership and Christian service. Parents sometimes make objection to this. These parents should be visited and their objections overcome.

For the boys and girls at school, the afternoon may be used for the preparatory class. For the young people in business, an evening is, of course, better. It would be well to divide the boys from the girls in the afternoon meeting, led by the pastor or some wise woman with sunshine in her soul. Sometimes the pastor may appoint the Sunday school teacher as sub-pastor for the training of the members of the class. The Sunday school teacher at least should report to the pastor any facts regarding the young people which would aid the pastor in a better understanding of these new recruits.

One pastor was accustomed to meet these young people one by one on different evenings in his own study, and such was the effect of these heart-to-heart talks that of one class of over ninety probationers only about two failed to ripen into intelligent church membership.

It is important that these young people be urged to read their own Bibles daily following the Sunday school lesson home readings. They should enter a Prayer Circle to include in daily petitions family, friends, and those of every land.

We must not expect perfect fruit from these young Christians. They are likely to do fully as well, in proportion to their age and light, as those who are older. There is much of suggestion to us all in the little girl's prayer: "Lord, make me good; and if at first you don't succeed, try, try again."

For the leaders of these preparatory classes there is much of rich suggestion in some of these books:

"Little Parishes of Eight."
"Children's meetings." (Lucy Ryder Meyer.)
"Chapters of Blessing and Counsels on the Way of Life." (Henderson.)
"Just Enlisted." (Ernest Boamer Allen.)
"Turning Points." (D. A. Oskerheld.)
"Being a Christian." (Gladden.)
"Yours." (F. B. Hoagland.)
"Preparation for Church Membership." (J. E. Gilbert.)

These books suggest lines in which the candidates should be drilled, Bible in hand, for ntelligent service.

3. Training through Service. It is a most natural thing that young people should express their allegiance to Jesus Christ through forms of service, rather than in the statement of their experience. Opportunity should, of course, be given for both. Love grows by serving, and there must be expression of the new life in Christ through service in the practical duties of the home and public school and business life, in the organized activities of the Sunday school class and the school, in a "Win One Band," in "Sunshine Bands," and "King's Messengers," in service for the sick and shut-ins, and in that outreach of community and world-wide missionary interest which so attractively invites the thought and prayer and gift of the young disciple.

In the Bushwick Avenue Methodist Sunday school, a group of such young people met weekly to study plans of Social Service by which they might extend the Kingdom. Ward's "Social Creed of the Church" and Hutchins' "Graded Social Service in the Sunday School" were read and discussed at this weekly gathering, and some survey work on Social Service lines was undertaken in the neighborhood. One of the girls of this class is now the chairman of the Social Service Committee of the Sunday school, and all have discovered practical channels for the finest expression of the Christian life.

Plans for service in missionary and other lines can be found in "Fifty-eight Varieties—One Better" (International Sunday School Association, Chicago), and "Week-Day Activities" (same association).

4. Training through Church Attendance. Dr. James M. Farrar of Brooklyn has been very successful in the organization of the young people of his church into a Junior Congregation, holding a brief morning service, separate from the congregation. The boys and girls are organized as church officials—trustees, deacons, ushers, choir. The pastor preaches a brief sermon to them.

The "Go-to-Church Band" and the "Church Army" are methods of organizing young people for church attendance, such attendance being marked and Bibles and hymn books given for perfect marks. Blank books should be furnished for texts and sermon points and illustrations; and these books should be turned in at stated periods. Often the Sunday school marking system provides for church attendance.

[NOTE. Books mentioned in these articles can be procured through the Christian Herald.]

BLUE STREAKS

Guaranteed

These Tires Fulfill a Great Promise

Every Goodyear Blue Streak Bicycle Tire is a promissory note bearing our name.

It is a promise that the bicycle tire endorsed with the great name of Goodyear truly typifies the principle underlying all Goodyear products—

"To give the public the best value possible, at a price that is fair."

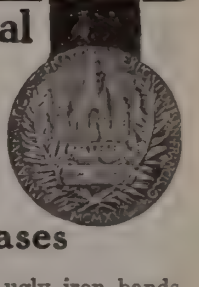
Every Goodyear Blue Streak Bicycle Tire is guaranteed to fulfill this mission. It must give satisfactory service. If it does not, there is a brand new tire awaiting you.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company
Akron, Ohio

GOODYEAR
AKRON

GUNN OFFICE DESKS
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

This is the Gold Medal
they hung on us



the first prize at the Panama-Pacific Exposition

It means to you that you can get gold medal quality at prices lower than others, due principally to the big saving in freight in our condensed, knock down package instead of set up, hollow units.

GUNN Sectional Bookcases
Are Lower in Price than Others

are handsomely finished, dust-proof, no ugly iron bands. Write for our free new catalogue in colors, showing Colonial, Mission, Clawfoot, Sanitary and Standard designs in mahogany and oak. Also "In an Emperor's Den," an interesting booklet about our bookcases used by royalty. Dealers everywhere.
THE GUNN FURNITURE CO., 1824 Broadway, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Get More for Your Money

Let us refer you to Kalamazoo owners in your own town and show you what a real money-saving offer we can make. Write today—get our catalog—see color illustrations of beautiful ranges with latest features, white enamel splasher backs, etc.—and at money-saving prices.

Direct From Manufacturers

Highest quality always at wholesale prices. 30 days' trial. Write today—learn about Kalamazoo quality and save money. Complete stocks. Every style ready to ship. Ask for Catalog No. 103.

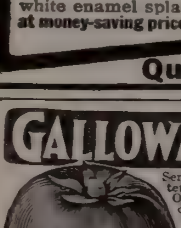
Kalamazoo Stove Co.
Mfrs. Kalamazoo, Mich.
Stoves, Ranges, Gas Ranges, Furnaces, Metal White Enameled [illegible] Kabinets.

3 catalogs—please say which you want.

Quick Shipment We Pay Freight

A Kalamazoo Direct to You
Trade Mark Registered

GALLOWAY'S Porterhouse Tomato



Send 10c for pkt. Galloway's New Porterhouse tomato. Every slice a steak! One grower says, "Solid balls of luscious meat. Never saw its equal." Great size, firm and meaty. You also get my 1917 four-color Pure Seed Book and Planting Guide. Lists and pictures hundreds of varieties field, garden, vegetable, flower seed; fruits, shrubbery, trees, plants, all kinds. This book is free. Write.
GALLOWAY BROS. & CO.
Dept. 2653 Waterloo, Iowa

POMPEIAN
OLIVE OIL
ALWAYS FRESH
THE STANDARD IMPORTED OLIVE OIL

Indoor Closet

More Comfortable, Healthful, Convenient

Eliminates the out-door privy, open vault and cesspool, which are breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to invalids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health.

ABSOLUTELY ODORLESS
Put It Anywhere In The House

The germs are killed by a chemical process in water in the container, which you empty once a month. Absolutely no odor. No more trouble to empty than ashes. Closet absolutely guaranteed. Write for full description and price.
ROWE SANITARY MFG CO. 127A ROWE BLDG., DETROIT, MICH.
Ask about the Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

Get This ALUMINUM SET FREE OR CHOICE OF OTHER USEFUL PREMIUMS WITH YOUR 1917 IMPERIAL RANGE

A special offer with every Imperial Range -an elegant Pure Aluminum Cooking and Roasting Combination. Seamless and Sanitary—4 pieces. Makes 12 useful kitchen utensils, as illustrated.

30 DAYS FREE HOME TEST
PAY US NO MONEY IN ADVANCE

We take all the risk. Choose any range you want from over a hundred styles. Try it, test it for 30 days before you decide to keep it. Send it back if not satisfied.

FACTORY PRICES—WE PAY FREIGHT TO YOUR HOME TOWN

Choose Your Own Terms, if you decide to keep your Imperial—Cash or Credit. By dealing direct with our factory you pay no Freight nor Middlemen's Profit. You easily SAVE $10 TO $20 By our new 20th Century methods. 100,000 Imperials now in use. Housewives delighted. IMPERIAL RANGES are made of highest grade materials. 365 DAYS' GUARANTEE. Will not warp or crack. Have the marvelous even baking Old Dutch Oven modernized--a STONE OVEN BOTTOM--which holds heat like a Fireless Cooker. Great fuel savers and new kind of PERFECT ODOR HOOD. Test all these without risk in your home before buying any range. Write at once for

BIG FREE CATALOG with "No-Money-Risk" Trial offer. Also valuable Premiums and complete description of Imperial Ranges and their new 1917 improvements --You need this book to intelligently select a range. Write today. A letter or postal will do.

THE IMPERIAL STEEL RANGE COMPANY
580 Detroit St.
CLEVELAND, O.

BUY AN ENGINE ON YOUR OWN TERMS.

30 Years of success in making and selling my high-grade engines enables me now to sell direct to the user on practically his own terms. Any worthy, creditable man anywhere in the U. S. can accept my offer, and be sure of a reliable engine at direct from factory prices.

ED. H. WITTE

WITTE ENGINES are made in sizes 2, 3, 4, 6, 8, 12, 16 and 22 H-P.—Kerosene or Gasoline. Particularly adapted for farm and shop. Hundreds in use in every state. My Free Book, "How To Judge Engines," explains fully by printed word and illustration, what you should know before buying.—ED. H. WITTE, PRES.,

WITTE ENGINE WORKS,
3753 Oakland Ave., Kansas City, - Missouri.
3753 Empire Bldg., Pittsburgh, - Penna.

Big Money In Poultry

My Big Free Poultry Book, "Hatching Facts" tells how you can make money raising chickens—all about My World's Champion Belle City Incubator and Brooder—My Low Price—My 10-Year Money-Back Guarantee and My $1000 Gold Offers. Your chance to earn extra money. Learn what this means to you before you buy an incubator. Sales to date, 524000. Send for this book today. Jim Rohan, Pres. 1-2-3 Month's Home Test Frt. Prepd.

Belle City Incubator Co., Box 127 Racine, Wis.

Largest stock of rebuilt typewriters in the United States. Guaranteed saving of $10.00 to $25.00 on any rebuilt typewriter bought. Remingtons, Underwoods, Olivers, Monarchs, Royals. Write for big illustrated catalogue and discounts to dealers and agents.

Dearborn Typewriter Co. Dept. D-24 Chicago

LEPAGE'S GLUE 10¢
STRONGER THAN NAILS

WANTED in every town in the United States, an intelligent man or woman, boy or girl to represent The Christian Herald. This is an opportunity to build up a business of your own, which should grow more and more profitable year after year. Address:

Agency Dept., THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Bible House, New York City

$25 A WEEK IN CASE OF ACCIDENT OR ILLNESS

Paid by our new Premium Dividend Accident and Health Policies. $5000 for Death. Premium $15 or $20 yearly. We want Agents everywhere to sell these policies. Big money can be made by hustlers. For particulars write North American Accident Insurance Co., Dept. F. Newark, N. J.

A New Year's Gift of $21,000

THE holiday season is past and with it the time for those gifts based merely on relationship or personal friendship; but every day is a day for gifts prompted by love for mankind and by the needs of suffering humanity. In addition to the $25,000 given just before Christmas toward the cargo of the Christmas ship, the Christian Herald Family, through its Fund for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War, was able to make a New Year's gift of $21,000 to sufferers in the eastern battle area. Seven thousand dollars was sent to the committee representing the Christian Herald in East Prussia, seven thousand dollars to the Polish committee, and seven thousand dollars to the committee working in Galicia. This money will relieve in a small measure a great deal of the heartbreaking misery of the women and children and old people in the districts to which it is sent. With two years' practice, the committee have learned how to make each dollar stretch an infinite distance, a lesson which they have learned from stern necessity, for the dollars have been few and the need beyond comprehension.

One good woman among the members of the Christian Herald Family had a special treat all planned for herself. In some way she could not forget the widows and orphans, the starving and homeless, the maimed, the hopeless ones, whose hollow eyes and sunken cheeks and bleeding wounds cry to Christian America for mercy. So she sacrificed her pleasure in order that she might do her part in relieving the misery with which the war has cursed the world.

The Monthly Offering Clubs are still growing, and we are encouraged at the response to our suggestion that giving be put on a definite, regular basis. The clubs are as follows: No. 1, for donors of fifty cents monthly; No. 2, for donors of one dollar monthly; No. 3, for donors of two dollars monthly; No. 4, for donors of three dollars monthly; No. 5, for donors of five dollars monthly; No. 6, for donors of ten dollars monthly; No. 7, for donors of twenty dollars monthly; No. 8, for donors of twenty-five dollars monthly; No. 9, for donors of fifty dollars monthly; No. 10, for donors of some amount monthly, determined by circumstances.

Fifty cents! A dollar! Five dollars! In how many needless ways we spend this much and more each month! If we should only say "no" to each needless expenditure, the amount thus realized would place us in one of these clubs without any real sacrifice; and then if, because our hearts ache for these innocent sufferers, we should add a sacrificial gift—if all America should do it—not another child would die of hunger or exposure. They are dying now.

Please address your gifts to the Christian Herald, Room 93, Bible House, New York City. In due course acknowledgment will appear in the paper. State any preference you may have as to the use you wish made of your gifts.

New Gifts for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Men's Bible Class, Argyle Luth Ch, Wisc	10.00
Mrs M Moon	10.00
H H Johnson	10.00
Mrs Sue D Maxey	10.00
J Jacobson	10.00
A H Byrd	10.00
Friend, Rochester, N Y	10.00
S N Hinman	10.00
Mt Pleasant S S, Bellevue, Tex	10.00
Mrs J H Lee	5.00
E H S	5.00
Ed Simkin	5.00
Mrs E H Day	5.00
Nellie E Fish	5.00
M E Fearnow	5.00
Bertha & Sara Pederson	5.00
W A Potter	5.00
Mrs C Close	5.00
Friend, Charlotte, N C	5.00
—— Herndon, Va	5.00
—— McClelland, Iowa	5.00
N R Tolman	5.00
Miss'y Soc'ty, Cong'l Ch, Vesper, Wisc	5.00
M M Turner	5.00
Mrs E B Pool	5.00
Prathersville S S, Excelsior Springs, Mo	5.00
Mrs S K Elmer	5.00
John Downs	5.00
Mrs J. Shannon Naor	5.00
A P Fraser	5.00
Mt Carmel Regular Bapt. Ch, Luray, Va	5.00
Jas Sollie	5.00
A G Klein	5.00
Stephen P Queen	5.00
Meth Congregation, Mc Coll, S Car	5.00
Friend, Geneva, Ga	5.00
S S, Malabon, Oreg	5.00
H S Koken	5.00
L Breen	5.00
Dist No 99, S S, Madison, Kans	5.00
Subscriber, Farmersville, N Y	5.00
Friend Lincoln, Nebr	5.00
T M Stewart	5.00
John Edwards	5.00
Zions Ev Luth Cong, Marietta, Pa	5.00
Philip & Addie Dasch	5.00
Mrs Wm Forck	5.00
Geo A Baker	5.00
Alfred & Chas Dadson	5.00
G R Garrison	5.00
Frances Baldwin	5.00
Mrs J L McDonald	5.00
D R McRae	5.00
Mr & Mrs C A Clark	5.00
Mrs Mary Cromwell	5.00
Miss Sallie P Scott	3.00
Miss Miriam E Blowers	3.00
—— Lexington, Ill	3.00
Mrs Emma H Adams	3.00
Mary Duncan	3.00
I Roosa & Mrs Catherine Osborn	3.00
John Vangreen	3.00
Subscriber, Naperville, Ill	3.00
Robt H Schmickle	3.00
Elva C Beach	2.50
Mr & Mrs E F Venter	2.00
Mrs M C P	2.00
Kate I Darcy	2.00
Mrs J C Dale	2.00
Rev T E F Norton	2.00
Woman's Miss'y Soc, Bethel Bapt Ch, Fluvanna Co, Va	2.00
Wm & Flora Wilkinson	2.00
Mary E Skinner	2.00
Mrs JW Bennie	2.00
Mary E Spicknall	2.00
M L	2.00
J A Kelso	2.00
Mrs I O Jones	2.00
Mercelia C Scott	2.00
Mrs John Sywassink	2.00
Mrs Mary Bernhardt	2.00
Mrs F Thornton	2.00
R E McCallen	2.00
S J & M R J	2.00
Mrs C A Kelley	2.00
Lulu Pearce	2.00
Mrs J H Mercer	2.00
A B W & C E M	1.50
Mrs Sarah Bradley	1.50
Mrs M C Robinson	1.50
Teachers & Pupils, Naffs, Va Graded School	1.50
Sympathizer, Waterloo, Ia.	1.50
Grace Evangelical Luth Ch, Waynesboro, Va	1.50
D H Rinehart	1.00
Friend, Newburgh, N Y	1.00
Mrs Esther J Warner	1.00
A M H O	1.00
Mrs Ira Waller	1.00
Mrs R H Phillips	1.00
Mrs Mary E Parker	1.00
M E E	1.00
O G Young	1.00
Mrs K M Knight	1.00
Mrs S W McEvers	1.00
Annie Pease	1.00
Mrs Spindel	1.00
Mrs L B Elliott	1.00
Mrs G W Irvin	1.00
W G Perry & Family	1.00
Miss Ida Shellenberger	1.00
Miss Ruth Jones	1.00
Mr & Mrs A D Phinney	1.00
Church, Coe, Mich	1.00
Leon Harpe	1.00
In His Name, Potsdam, N Y	1.00
Mabel Coleman	1.00
John B Miller	1.00
Mrs S H Shier	1.00
Union S S, Herndon, Fla	1.00
Mrs L V Cory	1.00
D, New Hampton, N J	1.00
D W Corwin	1.00
M M	1.00
Edward A Puff	1.00
Mrs B Gehrke	1.00
In His Name, Lampson, Wis	1.00
M Montgomery	1.00
Mrs V T Baker	1.00
Mrs Elizabeth Hinkle	1.00
Sympathizer, West Union, Ohio	1.00
Margaret Wymes	1.00
Mrs J E Rice	1.00
Mrs E Scott	1.00
Ellen Shauck	1.00
Myrtle Hathaway	1.00
M A L & A I I	1.00
Miss Jessie F White	1.00
Addie James	1.00
Mrs Maud Fox	1.00
Mrs Anna M Irwin	1.00
Mrs Irene Gilmore	1.00
Friend, Tunica, Miss	1.00
Mrs Daisy L Prince	1.00
Miss H E Frost	1.00
Mary A Jones	1.00
J L Eason	1.00
Friend, Waterloo, Iowa	1.00
Friend & Reader	1.00
Reader, Mt Pleasant, Mich	1.00
Subscriber, Leipsic, Ohio	.50
T H O	.50
Mrs Deuel & Mrs Saxe	.50
A Brother	.50
Lillian E Bliven	.50
M M L	.25
—— Beaver, Okla	.25
Mrs Lizzie Nicholas	.75
M E C S S S, Bluffton, S Car	7.00
F W K	12.00
Mr & Mrs Geo M Welch	6.00
Mrs E D Cutler	25.71
Protestant Ch, Craig Colony, Sonyea, N Y	23.25
S S, Presby Ch, Otisco, N Y	11.00
First M E Ch, El Dorado Springs, Mo	12.00
Friend, Elizabeth, N J	4.00
Grand View S S, Burger, Okla	4.75
T B Paige	11.00
Bethel Welsh C M Ch, Wymore, Nebr	32.05
Friends, Ohio	1.75
Lawrence Bapt Ch, Fay, Ohio	6.00
Malad Canyon Presby Ch, Hagerman, Idaho	7.26
Pleasant Grove S S, Hazel, Ky	11.30
Blackfoot Bridge S S, Helmville, Mont	3.15
Friends & S S of Edward Meany Sanatorium, Taughannock Falls, N Y	3.40
Grace Evan S S, Urbana, Ind	27.40
Coffman S S, Ft Calhoun, Nebr	4.87
Swedish Bapt Ch of Mudhen Lake, Siren, Wisc	2.63
Lynnwood S S, Bengal, Minn	6.24
M E S S, Wakeeney, Kans	14.17
Sympathizer, Fulton, Mich	3.50
Mrs Mary W Jose	2.20
Oscar Duryea	.10
—— Freeport, Ill	4.10
Southfield United Presby Ch, Redford, Mich	13.00
Chas Elrey	5.30
Union S S, Curry Co, N Mex	14.00
Sunville Presby S S, Cooperstown, Pa	6.00
Pleasant View Bapt Ch, Furley, Kans	24.00
Two Evangelical Ass'ns S S, South Bend, Ind	47.05
S S Class of Girls, U P Ch, Springfield, Ohio	3.60
Mrs Lilla Masters	4.00
Latuna, Texas & Anthony, N Mex S S	2.47
Ella Grant	8.40
M E Ch, Indio, Calif	7.00
Mrs M E Dodds & Miss M E Gilchrist	3.50
—— La Clede, Ill	.10
S S M E Ch, South, Ripley, Tenn	24.50
Miss Dona Cleland	8.00
Cora B Laidlaw	25.00
Kathryn S Harley	25.00
Miss Annie A Reynolds	20.00
Mrs J M Burd	20.00
Minnie E Walters	20.00
Myrtle L Ludden	20.00
Well Wisher, Akron, Ohio	20.00
Jas J Pow	15.00
Mrs Isabel Hutchinson	15.00
Lucy C Stone	15.00
J S C, Parkersburg, W Va	10.00
Jas Bowron	10.00
John Reid	10.00
Isabel Hays	10.00
—— Mohawk, N Y	10.00
S N M	10.00
Ruby R Findley	10.00
Jennie Smith	10.00
Richard Glover	10.00
E & A, Philadelphia, Pa	10.00
J J Nesbit	10.00
Mr & Mrs J J Thompson	10.00
Mann's Chapel S S, Chapel Hill, N C	10.00
Allen Cunningham	10.00
Mrs R M Purdy	10.00
Chas B Spiess	10.00
J B A	10.00
R C Hester	10.00
Friend, Greeley, Colo	10.00
Mrs O M Hess	10.00
Wm R McNeil	5.00
J C D	5.00
Miss Mary F Wilson	5.00
E Y B	5.00
Mrs S B Fahnestock	5.00
Miss Florence E Ide	5.00
E E McDonald	5.00
Jas A Parker	5.00
A S Floyd	5.00
Mr & Mrs Walter Doering	5.00
A C Tebbetts	5.00
Mr & Mrs M W Farmer	5.00
J G	5.00
J B Wright	5.00
D K Powers	5.00
J L Seymour	5.00
Marion E Howe	5.00
Friend, Unionville, Conn	5.00
C J Johnson	5.00
Kings Daughters, Edisto Isl, S C	5.00
——Worcester, Mass	5.00
Reno Switzer	5.00
Mr & Mrs J G Siegrist	5.00
A S F Beverly, Mass	5.00
T H Turner	5.00
Mrs Martha C Dumm	5.00
Mrs H B Eley	5.00
Waits Corners Bapt Aid Socty, N Clymer, N Y	5.00
Rosa Jones	5.00
—— Dunnegan, Mo	5.00
Lucy E Curtis	5.00
Mrs. J H Augustine	5 00
Marie Skibness	5.00
Mrs S M Glenn	5 00
Marie L Holway	5 00
Subscriber, Rockdale, N Y	5.00
Mr J H Cushing	5.00
Mrs Ellen Crocker	5.00
James E Young	5.00
E W Pratt	5.00
Reader, Delphos, Kans	5 00
E & F Linn	5 00
Benj Parker	5.00
A N	5.00
S C Brownlee	5.00
Mrs S B Webster	5.00
In as Much, Simsbury, Conn	5.00
Mrs Wm W Tuttle	5.00
V T Langsea	5.00
Chas Flint	5.00
D S Shiflett	5.00
In His Name Club, Pittsburgh, Pa	5.00
M Lizzie Herr	5.00
—— La Otto, Ind	5.00
John E Winter	5.00
Auburn Union S S, Greeley, Colo	5 00
Verna Brooks	3.00
Flora I Hollis	3.00
Union S S, Woods, Oreg	3.00
Mrs A B Johnson	3.00
W S K	3.00
Mt Pleasant S S, Chapel Hill, N C	3.00
W F Haas	3.00
Miss Laura Augustine	3.00
Anne B Dodd	3.00
Bert R Betz	3.00
Mrs John Kuhne	3.00
E H K	3.00
Wm Hartje	3.00
Flora A Popejoy	3.00
Bethany Class, Pisgah Union S S, Attica, Ohio	3.00
Mrs Ethel Hubbell	3.00
Mr & Mrs A R Stephen	2.50
Mrs R Van Allen & Family	2.50
Elizabeth Wagner	2.00
E A W	2.00
Jonathan Towell	2.00
H A Moore	2.00
Mr & Mrs A Robertson	2.00
—— Boise, Idaho	2.00
Miss M Nash	2.00
Solomon Springman	2.00
Rebekah Kilmer	2.00
In His Name, Sparta, Va	2.00
Miss Helen Knappenberger	2.00
Mrs Julia Ayres	2.00
W Barry Smith	2.00
C F Kynor	2.00
Mrs E B Read	2.00
M E Ch, East Middlebury, Vt	2.00
Mrs R W Ponatt	2.00
Leonore Joseph	2.00
Bynum S S, Chapel Hill, N C	2.00
Mrs Wm Bastion	2.00
Mrs C Fisher	2.00
Mary W Hurlburt	2.00
Mrs H R Clark	2.00
Mrs E C Matthews	2.00
B C Boland	2.00
M J Batchelor	2.00
R A Buckmaster	2.00
Mrs Emma Granzow	2.00
Mary M Keiter	2.00
Mrs E B H	2.00
Mrs E Eggleston	2.00
Ruth C Hodgman	2.00
Mrs B McWhorter	2.00
In His Name, Arnold, Nebr	2.00
Friend, Mt Mitchell, N C	2.00
Helen M E	2.00
Geo W Price	2.00
J S Conrad	2.00
R B Conrad	2.00
Howard Johnston	2.00
A B H	1.50
Mrs Harriet B Jollie	1.50
Jas P Jones	1.50
Mrs C M Church	1.50
Chas H Thurston	1.00
Mrs Geo W Smith	1.00
S T Tibbett	1.00
Mrs B F Woodworth	1.00
Mrs A L Smith	1.00
M H	1.00
Mrs R H Meyers	1.00
Friend & Subscriber, Boston, Mass	1.00
A R M	1.00
Eleanor Clemensen	1.00
—— St Louis, Mo	1.00
Mrs F L Clark	1.00
West Point Circuit, West Point, Ga	1.00
Mrs Jos E Corbin	1.00
Mr & Mrs J D Thomas	1.00
—— Waynesboro, Va	1.00
Sarah Ward	1.00
John Cope	1.00
In His Name, Victory, Vt	1.00
Alex Hamilton	1.00
Effie N Lason	1.00
Andrew Marshall	1.00
Mrs L M B W	1.00
Etta B Ulrath	1.00
Friend, Richmond, Ky	1.00
Mrs Anna C Crawford	1.00
C T Joseph	1.00

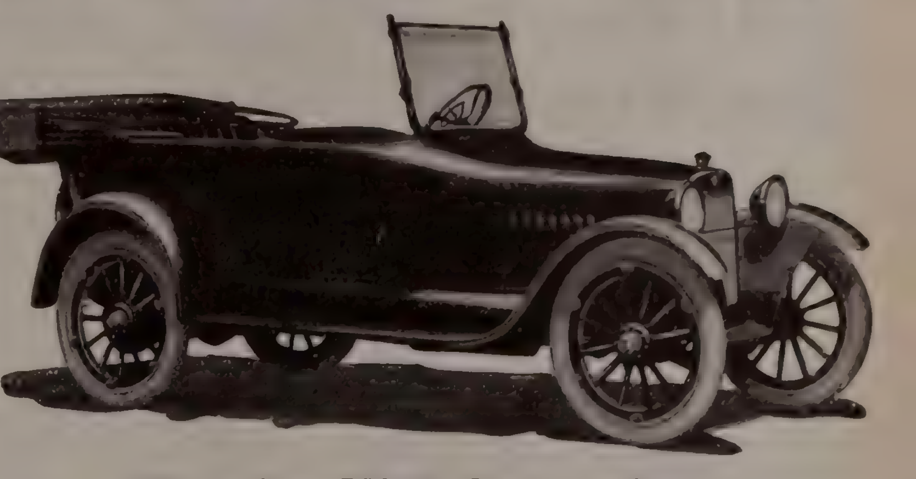
Jennie R Keech	$1.00
Harry Miller	1.00
Eva L Chamberlain	1.00
L O Weorn	1.00
Mrs Elvina D Richards	1.00
G A Beidler	1.00
Friends, Atlantic, Iowa	1.00
—— Berlin, Pa.	1.00
J L Livingston	1.00
Reader	1.00
L B, Fla	1.00
Alzada M De Bord	1.00
Mrs Simon Fair	1.00
Mrs L V L & Miss Masie Stinson	1.00
E S Howes	1.00
Subscriber, West Hatfield, Mass	1.00
J W Singleton	1.00
M A & T W Jacobs	1.00
Reader, Rogers, Ark	1.00
"Kota"	1.00
Lena Foy	1.00
Vernon B Alspach	1.00
Sunshine Band, Pisgah Union S S, Attica, Ohio	1.00
Mrs Cora Bowersox	1.00
Hile Myers	1.00
Mrs H H Hill	1.00
Mrs Jessie Sagers	1.00
D D Thomson	1.00
K C Conrad	1.00
J H Calahan	1.00
J P Long	1.00
I H B	1.00
In as Much, Bridgeton, N J	1.00
O M Hess	1.00
Homer McDonald	1.00
D C Walton	.50
N A Sawhill	.50
Miss Ollie Coons	.50
Margaret Brown	.50
—— Clare, Mich	.50
Mrs Fred Cox	.50
Mrs N C Furlong	.50
Mrs W J Bricker	.50
W F Howell	.25
Elizabeth Charles	.25
Hunting Creek Bapt S S, Big Isl, Va	8.00
Wm & Maria M Valliette	4.00
Ida M Hill	4.00
Zion Ev Luth Ch, Buffalo, N Y	5.25
Christian S S, Cadiz, Ky	46.00
Cong'l S S, Sherrard, Ill	2.78
Bethany Union S S, Upland, Calif	10.46
Redowl S S, S Dak	6.00
Louise V Hall	4.00
Central S S, Columbia, Va	6.00
Ray E Fagen	4.90
Park St Free Bapt Ch, Lakeport, N H	27.35
German Bapt Ch, Shell Creek, Nebr	56.36
Japanese Mission, Cong'l Ch, Sebastopol, Calif	.22
Big Spring S S, Greenback, Tenn	8.00
Invincible S S Class, Prineville, Ore	4.00
Italian Presby S S, Roseto, Pa.	2.65
Jonathan Towell	6.00
Mrs Emma Howard	8.00
Mrs A E Howes	8.00
C V Kintner	13.00
Ebenezer United Ev. S S, Wrightsville, Pa	7.00
Ebenezer Ref Ch, Leighton, Iowa	32.05
Four Friends, Hurley, N Y	4.00
Franklin Barbour	.10
M E S S, Decatur, Ohio	9.30
Mt Hennan Cong, Whites Creek, Tenn	2.70
Sharon Congregation, near Morning Sun, Iowa	199.67
Sabbath School, near Morning Sun, Iowa	6.97
Cedar Valley Bapt S S and Congregation, Clements, Kans	2.60
Presby Ch, Weems, Va	6.50
Second Bapt Ch, Sanbornton, N H	7.00
First Bapt Ch, Grand Rapids, Wis	3.29
Glad Hand S S, Fort Ripley, Minn	5.15
Mrs Robert Parry	7.00
Friends, Ganges, Mich	5.25
Hawkeye Union S S, near Oskaloosa, Iowa	7.05
S S, Aukenytown, O	20.67
Bapt Ch of Crystal, Mich	4.50
Union Chapel, No Water Gap, Pa	27.07
Pitts Creek Bapt Ch, Pocomoke City, Md	12.50
United Presby Cong, Bovina, N Y	53.29
Ladies' Missy Socty of the Rockford Presby Ch, Rockford, Tenn	14.00
R P Church, Wyman, Iowa	26.55
S D Werner	7.00
Friend in Illinois	100.00
Mr & Mrs W E Lynch	50.00
A D Shorts	25.00
Henry Knoch	25.00
John H Prall	25.00
Friend, Turlock, Calif	25.00
Spring Creek Union S S, Coplay, Pa	20.00
Bapt Mission Soc'ty, Avon, S D	20.00
S R Dinnick	10.00
"Salem"	10.00
G W Lough	10.00
Mrs S E Thomason	10.00
Mrs M A Batcheleter	10.00
S E O'Neel	10.00
S H Woodson	10.00
J G Leiser	10.00
Will Robinson	10.00
Mrs M W Turner	10.00
V F Peebles	10.00
Meth Protestant Churches, Union Bridge, Md	10.00
F S Ranney	10.00
Mrs A E & A M Gray	10.00
O Philbrick	10.00
Middlesex U E S S, Pa	10.00
A J Siekmeier	10.00
T C Crowder	10.00
Janie C Crowder	10.00
W W Williams	10.00
Mrs Chas McDonald	5.00
Miss Lizzie McCready	5.00
Mrs Elsie E Ross	5.00
B F Miller	5.00
Mrs L Rauner	5.00
——, Fort Wayne, Ind	5.00
Mrs C E Drake	5.00
Anna A & Mary C Richardson	5.00
Emily O Smith	5.00
W A Derrick	5.00
Mr & Mrs E B Walters	5.00
Friend, Allenhurst, Ga	5.00
T E D Turner	5.00
Mrs A D Ropp	5.00
E Sywulka	5.00
Mrs Wm J Pitt	5.00
Meth S S, Outlook, Wash	5.00
Wm Bodenham	5.00
Friend, Cornwall-on-Hudson, N Y	5.00
S V Eck	5.00
Miss Mary E Leddell	5.00
C E B	5.00
Ladies' Guild, Big Bend, Wis	5.00
Mr & Mrs W C Stevens	5.00
Josephine Wirds	5.00
Mrs L R Brown	5.00
Mrs J E Silliman	5.00
L Newell Turner	5.00
Bertrand Clark	5.00
Emma H Andrews	5.00
Mrs Mary Shipley	5.00
Mrs L J Bennett	5.00
——, Puyallup, Wash	5.00
Henry Fuessner	5.00
Center Point Presby S S, Enoree Presbytery, Synod of S C	5.00
M J Baird	5.00
C O Slaughenhaupt	5.00
Mrs E M Atkins	5.00
Mrs. Sidney Davis	5.00
Mrs H L Sandefur	5.00
Wesley Mumaw	5.00
——, Mannsville, N Y	5.00
Mrs Mary A Holmes	5.00
——, Mayfield, Idaho	5.00
E Downie	5.00
Mrs Ida Downie	5.00
Mildred Downie	5.00
Willis E Downie	5.00
"Thankful," Vankleek Hill, Ont, Can	5.00
H Lathrop	5.00
Mrs Henry Moats	5.00
Mrs E C Bent	3.00
In His Name, Marion, Ind	3.00
Presby Ch, Barneston, Nebr	3.00
West Side M E S S, East Sound, Wash	3.00
Three Sisters, Hiawatha, Kans	3.00
Mr & Mrs G W Barford	3.00
Miss M E Clewell	3.00
Friend, N Mex	3.00
Mrs Celia K & Stella Wimborough	3.00
Friend, East Chatham, N Y	3.00
Florida Bapt S S Durango, Colo	3.00
Three Sisters, Marshall, Mo.	3.00
Mrs R M Duncan	3.00
Mrs Caroline Reed	3.00
Mrs A W Baker	3.00
John R Forman	3.00
M E Monnett	2.50
J J Parker	2.50
S S Finley, Calif	2.50
H Ebert	2.00
E Krause	2.00
C B Chesser	2.00
Earl Brewster	2.00
Mrs A W Reynolds	2.00
Mrs Nellie & Miss Edith Lazell	2.00
Mrs Stanley Whitaker	2.00
Mrs E Nicklow	2.00
Mrs Thos Booth	2.00
Mrs I W Moore	2.00
Jas Smith	2.00
Fork Willis S S, Columbia, Va	2.00
J H Lukens	2.00
Mr & Mrs J W Rankin	2.00
Kate Alford	2.00
A D Benjamin	2.00
Augusta Olson	2.00
Miss E L Jurisch	2.00
M Newberg	2.00
Herman S Bernhart	2.00
Friend, W Swanzey, N H	2.00
Mr & Mrs Oscar A Beebe	2.00
Mrs Joseph A Miller	2.00
J F Stuempfle	2.00
M & E Krasby	2.00
——, Adamston, W Va	2.00
Mrs Ellen Settles	2.00
In His Name, Jewell, Ohio	2.00
Mrs Jennie P Coghill	2.00
Two Subscribers, Hamilton, Bermuda	2.00
Urias Krom	2.00
D A Noble	2.00
Mrs M S Forsythe	2.00
J D Bell	2.00
L C Hine	2.00
L H, McClure, Ohio	2.00
S H G	2.00
Elizabeth Schwab	2.00
L A Avery	2.00
T H Becker	2.00
C E Smith	2.00
Mrs Lydia Steininger	2.00
Friend, N Brookfield, Mass	2.00
——, Southold, N Y	1.50
Mrs M Blume	1.50
Mrs F C Longbottom	1.50
Mrs John D Jones	1.00
Friend B H, Colo	1.00
Miss Naomi Quincey	1.00
Mrs N M	1.00
Jas F Griffin	1.00
Annie H Avery	1.00
O D Loomis	1.00
Miss Alice J Loomis	1.00
Mrs Mary E Trueblood	1.00
M E M	1.00
S M Mawhinney	1.00
Florence Backus	1.00
——, Sheridan, Wyo	1.00
M C Sampson	1.00
O V Wallace	1.00
Geo Watson	1.00
Harriet McCoy	1.00
W O Smith	1.00
Mrs E Matthews	1.00
Bernt Olson	1.00
Thos. Olson	1.00
Mrs B Olson	1.00
Alfred Olson	1.00
Franklin Olson	1.00
Carl P Olson	1.00
Mrs Carl Olson	1.00
Miss A J Williamson	1.00
Mrs E E Marsh	1.00
M J D	1.00
Sympathizer, Goshen, N J	1.00
Mrs J J Parker	1.00
J M Watkins	1.00
Mrs Wm J Sherman	1.00
Mrs L V D H	1.00
Bryant School, Kate River District, Va	1.00
J T Cooley	1.00
Clare Torrey Smith	1.00
Sister E	1.00
Mrs W H Miller	1.00
Friend, Shippensburg, Pa.	1.00
——, Hanover, Pa	1.00
A Parsells	1.00
——, Bonneville, Ore	1.00
Mrs G W Jones	1.00
Mrs Mary Brown	1.00
Mrs Hamilton	1.00
Subscriber, Dorchester, Mass	1.00
Mrs A W Jenks	1.00
Friend, Milford, N Y	1.00
M Swayze	1.00
Mrs Geo Carlile	1.00
Mrs A L Woodard	1.00
Lavina March	1.00
Anna L March	1.00
Mrs Geo A Clark	1.00
Mrs B Goldie	1.00
Mrs D Holliday	1.00
Mr & Mrs W N McCullough	1.00
Harry Meekam	1.00
Emma Brown	1.00
Mrs Eva Allen	1.00
Howard H Jeutter	1.00
S E C, St. Johnsbury, Vt	1.00
Mrs D C Whitehill	1.00
Aug Baumann	1.00
E A Burgess	1.00
E B, Martin's Ferry, Ohio	1.00
Rev J B Hemmeon	1.00
A Subscriber & Friend, Quincy, Ill	1.00
Mrs Emma A Every	1.00
A Friend, Woodville, Texas	1.00
C D Gould	1.00
Mrs R A Henrichs	1.00
Mrs A L Knight	1.00
Frank M Weeks	1.00
S W Stewart	1.00
Catherine Stewart	1.00
Mrs Mary J Raney	1.00
Wayne School, Wayne, N J	1.00
A Suffragist, Bellefontaine, O	1.00
H M Ellenwood	1.00
Mrs L W Alexander	1.00
L M J, Delanson, N Y	1.00
Mrs James Shaw	1.00
Friend, Madison, S Dak	1.00
Mrs Almira Miller	1.00
Miss Letitia Chapman	1.00
Mrs A J Taylor	.50
Mrs Maggie N Shirley	.50
Subscriber, Tazewell, Va.	.50
Minnie M Parker	.50
Friend, Toledo, Ohio	.50
Mrs Ben Owen	.50
Mrs J C Webber	.50
Mrs E C Poole	.50
Reader, Sterling, Neb	.50
Subscriber, Phoenix, Ariz.	.50
Mrs W Wilson	.25

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

◆

JOHN GOODE, whose remarkable life-story has been published in The Christian Herald, is now telling the story of his conversion to large and deeply interested audiences. He is open for engagements. Churches, Sunday schools, Men's classes, Christian Endeavor Societies and other organizations in the Middle and Eastern states wishing to hear the story of his life and spiritual transformation from his own lips, should write for open dates to the Christian Herald, Bible House, N. Y.

SAXON "SIX"



This Car Will Out-perform Any Other In Its Class

You will find the superability of this Saxon "Six" motor reflected to your advantage in many ways.

First, in unusual quietness and smoothness.

Engineers estimate the power-flow smoothness of Saxon "Six" to be nearly 98% greater than that of the best less-than-six cylinder motor in its price-class.

Second, in astounding quickness of "pick-up"—from standing start to 45 miles per hour in 23 seconds.

This "less-than-six" we cite required 30 seconds in that test.

Third, in amazing flexibility. Seldom indeed do Saxon "Six" owners resort to gear-shifting.

Fourth, in unrivalled pulling power.

The Saxon "Six" owner revels in the confidence that his car can cope successfully with any set of road conditions motoring may present.

Saxon "Six" is $865 f. o. b. Detroit. (700)

SAXON MOTOR CAR CORPORATION, DETROIT

INDOOR CHEMICAL CLOSET

NO SMELL — NO GERMS — SANITARY

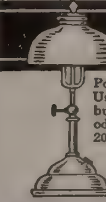
Use in any room. Needs no plumbing, sewerage or running water. Chemicals in closet kill germs. Fine for the sick and old folks.

Destroy Outdoor Closet

Put in a warm Indoor Sanitary Closet. Empty twice monthly. Only attention necessary. Satisfied users and Boards of Health endorse it. Fully guaranteed. Write now for free literature.

Sanitary Closet Co., 41 Colton Bldg., Toledo, O. 30 DAY FREE TRIAL

The "BEST" LIGHT



Positively the cheapest and strongest light on earth. Used in every country on the globe. Makes and burns its own gas. Casts no shadows. Clean and odorless. Absolutely safe. Over 200 styles. 100 to 2000 Candle Power. Fully Guaranteed. Write for catalog. AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.

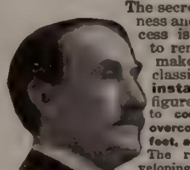
THE BEST LIGHT CO.
470 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

Stop Forgetting

Memory the Basis of All Knowledge

The Key To Success

The secret of business and social success is the ability to remember. I can make your mind an infallible classified index from which you can instantly select thoughts, facts, figures, names, faces. Enables you to concentrate, develop self-control, overcome bashfulness, think on your feet, address an audience. Easy. Simple. The result of 20 years' experience developing memories of thousands.



Prof. Henry Dickson, Principal

Write Today for free booklet "How to Remember" and Copyrighted Memory Test, also how to obtain my FREE book, "How To Speak In Public."

Dickson School of Memory, 1701 Hearst Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

Delivered TO YOU FREE

A sample 1917 model "Ranger" bicycle, on approval and 30 DAYS TRIAL.

Write at once for large illustrated catalog showing complete line of bicycles, tires and supplies, and particulars of most marvelous offer ever made on a bicycle. You will be astonished at our low prices and remarkable terms.

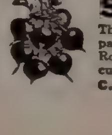
RIDER AGENTS Wanted—Boys, make money taking orders for Bicycles, Tires and Sundries from our big catalog. Do Business direct with the leading bicycle house in America. Do not buy until you *know what we can do for you. WRITE TO US.

MEAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. F. 71, CHICAGO



SAMPLE OUR SEED

Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c. One packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Earliest Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce, 10c to new customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG FREE.

C. N. Robinson & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore, Md.

Infantile Paralysis

eleven years ago, left Earl Hocker with a deformed foot and paralyzed leg as shown in upper photograph. Treatment at the McLain Sanitarium resulted as shown in lower photograph. He now walks squarely on both feet. Read his letter.

I arrived home all O. K. and I sure did surprise my father when I came home walking without a cane. I hope every cripple will visit you and see the wonderful work you do. I will gladly answer any letters.

EARL HOCKER,
Centertown, Ky.

For Crippled Children

This private Institution is devoted to the treatment of children and young adults afflicted with Club Feet, Spinal Diseases and Curvature, Infantile Paralysis, Hip Disease, Bow Legs, Wry Neck, etc. Write for book, "Deformities and Paralysis"—also Book of References. Both free.

The McLain Orthopedic Sanitarium
923 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

How Much Do YOU Want to Earn Weekly?

Some of our agents earn commissions greater than their salary each week. We have paid millions of dollars in commissions to men and women in all parts of the country. Some have won fine positions in our general offices.

Experience in salesmanship is not necessary, as we furnish you with a course in selling, which gives you the combined experiences of many who have won success. And we show you the things to do for big permanent success. And back of all this we furnish you with names of prospects obtained from our national advertising campaign. We co-operate without expense to you to help you make sales.

We allot exclusive territories and you get profit on every typewriter sold therein. This means that if you work in co-operation with us you have a business of your own which you can build up year by year. You become a distributor with a guaranteed territory and we are the manufacturers.

If you do not know the advantages of the Oliver "Nine" already, our catalog will tell you why thousands of concerns prefer this master typewriter. And we will tell you how you can acquire a sample machine. We teach you how to demonstrate this machine to prospective purchasers.

Maybe your territory is open and we may be able to get together to our mutual advantage. The thing for you to do is to fill out the "Opportunity Coupon" below and send it to us without delay. We take care of applications in the order in which they are received. So get yours in now before someone else gets ahead of you.

OLIVER TYPEWRITER CO.
1432 Oliver Typewriter Building, Chicago, Ill.

OPPORTUNITY COUPON
The OLIVER TYPEWRITER CO.
1432 Oliver Typewriter Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

I am a responsible man (or woman) and would like to know how I can secure an exclusive local agency for the Oliver Typewriter.
(If now engaged in business fill in below)

I am engaged in the..........business but can give (all or part) time to the Oliver if you show me how I can make money.

Name......................................

Address......................................
Write name and address plainly (560)

Primulinus Hybrid Gladioli

Flowers medium size, of exquisite tints, veinings and markings, carried on long straight spikes that are superb for cutting. The bulbs are grown at Meadowvale Farms, and are of blooming size only.

One Hundred Bulbs
In Many Varieties for $15

Bulbs should be ordered soon—so it will be well to send for

The Glory of the Garden

my Gladiolus booklet for 1917, which will be mailed to you or your friends, if you will send me the correct name and address.

Box 215
Arthur Cowee Meadowvale FARMS Berlin, N.Y.

A Penny Post Card Brings 100 Samples Free

You can get a big book of Wall Paper samples free from Montgomery Ward & Co. by just writing a postal card and asking for it. These samples are good size and show exact colors, designs and prices. Write today, don't forget to address Dept. A163

Montgomery Ward & Co.
Satisfaction Guaranteed or Your Money Back
New York, Chicago, Kansas City, Ft. Worth, Portland, Ore.
Write House Most Convenient.

Answers

By
MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

NOT long ago I published here a little article called "The Old-Fashioned Woman, the Business Girl, and Marriage," and at the end of the article, said: "What do you think of the business girl? What do you think of the woman who, if she must, is able to support herself? Do you think that a woman's interests should be in the home—and nowhere else? What, after all, is your idea of a real old-fashioned woman? Write and tell me your opinions. It would be interesting to know them."

It was interesting to know them. I found that out after the first few letters drifted in. I am still finding it out. And from my pile of correspondence I am picking out answers—in a most haphazard manner—to show to you.

"WHY a teacher of my acquaintance made good as a wife and mother," is the heading of a tiny sketch sent in by a pen-and-ink friend from Illinois.

"In the first place, she was a scientific person. She knew chemistry, anatomy, and hygiene.

"She was systematic without being fussy, and did not get cross when her system was interfered with by circumstances over which she had no control.

"She cooked according to good recipes. She saved fire in gas and electricity. Things requiring long cooking were done by fireless.

"She was cleanly by nature and training. She had learned first aid and the care of children by serving in a hospital six months before marriage. She made a gentle, affectionate wife and mother, and her household was a model. Best of all, the family altar was visited night and morning."

"ONCE upon a time," begins a letter from Iowa, "I was a little girl in New York State.

"My parents were laboring people, and when I say 'people' I mean my mother as well as my father. My mother was from the Pennsylvania Dutch stock and knew how to weave and knit and do all the kinds of work that a woman is supposed to do, and work that a woman is not today supposed to do, such as raising a garden, and milking, and making soap, and taking care of the stock.

"Living in this atmosphere, I was often taken with my mother out to work in homes. So I am sure that I could go and do any of these things today if it was necessary to maintain myself and my children. This is my idea of an 'old-fashioned woman.'"

A LITTLE letter from the heart of New York City tells an interesting story.

"I suppose," it says, "that when you asked for letters of opinion you meant letters from your young girl friends, and I am only a little, old, old-fashioned woman. Yet I am moved to write to you—to tell you about a friend of mine. . . .

"Seventy-nine years ago a dear little girl came to bless the home of a certain well-to-do manufacturer and his wife. What a glowing future her parents predicted for her! As she grew in stature they grew in affluence and wealth. She was educated with care in books, music, and society. By and by some relatives who had been interested observers thought that her housekeeping education was being neglected. She was now a young lady nearing her twenties, and did not know how to cook, and did not care to dust. A visit was paid the family and the father was interviewed on the serious condition of things. But he, wise man that he was, said: 'No! We can hire cooks and housemaids, but every woman should understand business methods. My daughter is to come into my office and learn all that I can teach her about business.'

"She learned her lessons well. When her father died he left the bulk of his fortune in her hands. Four years ago her husband died, and left a large property at her disposal. She is now seventy-nine, but she is still able to manage her finances and her splendid charities. . . .

"This is only one instance. Your other friends will probably bring forward many. We bespeak for the girl a thorough, all-round education, such as is given to the boy. We are glad to see that she is coming into her own. Educate her body and soul, then lay on responsibilities and watch her rise to the occasion!"

A LETTER signed with the quaint given name "Prudence" takes sides vehemently with the old-fashioned woman.

"I don't think," begins the letter, "that the old-fashioned woman is given a square deal. . . . I am one of those who have been shielded from all the outward storms of the world, and I think that if more girls and women were kept at home and taught the requirements of a household, it would be better for them and for the future generations. What can be sweeter and lovelier than an old-fashioned woman who has not been contaminated by worldly influences? I think that, too often, the glitter of the world takes girls into business when they would be a hundred per cent. better, physically and morally, if they had remained at home, which is a woman's natural realm. It may be very fine and smart for a woman to be able to discuss the topics of the day, but I am sure a good man would rather have a home-maker and housekeeper than a bird in a gilded cage, and where better could a man find such a woman than in a good old-fashioned home where good old-fashioned ideas reign supreme?"

A BUSINESS woman who has worked for a rather long time, and knows her side of the argument perfectly, sends in a plea for the business girl.

"I have learned during the past eighteen years that it does not detract from a woman's womanliness to go out in the business world. A real woman will keep her place and be a womanly woman no matter where she is placed. Coming in constant contact with men she will learn to know their needs better than her more unfortunate sister who has been sheltered and cared for and knows nothing of the world. Hence she will make a better wife. She will know that 'home' to a tired business man means a refuge and shelter where he can go after the day's work is done to rest and find comfort. Therefore she will understand that when he comes home he often does not feel like talking and entertaining her, or going out in society, and she will respect his wishes and make him as comfortable as she can. She will know the value of money and will use her business experience in managing the household and taking care of the money he works so hard to earn. She will have system and use it. She can make a dollar go farther than her less experienced sister. She knows the value of plain, well-cooked, substantial food and how necessary it is to one when working hard. She will understand that a poorly nourished body means a poorly nourished mind, which will result in inefficiency and failure, hence a decrease in salary, and she will see that each meal is just what is necessary to keep her husband and family in working trim. She will attend to her household duties with just the same precision that she attended to her office duties before her marriage.

"The business woman who marries knows the needs of her children. As they grow up, she will see that they receive the proper training to enable them to face the world and take care of themselves in every way. Even though she may feel that they will never have to go out and work for their living, she will see that they are educated so that they can do so if necessity demands it.

"IF she should be left penniless, she would be able to make a good living and provide for her little ones. If she was left with some money, she would know how to manage to make every penny do its full duty and would not know the worry and anxiety that her sister left in similar circumstances would. I have seen this lack of business ability and training in so many cases where women were left with enough to take care of themselves if they only knew how to do it, but they worry along, and the first thing you know they are dependent upon others for help. I have in mind now one dear old lady who married young, and had a husband who never let her know anything about his business affairs, but simply did all the managing. She was left with sufficient money to take care of her during her life if she had known how to take care of it. The result is that she is simply worrying herself to death as she sees each month her principal going and knows that eventually she will have nothing to live on. My own father died about the same time this woman's husband did. His life with my mother had been different in one respect. Although my mother married young and knew nothing of the world, yet my father let her know all of his business and taught her and she was a wonderful manager. Although she did not have very much money left her, she has managed during the past three years to use only the interest.

"Don't think that I prefer a business life to a home life, for I do not. I believe that every true woman wants a home and a family. There is nothing that can take the place of a little one's arms around your neck and to know they belong to you. But when I see the many unhappy homes and marriages I feel that marriage isn't everything in this life, and I believe it would be far more successful if it were entered into as a business relation more than simply a matter of sentiment, or, as is often the case with the woman, the means of getting a living without having to work for it, or in other words getting a man to support her and give her the protection of his name, while she gives nothing in return. When a man marries he wants a home, and unless the woman he marries has the brains and inclination to make that home for him, nothing but unhappiness can result from such a union."

These are the opinions of a few women who have opinions and are not afraid to express them. And—have they interested you?

◆

Those Having No Hope

Continued from page 60

gether for good to those that love God (Rom. 8 : 28). He knows that he needs to be careful for nothing, but in everything by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, to make his requests known unto God, and that the peace of God which passeth all understanding shall keep his mind and heart in Christ Jesus. He knows that God will supply his every need according to His riches in glory, in Christ Jesus (Phil. 4 : 6, 7, 19). He knows that God spared not his only begotten Son, whom he freely gave for him, and by that guarantee he knows that God will withhold no good thing from him, that with Christ he will freely give him all things (Rom. 8 : 32).

SECOND, the Christian has hope for the life to come; he has "hope of eternal life, which God, who cannot lie, hath promised" (Titus 1 : 2). How certain that hope resting upon the Word of God, who cannot lie; how magnificent that hope, eternal life! He has in the world to come "an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for" him (I Peter 1 : 4). He has the assurance of the Word of God and the indwelling Spirit of God that he is a child of God, and if a child, then an heir; an heir of God and a joint heir with Jesus Christ; and that any sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in him (Rom. 8 : 18). Wonderful hope, immeasurable hope, glorious hope of the Christian; but the man out of Christ has "no hope."

Friends, which do you prefer, the no hope of one who is out of Christ, or the glorious hope of the one who has received Christ as his Saviour, surrendered to him as his Lord and Master, and confessed him as such before the world? You have your choice. Every one has his choice. Which will you take? All of us are like men standing on the seashore and looking out over the boundless ocean of eternity. Toward some of us, toward every one of us who is a true Christian, there come gallant vessels loaded with gold and silver and precious stones, with every sail set, wafted swiftly toward us by the breeze of God's favor. But toward those of us who have rejected him or neglected him, those of us who have never publicly confessed him before the world, there come no vessels, but dismantled wrecks, with no cargoes but lost opportunities. Glorious hope, and no hope—which will you take?

The War in Europe

Continued from page 59

covering the period from its inception on July 1 to the middle of November, when active operations ceased. The general considers that the net result of these operations was to show that the Allies have it in their power at any time they feel so disposed to break the German lines in northern France, and asserts that this result would have been attained in the Somme offensive itself, had not the weather suddenly, in mid-October, turned and remained bad for military operations.

The submarines continue very active, not only in the Mediterranean but in the North Sea and the Baltic, some forty victims having been reported in the past week.

In Rumania, Braila, which on January 5 fell into the hands of the Teutonic Allies, has undergone almost as many sieges and more captures than Constantinople. Since 1475 to the present time it has been besieged twelve times and captured eleven times, besides being twice burned to the ground by way of good measure. Today, although busy and bustling, it is dreary beyond words, and situated in a drab, thoroughly uninteresting country.

The Russian hold on any portion of the Dobrudja became very slight during the week. The Teutons captured the important position at Matchin and the village of Jijila, as well as other Russian positions farther west. By these captures the Russians were forced into a small area in the extreme northwest of the Dobrudja, surrounded on three sides by the Danube, while on the remaining side is the enemy.

The loss of Matchin, in particular, was a severe blow to the defense of Braila, as Matchin is situated on high ground commanding both the Danube River and the city of Braila. The Russo-Rumanians made every effort to hold Braila, as it is the eastern buttress of the line of defenses along the Sereth, extending all the way across Rumania, and its capture would not only entail the loss of the town itself, but also Galatz to the north, and what is even more important, would permit the Teutons to turn these Sereth defenses from the east.

In the center, the Russo-Rumanians are also in difficulties. Here the troops of the Central Empires have reached the fortified lines defending the town of Focsani, which is the western buttress of this Sereth line, so that this line is threatened from both the east and the west simultaneously. A piercing of this Sereth line of defenses by the Teutons will mean a general retreat of the Russians, not only in Rumania but in Galicia and southern Volhynia as well, and would, in short, be the worst blow Russia has suffered since the fall of Warsaw. Consequently we may expect to see a fierce and prolonged battle thereon during the next few weeks.

The mountains dividing Transylvania from Moldavia run in a general sense at right angles to the western end of the Rimnik-Sarat-Braila line, and are at intervals traversed by valleys and passes leading from Transylvania into Moldavia. In all of these passes and valleys the Teutons have launched offensives in moving west to east, in aid of the main offensive moving from Rimnik south to north, and during the week all these offensives had, according to Russian admissions, not only passed the mountain wall between Transylvania and Moldavia, but had advanced greater or less distances into Moldavia. In this Rumanian campaign, the Teutons report the capture of some 15,000 of the enemy during the past week, besides artillery and stores.

The British transport, Ivernia, 14,278 tons, formerly the Cunarder of that name but serving as a British transport since the beginning of the war, was torpedoed in the Mediterranean on January 1. At last reports 120 officers and men and thirty-three of the crew were still missing.

Quadrennial of the Federal Council

THE third quadrennial meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America was held December 6–11 last in the Second Baptist Church, St. Louis, with more than 300 delegates in attendance, representing thirty denominations.

In his opening address to the Council, the retiring president, Dean Shailer Mathews of Chicago University, deplored conditions caused by the war, and said that "Jesus as a teacher of practical ethics was again standing before Pilate." Reviewing the work of the Council, he made the statement that the Protestant Christians were trying not so much to agree on doctrine as to cooperate in service. And this was emphasized throughout the sessions by various reports and by numerous speakers as being the fundamental principle of the Council. "It does not deal with matters of doctrine or of polity, but it does attempt to give united emphasis to the testimony of the churches and solidarity and unity to their common activities."

That there are activities of common interest, in which the thirty widely divergent bodies have united, was evident from the reports of the various commissions, created to deal with vital subjects, such as evangelism, social service, country church life, temperance, Christian education, international good will, and similar questions.

In his report to the Council, the general secretary, Dr. Charles S. Macfarland, stated that he had maintained constant conferences and correspondences with commissions and representatives of the constituent bodies, and he found that the relation of the constituent bodies to the Council and to one another had deepened.

The faults and evils of the present system of evangelism were reviewed by the Commission on Evangelism, and recommendations were made for their ultimate cure. A plan was proposed, by which credentials shall be furnished to responsible and capable men only. The Council declared itself in favor of a nation-wide movement of evangelistic endeavor.

The temperance question also received due consideration. Field Secretary Charles Stelzle reported that for years all attempts on the part of the liquor interests to receive the endorsement of the American Federation of Labor had been thwarted, and that he was now certain that this organization had gotten beyond the point where it will ever pass a resolution endorsing the liquor business. This statement was enthusiastically received, as was also that of another speaker, who predicted a saloonless nation by 1920 and a saloonless world by 1930.

In the field of social service a campaign was planned for the conservation of human life, to be conducted by the Council under the direction of Mr. Stelzle.

The Commission on Sunday Observance not only advocated a general half-holiday of one of the six days of the week for physical rest, but also expressed the hope that the time might come when brain and hand toilers shall have for their own use both Saturday and Sunday, one being a day of social recreation and the other a day of worship. The Council, in a resolution, pledged itself to seek the enactment and enforcement of both state and federal laws for the preservation of the Christian Sabbath.

During the discussion of the report on Peace and Arbitration, it was voted to request the President of the United States to call a conference of neutral nations, at the earliest possible date, in the interest of peace.

The committee appointed for the purpose of a common observance of the quadricentennial of the Protestant Reformation reported that it would work conjointly with, and under the direction of, the Lutheran committee in Philadelphia.

The Hours We Don't Forget

The Same Good-Nights, for a Hundred Years, Will be Said Over Dishes of Puffed Grains

The little ones, in countless homes, will tonight float Puffed Grains in their bowls of milk.

Puffed Wheat, Puffed Rice or Corn Puffs.

In times to come, their children's children will do the same, no doubt. For no man can ever make from wheat, rice or corn a better food than these.

The Pinnacle Foods Forever

Hundreds of foods have been made from these grains. But Puffed Grains mark the apex. They can never be excelled.

Prof. Anderson's process takes whole wheat or rice, and makes every atom digestible. Every food cell is exploded. Every granule is fitted to feed. No one can ever go further.

These grains are sealed in guns. For an hour they are rolled in 550 degrees of heat. The moisture in each food cell is changed to steam. The guns are shot and that steam explodes.

There occur in each grain a hundred million explosions—one for every food cell. The grains are puffed to eight times normal size. They come out airy, flaky bubbles, as you see.

No other cooking process breaks more than half of the food cells. None can ever break more. So these must forever remain the sovereign foods produced from wheat. rice or corn.

Puffed Wheat Puffed Rice
and Corn Puffs
Each 15c Except in Far West

These are not mere morning dainties. They are all-day foods. Folks use them like nuts in candy making, or as garnish for ice cream. They serve them as wafers in soup. Between meals they eat them dry. And no other morsels are so ideal for serving in bowls of milk.

Serve a different one each day.

The Quaker Oats Company
Sole Makers

(1452)

The Wonders of Deep Breathing

By O. HARRELL, M.D.

OXYGEN is the basis of life. It is oxygen that gives the blood its sparkling redness. It is oxygen that gives the body its warmth and energy. It is oxygen that makes it possible for the food we eat to be transformed into bone, muscle and tissue. Oxygen is to the body what draught is to the steam boiler. Cut off the draught to the furnace and you will smother the fire. Cut off the free supply of oxygen to the human boiler, through shallow breathing, and you will smother the vital fire, which means that every muscle and nerve cell will become weak, sluggish and paralyzed.

The forthgoing truths are recognized the world over, which is proved by the fact that deep breathing is taught in every school, every institution of physical training, and in the army and navy of every country.

The point is simply this: You cannot run a one horse power engine with a one cat power boiler. Yet this is exactly what most of us try to do. Few persons have strong lungs, and those who have strong lungs do not use them. We are shallow breathers; sufferers from oxygen starvation, and still we wonder why we are depressed, nervous, underweight, and why our vital organs fail in their duty.

Breathe, Breathe, Breathe, if you want Health, Strength and Endurance. Have a competent instructor teach you how to breathe. I recommend especially Paul von Boeckmann, the foremost authority of breathing in America. In order to give wide publicity to his teachings and discoveries, he will send his book, "Super-Conscious Deep Breathing and Nerve Building," free to anyone who will write to him, Studio 30, 110 West Fortieth St., New York. This offer bears with it no obligations, but when you have read the book you will feel that you owe him a debt of gratitude for having unfolded to you the startling facts he presents. It contains more real information than most books sold at a high price.—Advertisement.

Established 1879

for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Catarrh.

Don't fail to use Cresolene for the distressing, and often fatal affections for which it is recommended.

It is a simple, safe, effective and drugless treatment.

Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough and relieves Spasmodic Croup at once.

In asthma it shortens the attack and ensures comfortable repose.

The air carrying the antiseptic vapor inspired with every breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat, and stops the cough, assuring restful nights.

Cresolene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Diphtheria.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 37 years of successful use. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by Druggists

Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your Druggist or from us 10c in stamps.

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO. 62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof, sanitary and durable for outside or inside painting. It is the cement principle applied to paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manufacturer, 107 North Street, Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write today.

SO-EASY DESSERT INEXPENSIVE, EASY TO MAKE AND GOOD. Everybody says so. Helps reduce high cost of living. Recipe, with variations, sent for 12 cents. One dime and stamp.
MRS. M. McQUOWN MATTOON, ILLINOIS

Merry Moments

WHEN the Merry Moments column was started we announced that we could only return contributions when postage was enclosed. Some contributors, evidently forgetting this, have written inquiring as to the non-return of their contributions.

THE RETORT ALPHABETICAL. Mamma had callers one day and left little six-year-old Annie to entertain them for a few moments. One of the ladies said, "Ain't she u-g-l-y?" and Annie replied, "Yes, but I am s-m-a-r-t."

WHAT'S MORE, IT HAS TWO OF THEM. Little Eva lived in Brooklyn. When her father told her he would take her on a trip up the river she was delighted, she had heard so much about the beautiful Hudson. As they were nearing New York on their return, he asked her what she thought of it. She replied, "Why, papa, I think the river is just like any other river, but the sides are pretty."

HALF REMEMBERED. A lady was talking about going into half mourning, and her little daughter listened attentively for a while, and then exclaimed: "Mamma, are any of our relations half dead?"

WITHOUT BENEFIT OF PHYSIC. A physician being sent for, and finding the road scarcely passable, though it was the middle of summer, inquired of his driver, a young country lad, what the people could possibly do for medical assistance in winter. "Oh, sir," replied the lad, "in winter they die a natural death."

OR STORED HEN EGGS. A family in a small town kept a few chickens and often had eggs from their own yard. One morning as the seven-year-old of the family came to breakfast he noticed the eggs on the table, and inquired, "Mamma, are these store eggs or hen eggs?"

THE BOYS WERE KEEN. A boy with a grindstone called to a merchant's clerk, "Any knives or scissors to grind?"

"Don't think we have," replied the clerk facetiously, "but can you sharpen wits?"

"Yes, if you've got any!" was the prompt reply, leaving the interrogator to produce the article.

◆

Who Wins?

MANY thousands of our readers are asking themselves that question these days about the First Bible Picture Study. Nearly two score of diligent workers in the Christian Herald office, who for weeks have been painstakingly checking back the six million answers submitted by the great army of contestants, are excitedly asking themselves that question. The officers and the editors of the Christian Herald are asking, "Who wins?" And it is entirely right that we all shall be interested in learning who wins the concrete rewards of skill which soon are to be awarded in accordance with the rules and the decision of the judges.

So great has been the interest in the contest itself, and so splendid is the patience with which contestants are awaiting the final announcement, that we daily wish it were possible to magnify the cash rewards sufficiently to distribute something to everyone. And yet that is, after all, a foolish idea. The cash awards are indeed desirable and well worth the effort which has been put out to win them. We are even increasing the amount and number of the cash awards in the Second Bible Picture Study which has now begun, because such returns for this kind of effort are deserved. But nevertheless, if the thousands and thousands of letters which we have received are evidence of the opinions of all who took part in the contest, then the answer to the question "Who wins?" is a unanimous and hearty response, "I win!" We greatly doubt if there is a contestant who does not right now feel himself or herself amply rewarded for entering the contest, by the mental and spiritual returns which became their possession through participation in this exercise.

We confidently expect that we shall be able to announce the prize winners of the cash rewards in the February 14th issue, or before. But we do not need to wait to congratulate both them and all the others upon the results of that notable First Bible Picture Study. We look forward to still greater results, still greater benefits, still greater satisfaction to still greater numbers of our readers through the Second Bible Picture Study which begins in this issue.

(These rules fully protected by copyright)

RULES of the CHRISTIAN HERALD SECOND BIBLE PICTURE STUDY

1.—The Bible Picture Study is a competition devised chiefly for the purposes of stimulating popular Bible research and of quickening the observation and judgment of the participants—making them more intimately acquainted with Bible characters and events.

2.—The Bible Picture Study consists of a series of sixty pictures, for each of which the participant is to submit a set of answers consisting of at least one and not more than five verses found in the book called Pearls from the Bible which contains selected Bible verses.

3.—The pictures are being published, one or more at a time, in the Christian Herald.

4.—The book, Pearls from the Bible, is given in the Bible Picture Study Outfit, as explained in Rule 12. Or a participant may make use of the Bible itself, in church, home or library, by obtaining gratuitously from the Christian Herald the references by chapter and verse corresponding to the official and standard list of verses conveniently arranged in Pearls from the Bible.

5.—Rewards aggregating $5,628.00 will be paid by The Christian Herald to 1000 participants in the Bible Picture Study who submit the most complete list of verses best fitted to the pictures. The announced list of rewards will be awarded, in order, to the highest ranking participants. In the event of a tie, each tying participant will receive the full reward tied for.

6.—The Bible Picture Study is open to everybody, everywhere, except employees of the Christian Herald and other publishers announcing the Study, and members of their immediate families. One participant may send in as many as three separate sets of verses, but each set will be judged by itself, and only one set submitted by any person (that person's best set) may receive a reward. Likewise, only one reward will be awarded in one household at one address, although all members of the household (at one address) may each send in one, two or three sets of verses.

7.—Rank or merit will be accorded to participants primarily according to which set of verses contains the greatest number of best verses for the pictures. If there should be an equality between two or more participants on this basic requirement, then the award will be made according to superiority in the following requirements, each being necessary only in case there is an equality on the preceding point: (a) the least number of incorrect—the verses which are not best—answers; (b) the highest relative position of the participant's correct verses in the aggregate among the participant's complete set of answers, as, when three verses are given by a participant for one picture the correct verse is on top rather than in the position of second or third choice among the answers for that picture; (c) the least number of words in the whole set of verses, and (d) the least number of letters in the complete set of verses.

8.—The word "best" will be interpreted to mean "that which excels or surpasses in the matter of being a fitting text for a particular picture." The verse should fit, or suit, or be applicable to the picture as completely and specifically as possible. What is seen in the picture should correspond with the words of the verse supplied, there being no requirement of historical (or doctrinal) accuracy. The participant will see a picture; let him (or her) describe what is visible in the picture, using some Scriptural quotation; this to be a verse out of Pearls from the Bible. The verse may describe only part of the picture; or the picture may illustrate only a part of the verse. The text which matches the picture the closest, according to the foregoing explanation, will be recorded as the best.

9.—If two or more verses submitted for any picture should be found by the Judges to be equally more fitting than the other verses which have been submitted for that picture, then each of such two or more equally superior verses will be recorded jointly, as a unit, as "best" defined in Rule 8.

10.—A Committee of Judges, consisting of disinterested persons of recognized honor and capability, will judge the fitness of verses submitted for the pictures and select the best, according to the Rules. Their decision will be final.

11.—The participant may submit the verses in the prepared set of forms known as the Answer Book, which is given as explained in Rule 12. Otherwise, each answer (verse) to every picture must be submitted on a separate answer form, a sheet of paper about 5 x 8 inches in size, on the upper part of which the participant has made by pen or pencil a fair facsimile or copy of the particular picture, and on the lower part of which he or she has written one verse for the picture, and name and address. If two or more answers (verses) are submitted for one picture, the verse which the participant considers the best is to be placed on top and the others in order below, the figure one in parentheses, thus (1), to be marked on the left of the participant's verse, the figure two (2) in the same manner for the next best and so on.

12.—The Christian Herald Second Bible Picture Study will have its final pictures in the issue of Christian Herald of May 30, 1917, and participants may start any time, prior to the last date for submitting sets of answers as mentioned below. All sets of answers (verses) must either reach the office of The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York City, by 3 P.M. of June 27, 1917, or the wrapper containing the set must bear a postmark not later than that date, or there must be other conclusive evidence of delivery at a post office or express office in time, and then the Answer Book (or list) must be delivered as above not later than one week thereafter. Every Answer Book (or list) is to be submitted in the name of and with the correct address of the person who did the studying. Verses may be written in ink, or by pencil, or by typewriter. The participant must keep a duplicate of his or her set of verses or identifying data, so that verification can be established if found essential. Participants are allowed to receive casual, gratuitous aid from relatives, teachers, ministers, or other friends, but shall not buy, or sell, or barter information. Any infraction of the Rules may subject the entry to debarment; and The Christian Herald may reject any entry upon receiving convincing evidence of unfairness. As soon as practicable, after the conclusion of the Bible Picture Study, the Committee of Judges will make a full report, which will be published with names of winners. The Bible Picture Study Outfit consists of Pearls from the Bible and Answer Book; also pictures that have been already published, if these be desired. The possession of the Outfit is not an obligation, but a convenience. The Outfit is obtainable in connection with subscription as separately announced.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, NEW YORK, N. Y.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

All Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

PEACE! The word rings through the press, echoes from the hearts of millions, sways the impulses of rulers, and glows as a light of hope before the men facing death in the trenches. Ever since the monster of war gripped the peoples of Europe the world has been praying for peace. Many times the Prayer League has been asked to join in an assault by faith upon the throne of mercy. Again this week letters have come asking us to pray for peace. We can be sure that this prayer will be answered in God's own good time. We cannot tell when that will be, but we may and should keep on praying.

A most effective prayer for peace was given to the world by the Rev. Walter Rauschenbusch when the war was still young. It is as follows:

"O Lord, since first the blood of Abel cried to thee from the ground that drank it, this earth of thine has been defiled with the blood of man shed by his brother's hand, and the centuries sob with the ceaseless horror of war. Ever the pride of kings and the covetousness of the strong have driven peaceful nations to slaughter. Ever the songs of the past and the pomp of armies have been used to inflame the passions of the people. Our spirit cries out to thee in revolt against it, and we know that our righteous anger is answered by thy holy wrath.

"Break thou the spell of the enchantments that make the nations drunk with the lust of battle and that draw them on as willing tools of death. Grant us a quiet and steadfast mind when our own nation clamors for vengeance or aggression. Strengthen our sense of justice and our regard for the equal worth of other peoples and races. Grant to the rulers of nations faith in the possibility of peace through justice, and grant to the common people a new and stern enthusiasm for the cause of peace. . . .

"O thou strong Father of all nations, draw all thy great family together with an increasing sense of our common blood and destiny, that peace may come on earth at last, and thy sun shed its light rejoicing on a holy brotherhood of peoples."

Dr. W. H. F. links prayer for peace with prayer for world-wide spiritual victory; and he asks, especially: Prayer for the bills pending in Congress which, if passed, will so greatly advance the cause of temperance, and Prayer for the missionaries of the Cross that they may be strengthened for their work and effectively supported by those at home. He says, "Let us pray and work for a world-wide revival."

M. W. M. asks prayer that God may hasten the coming of his Kingdom through the world crisis now upon us.

F. F. R. of Jacksonville, N. C., comes to us sadly in need. Ill and out of work, with a sick wife and four children, the youngest five and the oldest ten, he has been "sold out" for debt and unpaid rent and thrown out into the street with his family. With no shelter, or food and inadequate clothing, and only now recovering from an accident which cost him his work, he asks prayer for help.

A Reader tells of the salvation from drink of a young traveling salesman for whom prayers were asked. He has turned "square around" and has kept straight for four months. She asks prayer that he may be strengthened and kept from falling. She asks prayer also for God's help for a young girl who, with a sick mother to support, is out of work and greatly worried.

Mrs. M. J. H. praises God for sparing, in answer to prayer, the life of a friend from whom she had been estranged by the falsehoods of a third party and with whom she has now become reconciled. She says: "God has healed all my sorrow and given me peace and the manifestation of his holy presence." She asks prayer for the conversion of her friend, who, though spared from immediate death, is gripped by an incurable disease.

Brother S. S. H., recently appointed to a new charge in a "rum-soaked" town where the church has been losing ground through internal friction, asks us to "plead with God that he may revive the members and save many souls." Special services were begun on December 31.

E. A. M. sends $40 for the "down and outs" of the Bowery Mission and asks prayer that he may be able to meet a serious financial crisis which confronts him.

The Prayer League has received three letters addressed to Mrs. A. C. W., whose appeal for help in her loneliness was published a few weeks ago. The address has been mislaid. If Mrs. A. C. W. will send her address again these letters will be forwarded. Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Emporium, Pa.; Utica, Ohio; Hudson, Iowa; Tuscola, Ill.; Orosi, Calif.; Libertytown, Md. (that many may be saved during revival); Tallman, Mich. (that many may be saved during revival); Pittsburg, Pa. (that state may go dry); Tontogony, Ohio (that the saloons in Ohio may be closed forever); Louisville, Ky. (pray for world-wide revival, also for the success of prohibition); Compton, Calif. (pray for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the Methodist Church); Cortland, N. Y. (asks prayer for meetings here); Elizabethtown, Pa. (pray for a revival of religion in the Masonic Home here); Cascade, Iowa (in the Presbyterian Church); Suffield, Conn. (that we may have an awakening in our church and many souls saved); Mount Carmel, Pa. (that the members of the United Brethren Church may be revived and many souls saved during meetings); Hedgesville, Mont. (that Montana may be voted dry).

Mrs. O. A. P. and Mrs. L. A. ask prayer that their sons' minds may be restored; M. D. J., that child's mind may be strengthened; R. V. M. asks prayer that a woman's mind may be restored and a pleasant home provided for her; seven friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for themselves, friends and relatives.

Mrs. C. A. B. asks prayer that daughter's and own sight may be strengthened; T. B. M. and Mrs. J. M. D. ask prayer that their sight may be strengthened; four friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for friends or relatives.

Thirty-one friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

A reader asks prayer that son may be cured of the liquor habit; four, that other friends or relatives may be delivered from this habit.

Fifteen parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; nine wives, their husbands, including H. A., that husband may be saved and return home; thirty, for other relatives or friends.

Six readers ask prayer for special blessing for others.

Fifty-two ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including Mrs. M. A. V., that pastor may be restored to health and strength; another, W. H. F., that missionaries may be restored to health and strength; another, C. J. S., that sister-in-law may pass safely through an operation and have health restored. Thirty-three friends ask prayer for healing for themselves; six friends, for restoration of hearing for themselves or others.

Eleven friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial matters, including Mrs. M. A. V., that the way may be opened for the Baptists of Cleveland to build a new church.

Thirty-one friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

Mrs. C. A. B., Montverde, Fla.; C. T., Kendall, Wash.; Mrs. H. G., Columbus, Ohio; Mrs. M. V. S., Denison, Texas; Mrs. G. W. S., N. Sandusky, Ohio; H. K. D., North Topeka, Kan.; Mrs. J. C. J., Medical Lake, Wash.; Mrs. M. E. W., Topeka, Kan.; J. T. L., Merrimacport, Mass.; J. F. W., Harlan, Iowa.

THE Prayer League Blue Book, "The Miracle of Answered Prayer," by Rev. J. G. Hallimond, is now ready and can be procured by sending 75 cents to the Christian Herald Book Department. A copy of this wonderfully helpful and inspiring book should be in the hands of every member of the Prayer League. They will find it especially helpful.

This Important Fruit
—A Need in Every Lunch Box

Dr. L. Emmett Holt, the famous authority, writes as follows in his book, "The Care and Feeding of Children":

"Some fruit should be given to most healthy children every day. . . . Oranges baked apples and stewed prunes are most to be depended upon . . . The best fruit juice is that of the Orange, which should be fresh and sweet."

Remember these facts; for no other subject today is more important than proper food. Adults as well as little folks need Oranges every day.

Sunkist

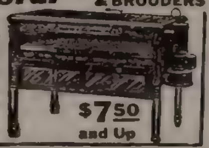
Uniformly Good Oranges

Sunkist are uniformly good oranges—a year-'round fresh fruit for everybody's table. They are sold in varying sizes at varying prices.

Boston Cooking School Recipes
Send for free illustrated book containing 200 Orange and Lemon recipes by the authors of famous Boston Cook Book, giving your dealer's name and address.

CALIFORNIA FRUIT GROWERS EXCHANGE
A Co-operative, Non-profit Organization of 8000 Growers
Dept. M-31, Los Angeles, Cal. (587)

"Oranges for Health"



Join Our MONEY-MAKERS with "Successful" INCUBATORS & BROODERS

Twenty-three years leadership. Poultry lessons free to every buyer. Booklet, "How to Raise 48 out of 50 Chicks"—10c. Catalog FREE. Make green, egg-making feed in "Successful" Grain Sprouters.
DES MOINES INCUBATOR CO.
389 Second St. Des Moines, Ia.

$7.50 and Up

RAISE GUINEA PIGS

We buy all you raise. Splendid money making opportunity. Big demand—thousands needed weekly. Easy to raise—inexpensive to house, feed, keep. Pay better than poultry or squabs. Particulars, contract, booklet how to raise free.
CAVIES DISTRIBUTING CO., 719 W. 74th St., Kansas City, Mo.

COUGHING, Tickling in Throat, and Hoarseness Relieved by

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

NEW 10c BOX FITS THE POCKET
Regular Sizes 25c. 50c. $1. At Druggists.
JOHN I. BROWN & SON. Boston, Mass.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions" and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

This House $997

Guaranteed Prices—No Extras—$300 Up

Buy your new home direct from the mill. Save big money! Highest quality materials—grades standard. Local references given on request. We serve over 100,000 customers. Prices include everything. Ready-cut or not Ready-cut; you decide which way you want to buy. Our free plan book, "Gordon-Van Tine Homes" is the only book published showing both methods. Every plan built hundreds of times and proven. Convenience ideas appealing to women. Book shows what prices include. See before ordering—send coupon—FREE!

Gordon-Van Tine Co.

Satisfaction Guaranteed or Money Back
6142 Case St., Davenport, Iowa
Established Half a Century

2151
GORDON-VAN TINE CO., 6142 Case St., Davenport, Ia. Please send me Free the books checked below:
☐ Gordon-Van Tine Home Plans
☐ Garages
☐ Summer Cottages
☐ Greenhouse and Hot Bed for the Home Grower
I am particularly interested in..
Name...Street No..........................
City...State..............................

The Reorganization of Methodism

Continued from page 57

Commission would remain in session about ten days. The adjournment, however, came at 1.15 P.M. on Tuesday afternoon, January 2. It was not on the program that the final word should be spoken. The Second Christmas Conference was primarily for prayer, conversation, the "feeling" about for some common basis of reorganization. Not a harsh word was spoken. No breach of parliamentary or brotherly courtesy occurred even while the gravest points of disagreement were under discussion. The points of agreement were amazingly numerous.

The uppermost themes were the General Conference, Jurisdictional Conferences, the Judicial Council, reorganization of property and benevolent interests, and the ever-present colored question. Even upon this much-to-be-feared subject the conversations were delightfully refreshing. It is to be noted that two able and devout colored men, one a minister and the other a layman, are numbered among the commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The present status of the question of union is best shown in the official statement of the joint commission as follows:

"To the Ministers and Members of the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South:

"We send you greetings in the name of our common Lord.

"Upon our coming together in the city of Baltimore, we had before us the report of the joint commission adopted at Chattanooga in 1910, the report adopted by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Oklahoma City in 1914, and the report adopted by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Saratoga Springs in 1916.

"It was agreed that the fundamental and vital issues between us were as follows:

"The general conference and its powers.

"The jurisdictional conferences, their number and their powers.

"The status of the colored membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the reorganized church.

"It was believed that if agreement should be reached touching the three items mentioned above, with time and patience and with the help of the Holy Spirit, the details of a plan for the unification of Methodism could be worked out.

"We are happy to be able to report that we find ourselves in general agreement concerning many of the questions involved. However, in view of the magnitude of these questions it was manifestly impossible for us to reach final conclusions. For further consideration, therefore, we have referred these subjects to strong committees, with instructions to present a detailed report at a session of the joint commission to be held on June 27 at a place to be designated."

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag, provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

B. S., Winsted, Conn. In our Bible class the question is asked: "What is the greatest thing to look forward to in 1917?" Many suggestions present themselves. One might reply without much hesitation, "world-peace"; another would say, "Larger opportunities for national and individual service"; a third, "Universal Recognition of the Divine Sovereignty." It occurred to me that possibly some of the big Christian Herald Family might be able to throw light on this subject, which has so many striking aspects. We will await with interest anything you may print in the Mail-Bag.

Our correspondent has already furnished some excellent suggestions. We gladly place the questions before our readers. It certainly throws open a wide field for consideration, and we hope that many will reply. Answers should be brief.

Reader, Oklahoma. The number or mark of the Beast mentioned in Rev. 13 : 18 has been variously interpreted. By some early writers it has been supposed to have referred to the branding of the Jews by Antiochus Epiphanes; by others it is interpreted as meaning the number of Antichrist, and still others find in it a type of the false prophet or spiritual leader who perverts spiritual knowledge to Satanic ends. There is no authority, however, for stating that it has any reference to the changed Sabbath.

J. R. H., Alliance, Ohio, and other readers. We have read the statement on several occasions that the human body, in the course of seven years, undergoes a complete change. It is undoubtedly true that the skin and tissues are constantly changing. A technical explanation of this process could only be given by one who has specialized on the subject.

C. A. O., Chicago. The mechanism of a submarine is too complicated for description in the Mail-Bag. Write to the Scientific American or to the Engineering and Mining Journal, New York City.

Rev. Mr. Ryan, Salina, Kan., writes: "I want to express my appreciation of the article, 'The Second Coming of Christ,' by Rev. James M. Gray. It is the best and most concise and to the point of anything I have ever seen on the subject. I verily believe it, and from the rapidity with which everything seems to be moving, I am inclined to think that that event is not far away. I wish to say further that I can't help but think that it is, and ought to be, the duty of the whole Christian world to awake on this subject. We ought to keep abreast of the things that are to take place in this world-life, especially when God has taken the pains to tell us. Just think what estimate is placed on those who were looking for and expecting his first coming, for instance, the Wise Men, the Shepherds, old Simeon, Zacharias, Mary, etc. And on the other hand, what kind of estimate does the world (I mean, of Christian believers) place on those who rejected him?"

We are receiving many letters from readers who are deeply interested in Professor Gray's articles that have already appeared. His new series of contributions on "The Mountain Peaks of Prophecy," we feel assured, will be read with still greater satisfaction and profit. We are living in a time in which Christians should take a new and stronger interest in all that relates to the fulfilment of the great prophecies, and Professor Gray in his coming articles will shed a flood of light on the whole subject.

Earnest Seeker, Bringhurst, Ind. 1. The words "forgive us our trespasses" in the Lord's Prayer—a form which is occasionally used—is simply a variant, based on Luke 11 : 4, the form in Matt 6 : 12, however, being that most widely followed. 2. It is not an uncommon thing to have the young people's meeting immediately preceding the regular church service. It should not be so prolonged as to interfere with attendance at the service, however. Especially in rural districts, where many come from a distance, the young people's meeting should be conducted according to a well-prepared program, so that it cannot drag and become tedious. A leader of experience, with the true evangelical spirit, will know how to make the best use of the time. There are few things more distressing than to sit through a dull meeting, which leaves you in no mood to enjoy the sermon. We are sending your letter to Frank L. Brown, who will probably write you.

Mrs. L. A. V., Sparrowbush, N. Y. The scribes and scholars of the early church preserved and copied the oldest manuscripts. Until the time of Luther, however, the Bible was a book forbidden to the masses, and not until the translation into German and English was it accessible to any but the clergy.

Mrs. D. D. I., Altoona, Pa. There are no reliable data upon which to base an estimate of the world's population in the first century A.D., owing to the comparatively small area in which any census was taken. Doubtless the census of early times was a very limited affair, and represented only those nations that had attained a certain degree of civilization, probably half the world being in a state of barbarism, and hence neglected. Thus the population of the globe at the time of Augustus Cæsar was estimated at 54,000,000, which was probably less than two-thirds of the real population. A world census, such as that of our day, is something the ancients could never have attempted. It would have been impracticable, owing to the primitive means of travel and communication. According to the latest world census, the total population of the globe is placed at 1,628,899,000 (estimated). Of these 564,510,000 are nominally Christians. This is a wonderful showing, when it is remembered that in A.D. 34 the whole Christian body consisted of some hundred and twenty persons (see Acts 1 : 15).

A. B., San Francisco, Calif. 1. No satisfactory data on the subject. 2. The passage in Scripture you have in mind is the parable of the rich man and Lazarus. See Luke 16 : 19-25. 3. They are probably the worthies referred to in Hebrews 11, whose triumphs through faith are recalled. The word "witnesses" (Heb. 12 : 1) has two meanings, and it is not certain which of the two the writer of the epistle had in his mind. A witness may be a spectator, or he may be one who testifies, as in a court of justice. If the word in this passage is used in the former sense, it implies that departed and glorified saints are observing the trials and victories of the Christian on earth. If the word refers to a testifier, it means that the Christian has good reason for making the effort mentioned in the passage, because of the testimony of the Old Testament saints cited in the previous chapter.

S. E. L., Red Oak, Va. The seer in Rev. 1 : 11 was told to write what he saw in a book and to send it to the Seven Churches in Asia. The churches represented the universal church in all countries and ages. How the text was sent to these churches is problematic, but most likely it was carried, as were the other writings of the apostles, by some disciple or pupil. The best authority places the time of the writing of John's Epistles at A.D. 92 and of the Revelation at A.D. 95. John was then a very old man, and it is not likely that he did any writing after that date. If he did, there is no record of it.

H. B., Centerville, Ala. The prohibition against women taking part in church activities was directed specifically against a certain church, which he had founded and of which he was writing (I Cor. 14 : 34). It was not at all general in tone or meaning, and it is a mistake and a grievous injustice to apply it to women in general. They have borne too noble and useful a part in the progress of the Christian religion to be subjected to needless criticism that could only be based on a misunderstanding of the actual conditions in the Corinthian church which rendered Paul's message necessary. There are many instances of godly women in both the Old Testament and New Testament. The ministry of Jesus was to both men and women equally. Many of his most devoted followers were women. They were the last to comfort him on the way to Golgotha, the first to visit his tomb, and the first to whom he appeared at his resurrection. So why should good women today be excluded from taking part in any Christian activity?

Mrs. George W. Coleman, president of the Massachusetts Council for Patriotic Service, writes: "As the leading article in the Christian Herald for November 1, I find a report of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church held in St. Louis in October. In the summary of the address of Bishop Jones of Utah, I find the statement that 'polygamy has practically been abandoned.' I regret that the quoted statement has already found wide publicity through the columns of the Christian Herald, and am writing to call your attention to evidence which contradicts the utterance of Bishop Jones. Fourteen years after the issuance of the manifesto, polygamy is claimed by the president of the Mormon Church to be the 'most vital principle of the Gospel,' while, twenty-two years after the manifesto, one of the leading theological books by the Deseret Publishing House proclaims that Christianity is 'without foundation' if plural marriage is unlawful. If you reply that these quotations relate to the belief in polygamy only and have no necessary relation to the practice of it at the present day, allow me to call your attention to the larger leaflet enclosed and its story of the Geddes-Eccles case. An editorial printed by the New York Times at the time the verdict in the Geddes-Eccles case was given is evidence that the daily press is not blind to the continued practice of polygamy." That polygamy is still practiced by the Mormons is well understood. Mrs. Coleman's letter shows that the women of America, at least, are not deceived by the semblance of obedience to law.

Reader, Newcastle, Pa., apropos of our recent discussion of Christian family training, writes: "I would answer to the young mother as to how to conduct family worship and teach our children to be Christians. I will just give you an outline as to how we taught our children. When we were married, husband and I were both earnest Christians. As to family worship, that was the most natural thing to follow. As the little ones came into our home they were early taught about Jesus and his love for little children, and to pray at mother's knee and to go to Sabbath school and church. They loved to go to all the meetings and we taught them to think for themselves, and to take part in the worship, repeat verses and sing. As each one came along about ten years of age, they gave their hearts to Jesus without urging. Today they are all grown up and married and have Christian homes, and are trying to raise their children after the same manner. They are all workers, and some of them hard workers, in the vineyard of the Lord. One is a preacher and others are in other departments of church work."

Miss E. A. H., Germantown, Pa. I enclose $2 for the War Widows and Orphans fund. I thank God for the splendid work you are doing in this time of so much need, and for the fearlessness of the Christian Herald on all questions of right. I cannot help wondering why you have not as yet "taken up the cudgels" for the Quakers of England. I am a staunch Presbyterian, but I believe in fair play, and to hear how the Quakers are being tortured by fellow Christians for being true to their principles makes me very indignant. Why do our daily papers never notice it!

Our Quaker friends are entitled to our admiration for their courageous adherence to principle. The Christian Herald has already referred to the manner in which they are being persecuted. Not only the Quakers, but individual Christians of other denominations who hold that the whole spirit of Christianity is opposed to war, and who have objected on conscientious grounds to personal military service, have been punished with imprisonment.

Mrs. M. A. B., Norton, Mass. You have probably been misinformed, or have misunderstood the matter. The accepted doctrine of the church in question is clear and explicit, and thoroughly in line with all the orthodox Christian churches. The articles setting forth their belief include full acceptance of the doctrines of the Trinity, the divinity of Jesus and his office and mission as Redeemer, the atonement, the resurrection, justification by faith, and the good works that are the fruit of regeneration.

I. D. L., Smuggler, Colo. So much has been written anent the identity of "the Beast" (Rev. 13 : 18) that no one can say with authority what the best explanation is. It is held by some to be identical with the Beast described in Daniel 7 : 7. It is found in Revelation in a series of forms, is sometimes identified with a persecuting church and sometimes with the civil power. Little is gained by speculating on the question of identity. In God's good time we shall know all.

A. J. T., Lake City, Iowa. Is there a conflict of opinion between Matt. 5 : 32 and I Cor. 7 : 9–13?

There is nothing in Paul's statement against the teaching of Matt. 5 : 32, except perhaps by a strained construction to the effect that Paul would seem to sanction remarriage of the innocent party in case of wilful desertion. The question is a large one and open to serious discussion, and consequently to honest disagreement. Like many other questions, it is a matter for the individual conscience and opinion.

◆

ANY reader knowing the address of Mrs. Katie Welch will do a favor by sending it to her sister, Mrs. John Braye, Petersburg, Neb. Also, Charles Dougherty, Louisiana, Mont., will be grateful for the address of his brother, W. B. Dougherty, electrician.

You Can Be So Well

Don't you know, ill health or chronic ailments, in nine out of every ten cases, are due to improper food, poor circulation, insufficient exercise, incorrect breathing, incorrect poise and restless slumber!

I give exercises that strengthen the impaired organs.

Remove those unnatural conditions and your ailments vanish.

This may surprise you, but I am doing it daily; I have done it for eighty thousand women.

No Drugs or Medicines

You follow my directions in your room.

Are you too thin or too fat?

You can weigh exactly what you should.

Medical magazines advertise my work; leading doctors approve it; their wives are my pupils.

Regain Health, Poise and Cheerful Spirits. You can. Tell me your faults in health or figure. I will help you. And I want to, so much. I will respect your confidence. Write for my Free Booklet No. 21.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES For 50 yrs. Standard Relief for Asthma (Inhalation) All Druggists; or by mail, 35c.

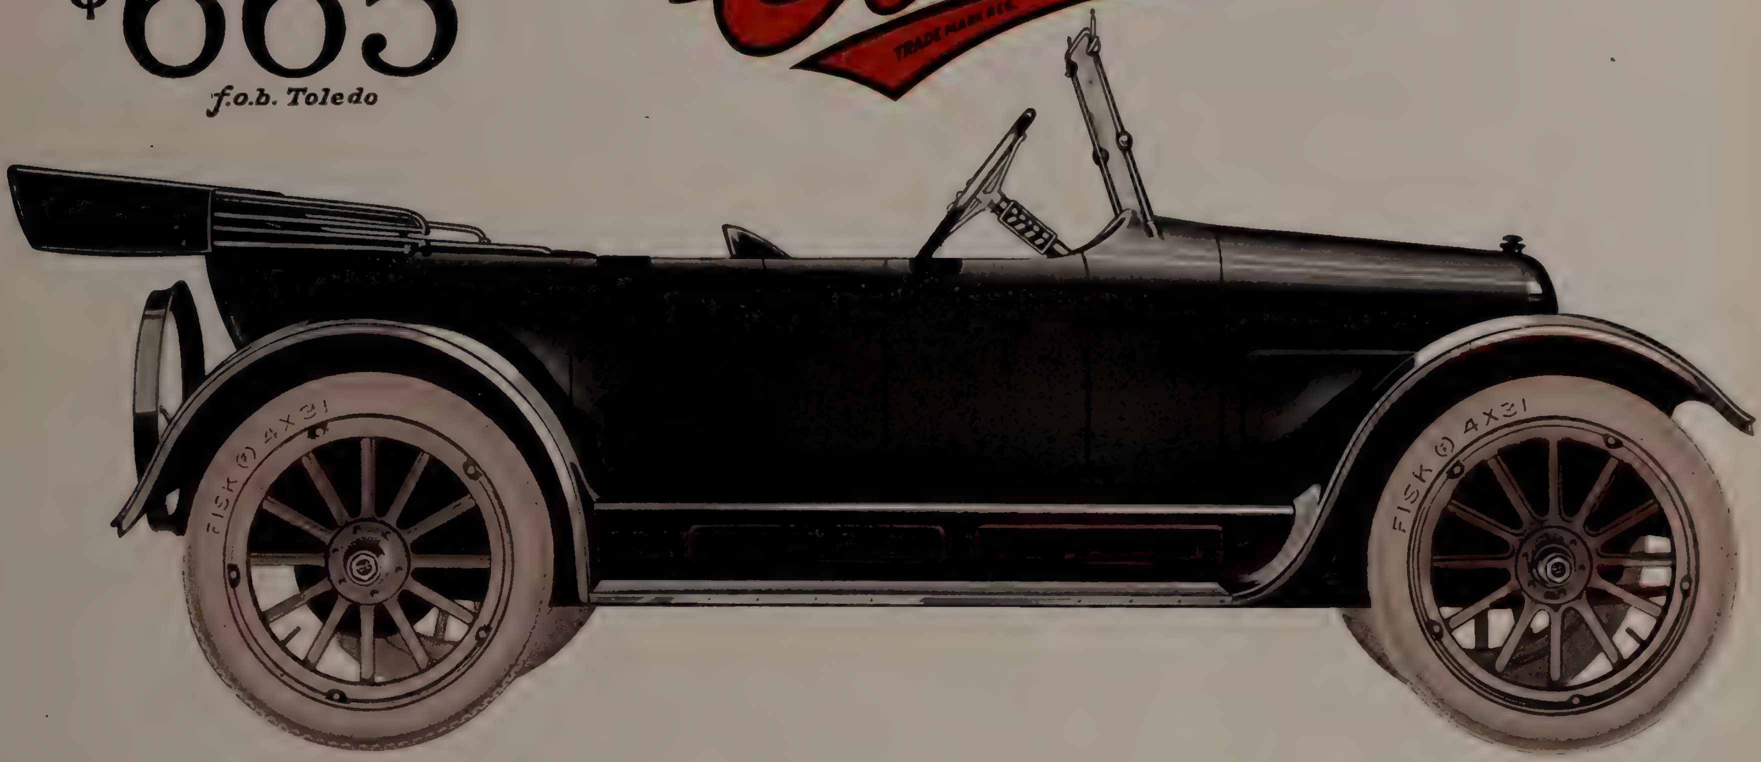
STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.

The Light Four
5 Passenger Touring
$665
f.o.b. Toledo

Overland
TRADE MARK REG.



A Complete Line of Automobiles All New Values

From your point of view this announcement is most important.

For herein we set forth the achievement toward which this company has aimed for the last eight years.

This achievement in a word is the completion of our gigantic organization to a point where we could make and market a complete line of automobiles under one head.

One executive organization,
—one factory management,
—one purchasing unit,
—one sales expense,
—one group of dealers,
plan, produce and sell the entire line.

Buying power is concentrated. Costs are distributed over all these cars. The savings are tremendous.

As a result we are producing cars of exceptional quality—and marketing them at unusually low prices.

Every car is built to a rigid standard of performance, comfort and appearance.

The new Light Four at $665 is a striking example.

It has good style—built low with harmonious and full sweeping body lines. It is a beautiful car in every sense of the word.

The motor is powerful, quiet and of sturdy construction. The turning radius is short. The car has a quick acceleration and is built to tour safely and comfortably from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

And with all these good qualities it rides beautifully. The soft cushions, the long resilient cantilever rear springs, the large tires (31 x 4) and the proper balance in construction absorb all types of jolts—the choppy cobblestone, the cuppy macadam and the heavy ruts and thank-you-ma'ams of American highways.

Yet this is but one of the new Willys-Overland values.

Never before have the economies of vast production been available for buyers of every class of car.

And the Overland Policy of greater production, higher quality, lower price is exemplified in every model and type.

Catalogs on request. Please address Dept. 894

The Willys-Overland Co., Toledo, Ohio

Manufacturers of Willys-Knight and Overland Automobiles and Light Commercial Cars
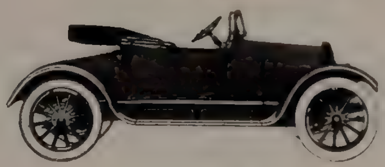
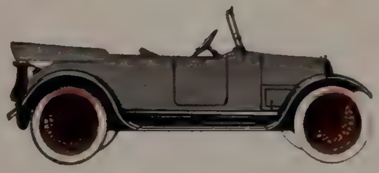
"Made in U. S. A."

Light Four
Two Passenger Roadster
104 in. wheelbase
$650

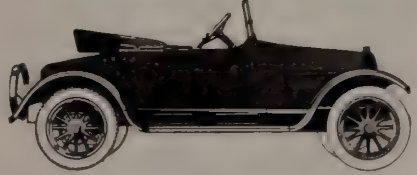


Country Club
Four seater Sport Model
104 in. wheelbase
$750



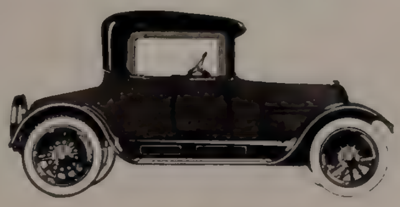
Big Four Roadster
112 in. wheelbase
$835

Light Six Roadster
116 in. wheelbase
$970



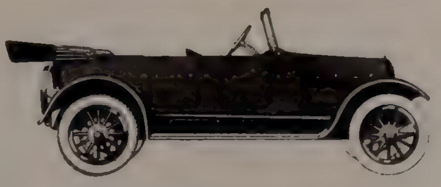
Big Four Coupé
112 in. wheelbase
$1250

Light Six Coupé
116 in. wheelbase
$1385



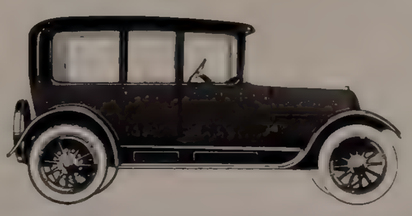
Big Four Touring
112 in. wheelbase
$850

Light Six Touring,
116 in. wheelbase
$985



Big Four Sedan
112 in. wheelbase
$1450

Light Six Sedan,
116 in. wheelbase
$1585



All prices f. o. b. Toledo

Columbia
Columbia Records
TRADE MARK
Note the Notes

The Columbia Grafonola

"The Stage of the World"

YOU have the stage of the world in your home if you own a Columbia Grafonola and Columbia Records.

A vaster company of greater artists than the greatest stage in the world possesses is at your direction every day, with a greater and infinitely more varied repertoire than any one stage ever presented.

Orchestral, operatic, instrumental music—sombre or joyous, classic or light; whatever you desire, whatever your mood, whichever great artist you want to hear—your wish is reality, as soon as expressed.

It is reality, nothing less; for "The Stage of the World" presents the artists themselves to you—in voice and playing, in temperament, in art and personality. "Hearing is Believing"—and you can hear today at the nearest Columbia dealer's.

Columbia Grafonola
Price $150
Prices in Canada plus duty

New Columbia Records on sale the 20th of every month

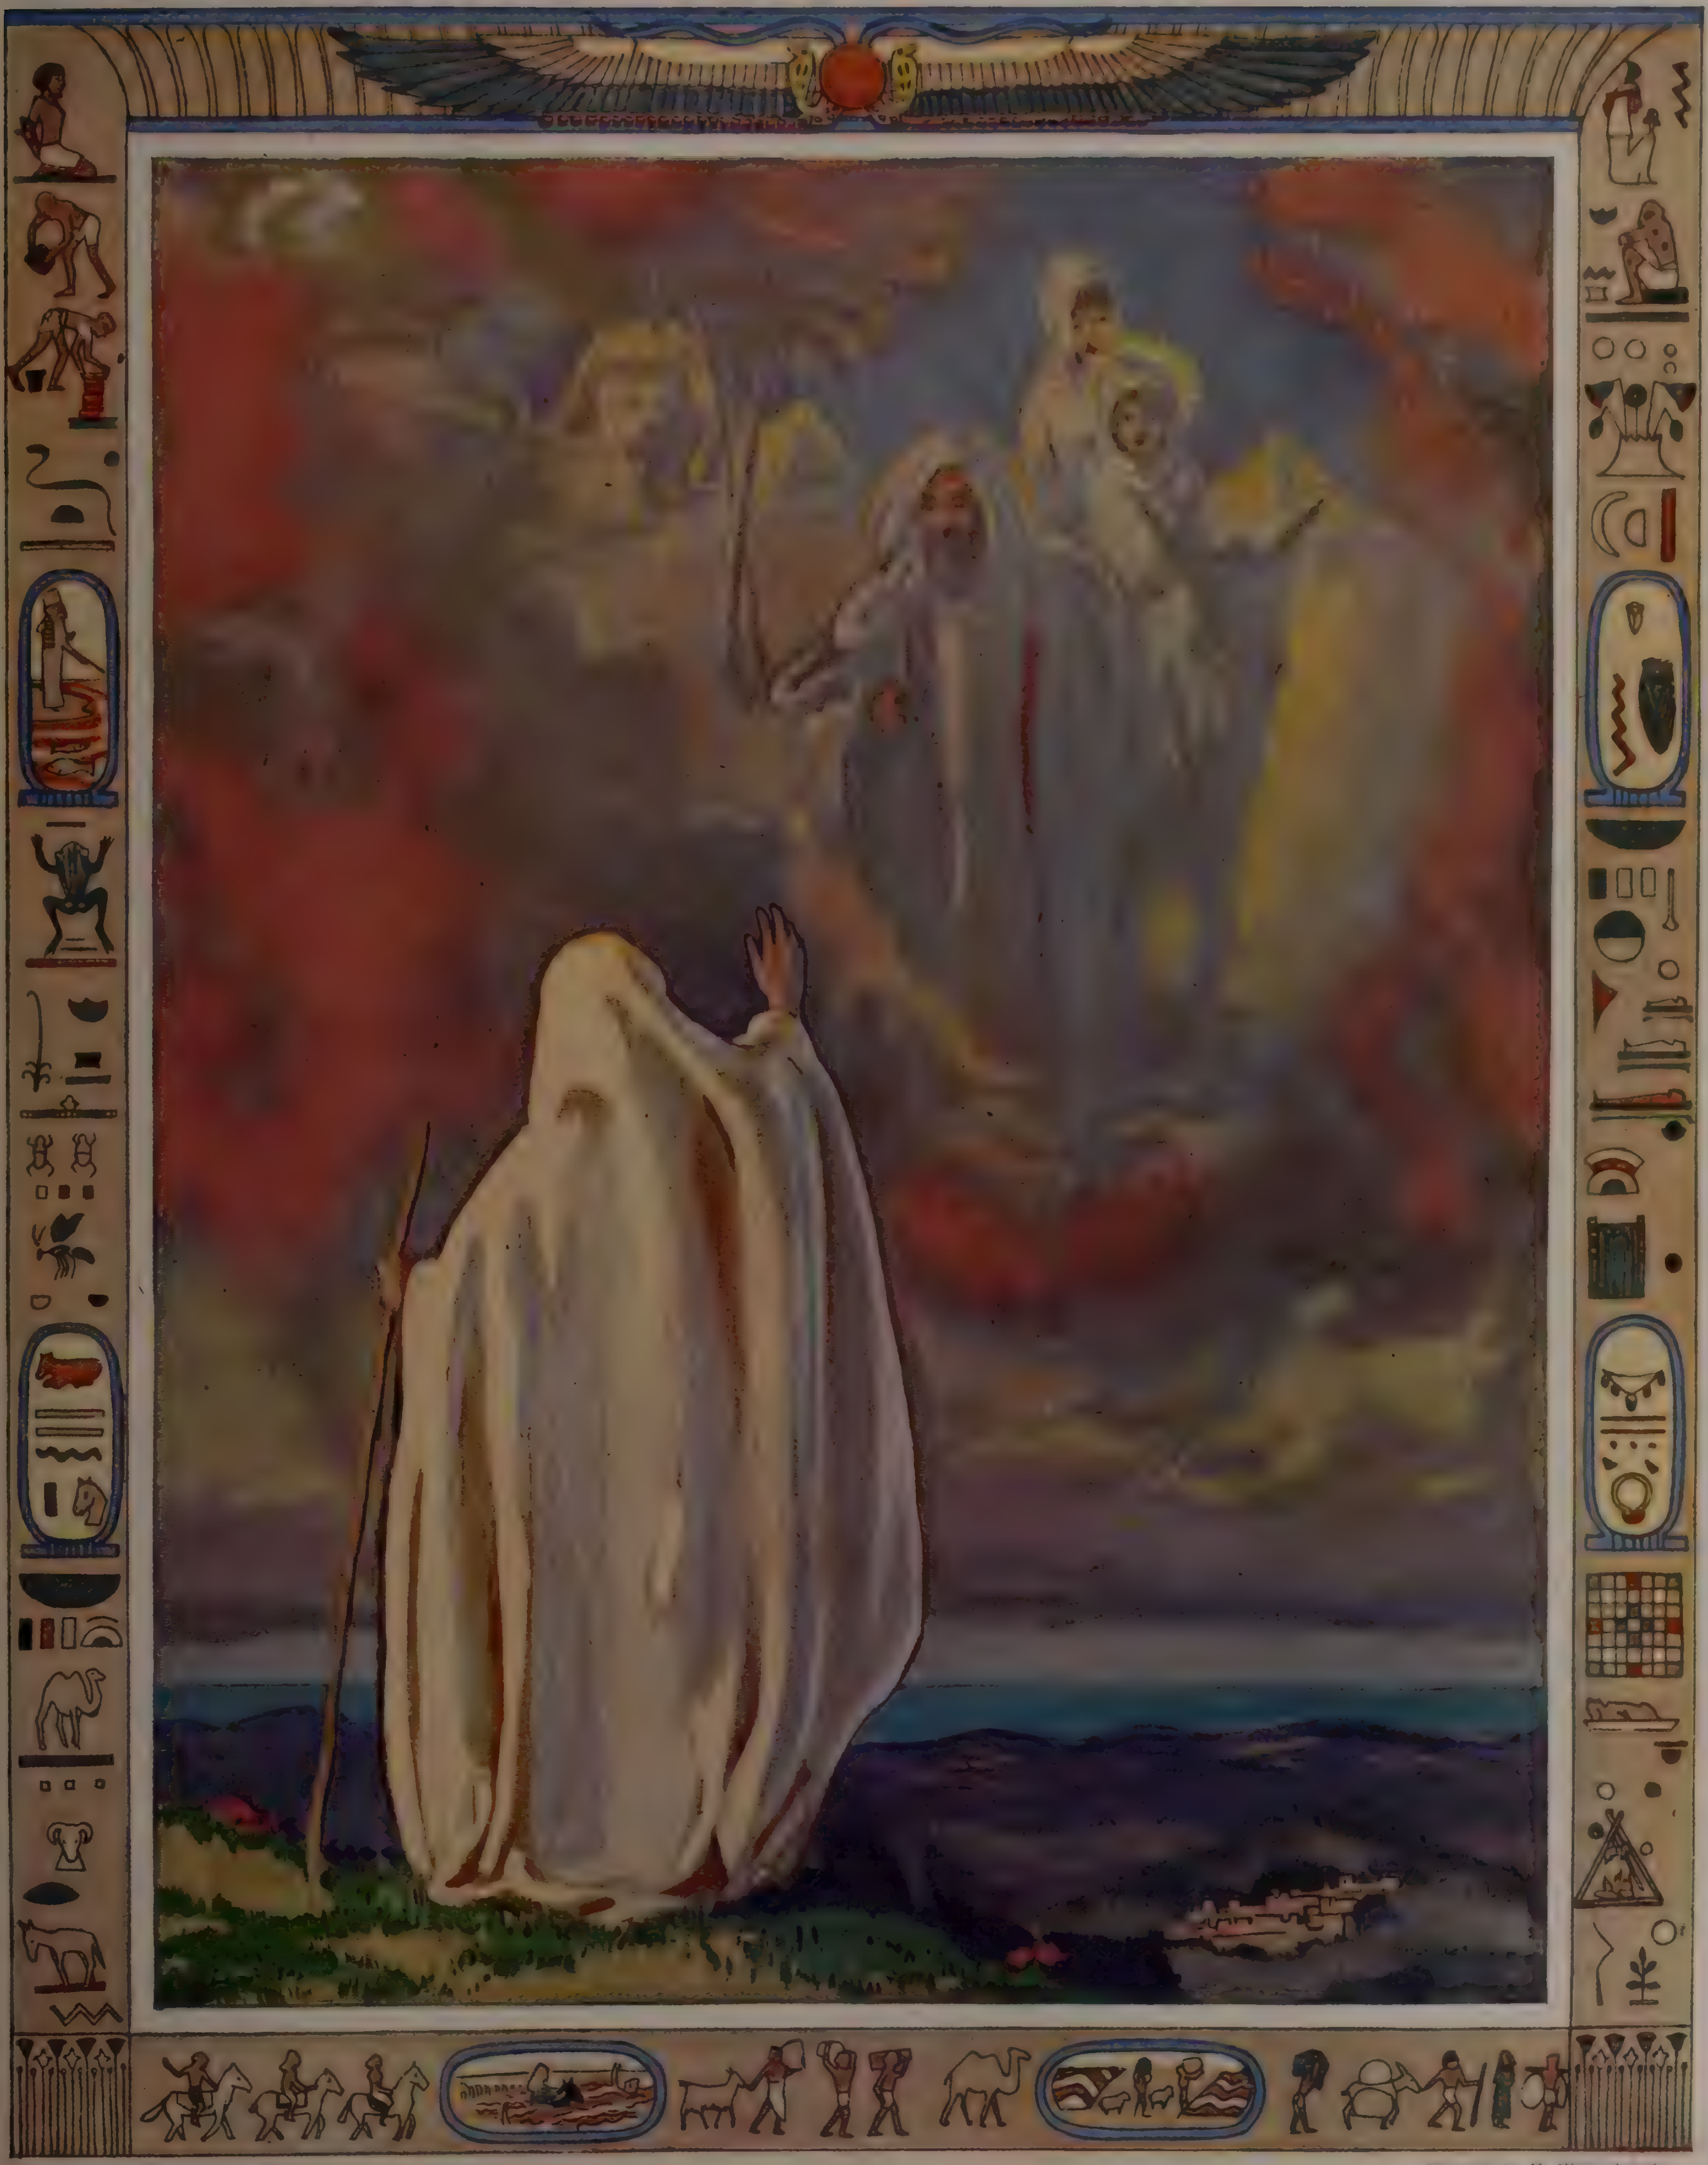
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JANUARY 24, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 4. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



See descriptive matter inside

Painting by H. Willard Ortlip

"WHEN ISRAEL WAS A CHILD, THEN I LOVED HIM, AND CALLED MY SON OUT OF EGYPT." (Hosea 11:1).

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag, provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

READER, Atlanta, Ga. Please define the difference between gambling and moral buying and selling. A few years ago I bought stock in a new corporation whose stock has never been sold on the Exchange but soon will be. If I wish to offer my stock for sale through a dealer in stocks, would it be considered gambling, or a straight moral transaction? When this stock is sold on the Exchange, it will be worth four or five times more than when I bought it. I have heard so much about gambling in stocks that it makes the question difficult to understand.

Gambling, in its true sense, is betting on a future action or event of which the bettor has no definite knowledge. You may bet that it will rain next week, or that it will not. You may bet on the result of a horse race, that one horse or the other will win, without knowing anything about the horses, and certainly not knowing which horse will win—if the race is a fair one. You may bet that a stock will go up in price in the market, or that it will not. All this is gambling, as you are not making any investment, but simply venturing money with the expectation of getting a good profit if your bet wins, but losing everything if your bet loses. The difference between gambling and "moral buying and selling," as you term it, is evident. If you buy a house and lot and make a payment, you are making a purchase, and have an equity in that property. You may buy it with the expectation of having the property advance in price, so that you will be able to sell at a profit before you are obliged to pay for your property entirely. This is really what is termed a speculative investment, but it is not gambling. You will have to keep your property, and if you purchase stock of a corporation, no matter whether it is listed on the Exchange or not, and you purchase it outright, you are making an investment and are not gambling, as you are buying the stock and taking it for better or for worse, regardless of whether the stock advances in price or not. Buying stocks outright may be done for the purpose of realizing a profit on the stocks, but if in your judgment a stock has merit, and is going to pay dividends, it is an investment and not gambling. Gambling in the stock market is buying stocks on margin, putting up a very small amount of money with the expectation of selling at an advance and making a profit. The instance you cite cannot be termed gambling, but may be termed speculation, by which if you do not take advantage of any one in the transaction, no moral law is violated.

J. F. B., Tylerton, Md. Did the fig tree mentioned in Mark. 11 : 13 ever bloom?

We do not know. The fig tree has the peculiarity that its first fruit precedes the leaf. When Christ saw it, it had only leaves. But that does not say that the tree would not bear fruit, for the fig tree has two crops, each of course preceded by a blossom. The first crop is of an early fig which is crude and without flavor, and the second is of a fig full of flavor and sweetness. All trees bear the first, the one before the leaves come, but only good trees bear the second. The tree our Lord saw had not the second, for the time had not come; but it had not even had the first, for it had nothing but leaves, and the lack of the first was evidence that the second would also be wanting.

D. H. B., Westfield, N. Y. The origin of evil has always been a mystery to me in view of Isa 45 : 7. Will you explain?

The passage in Isa. 45 : 7 does not refer to moral evil, but rather to physical discord or disturbances in the order of the universe as a whole. Thus, as light and darkness are opposites, so in the next clause of the verse, peace and disorder are also opposites. Evil is the negation of good, and distinction must be made between natural and moral evil. Among natural evils are wars, earthquakes, storms, plagues, or whatever disturbs or disarranges the perfection of natural things; whereas moral evil is that word or act that is contrary to the revealed law of God, and is therefore sin. It is the peculiarity of Hebrew writing to delight in contrasts. Thus in Isa. 45 the prophet used the converse of the peace he has been talking of, which we should say was a physical disturbance. He used the word "evil" in the sense of punishment or misery. It is the acts of the nation that he is considering. It serves God and is faithful to him and is prosperous. The prosperity comes from God. It deserts and disobeys him, and is punished by captivity and oppression. In that sense, he permits a condition which they regard as an evil.

Mrs. C. A. T., Bicknell, Ind. What is meant by "them which sleep in Jesus"? (I Thess. 4 : 15).

To understand this passage it is necessary to remember the occasion on which it was written. Paul had preached to the Thessalonians the doctrine of the Second Coming of Christ, and they had apparently received the impression that the Lord was to return almost immediately. When, however, one and the other of the Christians who were looking for Christ's coming died, their friends became perplexed and anxious about their condition and prospects, fearing that the dead would neither witness nor partake of the glory of Christ's reappearing. To remove these doubts, Paul writes to tell the Thessalonians that those who are asleep in Jesus shall rise first (verse 16), before anything else transpires, and thus shall miss nothing of that great event. It is enough that they will be there to meet their Lord and Master in his glory.

LINES TO A SOUTHERN CABIN

By Margaret E. Sangster Jr.

A little southern cabin how far it seems away,
Wrapped in the mist of morning, lost in a maze of flowers,
A little southern cabin, and yet Titania's bowers
Held not one half its magic! My heart is sad today,
For youth is stealing from me, my hair is turning grey,
And years creep by like decades, and minutes drag like hours,
And, where the sky held sunshine, I see a hint of showers;
And, wistfully, half-fearful, I turn to God and pray!

I pray-another Jason, who sought the golden fleece,
Who left a land of promise to seek the city's mart-
I pray for hope unending, until my life shall cease,
I pray for daily courage that I may do my part.
I pray that sometime, somewhere, my soul may find the peace
That one small southern cabin held always in its heart!

B. A. W., Rand, W. Va. 1. There is no record in Scripture which gives the name of David's mother. 2 and 3. The apparent contrast between the Saviour's relation to Mary in John 20 : 17, and to Thomas in Luke 24 : 39 is easily explained. Thomas had to be convinced that He who stood before him was his Lord and Master, risen from the grave. Mary believed that Jesus had risen, but needed to know more as to his present state. In his resurrection body there evidently was that mysterious blending which showed the marks and characteristics of his earthly body. Mary was led to a realization that what she believed as to the resurrection was true. Thomas was led to accept the very fact of the resurrection itself. 4. The "Paradise" which Jesus promised to the penitent thief meant to him repose and shelter, the greatest contrast possible to the thirst, agony and shame of the hours on the cross.

Reader, Blackie, Alberta, Canada. 1. We cannot see how a preacher who does not believe in the divinity of Christ can preach Christ's Gospel. He may be a very good man and an able speaker, and yet so far off the track that for him to help others to live the Christ-life would be impossible. It is a great misfortune for a congregation of earnest people to have a pastor who is not thoroughly grounded in the essentials of the Christian faith. Obviously the effect of his preaching upon a congregation, and especially upon the young, is liable to be disastrous. 2. We would suggest that for the purposes of your class of young people you should get copies of the booklets known as "The Fundamentals," particularly numbers 1, 3, 5, 6, 9, and 10. You will find them very helpful in your work. Order through this office.

E. S., Poplar Ridge, N. Y. There are many beautiful promises in the Bible for the righteous. May we who love and trust the Saviour, and desire above all things to please him, yet are conscious of many imperfections—may we appropriate these, and thus dare to class ourselves with the righteous?

That the promises are for the righteous and not for the unregenerate is made clear by numerous passages in the Bible with which you are doubtless familiar. Promises are a declaration or assurance of the divine will, in which God signifies what blessings or good things he will freely bestow on those who honor him with loyal, obedient service, as well as an intimation of the evils which he will remove. The "exceeding great and precious promises" are applicable to all believers and pertain to the present and the future life. With regard to the latter part of your question, we would remind you that many of the promises are incentives to the exercise of the various graces and duties that compose the Christian character, and consequently any one who earnestly desires to be able to claim the promises must first repent, then ask the divine forgiveness, and also for faith and strength to persevere in the righteous life, so that he may be an "heir of the promises." All true believers in the Lord Jesus Christ are called "children" and "heirs of the promises." (Gal. 4 : 20 and Heb. 6 : 12–17.)

Eben H., Hammond, La. Jesus in his teachings frequently used the language of similitude and metaphor to emphasize his utterances. The passage in Matt. 21 : 21 is a notable instance. It was illustrating a spiritual truth by a purely physical figure. What he obviously designed to impress upon his disciples was that no obstacle could withstand one who had a firm faith in God, and that if we trusted him implicitly, our confidence would bear us over all barriers, though they should be as formidable as mountains.

Constant Reader, San Francisco. There is no Scriptural authority for prayers for the dead, although it was unquestionably a custom of the early church to pray for the newly departed, commending their souls to the divine grace and mercy. But in this practice there was no suggestion of a purgatory. In the Church of England prayer book, one of the exhortations addressed by the minister to the congregation is: "Let us pray for the whole state of Christ's Church militant here on earth," the last four words being clearly designed to exclude prayers for the dead, believing that their spiritual welfare is already accomplished.

A union church has now been established at Harriman, Ore., and a pastor employed, who is making excellent progress. Consequently there is no longer a vacancy in that section.

Mrs. G. H., Georgetown, Ky., apropos of our recent discussion on the winning of children for Christ: "I am a mother with four children, and I believe we Christian mothers are responsible for the souls of our children. Mine are all very sincere Christians. One gave herself to Jesus when only four years old. Her conversion was very beautiful. She is now ten and a sincere Christian. Another one was seven, another eleven, and one twelve. They are all practical Christians. They love to take turn about in asking the blessing at meals. Dr. Hamilton, in his book, 'Conversion of Children,' makes it very plain how a child may be led to Jesus; I wish every one would read it. God bless the children, who naturally love him and are glad to know and accept him in their youth."

Inquirer, Philadelphia. At the present time Japan's naval strength is nearly three times as great as when she fought Russia. In 1894, during the Chino-Japanese war, Japan's fighting naval strength represented 61,000 tons; in 1904 (Russo-Japanese war), Japan's naval strength had increased to 283,743 tons; and today it is estimated at 628,322 tons. Of this total, some 460,000 tons are engaged in the protection of the island empire's interests in home waters, while the balance of her fleet, some 150,000 tons, is cooperating with the Allies in the present world-war, acting chiefly in the Indian and South Pacific Oceans.

W. H. P., Crawford, Miss., writes: "In a recent issue J. H. H., Mount Morris, writes to the Mail-Bag an account of great crowds drawn to hear a brass band, and suggests that such an attraction might be used to bring crowds to churches poorly attended. To this you make reply, asking your readers so disposed to give their opinions. From the standpoint of a preacher of the Gospel, now an octogenarian, I think a brass band would be out of place in a church or in any way used to draw a crowd to church. The church is composed of believers in Jesus Christ and their children. The individual church assembles on the Sabbath to worship God, and nothing but the old story of his love and power to save can steadily draw men together. The motive that draws members together is to have communion with God and their brethren, prayer, singing God's praise, and to hear the Gospel preached. The supreme object in view is not entertainment, with artistic music, but upbuilding believers in Christian graces and winning souls to Christ. There is a unique freshness and power in the old Gospel story, when properly preached, to attract, as nothing else will. The world needs knowledge of things that are true. Leading educators say we must get men to think. It is true that music—the singing of psalms—was an essential in temple worship in the Old Testament dispensation, and David with a host of other believers knew what it was to 'sing, making melody in their hearts to the Lord'; but when Christ came, true religion took a mighty bound upward in the inner life of believers, superseding the ceremonial and symbolical age"

THE·CHRISTIAN·HERALD
·AN·ILLUSTRATED·NEWS·WEEKLY·FOR·THE·HOME·

The Biggest Kitchen in the World

How One Quarter of a Million of Berlin's Masses are Daily Fed

By CAROLINE V. KERR

THE writer, an American, has been for six years a correspondent of the New York Herald in Berlin. She writes from personal observation. She describes economic conditions which are not confined to Germany, but are to be found in Great Britain, France, Austria, and Russia, although Germany was the first to deal with the food problem successfully.

"HOW are you going to victual them?" asks practical-minded, sharp-tongued Sarah Jane in one of the popular stories of the moment; and the same question, in substance if not in phraseology, has been the outstanding one in the rigorous catechizing regarding conditions in general, and the food question in particular, to which I have been subjected since my return from Germany.

Assuming that reiteration means interest, I shall attempt to tell how Berlin is meeting the problem of "victualing" the city's proletarian classes during the third winter of the war. Anticipating the stringent conditions by which the country would be confronted as the winter and the war progress, and realizing that the greatest good to the greatest number could be achieved only by a far more extended system of public kitchens than has heretofore been deemed necessary, the City Council of Berlin last July gathered up all the loose ends of the innumerable municipal and individual charities and consolidated them into one gigantic enterprise operating under central control.

Thanks to the executive efficiency which has become proverbial, eleven central kitchens were established and in running order within ten weeks from the time that the plan was taken under consideration by the city fathers. These eleven central food depots are distributed throughout the more densely populated quarters of the city, and feed 62 of the auxiliary soup kitchens, so arranged as to provide either for serving meals on the spot or for enabling the housewives of the district to carry home the food, and, by a little judicious "stretching," make one portion meet the demands of the entire family. In fact, the latter plan is the one encouraged by the promoters of the project for obvious reasons: the necessity of providing restaurant accommodations is thereby materially diminished and the task of the already burdened mothers and heads of families greatly facilitated.

When I left Berlin, early in November, the eleven central kitchens were prepared to furnish 225,000 quart portions of food daily, and, should it become necessary, this quantity can be doubled, thus providing for a half million persons, or one-fourth of the city's entire population. The largest of these distributing depots is established in a spacious new building completed since the beginning of the war, and later to be used as a Central Meat Market. Here 48,000 quart portions are being prepared daily, and any one doubting Berlin's ability to deal satisfactorily with the momentous problem of caring for the city's working classes at this critical economical juncture comes away from a visit to this large food plant with a feeling that, come what may, the population of Germany will not be allowed to starve.

German school children waiting for their bowls of stew from the municipal street kitchen

Eighty-six galvanized iron kettles, each containing six hundred quarts, and an equal number of porcelain-lined kettles used for making sauces and foods containing acids—such as sauerkraut and the popular red cabbage—stand shining and polished ready to receive the next day's contents. Ingenious contrivances for stirring and ladling are at hand, and along the wall are ranged rows of machines for washing, paring, and cooking potatoes and other vegetables. These are operated by electricity, and so great is their efficiency that one centner (hundredweight) of potatoes can be pared in fifteen minutes, while the larger cutting machines easily dispose of six centner of vegetables in a half-hour. The potatoes go through a final polishing off at the hands of an army of kitchen-maids, chosen from the needy women of the district, who receive good wages as well as dinner for themselves and family. At a time when not a grain of corn, or even a cherry pit, is allowed to go to waste in Germany, it is not surprising to find the water used in the potato-paring machine conducted into a side receptacle, later to be evaporated and made to furnish from three to five per cent. of the potato flour or starch used in thickening the soups. Moreover, all the kitchen garbage is carted away to the pigpens of the various farms owned and operated by the municipality in the vicinity of Berlin, so that literally nothing is lost in this great economic scheme.

The staple dish of the week's menu is what the Germans call "Zusammengekochtes"—a sort of pot au feu—which is considered the most expedient and the most nutritious midday meal for the masses. In the preparation of this savory stew—which I ate with great relish and found to be both palatable and nourishing—a pound of vegetables and an equal quantity of potatoes is allowed to each quart, while the amount of meat varies according to the rations to which each person is entitled by the existing system of "meat cards." I was told, however, by the directress that they were as generous as possible, and the full amount of meat and potatoes was never deducted from the card, so that the holders might have something in reserve for their evening meals. The single item of potatoes, of which 700 centner are consumed daily in this one kitchen, will give some idea of the amount of raw materials required in operating this plant.

Whereas households—even those that are prepared to make any outlay in stocking their larders—are obliged to forego certain staple articles, such as rice, dried beans and peas, macaroni and the like, there are ample stores in reserve to be used in the people's kitchens, as was proven by a visit to the store-rooms, heaped high with these coveted commodities. Each kitchen has on hand supplies for only the week, the winter reserves being stored in large warehouses leased by the city in the new East Harbor. All of the meat used in these kitchens comes from slaughter-houses under direct municipal control, and the fish is also subjected to the closest inspection. Arrangements have been made

Preparing vegetables for the always boiling pot

War widows at work in one of the hundreds of soup kitchens

A Berlin soup kitchen where convalescent soldiers and non-commissioned officers are given special rates

Mittelstands
Küche
FRIEDRICHSTADT II
Mittagessen
60 ₰ Speisezeit Uhr
auch außer dem Hause
Militär Preisermäßigung
Mittelstands
Küche
Verein

The dinner-time crowd that patiently awaits its turn to enter the municipal kitchens for the middle class whereby factory hands and men engaged in other heavy work are allowed extra meat rations.

The working plan of these kitchens is as follows: Preparations are made a day in advance, and by evening the raw materials are ready to be placed in the kettles, awaiting the early morning start made necessary by the fact that the food must be under way to the various auxiliary kitchens by half-past ten o'clock. Large thermos cans are used for transporting the food, and these are collected again at three o'clock and returned to be scoured and aired for the following day. It is needless to say that this part of the work is looked after with the most minute care and strictest attention to hygienic requirements. As the consumption varies from day to day, it is not possible to make an exact estimate of the quantity of food to be prepared; but should anything be left over, it is sent on to the inmates of the various municipal institutions.

As has already been said, the central control of this gigantic undertaking lies in the hands of the city magistrates, but the supervision of the individual kitchens, whether central or auxiliary, is entrusted to some volunteer worker from Berlin's leisure classes, who gives her entire time to this philanthropic cause. For five hours each day this supervisor, as well as her staff of volunteer assistants, is on duty discharging a task requiring not only physical endurance but a high degree of executive ability, as every detail of the inner working of the kitchen under her charge is left to her initiative and judgment. It is no kid-gloved charity in which these women are engaged; they not only put on their aprons, roll up their sleeves and participate in the actual menial work, but they must also make their way to the remote parts of the city by means of tram or subway, as the private automobile which formerly facilitated their charitable impulses has now entirely disappeared under the stress of the war.

In establishing these kitchens it was not the intention of the municipal authorities to foster a feeling of irresponsibility among the poorer classes; the people pay for what they get—minimum prices, to be sure, and yet so estimated that the consumers are given a sense of self-support, while the producers are able to cover the cost of the undertaking. Full portions cost forty pfennig (ten cents) a quart and half-portions twenty pfennigs. With the opening of the school season on the first of October, a new phase of the work went into operation. A children's dining-room was added to all the kitchens, where needy children are fed free of charge. It goes without saying that no class of visitors is more appreciative of the benefits of the place nor more lavish in giving concrete expression to this gratitude.

I happened to be present when 2,000 school children, with clamorous stomachs, came trooping in to be fed. With a hand-shake and a "Guten Tag," each child presents his card, receives his big bowl of steaming stew (which is usually tasted on the way to the table!) and then devotes himself to the matter in hand until literally he "licks the platter clean." Upon leaving, the children never omit the mannerly "Mahlzeit" still in vogue among the German bourgeois. On fish days, or when the menu consists of highly-spiced foods, separate dishes are prepared for the children.

It would not seem possible to secure any great degree of variety with the one-dish meal, but a few sample weekly menus will show what is being done in this direction.

MENU: OCTOBER 8–15

Monday:	Noodles with apples
Tuesday:	Beef, turnips and potatoes.
Wednesday:	White beans, boiled in bouillon.
Thursday:	Cabbage, beef, potatoes.
Friday:	Larded potatoes and herring.
Saturday:	Irish stew.
Sunday:	Stewed fruit, potato dumplings and sausage (regarded as a most delectable combination).

OCTOBER 15–22

Monday:	Rice and stewed apples
Tuesday:	Boiled beef and potatoes.
Wednesday:	Carrots and peas (stewed in bouillon).
Thursday:	White cabbage, potatoes and meat.
Friday:	Fish with mustard sauce, potatoes.
Saturday:	Stewed fruit, vegetables and meat.
Sunday:	Beef, red cabbage and potatoes.

OCTOBER 22–29

Monday:	Noodles and boiled beef.
Tuesday:	Turnips, potatoes and beef.
Wednesday:	White beans and potatoes in bouillon.
Thursday:	White cabbage, potatoes and rice.
Friday:	Fish and potatoes (children: macaroni and dried fruit).
Saturday:	Boiled beef, carrots, potatoes.
Sunday:	Sauerkraut, potatoes and sausage.

It must be understood that the kitchens here described have not displaced the so-called "kitchens for the middle classes," hundreds of which are scattered throughout the city and minister to the needs of the shopgirls, artists, and professional folk out of employment. Families whose pride would prevent them from visiting these public dining-rooms do not hesitate to take advantage of them by sending their maids to fetch the desired portions with which to augment the midday meal. But these kitchens are generally under private control and therefore do not come under the category of the new kitchens for the masses. The customary price here is sixty pfennig, with certain extras in the way of stewed fruit, sweets, and coffee at nominal prices, from which it will be seen that "war prices" in Germany are about the same as those found at the ordinary lunch counters in New York. The people's kitchen, as it now exists in Berlin and other German cities, has obviated the necessity of the earlier "gulaschkanone"—a perambulating street kitchen, so-called from its resemblance to a field-gun—and this picturesque object, with the characteristic crowds gathered about it, is now seen only in outlying districts, not yet blessed with the institution of the municipal kitchen.

Some Shrines and a Few Festivals

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

AFTER months spent in idolatrous lands, I have been unable to see much real worship in heathen shrines. The educated worship with their tongues in their cheeks and the ignorant with their hearts in their mouths. But the amount of real worship that exists in heathen temples is very small.

Sometimes a bereaved mother will enter the temple and draw from her kimono the tiny bib of a departed little one, and tie it to the statue of Jizo, the god of motherhood. Sometimes an old man or woman, almost blind, will enter the temple and rub the eyes of a wooden god and then rub his own in the hope that eternal darkness may not close in on his affrighted soul. In some places, Buddhist services are as dignified, as well attended and as helpful as our own. In Hakodate I attended a Buddhist preaching service that smacked less of idolatry and more of morals than some ceremonials in our cruciform chapels.

The temple of the goddess of mercy is the most popular in Japan. The stream of visitors is incessant and the theaters and restaurants in the vicinity reap golden profits. The grounds are filled with merchants for pipes and tobacco pouches, purses and razors, soap and cigarettes, candy and cakes, dolls and toy "Art Smith" aeroplanes, bleating sheep and jumping rabbits, talking dolls and gyroscopic tops. Two great American religious leaders bought dozens of Japanese razors for pen-knives while making a study of religions. Inside the temple, money-changers take in silver and hand out copper, which is subsequently shoveled up by the bushel. Small amulets and kakemono or scrolls for the wall, bearing the picture of the goddess, are sold to ignorant believers and curious tourists alike, usually for the same price. By paying a special fee one can get close to the idol and gain special holiness before going out for a drink of saké or a flirtation. Religion and vice go hand in hand and help draw crowds for each other. Calm-faced Buddhas gaze with sightless and indifferent eyes on the vices which go on under their noses. A slight-of-hand medicine-man uses the space in front of an idol for plying his trade and mystifying the young and old with tricks that the Babylonians laughed over long ages ago.

Nothing so delights Japan as military display. From tiny lads who shoulder sticks and march in awkward squads along the city streets to panoplied officers resplendent in gold lace and jangling spurs, Japan loves the soldier. The Military Museum is the best in Japan. The collection of armor and ordnance of all periods there, including the small brass cannon that General Grant presented to the Mikado, is the finest I have seen, though I have seen the Tower collection in London and several other displays.

Outside the place stand giant cannon captured from the Russians. Ventilators from the sunken ships, with every bullet-hole edged with blood-red paint to magnify its attractiveness, stand about the entrance. Mothers and children come here to see the weapons of war and gaze at bloody pictures of hara-kiri and slaughter. Charging steeds with blood-flecked nostrils and flying manes, bearing spirited lancers and dashing huzzars, do not stir these visitors. It takes the blood-stained shirt of Nogi or his wife, gashed with the steel of the suicide blade, to stir these youthful and feminine minds. Battle flags carried by victorious brigades on many a field of honor have little force compared with the example of suicide by disembowelment.

The long lines of soldiers guarding a procession route do not swagger or strut. They are businesslike professionals, not proud-necked amateurs. Militarism is glorified, even while it impoverishes; yet even on the day when the dead heroes of army and navy are remembered, the shrine is approached through ranks of side-shows and shops for children's toys.

AT a woman's and children's exposition, where many educational features attracted attention to the merits of Japan's excellent schools, where great glass cases held the model hair-dressing methods for the present year, where silks and embroidery gladdened the feminine eye and the inevitable Singer ground out machine embroidery to the admiration of all, where the American Bible Society had a booth, and a Buick auto stood in a finely painted setting, the main item of interest was a human skin, tattooed in the most intricate design and spread out for the women and children to view along with extracted honey, perfumed soap, bottled candy and live goldfish. Beside the gruesome hide of the flayed man was a display of medical specimens that have no place outside laboratories, and the background was a crude painting of the most misshapen female forms one could imagine, facing away from the audience across a beautiful blue sea. In catching up with scientific advances abroad, Japan does not discriminate between a Meccano set and the grisly by-products of medical and hospital science. There is no sense of the fitness of things.

I went out to the Ikegami shrine, a very famous place where the festival is attended by thousands. Inside the temple different families had set up their little shrines and the people sat around and peeled apples and crunched them or smoked and gossiped, while others beat on the fish-mouth wooden gongs and conducted the ceremonies. Coppers rained into the big bins in front of the idols and hundreds of candle prayers wavered and flickered in the mass movement of religious riot. When the candle was two-thirds burned it gave way to another, for wax is valuable and can be resold, and half a prayer must not occupy the place that might be given to a whole one.

Some people were evidently in a prayerful mood, but squawkers and rubber apples on real branches will typify the shrine to me. That and the delicious peanut candy I bought, and which left me with no desire for quail on toast when I returned.

Jizo, protector of childhood, god of motherhood

Samurai armor, symbol of Japan's might

THE god of wealth is another popular deity among the poor and ignorant of Japan. He looks like the "Before" part of an anti-fat advertisement, and thoughtlessly came out without an undershirt, or overshirt either, for that matter. He is the jolliest, beefiest, most inane-looking, swine-eyed deity I have ever seen since my visit to India, and is a good representation of selfish, self-indulgent old Mammon himself. The Yashiwara girls "worship" at his shrine, and the festival runs over into the licensed district.

Thousands of young and old swarm through the quarters from noon till midnight and after. Automobiles discharge their frock-coated devotees at the entrances to the barred buildings, and grave-eyed men in Prince Alberts and glasses carry around the decorated rakes that are bought as souvenirs of the occasion. "Birds of a feather flock together."

Children of all ages gaze at the pictures of the brazen-faced inmates, and for this one day the girls themselves appear at the outer door of the brothels, some of which are built of the finest glazed tile bricks and surround beautiful rock gardens. Fathers with their children on their shoulders stop and joke with the scarlet women, and loving mothers on this day bring little presents to the daughters that they have sold into this life.

In most of the pictures the women wear the heavy, long-trained kimonos of their class, but décolleté gowns in the European fashion are worn by some when posing for their portraits, though none are to be seen in such costume. In some cases the gowns are almost as diaphanous as those of American schoolgirls, but only in the pictures. In life the girls are as modestly clad as though they wore nun's gowns.

WE have wickedness in America, but never have I seen vice so mingled with many who seemed innocent and thousands of children who are too young to be anything else. Students flocked past the inviting doorways and old women of seventy or more wandered around as though reviving old memories. This festival used to be the occasion for a most gorgeous parade of the inmates, but this feature has been stopped, I can't say why, since public opinion seems to have no objection to the whole business.

The deity is a fat-faced, bloated-bodied old sot. The votaries are painted-faced harlots in bright gowns. The onlookers are babes and granddams, with all between. The institution is heathenism on a holiday. The man on his knees is entitled to respect, but the worshiper of the dropsied god of prosperity does not "worship" that way.

No treatise on Japanese shrines is complete without a reference to the forty-seven Ronins, and the temple where the relics of their career and the remains of their careerings are found is a shrine to which the flow of pilgrims never ceases while daylight lasts.

For a cent or so you can see the rude shirts of mail the men fashioned for themselves, the well in which the head was washed, and the forty-eight tombs. The story, reduced to its lowest terms, is this:

Two daimyos who had sought instruction in etiquette from a man of position were made fools of by their teacher because their presents were not pleasing to him. Kamei was hot-tempered and decided to kill the false teacher, but one of his retainers gave a present to the teacher of etiquette so that he treated his pupil politely. Kamei was appeased. But as the teacher received no present from Takumi, he insulted the second daimyo to such an extent that Takumi tried to kill him, but failed and was arrested. As the affront had occurred within the castle, Takumi was forced to disembowel himself, and his retainers became "ronins" or wanderers. They swore revenge and finally got it, but were in turn forced to perform hara-kiri. One of their number, to allay suspicion, had gone into debauchery and drunkenness, and when he was lying in the gutter a Satsuma man came and spat on him for thus forgetting his duty when he ought to be seeking revenge. This man later came to know the result, and because he had insulted one of the ronins, he committed suicide by the popular method. His is the forty-eighth revered tomb. Mitford, in his Tales of Old Japan, thus describes the story:

"A terrible picture of fierce heroism which it is impossible not to admire. In the Japanese mind this feeling of admiration is unmixed, and hence it is that the Forty-seven Ronins receive almost divine honors. Pious hands still deck their graves with green boughs and burn incense on them; the clothes and arms which they wore are preserved carefully in a fireproof storehouse attached to the temple and exhibited yearly to admiring crowds, who behold them probably with little less veneration than is accorded to the relics of Aix-la-Chapelle or Trèves; and once in sixty years the monks of Sengakuji reap quite a harvest for the good of their temple by holding a commemorative fair or festival, to which the people flock during nearly two months."

There's the secret. The temple authorities reap a profit. That is why in these days of enlightenment thousands daily approach the goddess of mercy between lines of trinket shops. That is why Decoration Day in Kudan Shrine is a day of coarse amusements and silly sideshows. That is why the Ikegami temple is a restaurant and a smoking-room for hundreds of pilgrims. That is why a Japanese deity is associated with harlots and innocent children are induced to visit the segregated district to buy balloons and squawkers. That is why loyalty to the point of murder and suicide is still praised at Sengakuji. The poverty of Japan has caused the sale of her soul. And against this sacrilege only Christianity opposes a potent voice.

I refuse to recognize the Japanese as "heathen" in that they are inferiors, to be coached into righteousness by American methods. But the traveler to Japan who refuses to recognize a heathenism that underlies the whole national life is as blind as the bronze Buddha before which the commercialism of superstitious worship is perpetuated by the ones who should destroy it.

IF you have wondered, as missionaries and others have told of the fine qualities of the Japanese, what use there is of Christianizing them, here see the answer. It is the only way of releasing them from a degrading heathenism which is being perpetuated for profit by the very ones who profess to be religious leaders toward better things. The Japanese government is wiping out indecencies and wrongs in an attempt to win a rightful place as a world power. But the moving force behind this upward trend in Japan is Christianity, and the force opposing it is the terrible and soul-blighting pressure of subsidized heathenism, perpetuated for gain. It is the privilege—the duty—of the Christian Church to open the "blind eyes."

Citizens watching the mushi mushi (telephone) girls—a pleasant contrast to one incident in the story

Here we have the evidence that Japan is strictly up to date—a "movie" theater

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

THE SENATE VOTES FOR PEACE. After nearly a week of debate the Senate adopted, by a vote of 48 to 17, Senator Hitchcock's resolution endorsing President Wilson's efforts for peace. The resolution was amended, however, so that it applied only to the suggestion that the belligerents state the terms upon which peace might be discussed, the original resolution having expressed approval of the President's note as a whole.

© Harris & Ewing

Lieut. Col. Chester Harding

Nominated by the President to succeed Colonel Goethals as Governor of the Panama Canal Zone

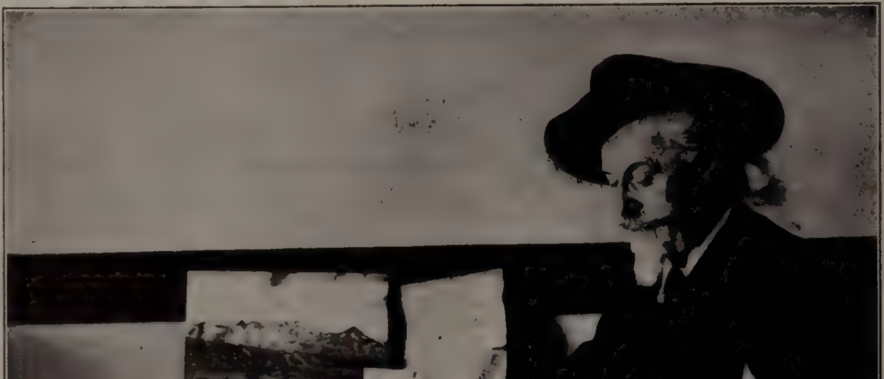
NEW QUEENS OF THE SEA. The Navy Construction Bureau has just completed the official drawings of the new battleships and superdreadnoughts which were authorized by the last Congress. The battle cruisers will displace 34,800 tons, will be 850 feet long, 130 feet longer than the largest existing battle cruisers, the British ships of the Tiger class, and will be designed for a speed of thirty-five knots, two knots greater than this British fighter. They will mount ten 14-inch guns capable of firing a broadside of 14,000 pounds as against a broadside by the English fighters of 9,600 pounds. The new superdreadnoughts will displace 32,600 tons and will carry eight sixteen-inch guns capable of throwing a broadside weighing more than 32,000 pounds. All of these new battleships will be oil-burners, and each of them in its class will exceed the fighting power of any vessel of any navy in the world about which we have any information at present. It is to be hoped that they will represent the measure of preparedness for peace which their sponsors claim.

FOR A UNITED PRESBYTERIANISM. Presbyterianism, like American Methodism, was torn asunder by the clashing viewpoints that so nearly severed the nation, and, again like Methodism, is moving toward reunion. On January 8 the New York Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church (North) passed an overture to the General Assembly expressing its fraternal affection for "the Presbyterian Church in the United States" (South), and its earnest desire for reunion at the earliest time consistent with the arrangements of necessary details, on the basis of common inheritance of faith and order and the prevalence of mutual confidence and love. The last move for union failed in 1882, after union had been almost accomplished. Should the consolidation be made, it will result in a denomination having more than 2,000,000 adherents.

A LONG LIFE IN THE COUNTRY. The United States Census Bureau has prepared life tables for both sexes based on over 24,000,000 lives and 1,000,000 reported deaths. These tables show that out of 100,000 rural male births 58,117 survive to the age of 60, while in the same number of city births only 43,454 reach the age of 60. The tables show that women have longer lives than men, although there is an exception to this general rule in the case of rural women between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-one, and of negro women between the ages of ten and twenty.

BRITISH SHELLS FOR AMERICAN NAVY. American bidders for the fourteen- and sixteen-inch shell contracts for the American navy found themselves bidding against Hadfield's, Ltd., of Sheffield, England, and what was worse, Hadfield's presented the lowest bid by hundreds of dollars, bidding $513 on 3,000 sixteen-inch shells to be delivered in sixteen months, as against the Bethlehem Steel Corporation's bid of $775 each for 4,000 shells in thirty-six months. On the fourteen-inch shells Hadfield's bid was $356, the lowest American bid being $500. It was reported that the British government, feeling that its own navy was completely supplied, was willing to permit Hadfield's to use its idle machinery on shells for the American navy. At last reports the contract had not been let.

SEEKING THE SECRET SPRING. Just as the President's peace note was being sent to the belligerent powers, Wall Street suffered a severe nervous shock which sent values reeling downward and which in a couple of days of feverish activity caused immense losses to many investors in stocks whose inflated values depended upon the continuance of hostilities abroad. It was charged on the floor of Congress by Representative Wood and charged in the press by Thomas W. Lawson of Boston that there had been a "leak" somewhere about the capital through which advance information of the sending of the note reached certain operators in Wall Street. Congress authorized a preliminary investigation by the Rules Committee to find the "leak." This committee began sessions in Washington on January 8, Thomas W. Lawson being the principal witness. Mr. Lawson claimed to be able to give important names but refused to give these names excepting to a committee conducting a formal inquiry. Other witnesses before the committee, some of whom had been mentioned as profiting by the "leak," claimed to have no knowledge thereof.



Colonel Wm. F. Cody died at Denver, January 10, in his seventy-second year, and so Buffalo Bill has broken camp for the last time

COMPLETING THE PROGRAM. Chairman Adamson of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce introduced the administration Railway Legislation Bill into the House on January 6. The bill provides for the enforcement of the eight-hour law under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission for investigation of controversies between railroads and employees, and stipulates that there shall be no strike within the period of investigation, which is limited to three months from the reference of the controversy. The hearing in the Supreme Court on the constitutionality of the eight-hour law began on January 8 with the argument of Solicitor General Davis for the government. Solicitor Davis argued that the constitutional power of Congress might extend even to the power to regulate wages, and he was not sure but that Congress had the power to regulate what the railways should pay for land, locomotives and other things. On the 9th Walker D. Hines, general counsel for the Santa Fe Railroad, made the principal argument against the act for the railways, charging that the act was not a constitutional regulation of interstate commerce, but was merely a wage-fixing statute, and outside the powers of the Congress. He claimed that there could be no analogy between rate-fixing and wage-fixing.

© Underwood & Underwood

Dr. E. P. Roberts

Negro member of New York's School Board

REGROUPING THE NATIONS., Bernard Shaw, writing in the New Republic about the discussion of peace terms, with the reorganization that may follow, says: "The fact to be faced is that non-German Europe is not going to spend the remainder of the duration of this planet sitting on Germany's head. A head with the brains of 60,000,000 people takes more sitting on than we shall have time for. The day after peace we shall be more afraid of Russia than Germany, and all Europe will be more afraid of us than of any other single power." Arguing from this premise, and balancing up vital interests and natural national associations, Mr. Shaw finally arrived at the opinion that eventually there would be an alliance between England, France, Germany and the United States, to which would accrue Scandinavia and the Netherlands. According to Mr. Shaw, no matter what combinations of European powers may develop, the balance of power will be held by the United States.

IMMIGRATION BILL AGAIN PASSED. On January 8 the Senate adopted the conference report on the Immigration Bill, retaining the literacy test and the Asiatic exclusion clause. Care was taken, however, not to discriminate against Japan in the drawing of the latter clause. The President has announced that he will veto the bill because of the literacy test.

FOR A DRY DISTRICT. The Senate on January 9 passed the Sheppard Bill for prohibition in the District of Columbia by a vote of 55 to 32. An amendment by Senator Underwood, proposing to submit the question to a popular referendum of the inhabitants of Washington, was defeated by a tie vote. The bill now goes to the House.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. At the request of the German government, American Minister Vopicka, accredited to Rumania, Serbia and Bulgaria, was directed to leave Bucharest and join the Rumanian government at the temporary capital at Jassy. . . . The Supreme Court on January 8 awarded to B. E. Loewe, the Danbury hat manufacturer, $20,000 in interest which had accrued on the bank deposits of members of the union which were held under attachment to satisfy the judgment of the hat manufacturer against the union. . . . Major General Peter J. Osterhaus, U. S. A., retired, said to have been the last surviving corps commander of the Civil War, died in Berlin January 5. . . . Administration leaders in Congress on January 5 agreed to extend the life of the Newlands Joint Railroad Committee until the convening of the Sixty-fifth Congress next December. The committee will proceed with its inquiry into the subject of railway control. . . . American shipyards in 1916 constructed 1,164 merchant vessels with a total tonnage of 520,847 and 50 vessels totaling 40,000 tons for foreign purchasers. . . . On January 7 it was announced that Mayor Mitchel had decided to appoint a negro as a member of the Board of Education of New York City, the appointee being Dr. E. P. Roberts, formerly a medical inspector on the Board of Education. He will be the second negro member of the New York Board, the former member having served from 1894 to 1898.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Explosions Save Lives. A fire in the works of the Canadian Car and Foundry Company in Kingsland, N. J., on January 11 resulted in the explosion of half a million shells being manufactured for the Russian government. The 1,400 workers in the plant and the residents of the neighborhood, which was badly battered by the resulting bombardment, escaped without loss of life. Inasmuch as about one shell in ten reaches its objective, it might be estimated that this explosion saved the lives of some 50,000 soldiers. The following day, a fire starting in the glazing-room at the Du Pont Powder works at Haskell, N. J., resulted in the explosion of 400,000 pounds of smokeless powder being manufactured for the Entente Allies. The explosions rocked three states. No exact estimates on the percentage of deaths to a ton of powder are at hand upon which to calculate the number of soldier lives saved (temporarily) by this premature discharge. The damage in the Kingsland fire and explosion is estimated at more than $17,000,000, in the Du Pont works at about $1,500,000. At last reports all but two of the Du Pont workers had been accounted for.

The Allies Reply to the President

Delivered to Ambassador Sharp at Paris, January 10

The allied governments have received the note which was delivered to them in the name of the government of the United States on the 19th of December, 1916. They have studied it with the care imposed upon them both by the exact realization which they have of the gravity of the hour and by the sincere friendship which attaches them to the American people.

In a general way they wish to declare that they pay tribute to the elevation of the sentiment with which the American note is inspired and that they associate themselves, with all their hopes, with the project for the creation of a league of nations to insure peace and justice throughout the world. They recognize all the advantages for the cause of humanity and civilization which the institution of international agreements destined to avoid violent conflicts between nations would prevent agreements which must imply the sanctions necessary to insure their execution, and thus to prevent an apparent security from only facilitating new aggressions.

But a discussion of future arrangements destined to insure an enduring peace presupposes a satisfactory settlement of the actual conflict. The Allies have as profound a desire as the government of the United States to terminate as soon as possible a war for which the Central Empires are responsible and which inflicts such cruel sufferings upon humanity. But they believe that it is impossible at the present moment to attain a peace which will assure them reparation, restitution, and such guarantees to which they are entitled by the aggression for which the responsibility rests with the Central Powers, and of which the principle itself tended to ruin the security of Europe—a peace which would, on the other hand, permit the establishment of the future of European nations on a solid basis. The allied nations are conscious that they are not fighting for selfish interests, but, above all, to safeguard the independence of peoples, of right, and of humanity.

The Allies are fully aware of the losses and suffering which the war causes to neutrals as well as to belligerents, and they deplore them, but they do not hold themselves responsible for them, having in no way either willed or provoked this war; and they strive to reduce these damages in the measure compatible with the inexorable exigencies of their defense against the violence and the wiles of the enemy.

It is with satisfaction, therefore, that they take note of the declaration that the American communication is in nowise associated in its origin with that of the Central Powers transmitted on the 18th of December by the government of the United States. They did not doubt, moreover, the resolution of that government to avoid even the appearance of a support, even moral, of the authors responsible for the war.

The allied governments believe that they must protest in the most friendly but in the most specific manner against the assimilation [?] established in the American note between the two groups of belligerents; this assimilation, based upon public declarations by the Central Powers, is in direct opposition to the evidence, both as regards responsibility for the past and as concerns guarantees for the future. President Wilson, in mentioning it, certainly had no intention of associating himself with it.

If there is a historical fact established at the present date, it is the wilful aggression of Germany and Austria-Hungary to insure their hegemony over Europe and their economic domination over the world. Germany proved by her declaration of war, by the immediate violation of Belgium and Luxemburg, and by her manner of conducting the war her simulating [?] contempt for all principles of humanity and all respect for small states. As the conflict developed, the attitude of the Central Powers and their allies has been a continual defiance of humanity and civilization.

Is it necessary to recall the horrors which accompanied the invasion of Belgium and of Serbia, the atrocious régime imposed upon the invaded countries, the massacre of hundreds of thousands of inoffensive Armenians, the barbarities perpetrated against the populations of Syria, the raids of Zeppelins on open towns, the destruction by submarines of passenger steamers and of merchantmen even under neutral flags, the cruel treatment inflicted upon prisoners of war, the juridical murders of Miss Cavell, of Captain Fryatt, the deportation and the reduction to slavery of civil populations, et cetera? The execution of such a series of crimes, perpetrated without any regard for universal reprobation, fully explains to President Wilson the protest of the Allies.

They consider that the note which they sent to the United States in reply to the German note will be a response to the questions put by the American Government, and, according to the exact words of the latter, "constitute a public declaration as to the conditions upon which the war could be terminated."

President Wilson desires more: he desires that the belligerent powers openly affirm the objects which they seek by continuing the war; the Allies experience no difficulty in replying to this request. Their objects in the war are well known; they have been formulated on many occasions by the chiefs of their divers governments. Their objects will not be made known in detail with all the equitable compensation and indemnities for damages suffered until the hour of negotiations. But the civilized world knows that they imply, in all necessity and in the first instance, the restoration of Belgium, of Serbia, and of Montenegro, and the indemnities which are due them; the evacuation of the invaded territories of France, of Russia, and of Rumania, with just reparation; the reorganization of Europe, guaranteed by a stable régime and founded as much upon respect of nationalities and full security and liberty of economic development, which all nations, great or small, possess, as upon territorial conventions and international agreements, suitable to guarantee territorial and maritime frontiers against unjustified attacks; the restitution of provinces or territories wrested in the past from the Allies by force or against the will of their populations; the liberation of Italians, of Slavs, of Rumanians, and of Tcheco-Slovaques from foreign domination; the enfranchisement of populations subject to the bloody tyranny of the Turks; the expulsion from Europe of the Ottoman Empire, decidedly alien to Western civilization. The intentions of his Majesty, the Emperor of Russia, regarding Poland have been clearly indicated in the proclamation which he has just addressed to his armies.

It goes without saying that if the Allies wish to liberate Europe from the brutal covetousness of Prussian militarism it never has been their design, as has been alleged, to encompass the extermination of the German peoples and their political disappearance. That which they desire above all is to insure a peace upon the principles of liberty and justice, upon the inviolable fidelity to international obligations with which the government of the United States has never ceased to be inspired.

United in the pursuit of this supreme object, the Allies are determined, individually and collectively, to act with all their power and to consent to all sacrifices to bring to a victorious close a conflict upon which, they are convinced, not only their own safety and prosperity depend, but also the future of civilization itself.

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

During the week the Allies held an important conference at Rome, participated in by the Italian premier and minister of foreign affairs, the French premier Briand, Mr. Lloyd George and Lord Milner. We have, however, not been told the subjects discussed, though we have the assurance of Mr. Briand that the conference fully accomplished its objects. Press despatches assert that one result is to be a more determined attitude toward Greece. It is to be noted that Russia was represented at this conference by a subordinate official only.

On January 10 the Russian premier Trepoff resigned and Prince Golitzine was appointed by the Czar to succeed him. Trepoff was only in office seven weeks. His removal may or may not have some bearing on the question of peace.

A great affliction has fallen upon the women of Great Britain. The government has commandeered all the metal from which hairpins are made, and consequently there will be no more manufactured. Considering the manifold uses to which women put hairpins, in addition to the obvious one, this news is really of importance to them.

The question as to what is going on in the North Atlantic is becoming exceedingly interesting. During the past week 53,000 tons of British freighters, eight in number, were given up as lost, but whether sunk by submarines or captured by raiders we have no idea. On the European coasts the submarines are also very busy, and the number of their victims in the past week is probably the largest of any week up to the present time in the war.

The western front was very quiet. There was occasional artillery activity on the north front of Verdun, in the Champagne district, and on the Picardy front, north and south of the Somme. North of the Ancre on the Picardy front, near Beaumont-Hamel, the British made a raid on the German trenches facing them, and captured 133 Teutons, besides damaging their trenches. The Germans made three unsuccessful attacks on the British trenches near Souchez, north of Arras, and at various scattered points there was bomb fighting.

The Caucasian front remains quiet, both sides being apparently buried in the snow, which, the Russian bulletins announced, has in places attained a depth of eighteen feet.

The Macedonian front has also been quiet, only minor skirmishes taking place here and there. This front, like the Caucasian, is experiencing very bad weather. Very possibly as one result of the Rome conference, when the weather becomes better, we shall see an offensive tried on this front by the Allies, with the help of large reinforcements of Italian troops. If this offensive fails, then the Allies will probably withdraw from this front. At least this seems to be the plan which has been adopted. Greece received another ultimatum of a far-reaching character from the Allies during the week, the demands of which were, according to London advices, accepted on the evening of January 10 by the government.

The most important fighting of the week has been on the Rumanian front. In the Dobrudja, on January 4, the Teutonic allies captured the towns of Matchin and Jijila, taking 1,000 prisoners. This forced the Russians to withdraw completely from the Dobrudja and to cross the Danube to the north and west.

The next day Braila was captured by the Teutonic troops, whose entry into this important Rumanian commercial town took place in the afternoon. This capture, important as it undoubtedly is, is not, however, as important in the military sense as that of its sister city, Galatz, about eleven miles to the north, would be, since Galatz is not only much more strongly fortified, but is situated in a strategic position commanding the mouths of the Sereth and Pruth rivers, which flow into the Danube three miles southwest and ten miles to the east of the town, which also is the eastern buttress of the so-called Sereth line of fortifications, which extend forty-five miles to the town and fortress of Focsani, the western buttress. The famous Mazeppa, Byron's hero, was buried here, but the Russians stole his body years ago.

In all probability the battle which seems imminent for the possession of Galatz will be a desperate one, as it will be not only a battle for the city itself, but part of the battle for the Sereth line, the loss of which by the Russo-Rumanians will almost inevitably open the way to Jassy, and perhaps to Odessa.

Farther west of the center, the town of Slobozia, six miles south of the Sereth River, was stormed and taken by the Teutons after severe hand-to-hand fighting. This capture helped to surround the western buttress of the Sereth line.

As a result of this Russian failure, the Teutons took the offensive on the left wing, and on January 8 captured the fortress of Focsani, by which capture the western buttress of the so-called Sereth line of defenses, the most important in Rumania, passed into their hands. With the fortress there were taken some 5,000 prisoners, as well as artillery and munitions of war.

From the Sereth to Jassy is about a hundred miles, and if we allow a week for the Teutons to finish the conquest of the Sereth line at the same rate their troops have advanced to Bucharest from Focsani, they would reach Jassy about February 5, in which event the Rumanian government would have to find another temporary capital, probably this time in Russia.

To the west the Russians and Rumanians have been driven to the north of the river Putna, an affluent of the Sereth, and at the end of the week the Teutons had established themselves on and controlled the whole of this northern bank from the mountains to the Sereth.

The British battleship Cornwallis, 14,000 tons, was torpedoed in the Mediterranean on January 7. Thirteen of the crew were reported missing.

Germany's New Note to the Neutrals

On January 11, a note was handed by the German Government to the representatives of all the neutral countries, which, first reviewing the reply of the Allies to the Peace note of the Teutonic Powers of December 12, proceeds:

"Our adversaries decline this proposition, giving as a reason that it is a proposition without sincerity and without importance. The form in which they clothe their communication excludes an answer to them, but the Imperial Government considers it important to point out to the governments of the neutral Powers its opinion about the situation.

"The Central Powers have no reason to enter into any discussion about the origin of the world's war. History will judge upon whom falls the immense guilt of the war. History's verdict will as little pass over the encircling policy of England, the revenge policy of France, and the endeavor of Russia to gain Constantinople, as it will pass over the instigations of Serbia, the assassination in Sarayevo, and the complete mobilization of Russia, which meant war against Germany.

"Germany and her allies, who had to take arms for the defense of their liberty and their existence, consider this, their aim in this war, obtained. On the other hand, the hostile Powers always went further away from the realization of their plans, which, according to the declarations of their responsible statesmen, were directed, among other things, toward the conquest of Alsace-Lorraine and several Prussian provinces, the humiliation and diminution of the

Continued on page 102

The Coming of the Kingdom

*A SERMON BY REV. S. PARKES CADMAN, D.D.

TEXT—Luke 11 : 2. "Thy Kingdom come."

SOME of us feel when we offer this prayer as the astronomer felt who saw through his telescope the burning city of San Francisco from a distant mountain, and witnessed the fearful spectacle with a deep sense of his utter helplessness. Christians who occupy the height of the New Testament ideal behold half of Christendom in flames, and cry, "How long, O Lord, how long?" "Still thou the enemy and the avenger." Yet they recall that their Lord himself commanded them thus to pray and thus to believe. Whatever the drawbacks and obstacles in recent events, it is safe to say that the need of the Kingdom, which is righteousness and peace in the Holy Ghost, was never more keenly experienced than it is now. The battle against its foes is no longer sequestered; it is an open engagement, fraught with the largest consequences. An honorable and sane intercourse between nations; the perpetuity of a just and lasting disarmament; the reconstruction of society on the basis of the Sermon on the Mount; the reconciliation of contending sects in religion and politics—in a word, the preservation of God's Commonwealth on earth—are the avowed causes which enlist our energy and effort.

PERHAPS it is not clear to some among us that the chief hindrance to the Kingdom—indeed, the supreme peril of Christian civilization—is wrong thinking among the multitudes. They have never correctly apprehended or understood the real meaning of this prayer. The future of great peoples like the Americans, the Canadians, the French, the British, is not under the control of their elder statesmen, but under the control of the innumerable masses these titles indicate. The press, the platform and the pulpit will have to sanitate the thought of the average man and woman, to powerfully change their intellectual and spiritual outlook, or nothing else can avail to save democracy from degeneracy and defeat. It is not a choice, as some would have us believe, between parties. It is a choice, definitely and unescapably, between good or evil, Christ or Belial, God or Mammon. And only in so far as the groups and parties which clamor for our support are identified with goodness, Christ and God should they be sustained by believers. We must either range ourselves on the side of virtue, benevolence and truth, or join the destroying forces of greed, selfishness and evil which ravage society. In the moral arena there can be no neutrality. Those who are not for the Master here are entirely against him.

Strongly as we condemn the vile unfairness with which this supreme issue is treated; much as we deplore the wounding of the Redeemer's designs in the house of his friends, I, for one, do not regard the Kingdom which he rose from the grave to establish as in a precarious condition. The balance toward passion, vice and unrighteousness cannot bring down the scale. Despite ominous signs and portents to the contrary, the good is prevailing and will prevail. Right-minded men may have to devise means to protect humanity against wanton wickedness and perfidy, safeguards and checks all too sadly lacking at present must be installed. In this process we shall probably lose some formal freedom, be called upon again to forsake all and follow the crucified Lord, and realize afresh that nothing, however dear to natural affection, must intervene between us and the divine mandate. Nevertheless, what we lose in these respects we shall make up a thousandfold in the nobler impulses, characters, achievements, which await the lovers of the Kingdom.

THE world is groping toward a universal brotherhood. It is trying to visualize the paramount interest of that brotherhood, it is offering the prayer of the text with a frequency and a zeal that the church should recognize and respect. Surely there must be some goal, some objective, to be won, that can submerge private concerns and blind nationalism and sectional fury. Before these precipitated the European catastrophe, choice spirits of every land had banded together to interpret nature, to curb its forces in our behalf, to provide better methods of education, to reform civic centers, to knit the various classes into a closer connection. Three nations, at least, dispensed the Gospel of the Kingdom and sent their missionaries into non-Christian territories: Germany, Great Britain, and the United States. Two of these are now locked in a deadly embrace. We are still free from war and prosperous that we may welcome and extend the boundaries of God's holy enterprise. For this end, and this alone, our peace has been unbroken, our material wealth has increased by leaps and bounds, and unless we demonstrate the vitality of the New Testament faith and make it appeal the more vividly in contrast with the diabolism now let loose, our last state will be worse than the first. To correct the thought and capture the imagination of the race in reference to the Kingdom is our imperative duty and sacred privilege.

ONE hundred and thirty years ago the Federal Constitution was adopted and applied to thirteen states on the Atlantic seaboard. Now, it obtains among forty-eight states ranging from Sandy Hook to the Golden Gate, and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico. Then, this country contained four millions of a homogeneous population. Now it contains a hundred and twelve millions of the most heterogeneous description, assembled under one govment and one flag. Every opinion, creed, language, tradition, is here. The sharp separations of wealth and poverty, of caste and sentiment, of culture and ignorance, prevail in our midst. Problems relative to city and rural regions abound. No monetary success, no commercial ties, can blend this strange admixture into true nationality. The wisest among us dread an internal convulsion, should prolonged poverty, or a similar disaster, fall upon the Republic. The Kingdom must come in America, and that right speedily, or, notwithstanding her advantages, she will be left stranded, mute, decadent. For until men and nations have found God and God can use them, their existence is a mockery.

To impress this central truth on the public conscience, to make it a regal obligation, we live and labor as Christians and as churchmen. If the universal sway of Jesus were proclaimed simply for domestic reasons and that it might coordinate these diversified and alien elements and concentrate them on the hope of the Kingdom, it would be the most sagacious policy we could practice. The muddle-headedness, the menacing materialism, the artful trickery that we perceive but do not fully realize, could receive no more severe rebuke than our plain determination to make sweet reason and the will of God preeminent in this land. The quality of missionary work is not strained. Like mercy, it blesses him that gives as well as him that takes. Could we mortgage the vast resources poured forth for drink and vanity and sin, and expend them in Christ's cause, the world would be evangelized during this century.

AGAIN, it is foolish to solicit your loyalty to an ill-defined ideal. "What is the Kingdom? Where can its best expression be found?" are questions frequently asked and not always adequately answered. The hour has struck when it should be brought into the light, expounded fearlessly, illuminated by deeds more than by words, and shown to be the one rational explanation of our presence on this planet. Closely considered, it is the uniting of the human family and all its concerns in a living and sacrificial brotherhood, which shall abolish the superficial things that now divide men.

VISITORS

By Ralph M. Thomson

LOVE stopped before
My house one day,
And knocked, and knocked,
Then went away.

Fame sought to gain
Admittance there,
Only to pass
On in despair.

But God has stood,
In joys and fears,
Outside the door
Through all these years;

Nor has he seemed
To doubt that he Would enter my Heart finally.

Show me anything that makes for the spiritual oneness and enrichment, the moral freedom, the intellectual sympathy and understanding of our fellow creatures, and I will find it in the Gospel of the Nazarene, and there is the Kingdom! It contains nothing to which Jew and Gentile can not consent. It is the open sesame of every closed door which bars racial development. It is the salvation, not only of our personal selves, but of science, of art, ot literature, of business. Society must either accept its rulings or perish. The Fatherhood of God, the fraternity of his children, their regeneration in Christ Jesus, and their future solidarity beneath his kingship, are the four cornerstones of the new Temple wherein man shall dwell secure and blessed.

Yet in the attainment of this heavenly revelation and its teachings, we need, in the first instance, not a dynamic, but a vision. For lack of this vision the people die daily. Until they see God as the All-Holy and the All-Loving, they will continue to die, and die needlessly. Think of our kindred across the sea praying to the same Father to aid them in exterminating one another! The brutal instincts which divide them have temporarily overcome their conception of God as the common Parent of the slayer and the slain. They forget, and so do we, that it is his Kingdom, his Will, his triumph, for which we should supplicate; that whatever the outcome, as long as he is glorified, we and they are to be content. And if this conclusion seems remote from things as they actually are, permit me a bold word. The most significant truths have to die, or appear to die, in order to be reborn. Thus was it with the Lord of Truth, who laid down his life under the law of rejuvenation. "Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it beareth much fruit." In like manner the Kingdom apparently succumbs to carnal pressure, apostates violate its purity, wrest its content; its path is blocked by tyranny and injustice. The dreams of a millennium for the moment are dissipated. Presently war, even war, like a dark angel, appears and "whips the offending Adam out of us." A renewed consciousness of the folly and iniquity of our boasted wisdom and strength arises and agitates us. The proud dictators and usurpers are searching tearfully for a place of repentance and have not found it.

The vision of which I spoke, the vision which beholds the tender, compassionate God as the God not of this or that superior set, but of all, whatever their lot in life, breaks on the eager gaze of myriads of agonizing victims. Then comes the dynamic, as it came to the prodigal in his nakedness and hunger, moving a race to say, as he said, "I will arise and go to my Father."

Unless I am grievously mistaken, that contrition, that resolution, are in the world at this time, and in it on an unprecedented scale. Could we penetrate the secret heart of ruined nations, we should discover a craving for the peace of justice, which is the peace of Christ.

Release can be given in one way—their acceptance of the terms of Christ. However separated by matters of belief, by custom, by convention, neither they nor we can construe the Kingdom without him. He unveiled it to the wondering worship of his disciples. He endued them to preach it everywhere. He promised that his resurrection authority should sustain their embassy. He decreed that the gates of Hades should not prevail against their mission.

All plans and proposals for the rebuilding of demolished Christendom gravitate toward the Life and Word and Work of the only Begotten Son of God. The driving power of the colossal machinery of the twentieth century and of all succeeding eras must proceed from him. Spin your philosophies as closely as you will, tell again what knowledge can do, but when you frame up the innermost soul of things and ask how you may be kept true to these, and crucify your hate and dedicate your love, and accept your enemies at heaven's valuation, then you must bow before Him who put this prayer in the spirit of man: "Thy Kingdom Come." The vision of God, the dynamic of the exalted Christ, who is our Prince and Saviour—these furnish the essentials for the fulfilment of that petition for the safety of the world.

---

* Preached in Central Congregational Church, Brooklyn.

FOR EVERY DAY
IN THE
YEAR

DAILY MEDITATION

Revs.
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
C. C. Albertson, D.D.
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Feverishness

SUNDAY, January 28. Mark 1:31. "He took her by the hand . . . and the fever left her." It is probable that every physical malady has its spiritual analogy. The ravages of some disease in the body are types of deadly invasion among the vital processes of the soul. Palsy, leprosy, and the withered limb are the shadowed lineaments of a more appalling paralysis, and a more gruesome leprosy, and a more awful decay among the living treasures of the spirit. And our Lord healed the lesser maladies that he might make it manifest he could heal the greater. "That ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins: then saith he to the sick of the palsy, Rise!" That is to say, he liberated a palsied body as a witness that he could give liberty to a paralyzed soul. He drove the feverishness out of the flesh in order to assure us that he could restore the feverish and distracted spirit.

We are living through days when there is urgent need of spiritual coolness. We are apt to fret ourselves into a perilous temperature. There is danger of a mental fever which engenders more heat than light. We are liable to spiritual excitement and hysteria. "The fever of the world hangs upon the beatings of the heart." What ministers are provided to dispel feverishness and to restore the soul to cool and healthy activity? I would not forget the elect men and women, the dedicated spirits who are endowed with rare power and influence for breathing through the impulses of heated desire mysterious coolness and balm. And particularly I cannot forget the ministry of Wordsworth, who is proving himself in these days both guide and guardian to many troubled spirits. He is offering to them what John Stuart Mill found in him, "a medicine for my state of mind," or the "healing power" of which Matthew Arnold sings, or that great bequest which William Watson proclaims, "Thou hadst for weary feet the gift of rest."

All such ministers can be received with gratitude as minor means of grace, but they should lead us beyond all these lesser and secondary influences to the supreme and original spring. There is a feverishness, fierce and consuming, which can only be dealt with by Jesus Christ. Indeed, there is no form of feverishness, not even common fretfulness, which can be radically extirpated except in the all-sufficient grace of our Lord. He alone can expel the tormenting and inflaming spirit. He alone can impart the deep serenity which is born of a steadfast and eternal hope. He alone can restore the healthy balance to our disturbed powers, and pervade the entire life with the wonderful harmony of strong and wholesome self-control. When he touches us the fever flees away. "He that believeth shall not make haste"; that is to say, he shall not get excited, and lose his head or his heart, for "he shall be kept in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee." J. H. J.

Jesus and His Mother

MONDAY, January 29. John 2 : 5. "His mother saith unto the servants, Whatsoever he saith unto you, do it." The world is intensely interested in the mothers of great men. It has been observed that the nearest human being to the three greatest men who have lived on earth was, in each case, his mother. Certainly the nearest human being to Jesus was Mary. Gentle, brooding spirit, hiding the secret of his birth, keeping in her own heart the sayings of priests and prophets concerning her child; most of all keeping in her own heart strange sayings of the child himself. God knew the quality of that womanhood before he chose her to be the most blessed of women.

What must have been the attitude of Jesus toward his mother? It is not recorded that he ever said, "Whatsoever she saith unto you, do it"; but there is every reason to believe that whatsoever she said to him, he did. Had it not been so, he had not remained in Nazareth till he was thirty. His tender regard for her welfare is beautifully expressed in his committal of her care to John, even while he was in the agony of death.

Mary had touching confidence in her Son. His brethren did not believe in him, but his mother did. She had reason to. If anything is more beautiful than a mother's love for her children, it is her faith in them. Mary not only loved Jesus, but she believed in him. She hovered near the cross. She came daily to the tomb. Such love and faith leap the barriers of death. In Herbert Schmalz's picture, "The Return from Calvary," Mary is represented as leaning on the arm of John as she reaches the porch of a house on the hillside and looks back on the three crosses standing out against the sky. The home at Nazareth broken up, there, in Jerusalem, she is to spend her remaining years, cherishing the memories of a dutiful Son who has gone to prepare a place for her. C. C. A.

Christ the Word

TUESDAY, January 30. John 1 : 14. "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth." That was the great epiphany which ushered in the new dispensation: God was manifest in Jesus Christ of Nazareth. The eternal Word, which in the beginning was with God and which was God, became man and took up his habitation among men. There is a note of tender reminiscence in this remark of John: how often he and his brother disciples must have talked over the times when the God-man was with them. Their memory would lead them back to all the scenes of his activity. They would recall his striking discourses—so true!—and his wonderful acts—so gracious! Earthly fame and glory had come to him; men had exalted him to the skies. Not a few had grasped the real meaning of his appearance among men, the Messianic import of his coming. That glory had passed away. Men had afterward heaped shame on the One whom they had adored. But the glory of his teaching remained. On his word of truth and grace, which had revealed to them the sublime mystery of the redemption, their hearts were still feasting after his visible presence had been withdrawn. By means of his teaching they were able to reproduce his epiphany, and even make others realize his unseen presence among men. In the pages of the Gospel records Christ still meets men. The attentive Bible-reader finds himself at his feet as did the disciples in the days of his flesh, and what he says to us now is, as it was then, "full of grace and truth." W. H. T. D.

"I Remember My Fault"

WEDNESDAY, January 31. Gen. 40 : 23. "Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, but forgot him." When Joseph was behind prison bars, he made Pharaoh's butler a special friend by giving an interpretation to his dream, saying to him that in three days he would be restored to his former position as cup-bearer to the king. When the hour came for the butler to be liberated, Joseph gently whispered to him, saying, "Think of me when it shall be well with thee." Did the butler remember Joseph? Nay, nay; he was too much like many at the present day, who forget the friends and companions who have aided them in their deliverance and elevation. But when the butler could still further promote his own prosperity by aiding in the interpretation of Pharaoh's dream, the face of Joseph flashed upon him, and he exclaimed: "I do this day remember my fault," which resulted in making Joseph the deliverer of Egypt.

Our Lord did infinitely more for each one of us than the butler did for Joseph or than Joseph did for Egypt. He bought our freedom from the prison of sinfulness, by going to prison and judgment and death himself. How can it be that those for whom he died should forget him? This is the colossal crime of ingratitude; the awful wickedness of treachery and desertion. We should exclaim, "This day do I remember my fault, repent of my sin, and cleave to the man who died for me." In the dying hour every sinner is ready to cry, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," and if the prayer is sincere, the answer comes back from the forgiving heart of Christ, "This day shalt thou be with me in paradise." E. W. C.

An Ensign to the Nations

THURSDAY, February 1. Isa. 5 : 26. "And he will lift up an ensign to the nations." An ensign is a militant and martial figure. Moses, at Rephidim, after the defeat of the Amalekites, built an altar and called it Jehovah-Nissi, the Lord our banner. The prophets had a fondness for these double names—Jehovah-Tsidkenu, the Lord our righteousness; Jehovah-Jireh, the Lord will provide; Jehovah-Shalom, the Lord our peace.

The appropriateness of the figure of an ensign, as applied to Christ, appears when we recall what an ensign is for. It is to go before an advancing army. Jesus leads his people. An ensign is to rally round. Christ has been such an ensign to many a soldier, many a defeated soldier, many a deserter from the ranks of truth and courage. The sound of his voice brings courage to our spirits. The light of his face brings comfort to our hearts. The peace he speaks turns all life's discords into harmonies. Who would not enlist under such a banner? Who would not follow such a leader? C. C. A.

Love and Diligence

FRIDAY, February 2. Rom. 12 : 10–12. "Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honor preferring one another; not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord; rejoicing in hope; patient in tribulation; continuing instant in prayer." David had prophetically sung of the people of the Messiah and their willingness to serve him in the beauty of holiness, when the day of his power should have come. Paul sets to work in this text to make David's vision real. He views the people to whom he writes as one family in Christ. They are all brothers and sisters in him, and they show by their affectionate regard for and their ready deference to each other that they relish their relationship. They live in an atmosphere of self-forgetting love. But they do not waste their time and dissipate their strength in exchanging sweet sentiments of mutual admiration. Theirs is a sterner kind of love—a love that braves the heart for work and enterprise.

Diligence in a chosen occupation, coupled with a lively interest in everything that is connected with it, a clear perception of every golden opportunity which the day offers, and devotion to the Lord in every undertaking—these are the characteristic traits of the members of this family. They take their holiness, their affection, their deep spirituality, with them as they go to take up their daily routine of labor. Present conditions may show distressing features, but they manage to look with a quiet joy into a brighter future, and they meet misfortunes with a brave heart and a prompt call for succor and light and guidance on the supreme source of their strength, the Lord, with whom they remain in an unbroken prayerful connection. It is a lovely idyl of the faith which worketh by love that the apostle has sketched for us in these few terse and vigorous lines. The manifestation of vital Christianity must occur in the manner here indicated: for the apostle's remarks are not only a description but a demand on the faith of those to whom he writes. May our lives become beautified with all this practical holiness. W. H. T. D.

The Lamb of God

SATURDAY, February 3. Rev. 5 : 8, 9. "The elders fell down before the Lamb . . . and sang a new song, saying, . . . Thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us . . . out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation." The song of the Lamb is God giving himself for his children. It is the loftiest note heaven ever heard, and can never be excelled in the beauty of its holiness or the rapture of its melody; for salvation is the summit of God's union with humanity, from whence all music will radiate through eternity.

This is a song of sacrificial service, of resurrection power, of cleansing blood, and of spiritual baptism. The volume of this praise will swell like the tides of the mighty ocean on the waves of the crystal sea throughout the ages of the forever.

The marks of redemption are upon the Lamb of God and will be the badge of his glory through eternity. His vesture is dipped in blood, which gives him his greatness of strength and makes him mighty to save. He is the great Conqueror, helping us to overcome by the blood of the Lamb. It is the throne of God and the Lamb, not a saint, or a martyr, or an archangel.

Among the many names of Christ are "Son of Righteousness," "Rose of Sharon," "Morning Star," "Elder Brother," and "Redeemer." But "Lamb of God" stands like a keystone in the arch of his wonderful names. O blessed, holy, saving, glorious Lamb of Calvary! We will praise thee; we will adore thee; we will worship thee; we will rejoice to join with the whole universe, singing, "Unto him that loved us and loosed us from our sins by his blood, and made us to be kings and priests unto God, unto him be glory and dominion forever and ever." E. W. C.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

A Sweeping Prohibition Decision

THE decision of the United States Supreme Court, affirming the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon Act, is the most sweeping of all decisions ever made upholding state prohibition laws. This act is designed to prevent the shipment of liquor from non-prohibition states into prohibition states; and in sustaining it the court has cut off the bootlegger and private tippler from their sources of supply. The power of the state over the manufacture, sale and use of liquor is sustained, and the validity of the West Virginia amendment which prohibits citizens of that state from receiving liquor for their own personal use from common carriers engaged in interstate commerce is fully upheld. Thus the states may make their prohibition laws as drastic as they like, and the power of the Federal government over interstate commerce will be asserted to assist them.

The Chief Justice, in announcing the decision, took occasion to emphasize its sweeping nature by saying:

> The all-reaching power of government over liquor is settled. There was no intention of Congress to forbid individual use of liquor. The purpose of this act was to cut out by the roots the practice of permitting violation of state liquor laws. We can have no doubt that Congress has complete authority to prevent paralyzing of state authority. Congress exerted a power to coordinate the national with the state authority.

The old plea that there could be no state interference with interstate commerce has now lost all its force. The law which is upheld, to use the words of the act, applies to shipments of liquor "intended to be received, possessed, sold or in any manner used" in violation of the laws of the state.

Greece Fighting Starvation

IF ever there was a doubt that modern war is essentially barbarian, it has been dispelled by the events of the last two years.

Belgium, Poland, Galicia, each in turn has lost thousands of innocent non-combatants by starvation. In the Near East, too, want is claiming its multitudes of victims among the hapless Armenians and Syrians.

Greece is the latest of the "little powers" to be enrolled among the unfortunates who are doomed, by the inexorable will of the stronger nations, to do as they bid—or starve and die! Three hundred Greek organizations, civic and industrial, have appealed to this Republic to bring about a cessation of the blockade. The Holy Synod of Greece has also appealed to the head of the Russian Church, to the Pope in Rome, and to the Archbishop of Canterbury in England—the three heads of the great state churches in Europe—against the Allied blockade, which it declares is threatening "the death of an entire people by starvation." It describes the situation as "an inhuman and horrible measure of extermination against old men, women and children," who, under all the laws of civilized warfare, are entitled to be protected. Even the king of Greece is stated to have applied for and received the "bread card" which is issued to the heads of families.

Greece's appeal, issued several weeks ago, was suppressed by the censor, but its substance has been received through diplomatic channels. It is not at all likely that the appeal will bring help. The state churches, so-called, are all supporting the war and must share the responsibility for the awful situation. Indeed, it is doubtful whether any attempt to aid the starving Greeks would meet with success. Such attempts failed lamentably in Poland, where thousands of non-combatants perished of hunger, while the belligerent powers wrangled over the question of permitting relief to be sent to the afflicted population.

Are the sufferings of Poland to be repeated in Greece? There is surely an opportunity here for a humane and dignified protest against such a possibility.

Worry Over Worry

THE Federal Public Health Service, which is inquiring into the causes of nervous diseases, issues this bulletin against worry:

> So far as is known, no bird ever tried to build more nests than its neighbor; no fox ever fretted because he had only one hole in which to hide; no squirrel ever died of anxiety lest he should not lay by enough nuts for two winters instead of for one, and no dog ever lost any sleep over the fact that he did not have enough bones laid aside for his declining years.

It is not strictly true that the birds and the animals never worry, but it may truthfully be said that they never worry over things not worth while. The bird painfully worries over its young; the fox worries because of the hounds; and the dog worries in misfortune to its master, if not over its next day's bone.

But man worries over a great many more things than these; and, worst of all, he worries over his worries. He is tormented by "Don't Worry" mottoes, and just when he is deepest in an unavoidable worry he is confronted by a framed injunction to "Smile a While." As one sick becomes sicker thinking about it, so one with a worry must worry all the more because told that worry is all wrong.

Is worry wrong? Senseless worry is, certainly. Worry over worry is, undoubtedly. But there are worries that are wholesome. There are very many indeed that seem unavoidable. It is worry, perhaps, which has largely enabled man to emerge from his cave dwelling and establish himself in steam-heated flats, luxurious houses and automobiles, and thus acquire new worries. Progressive civilization is progressive worry.

In youth we long for maturity, and in maturity we yearn for the happy days of childhood. Whatever is beyond reach seems somehow to be just the thing most desirable. You have noticed the donkey leave his own grass to hang his head over the fence, with drooping ears and drooling mouth, and look longingly upon the next field, where the grass, though precisely like his own, seems to him ever so much sweeter? Well, the extra sweetness is all in the fence. And not all donkeys drooling over fences stand on four legs.

The fat woman wants to get thin; the thin woman longs to gain fat.

The farmer looks forward to the time when he can afford to quit hard work and move to town and take life easy; the city man hopes for the time when he can retire to the quiet of the country.

A multimillionaire declares that the rich are not as well off as the poor, who have not such heavy responsibilities to worry them. And every poor man believes exactly the opposite.

It is a deep question? No; hardly skin-deep. The commonplace truth is that nearly every one of us is more or less dissatisfied with his lot and jealously thinks the other fellow has the best of it. The world always seems just a little brighter and better most anywhere than on the spot you occupy just now.

It is because we are incurably restless and dissatisfied. And it is well that we are. If the rich were content they would keep all their money; but they spend and spend, seeking happiness, and that's how the rest of us get a chance at it. Most of us work and work, to get some money to be happy with, and that's how the world's work gets done.

We of this country are said to be the most discontented people on earth. Maybe that is why we are the most energetic and progressive. If we were contented, advancement would cease.

The Mission of John Goode

A READER in New Hampshire questions the wisdom and spiritual profit of publishing the characters of bad men. "I have always been instructed," he says, "that the contemplation of vice and crime was dangerous. Have I been taught wrong? Even if the outcome of the story of wicked John Goode is glorious, it does not, according to my mind, render it safe reading for the young, in earlier life especially. I have taken the Christian Herald for many years, and sincerely love and value it."

As there are no doubt others who may have asked themselves the same question, we take this opportunity of saying that we are not at all surprised at criticism of the autobiography. John Goode's story is a confession of sin, a confession so truthful and unsparing that it cannot fail to impress all who read it. It is not food for babes, but strong meat for men, who need just such a vivid, forceful presentation to warn them. John Goode has bared his own soul, that his experience may arrest others who have entered on the path that leads to destruction. He knows that road and the perils it holds for those who travel there. And he knows the only way out of danger, and is now spending his life in saving others.

The highest of all examples, the Bible itself, both the Old Testament and the New, pictures sin in its true colors. It may be shocking to some sensitive minds, but there it is. The purpose is clearly to make sin's vileness and hideousness apparent to all; to show how it defaces and even effaces all that is noble in humanity; to demonstrate how absolute is the domination of evil over one who has forgotten God and given himself wholly over to the "lusts of the flesh." We confess that we ourselves do not like the picture; no one can like it. It is drastic, repelling, shocking. But here comes the miracle. We turn in loathing from such men and, when we look back at them again, find to our astonishment that divine grace has touched even their vile hearts, and that wonderful change has begun in their lives. Could there be in the life of to-day a greater or more convincing demonstration to the world of the Gospel truth that "He saves to the uttermost," than in such a case as that of John Goode?

We must remember that Christianity is not a life of shelter, seclusion and privileged association, and that the church is something more than a collection of saints, who must not be shocked by violent contact with human depravity. It is the duty of every Christian to remember the injunction to go out into the highways and byways, to seek the outcast, the criminal, the imprisoned, the hopeless; to be "all things to all men," if by any means he may save some. And we believe the challenge of John Goode's life and experience is one that should arouse self-satisfied Christians to a sense of duty to those who are down in the depths.

The Light Unkind Word

JEALOUSY, envy, malice are wilful murderers. But the light word, spoken without ill thought or evil intent, may prove a deadly blunderer that strikes deeply and fatally in the back of a trusting friend.

In all the wise and witty maxims of La Rochefoucauld none perhaps shows deeper insight into imperfect human nature than this: "In the adversity of our best friends we often find something that is not exactly displeasing." So cynical is the thought that the author himself suppressed the maxim in the third edition of his book. Yet is there not some truth in it?

It is egoism and selfishness of the basest sort that causes us to be impatient and vindictive at seeing any one else attain deserved success or a well-won joy. The "jealous leer malign" is the weapon that littleness and vanity use in easing their own chagrin and disappointment.

There is nothing more detestable than deliberate slander that springs from envy and malice. Yet, because it so often overreaches and because it usually bears an unmistakable brand upon its face, it does less harm than does mere carelessness of ill-speaking to which good nature lends wings.

Thinking lightly, one might suppose that ill deeds would reach farther and strike deeper than ill words. But it is not so. An ill deed may only scratch the skin, while ill words sink their cruel barbs to the very heart. The light and idle word tinged with unkindness has embittered more lives, wrecked more homes and caused angrier misunderstandings than has outright malicious slander, and is constantly the cause of the greatest heartburning, trouble, distress and despair to those innocent of wrong doing or wrong intent.

Daylight Diplomacy

THAT a "leak" of President Wilson's peace note could even be suspected is deplorable. That speculators may by any possibility have secured advance information to their advantage in manipulating stocks in Wall Street is shameful. That any trusted public official or employee is open to accusation of having given out secret information is disgraceful. But most deplorable, shameful and disgraceful of all is the fact that there was any secrecy at all in the matter.

The President's note was signed and cabled early on Monday, December 18. Late in the afternoon of Wednesday, December 20, it was given to the press, and it was published Thursday, December 21. It might better have been given out for publication the moment it was dispatched. Diplomatic courtesy did not require that it be withheld. No worthy interest in this or any country was conserved by the nearly three days' secrecy.

This is the diplomatic method that has obtained in Europe. Governments do things in secret, and powerful unscrupulous interests profit through the secrecy, before the public is taken into confidence. Such diplomacy is finding severe rebuke in this war, brought on by it, and will find far more severe rebuke before it is successfully ended.

Such methods are not for a government of the people. It is more than important—it is imperative—that our own people should know what our government is doing as soon at least as foreign nations know. The sun is rising for daylight diplomacy throughout the world. America is in fine position to become its first great exemplar.

1—And when they were come into the house, they saw the young child with Mary his mother, and fell down, and worshipped him: and when they had opened their treasures, they presented unto him gifts; gold, and frankincense, and myrrh. Matt. 2 : 11.

2—But a certain Samaritan, as he journeyed, came where he was: and when he saw him, he had compassion on him. Luke 10 : 33.

And went to him, and bound up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, and set him on his own beast, and brought him to an inn, and took care of him. Luke 10 : 34.

Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy. Matt. 5 : 7.

DECISION

of the Judges in the First Bible Picture Study, as to the best verses submitted.

The Judges are

Hon. John Wanamaker
Rev. Chas. M. Sheldon, D.D.
Judge A. S. Tompkins
Hon. P. P. Claxton
Dr. Henry Otis Dwight
Dr. Wilbert W. White, D.D.
Prof. James M. Gray, D.D.

3—In the same hour came forth fingers of a man's hand, and wrote over against the candlestick upon the plaster of the wall of the king's palace: and the king saw the part of the hand that wrote. Dan. 5 : 5.

4—Also he sent forth a dove from him, to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the ground. Gen. 8 : 8.

And he stayed yet other seven days; and again he sent forth the dove out of the ark. Gen. 8 : 10.

Announcement of the Second Bible Picture Study appears on page 100

THE PRIZE WINNERS
FIRST BIBLE PICTURE STUDY

IN announcing below the names of the winners of the prizes offered in the first Christian Herald Bible Picture Study, we are forcibly reminded of that utterance of Paul to the Corinthians—"Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run, that ye may obtain."

THE passage comes to mind because so many of our friends have written us, each expressing the hope that he or she might be numbered among those at the top of the list. Some of these letters have appealed to us profoundly, as they have shown how tremendously interested many of our friends have been because of the fine, even noble things they hoped to accomplish with the money. Doubtless many of these friends will be disappointed in not having been placed near the top. "But one receiveth the prize." Of course, this was inevitable.

ON the other hand, we have been vastly gratified by the even greater number of letters we have received stating that whether the writers won a prize or not, the real emolument would be found in their advanced knowledge of the Bible. It was with the view of stimulating Bible research that the Study was planned, and our hopes and expectations have been splendidly realized. Over 63,000 families took part in this great Bible Study, so we assume that over 300,000 people were impelled to read two thousand Bible verses every week for twenty weeks. This was the real spirit which permeated the whole effort; and so, while a few may be disappointed, we are sure that the majority will feel gratified at the far greater result that lay behind the mere giving of prizes.

THE Christian Herald heartily congratulates each and every student who took part in the study. We cannot express fully our gratification at the fine spirit of cooperation, the patient industry, the thoughtful investigation, that marked the course of the work from beginning to end. The true reward was a closer acquaintance with God's Word, and happily it is one in which all have shared, and which they will value more and more in the days to come.

First Prize, $1,250.00—Mrs. Gertrude T. Mould, Box 7, Little Falls, N. J.
Second Prize, $625.00—Miss Ruth M. Tyndall, 52 E. 102d St., New York, N. Y.
Third Prize, $350.00—Miss Myrtle Elliott, 347 Denmeade Ave., Columbus, O.
Fourth Prize, $250.00—E. L. Bugbee, R.F.D. 3, Emporia, Kansas.
Fifth Prize, $150.00—Miss Ida Goeldner, 354 N. 7th St., Newark, N. J.
Sixth Prize, $100.00—Robert A. Stewart, 415 Kambach St., Pittsburgh, Pa.
Seventh Prize, $75.00—Mrs. Edgar De Forest, 24 E. 99th St., New York, N. Y.
Eighth Prize, $50.00—A. W. Dewar, 80 Sleight St., Naperville, Ill.
Ninth Prize, $20.00—Miss Annie M. Pittman, 1075 College Ave., Elmira, N. Y.

Fifteen Prizes, $2.50 Each

Burrows, Genevieve, Kansas City, Mo.
Chaese, Agnes E., New York City, New York.
Fenton, R. Elizabeth, Fox Chase, Pa.
Griffin, Jennie, Corydon, Ind.
Lawrence, Albert C., Cleveland, Ohio.
Lockwood, George, Naco, Arizona.
Mount, Miss Matilda C., Hightstown, N. J.
Peerman, E. L., Clarksville, Va.
Rea, Mrs. Leslie A., Plattsburgh, N. Y.
Rice, Miss Mary E., Logan, Iowa.
Robinson, Mrs. M. A., Dinuba, Calif.
Smiley, Mrs. George H., Minnewaska, N. Y.
Stunz, Howard, Cherryvale, Kans.
Tyler, John E., Roxobee, N. Car.
Welsh, Mrs. Alice, Chardon, Ohio.

(Prize winners continued on next page)

5—And Ruth said, Entreat me not to leave thee or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest, I will go, and where thou lodgest, I will lodge: thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God: Ruth 1 : 16

Where thou diest, will I die, and there will I be buried: the LORD do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me. Ruth 1 :17

6—And there were in the same country shepherds abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock by night. Luke 2 : 8.

7—And he arose, and came to his father. But when he was yet a great way off, his father saw him, and had compassion and ran, and fell on his neck, and kissed him. Luke 15 : 20.

8—Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruninghooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong. Joel 3 : 10.

And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. Isa. 2 : 4

And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruninghooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more. Micah 4 : 3.

9—And Joseph was governor over the the land, and he it was that sold to all the people of the land: and Joseph's brethren came, and bowed down themselves before him with their faces to the earth. Gen. 42 : 6.

And Joseph knew his brethren, but they knew not him. Gen. 42 : 8.

And they answered, Thy servant our father is in good health, he is yet alive. And they bowed down their heads, and made obeisance. Gen. 43 : 28.

And Joseph said unto his brethren, Come near to me, I pray you. And they came near. And he said, I am Joseph your brother, whom ye sold into Egypt. Gen. 45 : 4.

Illustrated Prospectus of the
SECOND BIBLE PICTURE STUDY will be sent on request

10—And it came to pass, before he had done speaking, that, behold, Rebekah came out, who was born to Bethuel, son of Milcah, the wife of Nahor Abraham's brother, with her pitcher upon her shoulder. Gen. 24 : 15.

11—And Jesus went into the temple of God, and cast out all them that sold and bought in the temple, and overthrew the tables of the money changers, and the seats of them that sold doves. Matt. 21 : 12.

And said unto them, It is written, My house shall be called the house of prayer: but ye have made it a den of thieves. Matt. 21 : 13.

12—And he saw also a certain poor widow casting in thither two mites. Luke 21 : 2.

And he said, Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all. Luke 21 : 3.

For all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God: but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had. Luke 21 : 4.

13—And Samson took hold of the two middle pillars upon which the house stood, and on which it was borne up, of the one with his right hand, and of the other with his left. Judg. 16 : 29

And Samson said, Let me die with the Philistines. And he bowed himself with all his might; and the house fell upon the lords, and upon all the people that were therein. So the dead which he slew at his death were more than they which he slew in his life. Judg. 16 : 30.

14—And the ass saw the angel of the LORD standing in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand: and the ass turned aside out of the way, and went into the field: and Balaam smote the ass, to turn her into the way. Num. 22 : 23.

And the LORD opened the mouth of the ass, and she said unto Balaam, What have I done unto thee, that thou hast smitten me these three times? Num. 22 : 28.

15—The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. Isa. 11 : 6.

16—And the Spirit of the LORD came mightily upon him, and he rent him as he would have rent a kid, and he had nothing in his hand: but he told not his father or his mother what he had done. Judg. 14 : 6.

17—And they came to him, and awoke him, saying, Master, master, we perish. Then he arose, and rebuked the wind and the raging of the water: and they ceased, and there was a calm. Luke 8 : 24.

18—Our soul is escaped as a bird out of the snare of the fowlers: the snare is broken, and we are escaped. Ps. 124 : 7.

19—And the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening; and he drank of the brook. I Kings 17 : 6.

20—And they brought young children to him, that he should touch them: and his disciples rebuked those that brought them. Mark 10 : 13.

But when Jesus saw it, he was much displeased, and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God Mark 10 : 14.

And said, Verily I say unto you, Except ye be converted, and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven. Matt. 18 : 3.

21—And Abraham lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold behind him a ram caught in a thicket by his horns: and Abraham went and took the ram, and offered him up for a burnt offering in the stead of his son. Gen. 22 : 13.

22—Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime. Dan 6 : 10.

23—But when the morning was now come, Jesus stood on the shore but the disciples knew not that it was Jesus. John 21 : 4.

24 Thou shalt not steal Ex 20 : 15.

Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal Matt 6 : 19

For the love of money is the root of all evil: which while some coveted after, they have erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows I Tim. 6 : 10

The Prize Winners—First Bible Picture Study (continued)

Three Hundred and Ninety-five Prizes, $1.50 Each

Abbott, Mrs. A. S., Providence, R. I.
Abbott, Miss Mattie L., Potsdam, N.
Acker, Geo. M., Lorain, Ohio
Adkins, Mrs. Martha, Cartersville, Va.
Allen, Mrs. David, Ontario Center, N. Y.
Allen, Mrs. Philip, Great Neck Sta., N. Y.
Anderson, Mrs. J. A., Fountain City, Tenn.
Anderson, Mrs. James, Manson, Ind.
Anthony, Adelaide D., Watertown, N. Y.
Anthony, R. H., Crystal River, Fla.
Apple, Mrs. A. H., Spencer, Iowa.
Arnett, Dora E., Seattle, Wash.
Artherholt, Mrs. J. R., Erie, Pa.
Asch, Miss Grace L., Canastota, N. Y.
Ascherfeld, Louis H., Rutherford, N. J.
Austin, Mrs. Roberta, Pasadena, Calif.
Bacon, Anna M., Sparks, Md.
Baker, Mrs. Margaret Oxford, Ohio.
Bannen, H. M., Rockford, Ills.
Bardwell, Mrs. Dora B., Belchertown, Mass.
Bason, Miss Constance', Salem, Oreg.
Bateman, J. C., Hope, Mich.
Bateman, Mrs. Robert L., Cedarville, N. J.
Beale, Mrs. Geo. F., Coatesville, Pa.
Beane, Mrs. N. W., East Kingston, N. H.
Beddoe, Mrs. Henry, Naches, Wash.
Beilstein, Mrs. Emma, Vandergrift, Pa.
Belcher, Mrs. Belson, Wollaston, Mass.
Bell, Mrs. B. C., McComb, Miss.
Benson, Julia A., Greenfield, Mass.
Benton, Mrs. E. E., Trenton, Tenn.
Binley, Henry, White Plains, N. Y.
Binns, Mary Anderson, Corvallis, Oreg.
Biram, Rev. James, Provincetown, Mass.
Bird, Albert Allen, Waterford, Pa.
Blackburn, Mrs. Virginia, Southbridge, Mass.
Bonner, Mrs. Nelle R., Mt. Vernon, Mo.
Boulton, N. W., Northfield, Ohio
Bowditch, John F., Boston, Mass.
Bowen, Cora L., Ypsilanti, Mich.
Bower, Mrs. Dora, Erie, Pa.
Bowes, Alpin M., North Yakima, Wash.
Boyd, A. Lee, Ballinger, Texas.
Brackett, Mrs. A. L., Everett, Mass.
Bradham, Joseph M., Manning, S. C.
Bradley, Mrs. Grace, Rock Island, Ills.
Bratcher, E. E., Leitchfield, Ky.
Brittain, A. C., San Luis Obispo, Calif.
Bronson, Eugene V., Stanwood, Wash.
Brown, B. F., Hannon, Mo.
Brown, Mrs. D. S., Pittsburgh, Pa.
Browning, C. L., Milford, Texas
Bruce, Mary S., Yonkers, N. Y.
Brunkhorst, R., New York City.
Burch, Mrs. S. S., Roanoke, Va.
Burkett, Rev. A. D., Sweetser, Ind.
Butler, Mrs. P. H., Norfolk, Va.
Campbell, Jr., Mrs. T. H., Yazoo City, Miss.
Cantrell, W. T., Heber Springs, Ark.
Carlisle, Carrie L., Winfield, Kans.
Carpenter, Mary Elizabeth, Cambridge, N. Y.
Chaney, Mrs. Bertha A., Corvallis, Oreg.
Cheatham, Miss Blanche E., Norfolk, Va.
Clark, Mrs. Joseph S., Pasadena, Calif.
Clark, Mrs. Julius W., Bristol, Conn.
Clarkson, Stewart F., St. Charles, Minn.
Coburn, Miss Corinne A., Lynn, Mass.
Coe, Miss Alfreda, Galena, Kans.
Cole, Frank D., Syracuse, N. Y.
Cole, Mrs. Thos. S., Corwith, Iowa.
Coleman, Robert Lee Evans, Beallsville, Ohio.
Collum, Martha M., Honesdale, Pa.
Comer, Mrs. James Simms, Cordele, Ga.
Common, James A., Watertown, N. Y.
Conant, Mrs. Will, Medina, Ohio.
Conley, Mrs. J. W., Fresno, Calif.
Cornell, Miss Sarah E., Cambridge, N. Y
Courtney, Mrs. J. A., Danville, Ill.
Cowle, Emma M., Chardon, Ohio.
Creel, Mrs. Byron, Central City, Ky.
Crocker, Mrs. Edna F., Washington, D. C.
Crockett, Henry D., Portland, Oreg.
Crosley, Mrs. Geo. E., Milton, Wisc.
Crumlett, Mrs. Frank, Sleepy Eye, Minn.
Culbertson, Mrs. Belle C., Washington, D. C.
Cumming, Mrs. John W., Hackensack, N. J.
Daggett, Emma R., Greene, Maine.
Dana, Miss Hattie F., Wellesley Hills, Mass.
Dart, J. C., Cedar Rapids, Iowa.
Davis, Mrs. Ed., Smyrna, Ga.
Davis, Grace A., Lents, Ore.
Davis, Mrs. Louise McNutt, Williamsburg, Ohio.
Dewey, Helen E., Boonville, N. Y.
Dickinson, Esther A., So. Hadley, Mass.
Dickson, Mrs. I. J., Ontario, Ore.
Doane, Mrs. W. L., Moorecroft, Wyo.
Doig, Miss Edith G., Nyack, New York.
Edwards, Dr. Ralph T., Elysian, Minn.
Elliott, Mrs. Roy, Philadelphia, Pa.
Evans, Miss Eunice F., Worcester, New York.
Evans, Josiah, Argos, Ind.
Eversole, Mrs. Edward T., Petosi, Mo.
Farnsworth, Mrs. T. B., LaGrange, Illinois.
Farrell, H. S., Little Rock, Ark.
Favre, Miss Julia, Norfolk, Va.
Fearing, F. W., Newburyport, Mass.
Fenby, Miss Mary L., E. Orange, N. J.
Fitch, Mrs. F. M., E. Hartford, Conn.
Flagg, Marion C., Merrimac, Mass.
Foreman, Mrs. Carl, Healdsburg, Calif.
Forssberg, C. F. William, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Francis, Mrs. Jay G., Lebanon, Pa.
Freeman, Mrs. A. L., Dorchester, Mass.
French, Mrs. F. J., Stevenson, Conn.
Gainder, F. E., St. Louis, Mich.
Gallagher, Mrs. J. E., New Alexandria, Pa.
Gellar, Mr. David, Brooklyn, N. Y.
Georgi, Miss Minna M., Buffalo, N. Y.
Gibbs, Alice C., Groton, Mass.
Gibson, Mrs. O. M., Malone, New York.
Gilbert, Mrs. A. H., Tekamah, Nebr.
Gillie, Mrs. J. B., Pawling, New York.
Gilliland, W. T.,Portsmouth, Ohio.
Gilliss, Mrs. W. H., Lisbon, Md.
Glass, Mrs Neil, LaGrange, Ga.
Gleysteen, Agnes Mary, Lamberton, Minn.
Godfrey, Effie, Algona, Iowa.
Godwick, Charles S., New York, N. Y.
Gorndt, Mrs. H., Buffalo, N. Y.
Greene, Miss Eva G., N. Wilbraham, Mass.
Greenwood, Prof. William, Tampa, Fla.
Gushee, Mrs. Ed. G., Philadelphia, Pa.
Gutzmann, Clara B., Brownsville, Ore.
Hale, Mrs. W. R., Wilmington, Ohio.
Hannum, Harold A., Wilkinsburg, Pa.
Harding, Mrs. Mary W., St. Joseph, Mo.
Harter, Mrs. Elizabeth F., Altadena, Calif.
Harter, Mabel B., Chicago, Ills.
Harvey, Miss May, Yazoo City, Miss.
Haury, Mary, Moundridge, Kans.
Head, Miss Lilla, Atlanta, Ga.
Heard, Joseph W., Howard Lake, Minn.

(Prize winners continued on next page)

25 And he came and touched the bier: and they that bare him stood still. And he said, Young man, I say unto thee, Arise. Luke 7 : 14

26 Blessed is he that considereth the poor: the LORD will deliver him in time of trouble. Ps. 41 : 1.

He that hath pity upon the poor lendeth unto the LORD: and that which he hath given will he pay him again Prov. 19 : 17

27—And cast him out of the city, and stoned him: and the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul. Acts 7 : 58.

And he kneeled down, and cried with a loud voice, LORD, lay not this sin to their charge. And when he had said this, he fell asleep. Acts 7 : 60.

28—And the children of Israel journeyed from Rameses to Succoth, about six hundred thousand on foot that were men, besides children. Ex. 12 : 37.

Thou leddest thy people like a flock by the hand of Moses and Aaron. Ps. 77 : 20.

29—And he dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven: and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it. Gen. 28 : 12.

30—But it is happened unto them according to the true proverb, The dog is turned to his own vomit again; and the sow that was washed to her wallowing in the mire. II Pet. 2 : 22.

31—And they came unto the brook of Eschol, and cut down from thence a branch with one cluster of grapes, and they bare it between two upon a staff; and they brought of the pomegranates, and of the figs. Num. 13 : 23

32—And he made darkness pavilions round about him, dark waters, and thick clouds of the skies. II Sam. 22 : 12.

For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights; and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the earth. Gen. 7 : 4.

33—I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, LORD, only makest me dwell in safety. Ps. 4 : 8.

The sleep of a laboring man is sweet, whether he eat little or much: but the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep. Eccles. 5 : 12.

See Page 100
for Announcement of Second
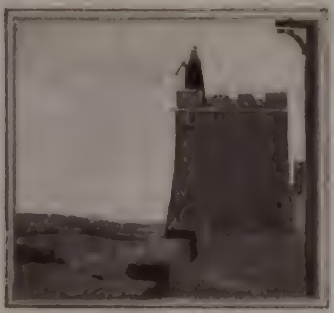
Bible Picture Study



34—Then whosoever heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh not warning: if the sword come, and take him away, his blood shall be upon his own head. Ezek. 33 : 4.

But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned, if the sword come, and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand. Ezek. 33 : 6.

So thou, O son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me. Ezek. 33 : 7.

Son of man, I have made thee a watchman unto the house of Israel: therefore hear the word at my mouth, and give them warning from me. Ezek. 3 : 17.

35—There was nothing in the ark, save the two tables of stone, which Moses put there at Horeb, when the LORD made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of the land of Egypt. I Kings 8 : 9.

If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day, and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the LORD, honorable and shalt honor him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words: Isa. 58 : 13.

And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God. Ex. 31 : 18.

36—And there went out a champion out of the camp of the Philistines named Goliath, of Gath, whose height was six cubits and a span. I Sam. 17 : 4.

Then said David to the Philistine, Thou comest to me with a sword, and with a spear, and with a shield: but I come to thee in the name of the LORD of hosts, the God of the armies of Israel, whom thou hast defied. I Sam. 17 : 45.

And the Philistine said, I defy the armies of Israel this day; give me a man, that we may fight together. I Sam. 17 : 10.

37—And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be. Rev. 22 : 12.

Wherefor do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labor for that which satisfieth not? hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Isa. 55 : 2.

It is naught, it is naught, saith the buyer: but when he is gone his way, then he boasteth. Prov. 20 : 14.

38—Then went Samson down, and his father and his mother, to Timnath, and came to the vineyards of Timnath: and, behold, a young lion roared against him. Judg. 14 : 5.

And God was with the lad; and he grew, and dwelt in the wilderness, and became an archer. Gen. 21 : 20.

39—And they set them up images and groves in every high hill, and under every green tree: II Kings 17 : 10.

They made a calf in Horeb, and worshipped the molten image. Ps. 106 : 19.

Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth. Ex. 20 : 4.

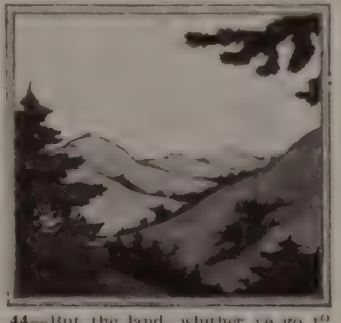
40—A righteous man regardeth the life of his beast: but the tender mercies of the wicked are cruel. Prov. 12 : 10.

Blessed are the merciful: for they shall obtain mercy. Matt. 5 : 7.

The Prize Winners—First Bible Picture Study (continued)

Heck, Hannah, Bismarck, Mo.
Heckert, Mrs. Elizabeth, Troy, W. Va.
Heilig, Mr. John C., Morgantown, W. Va.
Heiser, Mrs. E. J., Santa Ana, Calif.
Hertzler, Mrs. John H., Burlington, Iowa.
Hess, Miss Ella, Washburn, Ills.
Hess, Mrs. Jessie B., Lake Andes, So. Dak
Heyworth, Mrs. H. V., Fall River, Mass.
Hicks, B. F., So. Weymouth, Mass.
Hicks, Mrs. R. F., Forest Depot, Va.
Hildreth, Agnes S., Melrose, Mass.
Hinkle, C. A., Hartwell, Ohio.
Hodgson, Mrs. Samuel H., Felton, Del.
Hoffer, Mrs. Bertha H., Berkeley, Calif.
Hogarth, Mrs. W. H., New Market, Md.
Halcomb, Beulah, Roswell, N. Mex.
Holland, Mrs. H. C., Port Norfolk, Va.
Hood, Mrs. J. C., Jackson, Miss.
Hook, Flora I., Sioux City, Iowa.
Hoover, Mrs. F. H., Pickens, Miss.
Hopkins, Rev. F. D., Medora, Ills.
Hostetler, Mrs. R. S., Youngstown, Ohio.
Houck, Mrs. William G., Buffalo, N. Y.
Howell, Mrs. S. H., Pickens, Miss.
Hudson, Mrs. Henry, Portsmouth, N. H.
Humphrey, Mrs. Frank, Clarence Center, N. Y.
Imbrie, Charles K., Lancaster, New York.
Ingham, Florence, Madison, Wisc.
Isaacson, Mrs. Otto, Mahnomen, Minn.
Jack, E. J., New Amsterdam, Ind.
Jackson, Addison G., Biloxi, Miss.
Jeffrey, W. A., Plymouth, Ohio.
Jenkins, Marguerite E., Berlin, Wisc.
Jensen, Mrs. Jessie M., Penn Yan, New York.
Jiffus, W. G., North Rose, N. Y.
Johnson, I. E., Mt. Joy, Pa.
Johnston, Mrs. S. E., Amite, La.
Jolley, Mrs. William, La Fayette, Ind.
Jones, Rees J., Columbus, Ohio.
Jordan, Elizabeth G., Bingham, Maine.
Karlberg, Alma E., Trenton, N. J.
Keith, Margaret, Lockport, Ills.
Kellogg, Ray S., Norwalk, Ohio.
Kelly, Mrs. Ollie A., Kirkwood, Ills
Kemp, John, New York City, N. Y.
Kendrick, Mrs. N. A., Michie, Tenn.
Kinney, Mrs. C. R., Victoria, Canada.
Kitch, Miss Mollie, El Dorado, Kans.
Klotz, S. Paul, McComb, Miss.
Lake, Alice M., Mt. Pleasant, Mich.
Lake, Miss Luella, Ocean City, N. J.
Lancaster, Muriel I., London, Canada.
Landis, Mrs. Blanche McC., Honey Grove, Pa.
Lane, Dr. Jennie T., Worcester, Mass.
Lane, Louise Paye, Marshall, Tex.
Lane, Mille M., Saratoga Springs, N. Y.
Larson, Walter E., Kerkhoven, Minn.
La Shelle, Flora, Rock City, Ills.
Lattimore, Mrs. S. C., Dublin, Texas.
Laurey, Dr. N., Brooklyn, N. Y.
Lee, Mrs. Clint W., Seattle, Wash.
Lehman, C. K., Lancaster, Pa.
Lemly, Mrs. Percy, Jackson, Miss.
Leverett, Mrs. W. H., E. St. Louis, Ills.
Lindsey, A. S., Dixon, S. Dak.
Lindsey, Margaret E., Mercer, Mo.
Littlehales, Mrs. D. S., Jamestown, N. Dak.
Long, Clara M., San Antonio, Texas.
Lotterhos, P. A., Phoenix, Ariz.
Loomis, Elenor W., Eastport, Me.
Loyetz, Frank, Norwalk, Ohio.
Lynn, Mrs. P. A., Pittsburgh, Pa.
McCague, Mrs. J. A., Sewickley, Pa.
McCrosky, Mrs. Eula, Holly Springs, Miss.
McCullough, Miss M. K., Ogdensburg, New York.
McGinnis, William C., Harrison, Ohio.
McIntosh, Mrs. R. A., Morden, Canada
McKay, Mrs. F. G., Houston, Texas.
McKean, Ruth, Drayton, N. D.
McMillan, Gertrude E., Malone, New York.
McNair, Mrs. Scott, Elgin Mills, Canada.
McWillie, Mrs. N. C., Jackson, Miss.
Macartney, Mrs. Daniel J., Bath, New York.
Mackey, Florence Hudson, Jamaica, L. I., N. Y.
Mahin, Miss Florence, Battle Ground, Ind.
Mahin, Miss Dora C., New Rockford, N. Dak.
Main, Wm. A., Logan, Iowa.
Marks, Mrs. Alice V., Norfolk, Va.
Marriage, Mrs. Percy, Plummer, Minn.
Martin, Ida T., Rose, New York.
Martin, Thomas B., Arlington, N. J.
Mason, Louisa, Mt. Holly, N. J.
Maus, Chas. Wm., Winburne, Pa.
Mayer-Oakes, Mrs. F. T., Stoughton, Mass.
Menendez, Mrs. H. G., Norfolk, Va.
Merrill, Miss Edna W., Ridgewood, N. J
Meyer, Mrs. J. L., Detroit, Mich
Miles, Rose E., Berkeley, Calif.
Miller, Fred. V., Pittsburgh, Pa.
Miller, Mrs. Kate M., Musick, Calif
Miller, Mrs. O. A., Chicago, Ills.
Mills, Mrs. F. H., Newark, N. J.
Montague, Miss Bernice, St. Louis, Mo.
Moore, Mrs. Fred. H., Eaton, Colo
Moore, Sarah E., Harrisburg, Pa.
Morgan, Miss Sarah A., Methuen, Mass
Mowbray, S. Caroline, New Paltz, New York.
Neal, Chas. B., Millville, N. J.
Nelson, Carrie E., Milton, Wis
Newton, Myra A., Lake Bluff, Ills.
Nichol, Dr. W. S., Hood River, Ore
Nichols, Mary A., Manhattan Beach, Calif.

(Prize Winners Continued on Next Page)



44—But the land, whither ye go to possess it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven: Deut. 11 : 11.

Mountains, and all hills; fruitful trees, and all cedars: Ps. 148 : 9.

45—And when the ship was caught, and could not bear up into the wind, we let her drive. Acts 27 : 15.

They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters. Ps. 107 : 23.

These see the works of the LORD, and his wonders in the deep. Ps. 107 : 24.

46—The entrance of thy words giveth light; it giveth understanding unto the simple. Ps. 119 : 130.

But his delight is in the law of the LORD; and in his law doth he meditate day and night. Ps. 1 : 2.

Search the scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me. John 5 : 39.

47—And he said unto his lad, Run, find out now the arrows which I shoot. And as the lad ran, he shot an arrow beyond him. I Sam. 20 : 36.

Then ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you; that the slayer may flee thither, which killeth any person at unawares. Num. 35 : 11.

41—My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill: yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did search or seek after them. Ezek. 34 : 6.

But when he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd. Matt. 9 : 36.

Illustrated Prospectus of the
SECOND BIBLE PICTURE STUDY
Sent on request

42—And seeing the multitudes, he went up into a mountain: and when he was set, his disciples came unto him: Matt. 5 : 1.

Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve. Matt. 26 : 20.

43—And when Herod would have brought him forth, the same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with two chains: and the keepers before the door kept the prison. Acts 12 : 6.

Blessed are they which are persecuted for righteousness' sake: for theirs is the kingdom of heaven. Matt. 5 : 10.

I will both lay me down in peace, and sleep: for thou, LORD, only makest me dwell in safety. Ps. 4 : 8.

48—Now will I sing to my wellbeloved a song of my beloved touching his vineyard. My wellbeloved hath a vineyard in a very fruitful hill: Isa. 5 : 1.

Thou crownest the year with thy goodness; and thy paths drop fatness. Ps. 65 : 11.

And I have given you a land for which ye did not labor, and cities which ye built not, and ye dwell in them; of the vineyards and oliveyards which ye planted not do ye eat. Josh. 24 : 13.

Man goeth forth unto his work and to his labor until the evening. Ps. 104 : 23

53—Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth his color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright. Prov. 23:31.

54—And it came to pass at the seventh time, when the priests blew with the trumpets, Joshua said unto the people, Shout; for the LORD hath given you the city. Josh. 6 : 16.

So the people shouted when the priests blew with the trumpets: and it came to pass, when the people heard the sound of the trumpet, and the people shouted with a great shout, that the wall fell down flat, so that the people went up into the city, every man straight before him, and they took the city. Josh. 6 : 20.

It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the LORD; and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of music, and praised the LORD, saying, For he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: that then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the LORD. II Chron. 5 : 13.

55 For the builders, every one had his sword girded by his side, and so builded. And he that sounded the trumpet was by me. Neh. 4 : 18.

So built we the wall; and all the wall was joined together unto the half thereof: for the people had a mind to work. Neh. 4 : 6.

See page 100 for announcement of Second Bible Picture Study.

49—Hearken; Behold, there went out a sower to sow: Mark 4 : 3.

And it came to pass, as he sowed, some fell by the way side, and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up. Mark 4 : 4.

50—He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city. Prov. 16 : 32.

A soft answer turneth away wrath: but grievous words stir up anger. Prov. 15 : 1.

Blessed are the peacemakers: for they shall be called the children of God. Matt. 5 : 9.

51—And as he journeyed, he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven. Acts 9 : 3.

At midday, O king, I saw in the way a light from heaven, above the brightness of the sun, shining round about me and them which journeyed with me. Acts 26 : 13.

The Prize Winners—First Bible Picture Study (Continued)

Northrop, Mrs. S. Raymond, Skaneateles, N. Y.
Ogelsby, Miss Elizabeth, Parkton, Md.
Otto, Mrs. Edward, W. Sayville, L. I., N. Y.
Owen, W. B., Saint Louis, Mo.
Page, Mrs. Alfred G., Elizabeth City, N. C.
Page, Helen A., Saint Louis, Mo.
Palmer, Anna B., Salt Lake City, Utah.
Parsons, Mrs. Mary, San Luis Obispo, Calif.
Parsons, Wilder C., Chardon, Ohio.
Patterson, Albert L., New York City, N. Y.
Patterson, Mrs. Eleanor M., San Martin, Calif.
Patteson, C. H., Scottsville, Va.
Pearson, Mrs. Mary V., Bushnell, Ills.
Peck, Florence G., Jackson, Mich.
Penny, Geo. E., Laurel, N. Y.
Perry, Annie Jones, Franklinton, N. C.
Phillips, Mrs. J. A., South Carrollton, Ky.
Pickering, Mrs. H. L., Roswell, N. Mex.
Pleasants, Benjamin G., Richmond, Va.
Plummer, Mrs. Lillie M., New Hampton, N. H.
Pouder, Harriett A., Baldwin Park, Calif.
Powers, A. C., Portsmouth, Va.
Probus, Olive E., Alva, Okla.
Pye, Clara B., Ontario Center, N. Y.
Radford, Miss Bertha R., Lynchburg, Va.
Reelhorn, Dr. C. W., Pataskala, Ohio.
Regier, Clara, Moundridge, Kan.
Reimer, Wm. H., Newark, N. J.
Reitz, Mrs. Gilmore C., Brookville, Pa.
Rhodes, Mrs. Chas. H., Jamestown, N. Y.
Rhule, Rev. H. H., Nevada, Mo.
Rhule, Miss Mary M., Mt. Vernon, Mo.
Richardson, Mary L., Providence, R. I.
Richert, George, Madison, Ind.
Ringwald, Mrs. Caroline, Memphis, Tenn.
Roach, Miss Ruth E., Dallas, Texas.
Robbins, L. E., Quanah, Texas.
Roberts, Mrs. T. K., Columbiana, Ala.
Rodgers, Helen N., Brookline, Mass.
Rose, Miss L. May, Overton, Canada.
Rubel, Miss Eliza M., Winter Hill, Mass.
Ryan, Mrs. Clarence H., Melrose, N. Y.
Sanford, Mrs. Sarah V., Faribault, Minn.
Saunders, Fred, Meriden, Conn.
Savery, Martha Stuart, East Wareham, Mass.
Schmalzried, Mrs. Elmer W., East Orange, N. J.
Schulte, Mrs. E. M., Memphis, Tenn.
Scott, Mrs. C. A., Denver, Colo.
Seamans, Cora, Minneapolis, Minn.
Sears, Miss Nellie P., Berea, Ohio.
Shands, Mrs. H. R., Jackson, Miss.
Shaw, Helen, Brighton, Mass.
Shaw, Mrs. S. G., West Hebron, N. Y.
Sherwood, E. Harold, Port Chester, N. Y.
Shuman, Mrs. H. J., Chambersburg, Pa.
Skelley, Cora B., Kansas City, Mo.
Smith, Clayton, Philadelphia, Pa.
Smith, Effie M., Martinsville, Ohio.
Smith, Mrs. N. L., Turlock, Calif.
Smith, Mrs. T. B., Curran, Ills.
Smith, Mrs. Walter, Berkeley, Calif.
Snedden, Mrs. Mary C., Lexington, Miss.
Snyder, E. M., Brooklyn, N. Y.
Snyder, Lela M., Freeville, N. Y.
Snyder, W. B., Sweet Springs, Mo.
Snyder, Sarah L., Etna, N. Y.
Speckmann, Mr. T. A., Wheeling, W. Va.
Spencer, May McD., Jamestown, N. Y.
Stacy, C. I., Lakeland, Fla.
Starkey, George R., Mattapan, Mass.
Starr, Miss Nellie J., Uncasville, Conn.
Steinbeck, Miss Gertrude, New York City.
Stensrud, Mrs. Augusta, Fruitvale, Calif.
Stillinger, Mrs. C. A., Iron Mountain, Mont.
Stine, Annie G., Rockford, Ills.
Stockton, Julia E., Honey Grove, Texas.
Stookey, Joseph E., Ashland, Ohio.
Storms, Mrs. E. V., Nyack, N. Y.
Sunderman, Mrs. Alice, Springfield, Mass.
Swain, Edith L., Lakeport, N. H.
Sweetland, Mrs. Georgia, Zanesville, Ohio.
Sweetman, Mrs. J. T., Ballston Spa,, N. Y.
Taylor, Mrs. J. B., New York, N. Y.
Taylor, Sarah K., Friendship, Me.
Teague, Mrs. H. A., Siler City, N. C.
Teare, H. J., Cleveland, Ohio.
Theus, Mrs. E. G., Homer, La.
Tingelstad, O. A., Decorah, Iowa.
Todd, Mrs. Wert L., Bremo Bluff, Va.
Tospon, Mrs. Ella F., Eureka Springs, Ark.
Truscott, I. John, Hancock, Mich.
Tubbs, Nona, Pasadena, Calif.
Tubbs, Miss Venora, Maquoketa, Iowa.
Turner, Miss Edna, Monticello, Ind.
Turner, Mrs. J. E., Atlanta, Ga.
Tuttle, Nina, Providence, R. I.
Tyndall, Carlton H., New York, N. Y.
Underwood, M. E., Portsmouth, Va.
Van Cleve, S. M., Eagle Grove, Iowa.
Van Kirk, Mrs. V. E., Edgewood, Pittsburgh, Pa.
Vaughn, Mrs. A. B., Ocean Grove, N. J.
Vesey, Mrs. H. B., Norfolk, Va.
Wagy, Mrs. Ralph, Virginia, Minn.
Wall, Mrs. A. Stikeleather, Pulaski, Va.
Ward, M. E., Gary, Ind.
Warmouth, Anna, Brownsville, Ore.
Warren, Miss Eliza, Milford, Del.
Warren, Geo. A., Brighton, Mass.
Waterbury, Mrs. Harvey C., White Plains, N. Y.
Watson, Mr. Lewis R., Montclair, N. J.
Watts, Miss Sarah E., Aquidneck, R. I.
Webb, Arthur S., St. Louis, Mo.
Webb, Mrs. Samuel, Franklin, Tenn.
Webb, Mrs. Wm., Akron, Ohio.
Weidler, Mrs. Clara, Ashland, Ohio.
Welty, Mrs. C. W., Jackson, Miss.
Werntz, Miss Sallie, Evansville, Ind.
Wirth, Mrs. Ella, Harlan, Iowa.
Wheat, Miss Ida M., Redlands, Calif.
Whiting, Mrs. Fred, Waukee, Iowa.
Whitney, Mrs. C. R., Friendship, Me.
Wible, Mrs. Frank, Milford Center, Ohio.
Wilkins, Mrs. Isabella G., Alexandria, Ind.
Williams, Anne C., St. Paul, Minn.
Williams, Robert T., Washington, D. C.
Williams, Mrs. Stephen, Bethel, N. Y.
Williams, Mrs. E. T., Wittier, Calif.
Williamson, Mrs. R. P., Yazoo City, Miss.
Willis, Newton P., Norfolk, Va.
Wilson, C. G., Clarksville, Texas.
Wilson, Miss Sara J., New York, N. Y.
Winsor, Eliza V., Wrentham, Mass.
Woodbury, Mrs. E. A., Leominster, Mass,
Wolfe, Mrs. Power, Princeton, Ky.
Wood, Helen, Brookings, S. D.
Woodson, Thomas P., Brook, Ind.
Wray, Mrs. P. C., Martinsville, Va.
Wright, Wm. A., Pasadena, Calif.
Wright, Wm. H., Tonawanda, N. Y.
Zeh, Mrs. Frank B,. Corinth, N. Y.
Ziegler, Mrs. C. B., Kansas City, Mo.

59—Thus he shewed me: and, behold, the LORD stood upon a wall made by a plumbline, with a plumbline in his hand. Amos 7 : 7.

And the LORD said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, A plumbline. Then said the LORD, Behold, I will set a plumbline in the midst of my people Israel: I will not again pass by them any more. Amos, 7 : 8

I lifted up mine eyes again, and looked, and behold a man with a measuring line in his hand. Zech. 2 : 1

60—Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night sheweth knowledge. Ps. 19 : 2.

And the sun stood still, and the moon stayed, until the people had avenged themselves upon their enemies. Is not this written in the book of Jasher? So the sun stood still in the midst of heaven, and hasted not to go down about a whole day. Josh. 10 : 13.

52—And it came to pass in the morning, that Jonathan went out into the field at the time appointed with David and a little lad with him. I Sam. 20 : 35.

And he said unto his lad, Run, find out now the arrows which I shoot. And as the lad ran, he shot an arrow beyond him. I Sam. 20 : 36

56—And Moses lifted up his hand, and with his rod he smote the rock twice: and the water came out abundantly, and the congregation drank, and their beasts also. Num. 20 : 11.

Behold, I will stand before thee there upon the rock in Horeb; and thou shalt smite the rock, and there shall come water out of it, that the people may drink. And Moses did on in the sight of the elders of Israel. Ex. 17 : 6.

He clave the rocks in the wilderness, and gave them drink as out of the great depths. Ps. 78 : 15.

57—But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher: then shalt thou have worship in the presence of them that sit at meat with thee. Luke 14 : 10.

But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank: therefore he requested of the prince of the eunuchs that he might not defile himself. Dan. 1 : 8.

And there was set meat before him to eat: but he said, I will not eat, until I have told mine errand. And he said, Speak on. Gen. 24 : 33.

58—Fear ye not me? saith the LORD: will ye not tremble at my presence, which have placed the sand for the bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it: and though the waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it? Jer. 5 : 22.

Further particulars of the winning of the prizes, including scores and other interesting matter, will appear next week.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D.D.

Rice Economical Food Product

IN trying to solve the problem of making the wage of the average man meet the enormously high cost of food, the housekeepers of the land have found rice to be their help. In its purchase they find that for the least money they get the largest amount of nutriment for the table. One-third of the human race lives on rice. The Japanese soldiers fed on it mainly and amazed the world by their power and endurance. While rice was originally a native of the East Indies, it is now cultivated in all parts of the world where heat and moisture are friendly to it. In British India there are millions of acres of it under cultivation; in Ceylon 600,000 acres. It is grown in large quantities in Siam, China, Japan, Java, Egypt, Brazil, in the plains of Lombardy, and in Valencia in Spain. Rice was introduced into our country at the close of the seventeenth century, and now forms an important part of our Southern industry. Something like $25,000,000 worth of this cereal has been marketed this season from Arkansas and the Gulf Coast states of Texas and Louisiana, where $75,000,000 is invested in the industry. The rice of South Carolina in size and quality is said to be the finest in the world. In that state the rice is sown in rows in the bottom of trenches which are eighteen inches apart; the trenches are filled with water to the depth of several inches till the seeds germinate; then the water is turned off. It is flooded again to kill the weeds, and the last time when the grain is near ripening. It is harvested with the self-binder, threshed with the steam thresher, husked, dried quickly and is ready for market. The Agricultural Department at Washington claims that rice is far more nutritious than wheat, corn or meat, but some competent scientists would question the statement. All admit that this cereal is highly nutritious, and as it is about the only article of food that has not advanced in price, many families are turning to it as a wise economy. In all parts of the world rice is sown in fields covered with water. In olden times certain cereals were similarly sown. There is this reference to it in enforcing the lesson of charity: "Cast thy bread upon the waters; for thou shalt find it after many days." (Eccles. 11 : 1.)

Protection for the Birds

APPROVAL of the treaty for the protection of migratory birds recently ratified by the United States and Canada has now been given by Great Britain. The treaty is to remain in force fifteen years, and beyond that period unless one of the contracting parties gives twelve months' notice in advance of a desire to terminate it. The most vital provisions of the treaty are: That no bird important to agriculture because it is an insect destroyer shall be shot at any time; that no open season on any species of game birds shall extend for a longer period than three and one-half months; that both the United States and Canada shall so restrict open seasons on game birds as to prevent their being taken during the breeding season; that there shall be no shipment from one country to the other of birds which are taken contrary to law. Thus not only will the many valuable species of game birds which journey across the border in their migratory flight be adequately protected, but the even more important insectivorous birds may come and go in entire safety. The migration of birds is God's guidance of them through the trackless air to the places where they find a congenial climate and food necessary for their life. Christ thus refers to God's care for the birds: "Behold the fowls of the air; for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them." (Matt. 6 : 26.)

© International Film Service, Inc.

Ambitious Cripple Girl Artist

PARALYZED from her shoulders down, her useless little shrunken hands lying quite still on a pillow in front of her, a small girl dreams of the day when she will be a famous artist. And these dreams have brought her a new power or sense, for the little stricken one has learned to use her mouth to hold her pencils and brushes while she draws the pictures that are the delight and pride of the Brooklyn Hospital of St. Giles the Cripple. The brave little artist, Ethel Toussaint, is just fourteen years old. For seven years, ever since her recovery from an attack of infantile paralysis, she has been unable to move her twisted, pain-racked little body. But her mind was busy, and her will to become an artist has caused her to overcome almost insurmountable obstacles. Some day, she says, she will walk again, and then she will paint her great picture. "It's just trying that brings things," Ethel declares. "I could not draw well with my mouth at first. But I wanted to so hard, I finally found a way. You see, you can't waste time growing up and growing strong when you mean to be an artist." How many great geniuses have risen above physical misfortune to success! Æsop, the father of fablists, was a crippled slave and Homer, the greatest singer of the centuries was blind. May Ethel have the largest success in fulfilling her ideals. God has evened up life with its compensations. It is extended into a realm where the cripple will be well, and the ambitious will meet with ever widening expanses to all eternity. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." (Rev. 21 : 4.)

The Ideal American Hen

THERE were some excellent features connected with the twenty-eighth annual Madison Square Garden Poultry Show, which after about a week's exhibit closed January 3. One was motion pictures, and daily talks by government and state experts on important subjects. For the first time in years there was an exhibition of White Dorking ducks. This breed was brought to England during the Roman occupation. Harry M. Lamon, head of the government farm at Beltsville, Md., promised a brand new hen in which will be centered all the good points of all the good breeds. He has been working for five years cultivating the stock of the hen, as Burbank does his flowers, and promises to have this ideal American fowl ready for the exhibition next year. It has white plumage, yellow legs, red ear-lobes, and a moderate-sized comb. In laying qualities and size of eggs it closely resembles the Leghorn. It has as much meat on its body as a Wyandotte, Barred Rock, or Plymouth Rock. Chicken-raising among the Jews is implied in this reference to the hen: "How often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not." (Matt. 23 : 37.)

The Bigness of Texas

A COSMOPOLITAN said: "It has been said that all the people in the world could find standing room in Texas." Some people of the Lone Star State were surprised at the conservativeness of the statement, and said that they had one county alone, El Paso, which could accommodate every man, woman and child on the earth with a space of fifteen square yards, and that the entire state could give a space of 500 square yards to every inhabitant of the globe. If the families were of five persons each, every family would have half an acre of ground. It is said that a family can keep 3,000 hens on half an acre and make from seventy-five cents to one dollar on each hen. The proud Texan boasts that his state can not only give standing room for the race, but can support it too. Texas claims to be able to support the population of the earth with eggs and chickens, but meanwhile goes on raising cotton and other products in enormous proportions, and retaining its place as the first agricultural state in the Union. Of that state these words can be appropriately spoken: "Thou art a great people, and hast great power." (Joshua 17 : 17.)

Bottle Drifts 6,600 Miles

AFTER drifting 6,600 miles in the South Pacific Ocean, a bottle containing a position report of the steamship Eureka of Seattle, thrown overboard off the Peruvian coast by Captain J. E. Guptill, the vessel's master, February 9, 1915, was found March 1, 1916, on the beach at Tamasua, Yasawa group, Fiji Islands. There has been a difference of opinion among mariners as to the set of the current off the coast of South America, and the finding of the message is of great value, as it determines the direction of the flow of ocean water in that part of the world. The sea is a book which has revealed vast stores of knowledge to the scholars of modern times. Science has measured its depth, photographed its floor, analyzed its plants, classified its finny tribes, covered its surface with fleets, conquered its waves in the storm, timed its tides, and found out the flow of its currents. In finding the direction of the current in the South Pacific, science is only finding out God's method in exerting his power in the great waters. "Thy way is in the sea, and thy path in the great waters." (Ps. 77 : 19.)

Pauper Gets $150,000

WHILE he, his wife and six children were eating a charity Christmas dinner in a basement in the slum district of Albany, a man of that city received a letter from England notifying him that a fortune of $150,000 had been left to him by his father, a prominent English barrister who recently died. He was the business failure of the family and was sent over here as a remittance man. Some weeks ago Dr. C. R. Storey, a local clergyman, who devotes his time to the relief of the poor, heard from neighbors that this man's six children were without food or adequate clothing. He had three of them sent to the Humane Society, while philanthropists did what they could for the father, mother and smaller children. On Christmas Day the three older children came home to eat the charity dinner furnished by the charity committee of the Kiwanis Club, and while they were eating the turkey and "trimmings" the letter came with the news of their fortune. Skinner will get $750 a year for six years under the will, and then will receive all the income of the $150,000. His children will divide the income after his death. Through the mediation of an Elder Brother, the poorest children of earth are endowed by the heavenly Father with "an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away." I Peter 1 : 4.

Burned Children with Pennies

A NUMBER of children were playing in the street in Braddock, Pa., the other evening when a man appeared with a skillet full of pennies and said to them that he was going to throw the coins up in the air, and those that got them could have them to keep. The happy children cheered the man for the rare fun he was affording them, and for his generosity in their behalf. Up went the pennies, and the children began the scramble for them. Loud as were the shouts of happiness were the screams of pain, for the man had heated the pennies red hot, and the tender little fingers were blistered badly. The man was convulsed with laughter at the huge joke he thought he had played. The children and their parents and the neighbors did not think it a joke, and they gathered about the man and were about to do him severe bodily injury when a policeman came along and arrested him for his cruel act. The paper recording the incident gave the man's name. We have omitted it. Christ's love for children was so intense, that he said that kind treatment of a child was a kind treatment of himself. "And whoso shall receive one such little child in my name receiveth me." (Matt. 18 : 5.)

Are Your Eyes as good as your memory?

Sometimes you look up from the Present into the Past, with all its memories. It is easy to do that.

But, here in the Present, are you able—

To look up from near objects and, without changing or removing glasses, see distant objects clearly?

KRYPTOK GLASSES

THE INVISIBLE BIFOCALS

Do enable you to see both near and distant objects as clearly and distinctly as with the eyesight of youth.

KRYPTOK (pronounced Crip-tock) Glasses end the annoyance of removing your reading glasses every time you look at objects more than a few feet away. They free you from fussing with two pairs.

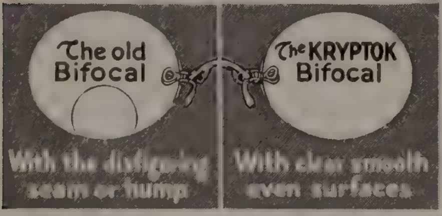
KRYPTOKS combine near and far vision in one crystal-clear lens—free from line, seam or hump. They cannot be distinguished from single vision glasses.

Ask your oculist, optometrist, or optician about KRYPTOK Glasses.

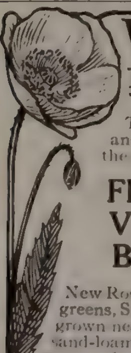
Write for Booklet, "Eyesight Efficiency"

When writing, please give (if possible) name of your oculist, optometrist or optician.

KRYPTOK COMPANY, Inc.
1061 Old South Building, Boston, Mass.



The old Bifocal
With the disfiguring seam or hump
The KRYPTOK Bifocal
With clear smooth even surfaces



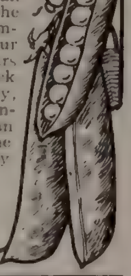
What Shall I Get for My Garden?

The 63rd edition of our catalogue answers. In it you will find described the choicest varieties of

Flower Seeds
Vegetable Seeds
Bedding Plants

New Roses, flowering Shrubs, Evergreens, Shade and Fruit Trees, all grown near Lake Erie, where the sand-loam-clay soil, the mild summers and rugged winters make our plants of superior quality. 63 years of "Golden Rule" dealings. Stock true to name, packed carefully, shipped promptly, delivery guaranteed. With our catalogue you can get all your garden needs from one firm, on one order. Write today for a copy mailed free.

The Storrs & Harrison Co.
Box 339 Painesville, Ohio



Bicycle Book FREE

A book to delight boys' and girls' hearts. Save money! Offers guaranteed bicycles—$19.95 and up. Write nearest house. Montgomery Ward & Co Dept. G169, New York, Chicago, Kansas City, Ft. Worth, Portland, Ore.

HIGH-VALUE PATENTS

—the ONLY kind Wanted and BOUGHT by Manufacturers. Send 8c postage for new book of Extraordinary Interest to Inventors

R. S. & A. B. LACEY 61 Barrister Building, Washington, D. C.

Kotzebue and the Kobuk

By FRANK G. CARPENTER

Copyright, 1917, by Frank G. Carpenter

THIS letter relates to Kotzebue and the Kobuk. It deals with Arctic Alaska, that vast area which lies between the Arctic Circle and the Arctic Ocean. It treats of one of the least known countries of the world and one of the strangest. My information concerning it comes from talks with its prospectors and explorers, who have drifted to Nome for their winter supplies, and with the miners and traders who live there and who have taken advantage of open navigation to pay their annual summer visit to this metropolis of the North. I have had several interviews with Judge M. F. Moran, who represents our farthest north in the legislature of Alaska. He lives so far away from Juneau, the capital, that his mileage allowance is $900. His home is at Shungnak, on the Kobuk River above the Arctic Circle, and so far north that during the summer he has broad daylight for three months in succession, while for a part of the winter his home is almost shrouded in darkness.

Arctic Alaska comprises about one-fourth of the territory. If you could lift it up and drop it down upon Europe it would more than cover the half of France, Germany or the Spanish peninsula, and it would entirely hide the British Isles with its blanket of snow.

Arctic Alaska may be said to begin a little south of Bering Strait and to run from there eastward to the Canadian boundary, and northward to the Arctic Ocean. The country comprises some parts of the northern watershed of the Yukon, and it includes the Rocky Mountain system, which, extending from the United States through Canada, runs almost to the western end of Alaska. The mountains are a mile and a half high where the range leaves Canada, and they fall to the height of the Alleghanies, or lower, on their way westward.

The coastal plains are a part of the tundra belt that encircles the Arctic Ocean. Much of the ground is low and swampy. It has great lagoons and morasses and many slow-flowing rivers. The plains are covered with moss, upon which the Eskimos graze their reindeer. There is practically no timber, except the stunted trees in the mountains, and the alder and willows which grow along the banks of the streams.

THE vast country has less population than any other under the American flag. It has a few white men living along Kotzebue Sound and on the banks of the Kobuk River, and there are, all told, perhaps three or four thousand Eskimos.

One of the chief trading stations is at Kotzebue Sound. The white men in charge there tell me that they have during the summer 500 native families living in canvas tents, and that the Eskimos come in by sea from as far north as Point Barrow. They use great skin boats, called omiaks, which are five or six feet in width and thirty feet long. Such boats will carry from five to eight tons. They have square sails and are propelled also by paddles.

The natives bring with them the furs they have caught in the winter, and trade them for calicos, ginghams and other cloth. They buy all kinds of hardware and especially needles for the sewing of parkas and mukluks. They want the best of guns, knives and hatchets. They buy canned foods of various kinds, and even stoves and window glass to take back to their homes. One reason for their coming to Kotzebue is to catch salmon, the winter food supply for themselves and their dogs.

I ASKED the trader to tell me something as to the character of Kotzebue Sound. He replied:

"It is a great bay, into which flow some of the largest rivers of northern Alaska. One is the Kobuk, which is six or seven hundred miles long; another the Noatak, which is almost as large, and a third is the Selawik, which is more than half the length of the Kobuk. The port is an open roadstead, but there is good shelter for ships, except when the south wind blows.

"The fish of that region are caught in the icebergs, and are fine and fat. Owing to the intense cold, they have a coat of blubber between the skin and the flesh. We have a great many salmon, and also speckled trout and Dolly Varden trout. Our cannery has a capacity of 15,000 cans per annum, and it has been shipping salmon and salmon trout for four or five years. The salmon is of a light color and it does not bring so much for that reason. But to offset this we have the Dolly Varden trout, which reaches a weight of ten or fifteen pounds and a length of three feet."

One of the best authorities on Kotzebue Sound and the Kobuk River is Judge M. F. Moran, who lives on the Kobuk two or three hundred miles from the sound. Said he:

"It is three thousand miles from Seattle to Kotzebue, and the steamers make regular sailings there every July and August. There are small steamers on the Kobuk, and goods are carried up that stream into the heart of the territory. I live in the Kobuk Valley and have been there for twelve years, winter and summer. I have taken up a homestead of 320 acres about two hundred miles east of the sound. It is the farthest north of any homestead in Uncle Sam's territory."

"What kind of a climate have you?" I asked.

"I consider the Kobuk Valley one of the most delightful parts of Alaska," replied Judge Moran. "We have four months of summer and six or seven months of very cold weather. All the streams are frozen solid by the 1st of October and we have a steady cold from then until about the middle of May. Shortly after that the ice goes out with a rush and summer begins.

"There are, perhaps, seventy-five white people who live on the Kobuk and its tributaries. Many of the men have brought their wives with them, and children have been born in the country. Among our people are emigrants from North Dakota and Minnesota; they say that the climate of the Kobuk is quite as good as the country from which they came.

"We put away our lamps in March and do not bring them out until late in September. You can read a newspaper at any hour of the night without artificial light. There is so much sunshine that everything grows twice as fast as in the states. The grass along the river is as high as your head, and the land everywhere is green and spotted with wild flowers. We have great fields of blue forget-me-nots, thousands of wild roses of a delicate pink, buttercups as yellow as gold and sheets of fireweed that wave under the wind like masses of flames. We have altogether forty different varieties of wild flowers. We have also many wild berries. Our cranberries are only half as large as those of the states, but they are redder and their flavor is better. We have wild raspberries, gooseberries and currants, and salmonberries of a pale lemon color. We have all kinds of moss, and especially that upon which the reindeer feeds. There are now several thousand reindeer in the district. They are owned by the Eskimos.

"We are now raising vegetables. We used to bring our turnips, potatoes, carrots and cabbages from Seattle, not realizing that we could grow them ourselves. We now raise all we want out in the open, and also lettuce, peas and beans. We grow the finest of tomatoes and cucumbers in our hothouses.

"The whole valley is full of wild birds. There are great flocks of wild geese, ducks and sandhill cranes that come to feed on the berries that grow on the banks of the lakes. These birds or resort to snuff and vapors—they only irritate the delicate membranes.

Don't Neglect Catarrh

Modern science proves catarrh a symptom of poor health.

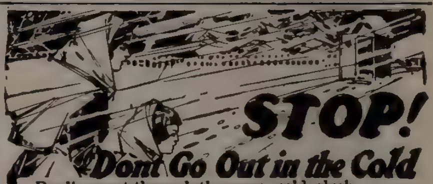
Treat the cause with SCOTT'S EMULSION which contains pure cod liver oil to enrich the blood and energize the system, hypophosphites to nourish and upbuild the nerves, and glycerine to sooth and heal.

Thousands testify that Scott's Emulsion overcame catarrh in a permanent, natural way and it will surely help you.

Avoid the alcoholic substitutes

13-110

SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.



STOP!

Don't Go Out in the Cold

Don't go out through the snow, cold, slush or nasty weather to the old unhealthy, unsanitary open privy. Let the children, ladies or the old folks enjoy the comfort and convenience of a warm, clean, odorless sanitary indoor closet. The unsightly germ-breeding, disease-spreading outhouse is a menace to your health.

WOLVERINE Chemical Toilet

protects your health, saves you money. Pays for itself many times in a year. No water, sewer or cesspool. Endorsed by health officials. No more coughs, colds, lumbago, rheumatism, or neuralgia caused by unnecessary exposure. No more big doctor bills.

Easy to install. Costs less than a cent a day upkeep. Cheapest closet on the market. Thousands now in use. FREE BOOK tells all.

DAIL STEEL PRODUCTS CO.
404 Main St., Lansing, Mich.

GREGORY'S 1917 CATALOG

Our 1917 Catalog is brimful of valuable information for flower-lovers and vegetable growers. More than a mere catalog—beautifully illustrated. Mailed free! Our stocks of seeds are complete—in spite of a national seed shortage.

SPECIAL QUALITY OFFER 10c

Early Flowering Cosmos, finest mixed, daintiest colors; Giant Branching Asters, select mixture, beautiful shades; Heddewig's Pinks, delicate markings; Candytuft, mixed varieties; Carnation-flowered Poppy, double-fringed, mixed. All postpaid for 10c. And—get our 1917 catalog today.

J. J. H. GREGORY & SON
119 Elm St. Marblehead, Mass.

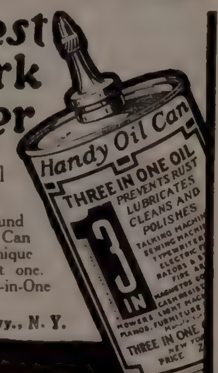
GREGORY'S HONEST SEEDS

The Biggest Little Work Saver Ever

It's the Handy Oil Can filled with 3-in-One Oil and it costs but 25c.

3-in-One has a hundred uses round the home and the Handy Oil Can is the cleverest and most unique container you ever saw. Get one. FREE—Sample bottle of 3-in-One and Dictionary of Uses

3-in-One Oil Co., 42CG. Bdwy., N. Y.



Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it, write

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

PATENTS That Protect and Pay

Advice and Books FREE. Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.

WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D. C.

arrive about May 1, sending out their scouts in advance. The natives watch for the first goose and then prepare for the hunt.

"We have two species of ptarmigan," Judge Moran continued. "One of these is the size of a quail and the other that of a prairie chicken. These birds are to be found the year around, and, strange to say, they change their color with the season. In the summer the feathers are brown, the color of the tundra. In the winter they turn to snow white, so that it is difficult to see the birds against the snow. This is a protection of nature. It is the same with our rabbits. They are brown in the summer and in the winter snow white. We have millions of rabbits. They feed on the bark of the willow trees, and they will eat the bark as high as they can reach, standing on the snow as they do so. This kills the trees, and you often see dead willow thickets of vast extent.

"We have moose here and there and thousands of caribou. The caribou go about in large droves in the winter. As to fur animals, we have otter and muskrat, ermine and marten, and our mink are noted the world over for their fine fur. We have the ideal climate for fur production and we can breed foxes, marten, mink and ermine. The Kobuk was once the natural home of the beaver, but that animal is now almost extinct. During one year we shipped muskrat skins to the amount of $100,000. We are now shipping none. Muskrats could be raised on farms all over Alaska."

"Is the country well mineralized?"

"Yes, there is more or less gold all along the Kobuk. You can drive your shovel almost anywhere into the gravel of the creeks and find color. In 1913, a nugget as big as my hand was brought into the store at Kotzebue Sound and traded for goods. That nugget weighed forty-four and one-half ounces, and its actual value was almost $1,000.

"The country is full of minerals, but no one knows just what there is nor the values. As to copper, we have some large deposits.

"Among the other minerals we have large deposits of asbestos, silver and coal. Some of the silver is placer, and can be washed from the streams. We have also antimony and tungsten, and a jade which, it is believed, will command a high price in the market.

"There is one coal mine on the Kobuk that has supplied the local demand for the past eighteen years, and there are other beds of fairly good coal near the Arctic Ocean. One of the deposits covers twenty-five square miles. It is also reported that there is a lake of oil and oil springs northwest of Wainwright. The government has long known of an oil belt there, but the region has not been surveyed nor prospected. In fact, no one knows what we have in these far northern parts of Alaska. It may be that the next great gold stampede will be to this region."

THE Sitka Training School at Sitka, Alaska, about which Frank G. Carpenter told in one of his recent articles in the Christian Herald, was founded by Rev. Alonzo E. Austin in 1885. Mr. Austin, who had been teaching in Sitka for three years before this date, was the first superintendent, his term of service extending to 1892, and he and his wife were greatly loved by both the native and white residents of southern Alaska. He died January 16, 1915. Mr. Austin was followed in the leadership of the school by Dr. Sheldon Jackson, who so impressed his personality upon the enterprise that in 1911 the trustees decided to name the school for Dr. Jackson.

Young People's Topics for February 4

Visions and Tasks

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic.
Joel 2 : 28-29; II Chron. 34 : 1-7

VISIONS are great things, yet we think little of the man whom we refer to as "only a dreamer." We emphasize "only," for we realize the value of dreams when the dreamer can make them come true.

Young King Josiah had a vision of Judah purged of idolatry, worshiping once more her God, Jehovah. Josiah might have stayed in his palace and developed his vision. He might have prayed to Jehovah to remove the idolatrous practices from the kingdom; he might have called a convention of all the principal men and women of Jerusalem and under the inspiration of his vision they might have passed stirring resolutions condemning Baal and all his works; they might have had the resolution transcribed and a copy sent to the head of every village under Josiah's rule. All this might have been done and the groves might still have flourished and the people might still have debased themselves before the heathen gods. But Josiah went out to the scenes of sin, and "they brake down the altars of Baalim in his presence." And he only returned to Jerusalem when all the groves had been destroyed. Then he repaired the house of God.

According to the Christian Worker's Magazine one of the secrets of the wonderful growth of Christianity in Korea is the insistence that no convert shall be received into full membership who has not brought another soul to Christ. We make no such rule here, but the church in America is strong, nevertheless, in proportion to the ability of its members to influence decisions for Christ. Imposing churches, fine music, decorous audiences, great conventions—all these look good as visions, but they mean little unless they become an active, vital element in the task of winning the world for Christ.

My Attitude Toward My "Social Inferiors"

Epworth League Topic. James 2 : 1-13

OH, how we hate a snob! The cult of the upturned nose has our utter disdain, especially when we seem cast for the part of the inferior. "The idea of that person considering herself so superior!" is an expression often heard in some form or other from the lips of one who has been left out of the plans of "that person." Yet the one who is so vocal in his denunciation of snobbery may be guilty of the same attitude toward some one else. Riches have always colored the vision of those they own. Gold in the pocket brings out all the dross in the man; and pride of birth can mightily distort our vision. We must not regard men as Christians in the light of their balance in the bank, their dress, their family, their education. We are all under condemnation of sin, and, as James says, a lawbreaker is a lawbreaker. We are all restored by the grace of God through the same sacrifice of the one Saviour.

It ill becomes us to class ourselves within the church as superiors or inferiors; we are all brethren in Christ. Now we cannot deny that some have gifts of one sort and some of another. Some can give churches away every day before breakfast, and some, only by dint of much saving, can give an occasional breakfast to one who is hungry. Some can speak wondrously of the power of God, and others are tongue-tied in their vocal testimony yet potent for God by the influence of their daily living. Some abide in mansions and others live in the second floor rear of a dark alley. Some dress faultlessly and others display many an honest patch, but all are sons of God, joint heirs of Christ. Yes, and some speak four languages well, while others offend grievously against the syntax and grammar of one. Yet the man of little education and great faith, of little money but much consecration, may outrank, in God's eyes, the man of faultless speech whose church membership is but little more than a family custom kept up for appearance's sake.

The writer remembers well a certain old saint who was a member of the same church with him in a Western state. He was old and bent and shaky with palsy. He was poor and his clothes were patched and threadbare. He made a meager living by sawing and splitting wood from house to house at $1.50 a cord, one dollar being big earnings for one of his days. He seldom missed prayer meeting, and his swaying figure never failed to rise for testimony or his quavering voice to be uplifted in prayer. He always sat in a front row and usually alone. One evening the attendants were surprised to find him in the leader's chair. The pastor, unexpectedly called away, had asked Father Vredenburg to lead the meeting. Some good women looked their disapproval as they entered. Some exchanged significant whisperings and head-shakings. Manifestly it was in bad taste to set over them in a meeting the humble wood-sawyer who filled their fuel bins. But the meeting went on through song and opening prayer to the topic, and the topic was the Twenty-third Psalm. Father Vredenburg was of good old Dutch stock; his poverty was honest poverty, but no less grinding therefor, and he had lived with that psalm. It had been his comfort by day and his refuge by night. As he developed the message of the psalm it became a revelation, and the eyes filled that had glanced haughtily at the bent figure in the chair, and the heads that had nodded disapproval first hung in shame and then rose in rapt attention. The power of God rested upon that humble man in that hour, and those who had haggled with him over fractions of a cord, over pennies that meant little to them but meat to him, crowded about him after the meeting to grasp his hand. Who were the inferiors there? One of those women said she never again would "patronize" another person.

Mitchell

$1460 For 7-passenger Six—48 h. p. 127-inch Wheelbase.
$1150 For Mitchell Junior—40 h. p. 120-inch Wheelbase Six.
Both prices f. o. b. Racine

A Thousand Extra Values

Due to John W. Bate

That is not an exaggeration. You will find in the Mitchell a thousand extra values, as compared with most rival cars. They are all paid for by factory savings, due to John W. Bate. He built and equipped this mammoth plant to build this one car economically. His efficiency methods have cut our factory cost in two.

This year our new body plant brings a vast new saving. And that all goes into added luxury.

No other fine car in the world is built under like efficiency methods. So the Mitchell gives you, as compared with rivals, at least 20 per cent extra value. And gives it in things which everybody wants.

Where Mitchell Is Unique

In the past three years, out of factory savings, we have doubled our margins of safety. Now every vital part is tested for 100 per cent over-strength. The result is a car of superlative endurance—probably a lifetime car.

Over 440 parts are made of toughened steel. Parts which get a major strain are all of Chrome-Vanadium, and all oversize.

Steering parts, axles, gears and driving parts are built twice as strong as need be. The Bate cantilever springs are so strong that never has one been broken.

Extra Features—Added Luxury

The Mitchell includes 31 extra features, all paid for by factory savings. That is, features—like a power tire pump—which practically all cars omit. These extras alone cost us $4,000,000 this year.

All we save in our new body plant goes this year into added luxury. We have added 24 per cent to the cost of our finish, upholstery and trimming.

Our finish coats, to get a deep, enduring lustre, are now fixed by heat. Our extra-grade leather costs 50 per cent more than the usual grades.

Every detail is exquisite. The car shows lavish luxury. No other car at near this price was ever so attractive.

Go see these models at the nearest Mitchell showroom. Let the dealer point out all the extras.

For your own sake, learn what Bate efficiency methods have accomplished in car building.

MITCHELL MOTORS COMPANY, Inc.
Racine, Wis., U. S. A.

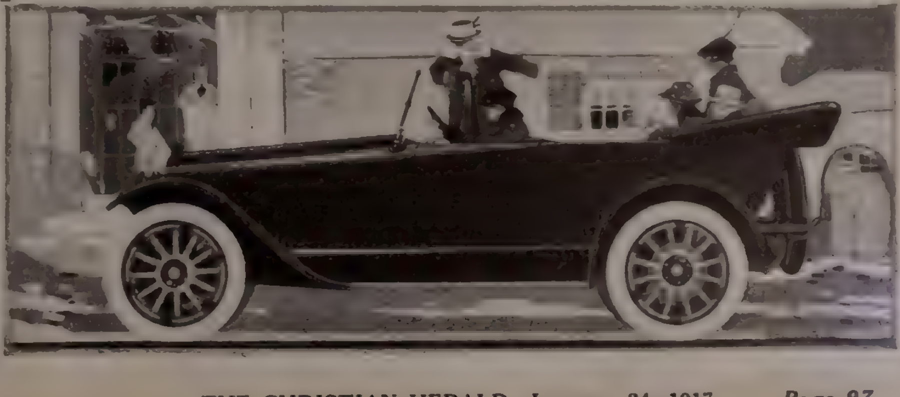
TWO SIZES

Mitchell—a roomy, 7-passenger Six, with 127-inch wheelbase. A high speed, economical 48-horse-power motor. Disappearing extra seats and 31 extra features included.
Price $1460, f. o. b. Racine

Mitchell Junior a 5-passenger Six on similar lines with 120-inch wheelbase. A 40-horse-power motor—¼-inch smaller bore than larger Mitchell.
Price $1150, f. o. b. Racine

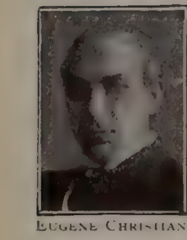
Also all styles of enclosed and convertible bodies. Also demountable tops.

(258)



The Danger of Stomach Acidity and Fermentation

By ARTHUR TRUE BUSWELL, M. D.



Eugene Christian

If I were asked to sound a health warning that would be of the greatest possible benefit to mankind, I should say emphatically —"Beware of acid stomach." For acid stomach is the cause of fermentation which, bad enough in itself, is the forerunner of a hundred ills that sap the energy and vitality of its victims. I venture to say that ninety per cent of all sickness starts with acid stomach.

Nature provides hydrochloric acid as one of the digestive fluids, but too much of this acid causes fermentation, hurries the food out of the stomach and carries the acid all through the body. As a consequence, poisons (toxins) are formed which are absorbed into the blood, causing auto-intoxication, nervousness, mental depression and countless ills of which this is but the beginning.

Every one of the vital organs in time becomes affected — the heart, the liver, the kidneys, the intestines, the nerves and the brain all decline, for the stomach is the Power Plant of the body. Even the teeth are affected by acid stomach, for the gums recede and pyorrhoea will be the result.

Stomach remedies only neutralize the acid because they are stronger than the acid. This ultimately ruins the lining of the stomach. The acid being neutralized is absorbed into the blood only to come back to the stomach in greater quantities at the next meal.

How much more sensible would it be to attack this disorder at its source. Instead of attempting to neutralize the acid after it has formed, why not prevent it from forming in the first place?

Superacidity is caused by wrong eating, and the remedy must be found in the field of the cause — in eating correctly.

The individual sufferer from indigestion, acidity, fermentation, gas and such disorders has not carried his experiments with food very far. If he had he could easily cure himself, as Eugene Christian, the famous food scientist, has proved beyond all doubt.

The reason which led Eugene Christian to take up the study of food in the first place was because he himself, as a young man, was a great sufferer from stomach and intestinal trouble.

So acute was his affliction that the best specialists of the day, after everything within their power had failed, gave him up to die. Educated for a doctor himself, Christian could get no help from his brother physicians.

Believing that wrong eating was the cause and that right eating was the only cure, he took up the study of foods and their relation to the human system. What he learned not only restored his own health in a remarkably short space of time, but has been the means of relieving some 25,000 other men and women for whom he has prescribed with almost invariable success, even though most of them went to him as a last resort.

Christian says that all stomach and intestinal disorders—with their countless sympathetic ills — are caused by wrong selections and wrong combinations of food, and that right combinations of food will positively remove every stomach and intestinal disorder by removing its causes.

No one would think of putting salt into an open wound, and yet we do worse than that when we keep putting irritating acid-creating food combinations into our stomachs already surcharged with acid.

The word diet is one which has an unpleasant sound — it makes us think of giving up all the things we like for those we have no taste for. But Eugene Christian's method is entirely different — instead of asking his patients to give up the things they enjoy, he prescribes menus which are twice as enjoyable as those to which the patient is accustomed.

Christian believes in good foods, deliciously cooked — the kind all of us like best and which may be obtained at any home store, hotel or restaurant. He says that most of the things we eat are all right — but that we don't know how to combine or balance them.

Often, one food good in itself, when combined with another equally good food, produces an acid reaction in the stomach; whereas, either of the foods alone or eaten in combination with some other food would have been easily and perfectly digested.

Unfortunately, each food we eat at a meal is not digested separately. Instead, all of the foods we combine at the same meal are mixed and digested together. Consequently, if we eat two or more articles at the same meal which don't go well together, there is sure to be acidity, fermentation, gas and all kinds of digestive trouble.

At Eugene Christian's New York office there is a constant stream of men and women who go to him for treatment after having tried everything else, and rarely are they disappointed in the outcome. Some of the results he has attained read like fairy tales. I know of a number of instances where his rich patrons have been so grateful for their restoration of health and energy that they have sent him checks for $500 or $1,000 in addition to the amount of the bill when paying it.

There have been so many inquiries from all parts of the United States from people seeking the benefit of Eugene Christian's advice and whose cases he is unable to handle personally that he has written a course of little lessons which tells you exactly what to eat in order to overcome the ailment which is troubling you.

These lessons, there are 24 of them, contain actual menus for breakfast, luncheon and dinner, curative as well as corrective, covering all conditions of health and sickness, including stomach acidity, constipation and all intestinal disorders from infancy to old age and all occupations, climates and seasons. They also tell you how to reduce and how to gain.

With these lessons at hand it is just as though you were in personal contact with the great food specialist, because every possible point is so thoroughly covered and clearly explained that you can scarcely think of a question which isn't answered. You can start eating the very things that will remove the causes of your disorder the day you receive the lessons and you will find that you secure results with the first meal.

If you would like to examine these 24 Little Lessons in Corrective Eating simply write The Corrective Eating Society, Dept. 341, 460 Fourth Avenue, New York City. It is not necessary to enclose any money with your request. Merely ask them to send the lessons on five days' trial with the understanding that you will either return them within that time or remit $3, the small fee asked.

Please clip out and mail the following form instead of writing a letter, as this is a copy of the official blank adopted by the Society and will be honored at once.

[Advertisement]

CORRECTIVE EATING SOCIETY,
Dept. 341, 460 Fourth Avenue, New York City

You may send me prepaid a copy of Corrective Eating in 24 Lessons. I will either remail them to you within five days after receipt or send you $3.

Name.................................... City....................................

Address.................................... State....................................

Jesus, the Saviour of the World

International Sunday School Lesson for February 4

The Secret of the Spiritual Life

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

THE interview of Nicodemus with Jesus has always been one of the central scenes of the Gospel according to John in the estimation of Bible-lovers. Men have rightly judged it of supreme importance. Now of course there is little known of Nicodemus, but that little is valuable. Here we learn that he was a member of the religious, Pharisaic party rather than of the worldly political Sadducees of the Sanhedrin or national council. From John 7 : 50 (read it) and John 19 : 39 (where Nicodemus brings the burial spices and helps Joseph of Arimathea to prepare the body of Jesus for the tomb) —from these few verses we must picture Nicodemus.

A Serious Seeker of Truth

THE writer has never forgotten a Sunday when the beloved Dr. John Watson, better known as Ian Maclaren, preached to hundreds of college students in New York on the character of Nicodemus. He portrayed a conscientious, scholarly man who was drawn irresistibly by the Christ. In the excitement and crowding of the day he held aloof, but in the quiet of the night he sought the Master and acknowledged him as a divinely commissioned teacher. After that momentous conversation, of which we have but a few words in John, he respectfully took his leave to consider these things. He was a thinker accustomed to weigh carefully a new idea. Jesus respected his personality and gave him his own time. When the Sanhedrin plotted and caviled, he dared to raise his voice against their prejudging a man whom they did not understand. When Jesus had been crucified he was not ashamed to be known as Jesus' follower and friend. The Christian commentators have wondered whether he became an avowed disciple or not. We do not know, yet we cannot help thinking he must have been.

What Jesus Told Nicodemus

NICODEMUS and Jesus talked about that Kingdom for which all good Jews prayed. Jesus found in this cautious scholar the same failure to conceive of the Kingdom as spiritual and vital that he found in the commonest fisherman. All the great words of this conversation are words concerning the soul, the inner man, the really valuable things. There is nothing about government, politics, industry, race, family, here. The Gospel mightily affects all of these in its application, but in its essence deals with unseen eternities.

Jesus flatly "answered" all Nicodemus' misconceptions with the dictum: "Except a man be born from above, he cannot see the Kingdom of God."

What is the new birth? What is it to be born of the Spirit? Nicodemus, mildly sarcastic, asks if a man is to be a baby again when he is old. Unfortunately we have taken our most frequent term for the Spirit birth from Nicodemus rather than from Jesus: we say to be "born again." Of course that is partly a true expression. But the word Jesus used is correctly translated "born from above," and he explained, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh; that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." The new life is not so much a matter of time as of quality. It is not a concern of dates but of attitude to the will of God.

This is an important distinction which saves much misunderstanding. "From above" is the same expression used by James: "Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, coming down from the Father." The new birth is the taking of life from God. James also speaks of the wisdom that is "from above," as contrasted with that which is earthly, animal and devilish.

This new life, then, partakes of the divine nature. It is not merely physical like the animals. Nor is it primarily intellectual. It has to do with the realms of right and wrong, of good and evil, of holy and true and beautiful and compassionate. When fully manifested it is entirely free from the selfish, greedy, immoral, perverse traits that make earth unhappy and thwart the social concord of God's children.

The Mystery of Life from Above

JESUS gives no rules and methods for getting this essential life. In fact, he says it is mysterious as the winds, which come and go we know not how. Yet again and again have Christian leaders prescribed set forms for this experience, have tried to cram the movings of the Spirit into the mold of one sort of temperament. It is like trying to put the wind in a box!

Some have looked at the raptured faces of converted criminals and evildoers who could tell the exact manner in which Christ came to them, and have been so impressed that they have disparaged the steady growing light of a young Christian who has known the Lord from his earliest infancy. I attended the ordination of a young preacher who had a beautiful normal unfolding experience in a good home, a fine church, a Christian college, where an ignorant but forceful preacher objected, saying, "I will never vote to ordain any man who does not know the day, hour and minute when he passed from darkness to light." Most of us smiled at that, but there are many places in our land where souls are burdened and consciences distressed by a secret feeling that their discipleship is defective because they had no sudden conversion.

On the other hand there are stupid people whose lives have been sheltered and uneventful who actually presume to disbelieve that miraculous experiences, actual rebirths, occur today. They ought to read Harold Begbie's great book, "Twice-Born Men."

Let us be sure we have grasped the fact that the new life usually comes gradually, as the result of influences and preparations. For this is the basis for the Christian education of the young, for wise dealing with our own children. It would be a frightful error to tell a child nothing of Christ's way, to shield him from all spiritual knowledge, in the expectation that by a miracle he would be reborn in young manhood. Our children are God's children and we must nurture their expanding souls in the nurture of the Lord. As Bushnell said, "A child should grow up a Christian and never know himself otherwise." That is the ideal and normal way when conditions are right.

Arrested Growth in the Soul

ANOTHER tragedy is for a soul, born from above, to stop growing. Many churches are strong on evangelism and leave the new-born souls bewildered and unguided as to the need of growth. No provision is made for their Christian progress in understanding and usefulness. It is a wicked, wasteful attitude of many pastors and churches to expect half the converts to backslide! The prevention is to give all instruction, work, fellowship, persistent culture from the first.

Again it is sad to find a really good man trying to live at forty on the Christian experience of his sixteenth year. Or to see a good woman who hasn't gained a new idea in religion since she joined the church. Here is the real reason for many of the lapses of middle life. The new birth is only the beginning; the new life must be lived out to the full.

Spiritual Ignorance

NICODEMUS evidently held to the old idea that the Kingdom was for Jews, that it was based on birth or race or obedience to rules. And yet such as he were teachers of Israel. Jesus was disappointed in this spiritual ignorance. Jesus was not revealing an unheard-of thing. It was latent or expressed in the higher writings of the Old Testament. There were the psalms of the contrite heart, of the renewed spirit, of the indifference of sacrificial offerings when the soul turned to its Maker (Ps. 34, 51 and 40). The great prophets founded all on spiritual realities and cut the ground from under ritual and national pride.

Even today men substitute anything for the renewed life, the life that is hid with Christ in God, the wisdom that is from above. They will go through prescribed exercises, believe anything told them by priest or preacher, try to buy their way into heaven by works of merit or charity. But Christ reiterates, as he did to Nicodemus, "Ye must be born from above." You must change your mind, "repent." You must follow him into the Beatitudes, not cursing them that curse you but doing good. You must seek first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness. There is no other way but the way of the cross. "If any man will follow me, let him deny himself."

The Serpent in the Wilderness

THIS same chapter gives to us a direct connection between this new kind of life, this Christian character of the soul, and the crucifixion. The book of Numbers tells us that when the plague of fiery serpents was upon the marching host, Moses lifted up a serpent of brass, the sight of which healed the sufferers. It is a singular record of a historical event which we can only accept as it stands. But it is not only recorded history that the crucified Christ became the greatest force for the cure of sin long ago; it is present-day fact as well that those who look in faith to that cross are being redeemed now. Being lifted up he has drawn all men unto him. Seeing him thus, a multitude that no man can number have been born from above, have entered upon the inheritance of the children of God.

John goes on to tell us that in God's infinite love he plans for all to have the spiritual life. He sent Christ not to condemn but to save, not to exclude but to include. The possibility, the capacity for the heavenly life is within all. They that suppress it prefer darkness to light. They that appreciate it must desire to be used of God to call it forth in the experience of others.

A Prayer

O Lord our God, even as Nicodemus came unto Jesus long ago and received meekly a teaching new and surprising to him, so, humbly, we would come. Teach us, ere we go forth to teach others. When there is so much of misunderstanding of thy requirements, so frequent failure to see things from the standpoint of the Christ, help us to point out unmistakably the Way, the Truth and the Life. Whether in Bible school or daily life, may we be helped of thee to live the doctrines we proclaim, even as Christ incarnated his own teachings. Amen.

Girls Who Make Good

V. The Rose of the Slums

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

ROSE ELLIS was a success, socially, during her school days. Endowed with perfect health, sunny good spirits, and a keen sense of humor, at sixteen she was perhaps the most popular girl in her class. At elections and parties, on the athletic field and in fun of any kind, she was always in demand.

But though Rose Ellis was the delight of her schoolmates she was the constant despair of her teachers. Once, lingering in the classroom at recess time, I heard Mademoiselle, who taught us our rather sketchy French, talking to the teacher of rhetoric.

"Mees Rose," Mademoiselle was saying, "she ees not a stu-peed yonge ladee. But she weel not work. No one can make her. She laugh through her recitations. She play through her periods of study. She fail at her tests! I am distract weeth her!"

"Yes," agreed the teacher of rhetoric, slowly, "you are quite right about Rose. She's a charming girl and I love her as a friend. But as a teacher I can't stand her. She has a fine mind, but she can't seem to use it."

I sneezed. One always sneezes at the wrong time. Mademoiselle glared at me and lowered her voice significantly. I walked rather confusedly over to the window and stood looking down. There below me, on the playground, I saw Rose, cheeks crimson, hair flying, engaged in an energetic game of basket ball. As I watched her, the picture of grace and buoyant youth, I heard Mademoiselle's voice, again a trifle raised.

"Yes," Mademoiselle was saying, "I think so, too! Rose ees—lazee."

Lazy? I made an almost involuntary exclamation as she pronounced the word. Why, Rose wasn't lazy. Even then she was running swiftly after the basket ball, catching it, flinging it with all the strength of her young arms. Rose lazy?

"WHAT," I asked that evening when we were walking home after school, "are you going to do when you graduate, Rose?"

"Looks like I won't ever graduate!" answered Rose carelessly. "Looks like I'll stay in school forever. But daddy says," she sighed, "that if ever I do finish school—I must go to college." Her voice held a tragic note.

"Don't you want to go?" I questioned. "I should think——"

Rose turned on me quite fiercely.

"No," she told me, "I don't! I hate, hate, hate to study. It's laziness, I suppose. I simply have to drive myself to do my home work. I have to force myself to listen. I hate it."

"You're not lazy," I said, hurriedly, to comfort her. But Mademoiselle's voice kept ringing in my ears. "Look how you play basket ball. See how you can manage class meetings, and get up entertainments. See how you can work and play if you want to."

"If I want to," agreed Rose, doubtfully.

ROSE ELLIS failed dismally in her final examinations that year. She was seventeen then, and not nearly through with her course. And she hadn't passed anything. Her mother and father were frankly disappointed.

"You're lazy!" said her mother, just a trifle crossly. "Other people don't have any trouble."

"You'll never get through college at this rate," half groaned her father.

And then Rose spoke up. "I am lazy," she said, very honestly, "about the things that I hate to do. I can't seem to help it. But I love other things. Why can't I leave school and take a course in physical culture? And then I may be able to make something of myself."

It took two months for Rose to convince her father and mother that she had the right idea. But that autumn she began, triumphantly, to go to a school where one learned to excel in sports, and exercises, and hygiene. She was gone for three years, and we only saw her when she hurried home for occasional vacations. And then, the June that she was twenty, Rose came home to stay, armed with an impressive-looking diploma.

"What," asked her father, unconsciously slangy, "are you going to do with it? Now that you have it," he added.

"I'm going," answered Rose, "down to the crowdedest, dirtiest slums. And I'm going to teach the kiddies, and the growing girls, and even the women, to take care of their health and their strength. I'm going to teach them the way to play. That's what I'm going to do!"

Continued on page 101

How Many Hides Has A Cow?

DU PONT FABRIKOID

RAYNTITE

The Ideal
One-Man Top Material

The modern one-man top demands light weight.

Rayntite single texture top material weighs about half as much as double texture material of equal waterproofness.

It is guaranteed one year against leakage, but built to last the life of the car.

Its strength is ample to stand the strains of service.

Why make your car top heavy, and the "one-man" top a joke, by using material twice as heavy as it needs to be?

Rayntite has been on the market and in active service on thousands of cars for nearly two years. We have yet to receive the first claim under our guarantee.

Now Made in Two Varieties

RAYNTITE No. 1 Single texture with Fabrikoid surface, and—
RAYNTITE No. 2 Single texture with Fairfield Rubber surface

Each is guaranteed one year against leakage.

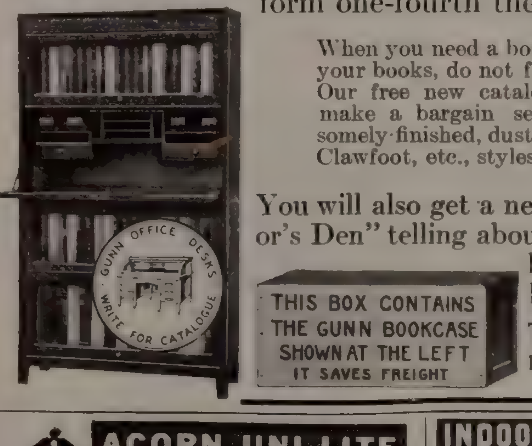
If the car you are considering is not topped with Rayntite, find out whether you or your wife can really handle the "one-man" top.

Samples of either variety on request.

DU PONT FABRIKOID COMPANY
WILMINGTON, DELAWARE
Works at Newburgh, N. Y., and Fairfield, Conn. Canadian Sales Office and Factory, Toronto

GUNN Sectional Bookcases
Are Lower in Price than Others

THE two things you want—quality and a low price—you get in Gunn Sectional Bookcases. The judges at the Panama-Pacific Exposition awarded us first prize for quality. We guarantee you a big saving in freight because we ship in a condensed knock down form one-fourth the size of others.



When you need a bookcase to really preserve your books, do not fail to look at the Gunn. Our free new catalog in colors helps you make a bargain selection from our handsomely finished, dust-proof Colonial, Mission, Clawfoot, etc., styles in mahogany and oak.

You will also get a new booklet "In an Emperor's Den" telling about our furniture in use by high officials in the Orient. Dealers everywhere.

THE GUNN FURNITURE CO.
1824 Broadway, Grand Rapids, Mich.

ACORN UNI-LITE FREE

Turns night into day 300 candle power. Carry as a lantern; use anywhere as a lamp. Weatherproof. For house, barn, garage, camp and around the farm. Write for big, free offer. Special opportunity to farmers, stockmen and motorists. Agents make big money. Write tonight for new 1916-1917 offer.
ACORN BRASS MFG. CO., 183 Uni-Lite Bldg., Chicago

INDOOR CHEMICAL CLOSET
NO SMELL — NO GERMS — SANITARY
Use in any room. Needs no plumbing, sewerage or running water. Chemicals in closet kill germs. Fine for the sick and old folks.
Destroy Outdoor Closet
Put in a warm Indoor Sanitary Closet. Empty twice monthly. Only attention necessary. Satisfied users and Boards of Health endorse it. Fully guaranteed. Write now for free literature.
Sanitary Closet Co., 411 Collon Bldg., Toledo, O.

Ladies EASE YOUR FEET!
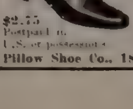
Testimonials from every state prove the surpassing comfort-bringing qualities of our line of unlined vici kid, O'Sullivanized
PILLOW SHOES
Neat, Long-wearing, Restful, Sensible
Foot Comfort is our first consideration. Write today for our catalog of Pillows for Winter, Summer, outdoor and home wear.



$2.75
Postpaid in U. S. or possessions

Pillow Shoe Co., 184 Summer St., Dept. 3, Boston, Mass.

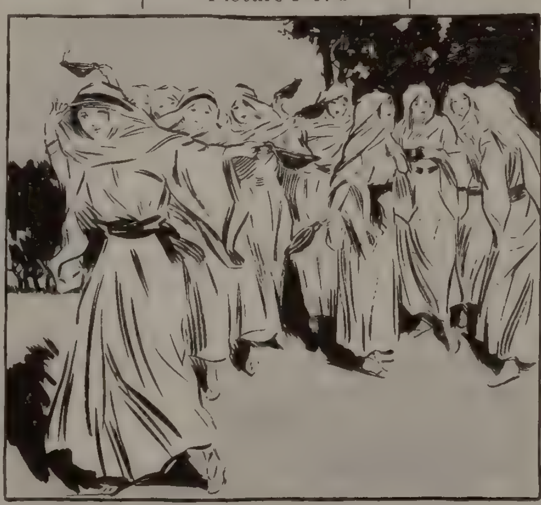
WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 3 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge.
RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Second Bible Picture Study

An Unsurpassed Home Pastime

Picture No. 3



HERE are the third and fourth pictures in the series of sixty. Look at them well.

Do they bring any Bible verses to your mind?

You should have no difficulty in finding at least one verse fairly applicable to each illustration when you peruse "Pearls from the Bible," that little volume of valuable precepts, promises and prophecies which is at once so helpful and so interesting.

There are to be given at least 1,000 cash rewards aggregating thousands of dollars (the first award is $1,000.00, the second is $800.00, etc.) to those who send in the most applicable sets of verses after the final pictures are printed in our last issue of May.

Apart from the cash rewards are the far more precious benefits in improved memory, augmented concentration of mind, training in spelling and vocabulary—and numerous other results, not the least of which is a wider knowledge of the Book of Books than you ever had before.

Picture No. 4

How You Are to Enjoy This!

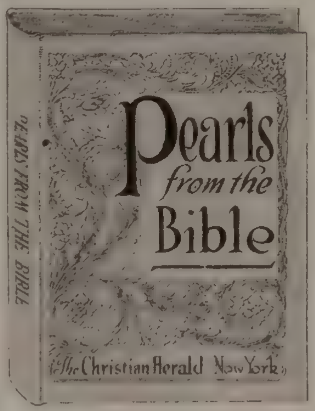
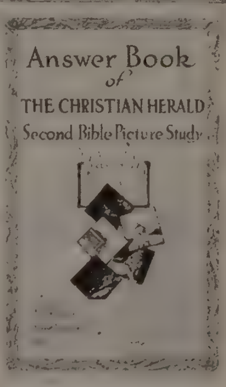
THE key to your pleasure, for weeks to come, is in the possession of the Bible Picture Study Outfit. This is to be kept handy for use in connection with the weekly visits of the Christian Herald.

The Outfit consists of two books. The principal one is "Pearls from the Bible," a neat little volume, newly issued, containing about 2,000 specially selected verses from the Bible. While this book is helpful in our Study, it is one that will be a worthy complement to the home library. The second item is the "Answer Book," in which the verses that you select for the pictures are to be recorded. You are allowed to choose and enter as many as five verses for each picture if you wish.





Answer Book of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Second Bible Picture Study

There is nothing more to do in the Bible Picture Study than is outlined on this page; but if you wish the Prospectus, fully explaining everything, send for it—it is free. We will also send free the Rules, which tell how you may compete free of any expense by making up your own Outfit—that is, by drawing the pictures yourself, etc., as outlined in the Rules.

But why not get our Outfit, which saves you any work, any drawing at all, and leaves you free to do nothing more than select the fitting verses, and send in your selections in our Answer Book?

AN OBJECT LESSON to show you how to compete

The Specimen Picture

is not one of the Bible Picture Study series, but merely an example, to show you that common sense is all that is needed to find a verse which fits a picture. You will realize, at the same time, how your study of the picture and of the verse suiting it impresses the Biblical statement upon your mind.

This example picture shows a man kneeling in abject devotion on the hard stone pavement outside the city walls. Note the contrition and penitence in his attitude.

We have chosen as an answer for this picture a verse from the Bible not so well known as many others; one you may not be able to place off-hand. Yet in looking over the short list of 2,000 Bible verses gathered in "Pearls from the Bible," you should certainly pause at this verse, and then, having read it over, declare it applicable to the picture:

The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise.—Ps. 51:17.

In the same way you will find fitting verses for the actual Study pictures. Don't you think now that if you had "Pearls from the Bible" you would soon find a fitting verse for each of the two Study pictures shown above?

How to Obtain the Outfit is Explained in the Coupons below

USE THIS FOR RENEWAL SUBSCRIPTION

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City

Gentlemen: Please renew my subscription to the Christian Herald for one year from the date to which it is now paid, and also send me the Bible Picture Study Outfit for the amount of $2.35 enclosed.

Name

Address

1-24-17

If you are now a subscriber, you may have your present subscription extended for another year, and obtain the Bible Picture Study Outfit, by sending $2.35. Use Coupon at left, or write a letter to same purport, enclosing remittance.

You may obtain the Bible Picture Study Outfit as a premium, without cost, if you obtain one new six months' subscriber at $1.00, by using the Coupon here, or by sending a letter.

USE THIS FOR A NEW SIX MONTHS' SUBSCRIPTION

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City

Gentlemen: For the $1.00 enclosed send the Christian Herald to the following new subscriber for 6 months:

Name

Address

Send Bible Study Outfit to me for having secured the above

Name

Address

1-24-17

Girls Who Make Good

Continued from page 99

She did it, too; and it was the dirtiest, most crowded part of the East Side that she went to a section where children had perpetual colds and sore eyes, where girls walked with bent backs and sunken chests, where women grew old before they were thirty. And Rose Ellis, with the generous, exuberant youth of her, came to them like a cool singing breeze from some far country.

SHE taught them to play wan little tots who had never known how. She taught them to breathe deeply—and they strengthened their bent shoulders and expanded their sunken chests. She held a mother's meeting in the late afternoon; and once, as I stopped to call on her, I heard prematurely old, unnecessarily gray-haired women laughing gleefully. No one, seeing Rose Ellis, would have dared to call her lazy.

It was a small settlement house, the one that Rose Ellis had chosen for the center of her activities—a small settlement house with no enthusiasm or money or interest in it. But before long the discouraged workers took their cue from Rose and began to lose their set, tired expression. Rich folk were invited to the house, and often—oh, very often—they left substantial checks and promises. And Rose, smiling, red-cheeked, walked among them like a young goddess, with shy, dark-eyed children clinging to her skirts. She looked like her name—a veritable rose set down to bloom in desert places.

When a year had passed and Rose was still interested, more vitally than ever, in the work, a number of us went down to see her particularly dirty part of the East Side. It was not strange to me—I knew the slums but some of the others had never touched on that side of life. And as we walked through the streets that led to the settlement house they shuddered a bit at the gloom, and filth, and squalor of it all.

"How can she stand it?" gasped an erstwhile schoolmate of ours one of the girls who had always passed her examinations. "How can she stand it?"

AND then suddenly we came into the district that was directly under the control of Rose Ellis, and the little settlement house that she had made her home. It was a district some four blocks square, in the midst of the most crowded section. But at once we saw a difference. For the first garbage pail that we passed had a cover on it, and a tall tenement house had bright flower-boxes on some of its window sills. A little tot sitting on some rickety steps that had been carefully though not skilfully mended was singing under her breath, and two slightly larger girls danced a blithe little folk-dance to the tune of a hurdy-gurdy. And, somehow, even before we reached the settlement house, we felt the presence of Rose.

Rose Ellis was bathing a tiny boy's bruised knee with arnica as we walked into her room. Her vivid face turned to us in swift greeting, and then bent again over the bruise. But her voice, the cheeriest, gayest voice I had ever heard, told us to find chairs, and that she was, oh, so glad to see us!

"Are you busy like this every moment?" questioned the girl who had always passed her examinations.

"I'm not busy today," Rose told us, as she patted the tiny boy's tear-stained face and turned to welcome an old woman with her croupy little grandbaby. "Sometimes," she laughed, "sometimes I am busy. . . . But I love it!"

And then quite suddenly the girl who had always passed her examinations laughed, too. "And once," she said, almost enviously, and my mind leaped back to a time when I had lingered at recess in a classroom, "we thought that you were a failure!"

◆

Our Cover Picture

MATTHEW says, in the second chapter, fifteenth verse, after recounting the flight into Egypt, "And was there until the death of Herod: that it might be fulfilled which was spoken of the Lord by the prophet, saying, Out of Egypt have I called my son."

Thus Matthew is our authority for accepting Hosea 11 : 1 as prophetic of our Lord. Hosea directly refers to the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage; but, as every point in the history of Israel is a type of the dispensation of grace, we can readily see how this foreshadows the bringing up of Jesus from Egypt. In what marvelous ways the Lord brought about the fulfilment of all these anticipations by the Jews, of the Messiah whom he had promised them!

The picture represents Hosea looking out toward the distant waters of the Mediterranean. Town of Samaria in valley. He sees Mary and Joseph bringing the child Jesus from Egypt.

In the border the aim is to give an Egyptian setting, which accounts for the use of the scarab at the top. Then, beginning at the upper left hand, the story of the Egyptian captivity is told after the manner of Egyptian art.

Beginning at the upper left-hand corner, the first figure symbolizes the bondage of Israel. Then follows the making of bricks without straw. Then in their order, to the foot of the left border, the plagues: Aaron smiting the waters, which became blood, the pest of frogs, of lice, of flies, and the smiting of the Egyptians' flocks. Beginning again at the upper right-hand corner, the plague of boils is depicted; following that, hail: then the locusts and the smiting of the first-born. Then we see the door-posts sprinkled with blood, the jewelry which the Israelites were told to borrow, the table cover for use at the Passover feast, and other incidents of the Passover. Across the foot of the picture we see Pharaoh's host following hard after the Israelites, who are crossing the Red Sea, and who, after that, are depicted on their way through the wilderness.

◆

The fires of true friendship consume dross and bring out the rich gold of character.

SMYTH'S 60 INCUBATOR
ALL STEEL
ON 30 DAYS' FREE TRIAL $3.92
HOLDS FULL 60 EGGS

To quickly popularize SMYTH'S All Steel 60 Egg Incubator, we will sell 5,000 at only $3.92 each. Guaranteed to hatch as large a per cent of strong, healthy chicks as any incubator made, regardless of name, make or price. Made of polished steel; with double walled air chamber, 1917 improved disc regulator, standard thermometer visible through glass damper, best safety metal lamp, heat distributing drum around outer edges, water jacketed heat flue and automatic heat regulation insuring even temperature and moisture in every part of egg chamber, and proper heat to eggs all the time. Full directions with each incubator. SEND $1.00 deposit and we will send you this high-grade, latest improved SMYTH'S all steel 60 egg incubator by express, subject to examination. Pay balance $2.92 and express charges to agent after you find the incubator perfectly satisfactory and the greatest incubator bargain in the world, then take it home and TRY IT 30 DAYS at our risk and if you do not find it as good a hatcher as you ever saw or heard of, regardless of price or make, or if for any reason you are dissatisfied, return at our expense and we will refund your $1.00 and freight charges. If you want incubator sent by PARCEL POST send $3.92 and enough money extra to pay the parcel post postage and we'll send on same liberal trial offer as above. Shipping weight 19 lbs. We make very low prices on larger incubators, brooders, and poultry supplies of all kinds in our big free Incubator Catalog sent you free upon request. Order incubator or catalog today.

JOHN M. SMYTH MDSE CO. 703-747 Washington Blvd. CHICAGO

Comfort Indoor Closet
Odorless Sanitary Germ-Proof

Every home without sewerage needs one. Most convenient, meritorious home necessity in a century. A boon to sick people. Can be placed anywhere in house.

Abolish Outdoor Closet

Put a warm Comfort Toilet in your home, a guarantee of healthy, sanitary conditions. Germ-life killed by chemicals in retort. Emptied once a month—no trouble. Needs no other attention. Boards of Health endorse it. Write now for literature, prices, etc. Agents Wanted—Exclusive territory.

SENT ON 30 DAYS FREE Trial

ODOR EXHAUST
AIR TIGHT CONTAINER
CHEMICAL RETORT
CHEMICALS
AIR VENTILATION

COMFORT CHEMICAL CLOSET CO.
5411 Factories Bldg
TOLEDO, OHIO

SAMPLE OUR SEED
Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c. One packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Earliest Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce, 10c to new customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG FREE.
C. N. Robinson & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore, Md.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS
Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.
The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co Dept. R51 Cincinnati, O.

NEUBERT'S BOOK FREE
Finest, Biggest, Most Valuable Poultry Guide. 62 BREEDS Chickens, ducks, geese, turkeys. Hardy, pure bred, beautiful. Fowls, eggs, incubators at low prices. America's Pioneer poultry farm. 22 years at it. BOOK and Catalog FREE.
F. A. NEUBERT, Box 654, Mankato, Minn.

A SMALL FARM in California will make you more money with less work. You will live longer and better. Delightful climate. Rich soil. Low prices. Easy terms. Sure profits. Hospitable neighbors. Good roads, schools and churches. Write for our San Joaquin Valley illustrated folders free. C. L. Seagraves, Industrial Commissioner, A. T. & S. F. Ry., 1988 Ry. Exch., Chicago.

CHAMPION
X
REG U.S. PAT OFF

Champion Toledo

Dependable Spark Plugs

In winter weather your spark plugs must necessarily stand up under violent extremes of cold and heat.

The porcelain insulators are subjected to most severe strains.

Champion porcelains are a quality product, scientifically constructed and tested, and cushioned against the force of the explosions in your cylinders by specially designed and patented asbestos lined copper gaskets.

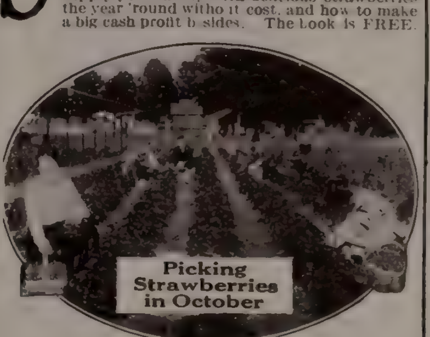
Their dependability is proverbial.

Champion spark plugs are unqualifiedly guaranteed and sold by supply dealers and garage men everywhere.

The name "Champion" is on the porcelain of every genuine Champion-Toledo Plug.

Champion Spark Plug Co., Toledo, Ohio

"Great Crops of STRAWBERRIES and How To Grow Them"
is the best and most complete book on Strawberry Growing ever written. It fully explains the KELLOGG WAY of growing two big crops each year—a big profit in the Spring and a bigger profit in the Fall. Tells everything about strawberry growing from start to finish. Write for this book and learn how to supply your family with delicious strawberries the year 'round without cost, and how to make a big cash profit besides. The book is FREE.



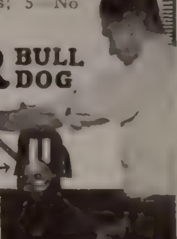
Picking Strawberries in October

Strawberries grown the KELLOGG WAY yield more dollars per square rod and do it in less time than any other crop. The profits made from strawberries are enormous. One acre of strawberries grown the KELLOGG WAY will yield a greater cash profit than twenty acres of common farm crops.

STRAWBERRY growing is so easy and so simple that even beginners grow big crops and make big profits right from the very start. Get our big 64-page book and learn all about this delightful and profitable business. A postal will do—the book is FREE.

FREE BOOK

R. M. Kellogg Company,
Box 670 Three Rivers, Mich.



5 big features
1—Self-locking, adjustable dies; 2—Self-centering guides; 3—No resetting of dies to size; 4—No loose bushings; 5—No small parts. Every threads from 4 to 8 sizes of pipe. Write for catalog, "The Bulldog Tale."

OSTER BULL DOG DIE STOCK

The Oster Mfg. Co.
2122 East 61st St., Cleveland, Ohio

FREE
DEMING SPRAYERS
40 generously illustrated pages of hand and power spraying rigs—buckets, knapsack, barrel and tank outfits—and accessories. The orchard, farm and garden views in this 1917 catalog will help you in selecting the type you need. For additional advice state number of trees.

Write
THE DEMING COMPANY
37 Depot St.
Salem, Ohio

ORNAMENTAL FENCE
40 designs—all steel. Handsome, costs less than wood, more durable. We can save you money. Write for free catalog and and special prices.
KOKOMO FENCE MACH. CO.
499 North Street, Kokomo, Ind.

Egg-o-hatch applied to eggs during incubation strengthens the chick and weakens the shell. It supplies free oxygen, absorbs the carbon dioxide and rots the shell. Makes better hatches of stronger chicks. Booklet free. Sample, treats 100 eggs, 10 cents. Package, treats 600 eggs, 50 cents, postpaid.
Geo. H. Lee Co., 533 Lee Bldg., Omaha, Neb.

Home Made Bread
is better, more nutritious than any you can buy—and less expensive. Try this easy recipe, using

"Wear-Ever"
SEAMLESS
Aluminum Bread Pans

In 1 quart of water dissolve 2 cakes compressed yeast, 2 tablespoons salt and 2 of sugar. Stir in sifted flour (about 3 qts.) until a stiff dough is formed. Add 2 tablespoons lard and knead dough, adding a little flour from time to time, until smooth and elastic. Cover and set in a warm place for two hours or until light. Form dough into loaves, place in "Wear-Ever" bread pans and let rise again until light. Brush lightly with milk and place in oven.

"Wear-Ever" Bread Pans take the heat quickly and hold it so that your bread will be baked evenly and thoroughly all the way through—delicious, crusty, whole loaves that the entire family will enjoy.

"Wear-Ever" Bread Pans require no grease. To remove bread, simply invert the Pan.

"Wear-Ever" utensils are made without seams from thick, hard sheet metal they cannot break, chip, or rust—are pure and safe.

Replace utensils that wear out with utensils that "Wear-Ever"

If you have never used "Wear-Ever," we will send you the sample 1-qt. Stewpan pictured below for only 30c, if coupon is mailed on or before March 20th, 1917.

Send for your Stewpan today!

LOOK FOR THIS
WEAR-EVER ALUMINUM
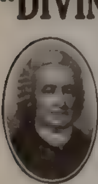
TRADE MARK
TRADE MARK

The Aluminum Cooking Utensil Co.
New Kensington, Pa., Dept. 34 (or if you live in Canada),
Northern Aluminum Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

Send prepaid, 1-qt. "Wear-Ever" Stewpan. Enclosed is 30c in stamps or coin to be refunded if not satisfied. Offer good until March 20th, 1917, only.

Name.................... Address.................



"DIVINE LOVE and WISDOM"

By EMANUEL SWEDENBORG, explains clearly and rationally the operation of Divine Love and Divine Wisdom in the creation of the universe, including man as the chief end of creation. Big 618 page book sent without further cost or obligation on receipt of 5 cents. 5c.

THE AMERICAN SWEDENBORG PRINTING & PUBLISHING SOCIETY
Room 789, 3 West 29th Street, New York

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE
of fine bred poultry for 1917; 67 breeds illustrated and described; information on poultry, how to make hens lay, grow chicks—all facts. Low price on stock and hatching eggs. Incubators and brooders. 25 years in business. This book only 10 cts. Send today.
B. H. GREIDER, Box 11 Rheems, Pa.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE
Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.
Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 150 Lima, Ohio

Folding BATH TUB
Costs little, no plumbing, little water. Weight 15 pounds, folds into small roll. Full length baths, far better than tin tubs. Lasts for years. Write for special agents offer and description.
Robinson Bath Cabinet Co., 452 Factories Bldg., Toledo, O.

Germany's New Note to the Neutrals

Continued from page 87

Austro-Hungarian monarchy, the partition of Turkey, and the mutilation of Bulgaria. In the face of such war aims, the demand for sanction, reparation and guarantees in the mouth of our adversaries produces a surprising effect.

"Our adversaries call the proposal of the four (Teutonic) allied Powers a war manoeuvre. Germany and her allies must protest in a most energetic fashion that their motives, which were explained frankly, are characterized in this manner. They (the Teutonic allies) were convinced that a peace which would be just and acceptable to all belligerents was possible; that it could be brought about by an immediate spoken exchange of views, and that, therefore, the responsibility of further bloodshed could not be assumed. Without reservation their readiness was affirmed to make known their peace conditions at the entrance into negotiations, which refutes every doubt as to their sincerity.

"Our adversaries, who had it in their hands to examine our proposition as to its contents, neither attempted an examination nor made counter proposals. Instead, they declare that peace is impossible as long as the re-establishment of violated rights and liberties, the recognition of the principle of nationalities and the free existence of small States are not guaranteed. The sincerity which the adversary denies to the proposals of the four (Teutonic) allied Powers will not be conceded by the world to these demands if the world holds before its eyes the fate of the Irish people, the destruction of the liberty and independence of the Boer republics, the subjugation of northern Africa by England, France and Italy, the suppression of the Russian alien nations, and also the violation of Greece, which is without precedent in history.

"Against the alleged violations of the laws of nations by the four (Teutonic) allies, those Powers are not entitled to complain, since they from the beginning of the war trampled upon justice and tore to pieces the treaties upon which it is built. England during the first weeks of the war, repudiated the Declaration of London, the stipulations of which had been recognized by her own delegates as forming a valid law of nations, and in the further course of the war she violated most severely also the Declaration of Paris, so that by her arbitrary measures of warfare on the sea a condition of lawlessness was created.

"The war of starvation against Germany and the pressure exercised in England's interest against neutrals are no less scandalously conflicting with the rules of the laws of nations than they are with the commands of humanity. Likewise contrary to the laws of nations and incompatible with the principles of civilization is the use of colored troops in Europe and the extension of the war into Africa, which was done by a breach of existing treaties and undermines the prestige of the white race on that continent. The barbarous treatment of prisoners, especially in Africa and Russia; the deportation of the civilian population from Eastern Prussia and Alsace-Lorraine and from Galicia and the Bukowina, are further proof of how our adversaries respect justice and civilization."

THE note then takes up the assertion in the Allied note that the Belgian Government had always observed the status of neutrality, and continues: "Before the war, Belgium, under England's influence, sought support in a military respect from England and France, and thus herself violated the spirit with which she had to guarantee her independence and neutrality. Twice the Imperial [German] Government declared to the Belgian Government that it did not come as an enemy to Belgium, and asked it to spare to that country the terrors of war. The Imperial Government offered to guarantee to the fullest extent the integrity and independence of the kingdom, and to compensate it for all damages which might be caused by the passage of the German troops." The note also calls attention to the fact that the British Government, in 1887, was resolved not to oppose the right of the use of way through Belgium under those conditions. Belgium's refusal of Germany's repeated offer lays the responsibility for what befell that country upon those who instigated it to this attitude.

The accusations about German warfare in Belgium, and the measures taken in the interests of military safety, the note declares, have been repeatedly refuted and shown to be untrue. The Imperial German Government renews its energetic protest against these calumnies.

In conclusion, the note points out that the Teutonic Powers have made "an honest attempt to terminate the war and enter upon the road to an understanding among the belligerents. . . . It merely depended upon the decision of the adversaries whether the road to peace should be entered upon or not. The hostile governments have declined to accept this road. Upon them falls the full responsibility for the continuation of the bloodshed. Our allied [Teutonic] Powers, however, will continue to struggle in quiet confidence and with firm trust in their good right, until a peace is gained which guarantees to their nations their honor, existence, and liberty of development, and which to all nations of the European continent gives the blessing of cooperation in mutual respect and under equal rights, in common work for the solution of the great problems of civilization."

A Generous Gift to Stricken Europe

MR. J. B., a Colorado reader, writes to the Christian Herald: "When President Wilson called on us for help for the starving, I felt that I could not give less than $100, which I sent through the American Committee; but I could not get relief of conscience till I decided to make it $1,000. As I have done most all of my giving to foreign countries through you, I want you to send the enclosed $900 for me where it will do the most good to relieve suffering and for the cause of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Mr. B's gift has been applied to relief in localities where the Relief Committees report the need as exceedingly great.

Here is indeed a good example of conscientious giving. We know that it is representative of the great Christian Herald Family, which on January 8 had given $252,626.59 to the relief of war widows and orphans without crippling the other regular charities that depend upon it for support.

Again we would ask prayerful consideration for the Monthly Offering plan. The war's hideous tale goes on and misery multiplies. Christendom must gird itself for a long struggle against want. We cannot hope at best to do more than relieve the pinch of need, to keep the souls and bodies of these innocent sufferers together, to insure to them a precarious existence until full restoration shall follow peace. But we must do what we can. Hunger returns with every sunrise, and our giving needs to be as regular. Will you not register as one of those who will give regularly each month?

Please address your gifts to the Christian Herald, Room 93, Bible House, New York City. In due course acknowledgment will appear in the paper. State any preference you may have as to the use you wish made of your gifts.

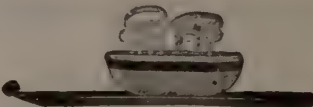
The man who sees the unseen is the man who arrives at the goal.

The farmer who never rejoices at his neighbor's mistakes is on the highway to heaven.

No man ever made a crop by finding fault with the way the other man held his plow.

When some machine is invented to read our thoughts we will flee to Kamschatka or the mountains of the moon.

Words are like a river; ideas like the cool spring that bubbles up under the shadow of some ancient oak.



Bran
For Joyous Living

Learn how much this laxative food adds to the joy of living. Then you'll know why every doctor tells folks to eat bran.

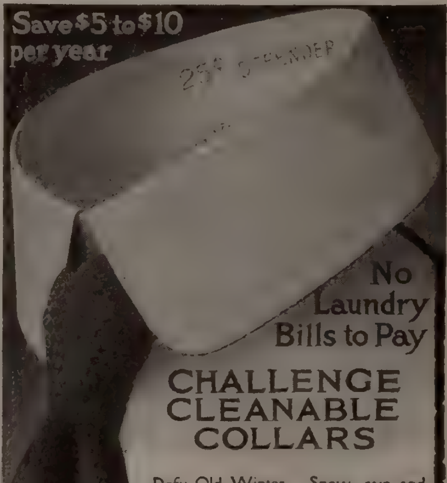
In Pettijohn's we make the bran inviting. It is hidden in flavory flakes.

Try starting days with this delightful dish. Find out what bran will do. Folks who go without it don't know what they miss.

Pettijohn's
Rolled Wheat With Bran Flakes

Also Pettijohn's Flour—75 per cent patent flour with 25 per cent bran flakes. Use like Graham flour in any recipe.

The Quaker Oats Company
Chicago



Save $5 to $10 per year

No Laundry Bills to Pay

CHALLENGE CLEANABLE COLLARS

Defy Old Winter. Snow, rain and crocking velvet collar cannot harm Challenge Cleanable Collars. They are all that "linen" collars are—and more. Comfortable, good looking and economical. Instantly cleanable. 25c each; a year's supply $1.50. Try them. State size and style. Ask for booklet.

DU PONT THE ARLINGTON CO.
725 Broadway, New York

Susanna Cocroft's
Physical Culture for the Face

will make the outline of your face, neck and chin graceful — relieve wrinkles, sagging muscles and facial blemishes — make your skin clear and soft, your eyes bright. You can make your hair glossy and abundant — your hands smooth and white — your feet comfortable, through definite directions which will take only a few minutes at home each day.

Write for information and our free booklet giving many valuable hints.

Grace-Mildred Culture Course
Dept. 9, 624 So. Michigan Blvd., Chicago

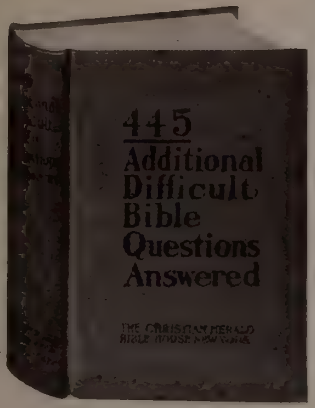
REVERSIBLE "Linene" TRADE MARK

Send 2 Cents in U. S. stamps to pay postage and we will send you FREE a SAMPLE COLLAR of our New Style "Copley." State size wanted. REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. T, Boston, Mass.

CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOKS

445 ADDITIONAL DIFFICULT BIBLE QUESTIONS ANSWERED

A HELP OVER THE HARD PLACES



445 Additional Difficult Bible Questions Answered
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BIBLE HOUSE NEW YORK

WHEN the earlier volume entitled "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered" was published, it met with such an enthusiastic reception that we have been encouraged to follow it with a second volume. Like its predecessor, it forms a compact repository of information, invaluable to pastors, scholars, students, laymen and the general reader. It illuminates and explains a large number of obscure passages, many of which might be misunderstood by the average reader.

Presenting the work of the ablest and soundest expositors in all the denominations, the new book will be found a help to many inquiring souls over the "hard places" in the Bible, and a comfort and encouragement to all who are earnestly striving to learn the truth as presented in the Word.

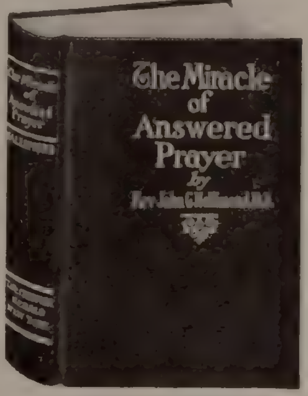
We will send a copy of "445 Additional Difficult Bible Questions Answered," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.35.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.

THE MIRACLE OF ANSWERED PRAYER

By REV. JOHN G. HALLIMOND, D.D.

A Book With a Message for Every Soul



THINK of hundreds of authenticated answers to prayer, multiplied in the course of a year to thousands. This is the story told in "The Miracle of Answered Prayer." It is a recital of tremendous and conclusive importance to the Christian world and one which cannot be controverted. It is a book that no one can read without becoming convinced of its truth and of the wonderful goodness of our Heavenly Father toward all who seek Him in the spirit of faith and contrition.

"The Miracle of Answered Prayer" should be in the hands of every Christian in America. The facts it sets forth furnish absolute evidence of the literal fulfillment of the Saviour's promise to his followers: "Whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name He will give it you." "Ask, and it shall be given you. . . ."

This book contains authenticated instances, not ancient, but happening in our own time—now—of answered prayers, all of which are presented in the name of Jesus, and submitted to the Divine Will. There is hardly a conceivable situation in human experience which is not included in this wonderful book.

We will send a copy of "The Miracle of Answered Prayer," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.35.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.

JUST DAVID

By Eleanor H. Porter, Author of "Pollyanna"

EVERYONE who has read "Pollyanna" should read "Just David." He is as lovable as the heroine of the Glad Book. Mrs. Porter believes that the idea of the possibility of happiness should be held up to people, but she does not attempt to preach about it. She simply lets her characters speak.

"Just David" is not only a story of amazing popular appeal, but in its way a genuine masterpiece as well. Everyone who reads it has the same enthusiasm. David is one of those characters that seem too real to stay inside a book. It is safe to say that every single reader will regard him as a cherished friend. "Just David," bound in cloth, with frontispiece, postpaid, $1.25 net.

We will send a copy of "Just David," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.50.

Or, we will send a copy of "Just David," postpaid, to any present subscriber as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription accompanied by $2.00.

Just David
By Eleanor H. Porter

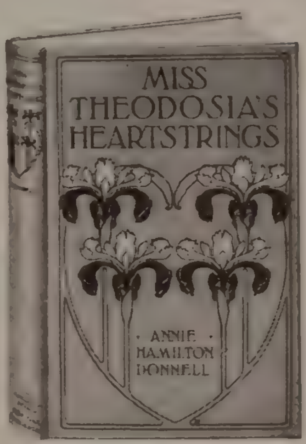
THEODOSIA'S HEARTSTRINGS

IN this irresistible novel of happiness, Miss Theodosia Baxter wandered up and down the world for three years in search of something to interest her, only to come home and find it on the upper step of her own front porch. What she found was a very much surprised child who was holding a baby on the small area of her knees. They were two of the Flagg children who lived in the house next door—Evangeline the voluble and little Elly Precious, who possessed six toes. Ere long Miss Theodosia made the acquaintance of Stefena, the eldest of the Flagg children, and little deaf Carruthers. How this quartette of youngsters reached the heart of the staid and travel-worn woman and eventually brought a romance into her own life is set forth in Mrs. Donnell's characteristic style. The thousands who have read her story about a little girl named Rebecca Mary, in the popular book bearing that title, will be all the more ready to love the irrepressible Evangeline, the ambitious Stefena, and the diminutive Elly Precious.

"Miss Theodosia's Heartstrings" is a book that no one who loves children can resist; the little Flaggs are a constant delight.

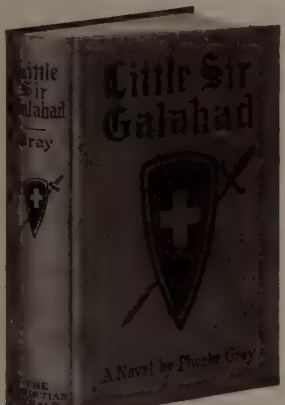
We will send a copy of "Miss Theodosia's Heartstrings," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.50.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.



A STORY FOR THE FAMILY CIRCLE

LITTLE SIR GALAHAD



LITTLE SIR GALAHAD is a boy every bit as wonderful and with as high ideals as those of the ancient Knights, but he is an up-to-date hero and a very real little personage, quick-witted, clever and amusing, and, together with his youthful friends who come under the magic spell of his influence, he goes through many exciting experiences and keeps the reader's interest absorbed right through the story.

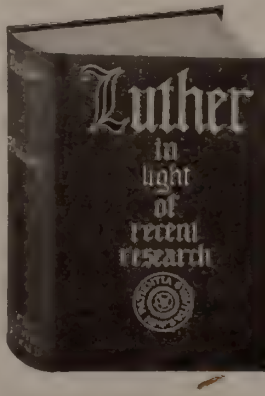
"Little Sir Galahad" has quite a variety of friends, including stanch little Mary Alice, who grows up to a winsome womanhood, and poor Lem Brown, who had to be helped ever so often. Then there is a big background of old and young folks who must certainly have been drawn from actual life, as we have all known just such people. Besides, there is a big-hearted millionaire—but we must not anticipate. There is much that is charming and humorous and intensely human in the whole story.

We will send "Little Sir Galahad," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.50.

Or, we will send a copy of "Little Sir Galahad," postpaid, to any present subscriber as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription with $2.00.

MARTIN LUTHER ANNIVERSARY BOOK

"Luther in Light of Recent Research"



WHILE there are several lives of Luther, Professor Heinrich Boehmer's famous work, which has attracted universal attention in Europe, is one of the best that has ever appeared. It comes most opportunely in view of the celebration of the Four Hundredth Anniversary of the nailing of Luther's famous theses on the gate of the old castle church at Wittenberg, which was the beginning of the Reformation.

The Christian Herald has had the work translated by Professor Carl F. Huth, Jr., of the University of Chicago, who has succeeded in preserving the spirit and the expression of the original in a remarkable degree.

This great book, which should be read by every Protestant in America, is supplemented by a series of eighty-one Luther pictures, all of them from the most authentic sources, and the whole forming a Luther Picture Gallery.

We will send the "Life of Luther," handsomely bound in cloth, postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $2.75.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $4.00.

40,000 BEAUTIFUL QUOTATIONS

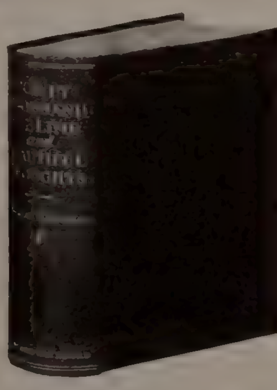
SOME years ago the Christian Herald published a work entitled "Forty Thousand Sublime and Beautiful Thoughts." It was composed of a collection of the best sayings on every conceivable subject which the compiler could come upon. It was a remarkable compilation, and it was used largely in public as well as private libraries.

In the course of time, the edition of this book became exhausted. We had so many inquiries for the work that we have republished it, thoroughly revised.

The mission of this work is to supply a universal need which is felt by the multitude of busy men and women of today, who, while eager to be initiated into the society of the great masters of literature, find it impossible to devote the time necessary to accomplish that result.

We will send "Forty Thousand Sublime and Beautiful Thoughts," postpaid, together with the Christian Herald for one year, for $3.50.

Or, we will send a copy to present subscribers as a reward for sending us two new yearly subscriptions to the Christian Herald with $4.00.



TWO BOOKS BY A FAMOUS PASTOR

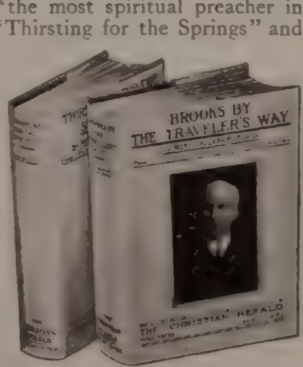
Rev. J. H. Jowett, D.D.

DOCTOR JOWETT has been aptly described as "the most spiritual preacher in America." He has written these two volumes, "Thirsting for the Springs" and "Brooks by the Traveler's Way," in his happiest vein, and the gift of felicitous expression shines out on every page.

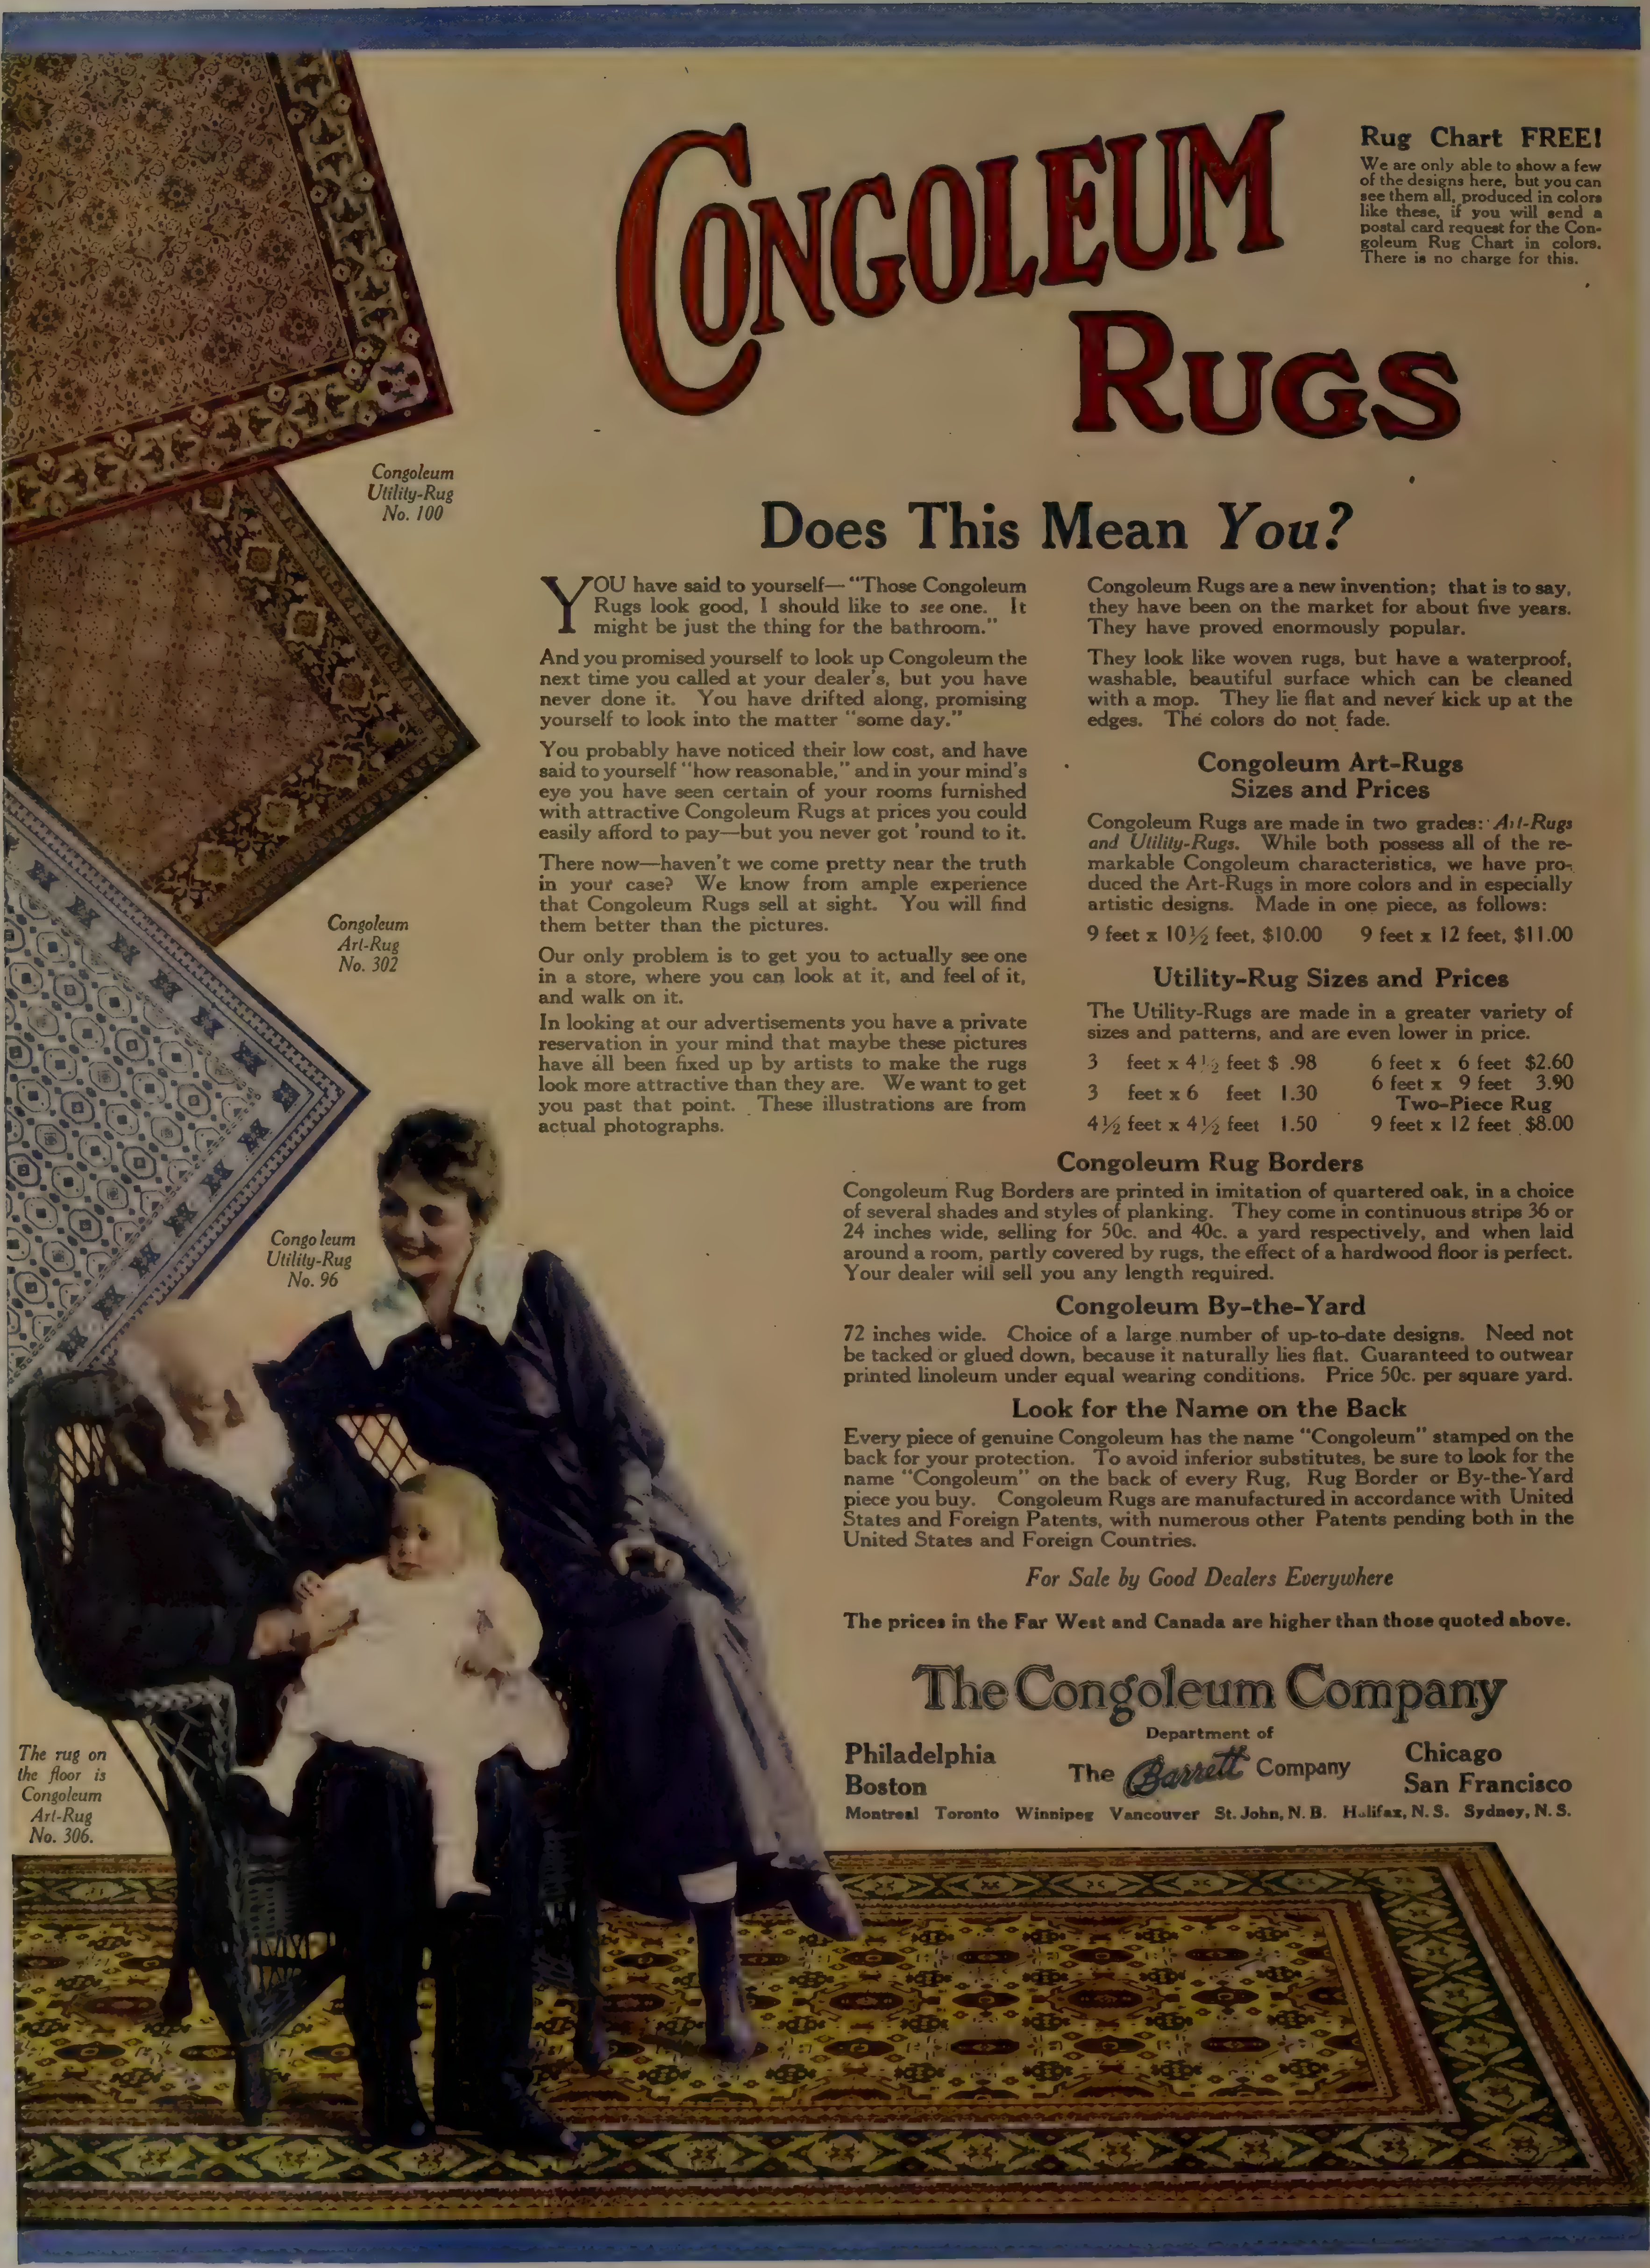
The reader is carried along through gardens and woodlands, as on a pleasant journey. He is in a rarefied atmosphere and is buoyed and uplifted unconsciously at every step. The varied experiences of life, its trials, allurements, disappointments and surprises, pass before him like a moving picture.

These two volumes, aggregating 530 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, will be sent together with the Christian Herald for one year, postpaid, for $2.50.

Or, we will send a copy of each volume to present subscribers as a reward for sending us one new yearly subscription to the Christian Herald with $2.00.



The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York



Congoleum Utility-Rug No. 100
Congoleum Art-Rug No. 302
Congoleum Utility-Rug No. 96
The rug on the floor is Congoleum Art-Rug No. 306.

CONGOLEUM RUGS

Rug Chart FREE!

We are only able to show a few of the designs here, but you can see them all, produced in colors like these, if you will send a postal card request for the Congoleum Rug Chart in colors. There is no charge for this.

Does This Mean You?

YOU have said to yourself—"Those Congoleum Rugs look good, I should like to see one. It might be just the thing for the bathroom."

And you promised yourself to look up Congoleum the next time you called at your dealer's, but you have never done it. You have drifted along, promising yourself to look into the matter "some day."

You probably have noticed their low cost, and have said to yourself "how reasonable," and in your mind's eye you have seen certain of your rooms furnished with attractive Congoleum Rugs at prices you could easily afford to pay—but you never got 'round to it.

There now—haven't we come pretty near the truth in your case? We know from ample experience that Congoleum Rugs sell at sight. You will find them better than the pictures.

Our only problem is to get you to actually see one in a store, where you can look at it, and feel of it, and walk on it.

In looking at our advertisements you have a private reservation in your mind that maybe these pictures have all been fixed up by artists to make the rugs look more attractive than they are. We want to get you past that point. These illustrations are from actual photographs.

Congoleum Rugs are a new invention; that is to say, they have been on the market for about five years. They have proved enormously popular.

They look like woven rugs, but have a waterproof, washable, beautiful surface which can be cleaned with a mop. They lie flat and never kick up at the edges. The colors do not fade.

Congoleum Art-Rugs Sizes and Prices

Congoleum Rugs are made in two grades: Art-Rugs and Utility-Rugs. While both possess all of the remarkable Congoleum characteristics, we have produced the Art-Rugs in more colors and in especially artistic designs. Made in one piece, as follows:

9 feet x 10½ feet, $10.00	9 feet x 12 feet, $11.00

Utility-Rug Sizes and Prices

The Utility-Rugs are made in a greater variety of sizes and patterns, and are even lower in price.

3 feet x 4½ feet $ .98	6 feet x 6 feet $2.60
3 feet x 6 feet 1.30	6 feet x 9 feet 3.90
	Two-Piece Rug
4½ feet x 4½ feet 1.50	9 feet x 12 feet $8.00

Congoleum Rug Borders

Congoleum Rug Borders are printed in imitation of quartered oak, in a choice of several shades and styles of planking. They come in continuous strips 36 or 24 inches wide, selling for 50c. and 40c. a yard respectively, and when laid around a room, partly covered by rugs, the effect of a hardwood floor is perfect. Your dealer will sell you any length required.

Congoleum By-the-Yard

72 inches wide. Choice of a large number of up-to-date designs. Need not be tacked or glued down, because it naturally lies flat. Guaranteed to outwear printed linoleum under equal wearing conditions. Price 50c. per square yard.

Look for the Name on the Back

Every piece of genuine Congoleum has the name "Congoleum" stamped on the back for your protection. To avoid inferior substitutes, be sure to look for the name "Congoleum" on the back of every Rug, Rug Border or By-the-Yard piece you buy. Congoleum Rugs are manufactured in accordance with United States and Foreign Patents, with numerous other Patents pending both in the United States and Foreign Countries.

For Sale by Good Dealers Everywhere

The prices in the Far West and Canada are higher than those quoted above.

The Congoleum Company

Department of
The Barrett Company

Philadelphia
Boston
Chicago
San Francisco

Montreal Toronto Winnipeg Vancouver St. John, N. B. Halifax, N. S. Sydney, N. S.

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, JANUARY 31, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 5. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

© Underwood & Underwood

TWO BASKETS OF FIGS,—POSSIBLY LIKE THOSE OF JEREMIAH 24: 1-5

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag, provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

MRS. M. E., Long Beach, Calif. The case of "Reader, Michigan," is so like my own, so far as the temptation to read indiscriminately is concerned, that I feel impelled to say that I ascribe to this one habit the fact that I have not grown spiritually as I ought. I have been led to see that if I am to grow in the likeness of my Saviour, I must no longer yield to the temptation to indulge in the so-called popular fiction of the day. I do not mean by this that I may never read a work of fiction again; but that I must carefully discriminate, as so many books, not evil or unwholesome, are still a waste of time, and leave us less leisure for the study of the Word of God.

It is a well-known fact that omnivorous readers of fiction deteriorate in their literary tastes to such an extent that at last they cannot enjoy a wholesome or informing book. This is a danger which young people especially should avoid. It is well to cultivate the habit of reading, and there are many good stories which every one should know. There is, on the other hand, unfortunately a mass of trashy fiction which, even if not decidedly immoral, is pernicious in the sense of being unprofitable and a waste of time. It is surely as important to have proper food for the mind as for the body, if we are to develop mentally and physically on proper lines.

Subscriber, Portland, Ore. Do you think it consistent for an evangelical church to raise money for hymn-books by giving a fairy play, in which "fancy dancing" is done by several Sunday school children between the acts?

Amusements of the character indicated are not only entirely out of place in a church, but no self-respecting congregation would resort to them for any purpose connected with the work of the church. The majority of Christian people regard dramatic performances and dances as amusements in which the church cannot consistently indulge.

A Sailor's Song

By Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

MY ship's in the harbor,
I'm home from the sea;
I'm glad to be home . . .
But the winds that blow free
From over the ocean
Are bidding me roam;
My ship's in the harbor,
I'm glad to be home.

And yet the dry land
Is a cramped sort of place
To one who can roam
O'er a limitless space;
The sunshine seems brighter
Out there on the foam. . . .
My ship's in the harbor,
I'm glad to be home.

MY ship's in the harbor,
I'm home from the sea;
And yet—am I home,
When the winds that blow free
Keep calling me, calling me,
Bidding me roam?
Ah, God of the ocean,
Your waves are my home!

Subscriber, Tacoma, Wash. I have heard it said, "If we knew everything we could forgive everything." Do you regard this statement as correct?

It is a broad assertion, impossible of demonstration, since no human being can claim to be omniscient. It is, however, probably true that, with a wider knowledge of people and affairs, and more familiarity with the causes of things, we would be apt to be far more generous in our judgment of others. Ignorance and prejudice breed narrowness, whereas the man or woman who is educated and well-informed will profit by observation and experience, and will not be disposed to judge hastily or to condemn their neighbors—at least, not without knowing all the facts.

M. M. J. C., Corapolis, Pa. The epistles to the seven churches mentioned in Revelation 2 and 3 were probably conveyed by messenger and delivered to the bishops or superintendent pastors who, as "angels" (messengers) or apostles, were held responsible for the spiritual condition of the churches over which they presided. Commentators hold that in these cases the word "angel" was employed in the symbolism of Revelation to designate an office held by an earthly minister of God, and to remind them that, "like the angels above, they below should fulfil God's mission zealously and efficiently."

Rev. A. S. Newcomb (Congregational), Greenville, Ill., writes: "In your issue of October 11, page 1126 ("The Church and the World War"), in the quotation from Dr. Gladden's new book, is this passage: 'There are said to be seven hundred thousand Christian ministers in Europe and America. If they had set themselves with a reasonable degree of unanimity against the war propaganda, basing their opposition on the principles of Christ's Gospel, their protest would have been heeded.' Their protest might have been heeded, but it seems doubtful. It was too late! The trouble lies farther back. Paul expresses it very clearly in I Tim. 1 : 5, 6, and most clearly in the Twentieth Century New Testament version: 'The object of all instruction is to call forth that love which comes from a pure heart, a clear conscience and a sincere faith. And it is because they have not aimed at these things, that the attention of certain people has been diverted to unprofitable subjects.' Popular preaching in all Europe has largely ignored this one supreme object of all instruction, and turned aside to unprofitable teaching—doubt, rationalism and destructive Criticism. They have persisted in this until they seem to have entirely forgotten that our Gospel is a message of love—the 'Good News of God's Love'—that its whole purpose is to teach us to love God and one another; and that love 'is never conquered by evil, but conquers evil with good.' And in this passage lies the remedy. Let it be the one object of all preaching and teaching 'to call forth that love which comes from a pure heart, a clear conscience and a sincere faith,' and war will soon cease throughout Christendom."

M. G. S., Wilton, Mass. The poem is not in our collections.

C. S. L., Iola, Ill., sends this suggestion apropos of our war export trade: "The school boards of this country are being earnestly appealed to for funds to buy food for starving children in the warring countries. As we aid them financially, why not go a little further and ask our people for a law prohibiting the sale of horses, munitions, firearms and men's shoes to belligerent nations, and thus stop the other end of the murderous work?"

Seeker, Boulder, Colo. God tempts no one (see James 1 : 13), although, by the removal of his guiding and restraining Spirit, after our long persistence in sin, he permits us to be placed in positions where, left to our own resources, we fall. He does, however, test our faith in him and our love for him by trials. It was in this sense that he tested the patriarchs and others. The passage in the Lord's Prayer, "lead us not into temptation," has two variants which better express the meaning, namely: "Leave us not in temptation," and "Suffer us not to be led into temptation." It should be remembered, however, that being tempted is not in itself a sin; the sin consists in yielding to temptation and encouraging and even welcoming it. Jesus himself was tempted, yet without sin.

Mrs. D. L. S., Landingville, Pa. Polycarp was one of the martyrs of the Christian Church, and is believed to have been contemporary with some of the apostles. He is said to have suffered martyrdom in 155 A.D., in the reign of Marcus Aurelius. He is believed to have been personally known to John the apostle, and was at one time Bishop of Smyrna. It is recorded that when he was taking his place at the stake, he protested against being secured to it with nails, as was common, and said, "Let me remain as I am, for he that has enabled me to brave the fire will so strengthen me that, without your fastening me with nails, I shall, unmoved, endure its fierceness." Then he offered up a short and beautiful prayer, after which death was hastened by the blow of a sword.

Subscriber, Jefferson, Iowa. There is no specific command recorded, and probably none was given, to change the Sabbath, but the change was made in celebration of Christ's rising from the dead. At the first great council of the church, when the question was discussed whether the Gentile converts should be required to obey the Jewish law, it was decided that only four observances should be required of them. (See Acts 15.) The writings of the early Fathers show that very early in the Christian era the first day of the week was uniformly the day of religious meeting and abstinence from secular labor, thus celebrating the new creation as the Jewish Sabbath celebrated the old. Several incidental allusions in Acts show that even in apostolic times the custom was prevalent.

H. L. Somerville, N. J. The fourth chapter of Hebrews is poetical in its nature and the reference to a day of rest is poetical. The rest that God took after the Creation is used figuratively. The rest spoken of is not the Sabbath rest, neither is it the final rest in heaven, but that rest and peace which come to every one who takes Christ's burdens and to whom, on believing, Christ gives rest from all the old sins, character, burdens and unrest by making all things new to them.

NOTICE OF EXPIRATION

ONCE each month we insert in the paper a subscription blank and notice of expiration for our subscribers whose Christian Herald subscriptions expired at any time during the past month. If your copy has this subscription blank inserted, please use it to renew at once. IF YOU SENT YOUR RENEWAL WITHIN THE LAST TWO OR THREE WEEKS, PLEASE PAY NO ATTENTION TO THE BLANK.

The subscription price of the Christian Herald is $2.00 a year.

When renewing, indicate on the blank with your remittance whether you are subscribing for any of our premium books. The following prices include postage and one year's subscription to the Christian Herald: 445 Additional Difficult Bible Questions Answered, $2.35; The Miracle of Answered Prayer, $2.35; Just David, $2.50; Miss Theodosia's Heartstrings, $2.50; Luther in Light of Recent Research, $2.75; India Paper Red Letter Bible, $3.50; with Genuine Morocco Binding, $4.50.

Do not forget you can have YOUR OWN RENEWAL AND ONE NEW SUBSCRIPTION FOR $3.00.

Send money by postal or express money orders. Address, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

S. E. S., Syracuse, Ind. Please explain "engrafted word" in James 1 : 21.

The writer is enjoining his hearers to turn over a new leaf in their demeanor and conversation, in conformity to their new state of being God's children. They are to lay aside all worldliness, all pollution and wickedness, and to receive the engrafted (implanted) word, namely, the word of truth or the Gospel, which the Holy Ghost is ready and willing to plant in any heart that is ready and willing to receive it.

C. M. A., Harrisburg, Pa. The prohibition against eating pork and the institution of various fasts belong to the old Jewish ceremonial law, which was superseded when Christians became free to serve the Lord according to Christ's teachings. At the first church council, described in Acts 15, the decision was made that Christians were not compelled to keep the ceremonial laws.

W. C. R., Breezewood, Pa. When the Christian is in secret communion with God, not uttering the words, does Satan know what we are praying for?

He does not. God alone has the attribute of omniscience, and to him alone are ascribed the powers of searching and knowing man's heart and mind. Ps. 44 : 21.

Anxious Reader, E. T. 1. Your first question is controversial. 2. Speaking in other tongues is a gift which was given to the apostles on the day of Pentecost, and authorities hold that it has not been repeated. You will do well, therefore, to look carefully, before trusting one who claims to have the gift.

D. E., Elizabethtown, Pa. What is meant in Jer. 13 : 23?

The prophet is here upbraiding the Israelites for their waywardness and godlessness. He has despaired of them and to drive home his argument he says that just as an Ethiopian (a Cushite of Abyssinia) cannot change his skin and become white, or as a leopard cannot change his spots and become one-colored, so neither is there a likelihood of the Jews turning to good, for evil and the inveterate habits of sin have become as second natures to them which they cannot cast off.

J. H., Soldiers' Home, Calif. Please explain Isa. 13 : 19–22. I have heard it stated that Babylon was inhabited at the present time.

The prophecy regarding Babylon has been literally fulfilled. It is a heap of ruins and it has never been rebuilt and is uninhabited, save by wild beasts. Its extensive ruins are traced on the east bank of the Euphrates River. The region, once fertile, has become a sterile waste, largely marsh. Explorers have made many excavations, but no one, we believe, has ever suggested the rebuilding of Babylon.

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD
· AN · ILLUSTRATED · NEWS · WEEKLY · FOR · THE · HOME ·

Trail-Hitters' Day

New York's First Gun in the Sunday Evangelistic Campaign

By CHARLES GALLAUDET TRUMBULL

IT was Big Ben who was speaking—Big Ben Fowler, a Philadelphia policeman—and it was the New York policemen who were listening. "I thank God I am a Christian police officer," said Big Ben. "I was detailed to go to the Tabernacle in Philadelphia and I was placed down in front, right under the gun, where he couldn't miss me."

Yes, Big Ben was hit, hard hit, and he will be praising God through all eternity that he was. He told of a Philadelphia man who finally led him up the sawdust trail, one memorable night when the sweet singer, Charles H. Gabriel, and the soul-winning evangelist, Rodeheaver, had sung a duet, "Since Jesus Came Into My Heart." The hymn had been sung only the night before, and it had troubled Big Ben greatly. He could not get to sleep that night. This time it was sung again "for the benefit of some of the officers who had not heard it the night before," said he, "but I truly believe it was for my benefit, for the Lord came into my heart that night. I am not going to knock any churches," he went on, "but I had been to church over and over again, gone in and come out, and nobody ever said a word to me; nobody cared anything for my soul."

The New York policemen who were listening realized that somebody was caring for their souls in that crowded room of the International Christian Police Association on Sunday afternoon, January 14. Officer after officer of the Philadelphia police stood up and gave straight-from-the-shoulder testimony for the Lord Jesus Christ. They told what he meant to them, to their wives and to their children; and their witnessing was such as many a Christian minister in our land might well envy both for directness of diction and for supernatural spiritual power.

In striking contrast with the atmosphere and surroundings of the little crowded meeting of policemen held in the humble quarters of this blessedly effective Christian Police Association was a scene that Sunday evening in a spacious, dignified, imposing Episcopalian church of New York City. People were there by the hundreds. The church was almost cathedral-like in its architecture and massive spaces. And the upturned, eager faces of the congregation were looking into Spirit-illumined faces of men who were still talking about Billy Sunday and pouring out their gratitude to God for ever having sent him to Philadelphia.

A business man, representing one of the great typewriter concerns of America, told from the pulpit of that church how, although he himself was not a "trail-hitter," having been confirmed many years before by Bishop Potter in New York, he nevertheless rejoiced in the meaning of "trail-hitting," for he had seen his own son and daughter "hit the trail" in the sawdust-floored tabernacle in Philadelphia, taking Billy Sunday's hand and giving their hearts to the Lord Jesus Christ. Then he told of his joy when, shortly after that, his eighteen-year-old boy having received an appointment to the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis, the boy went with the father to Bishop Rhinelander's own home, where, with his rector, the three men and the boy united in the young fellow's confirmation service and enlistment in the eternity-service of the Captain of his salvation as he entered upon naval service for Uncle Sam.

The leader of the "team" of men who spoke that night in the Episcopalian church in New York had told the rector, before the service, that he wished to know what the rector desired his men to do. And the prompt and gracious reply was that they were to do anything they pleased in making that evening service entirely their own after a few minutes of opening prayer, Scripture and hymns.

THESE are two typical instances of a memorable day in the life of the Christian churches of New York City—"Trail-Hitters' Day." Five hundred laymen had gone from Philadelphia to New York to help fire the first big gun in the W. A. Sunday Evangelistic Campaign in the greatest city of America. These men were largely "trail-hitters"—men who either for the first time found Christ in the Sunday tabernacle in Philadelphia, or were brought back into a restored Christian life. Twenty-four men came also from Syracuse to New York to share in the testimony of the day. More than three hundred churches opened their pulpits to the teams of four men each—for the men spoke morning and evening in different churches, and in some cases in the afternoon. An unprecedented number of Episcopalian churches applied for teams. Not all of the more than three hundred churches are as yet technically "cooperating churches" in the Sunday campaign, but some of those who are not will undoubtedly become enthusiastically cooperative as the result of the testimonies in their pulpits on that day. Indeed, some of the churches were so profoundly impressed at the close of the morning service, after hearing these men who are on fire for Christ, that they asked for another team for their evening service of the same day and changed all their plans in order to accomplish this. They got their teams, too!

Nearly two hundred and fifty churches have already definitely become cooperating churches, and at the rate at which names of other churches are coming in at the headquarters the number will doubtless be nearly three hundred when the campaign itself starts.

To Christian Herald Readers:

I HAVE never known a city to take hold of the preparatory work more enthusiastically than New York. Judging the future on this basis, knowing what New York is capable of doing and knowing what needs to be done, I am expecting to see the metropolis of America do things for God that will cause heaven to shout and hell to frown.

W A Sunday

THE definite campaign preparation for Sunday's coming to Greater New York really began some time ago in Brooklyn, when the famous Men's Bible Class's fiery leader, George Dowey, started in to round up 50,000 men in Brooklyn for men's Bible classes.

He has just completed his Brooklyn work, and is starting in on Manhattan and the Bronx—this time going after 100,000 men for Bible classes. "Trail-Hitters' Day" has blazed the trail for Dowey and his sweeping Bible class campaign.

Up in the Metropolitan Tower in the heart of New York, where the air is good and the sky is blue, you will find the "W. A. Sunday Evangelistic Committee" filling a suite of modern offices, and on the jump. Manhattan and the Bronx have been divided, for the coming campaign, into twenty districts. Each district is subdivided into sections, and each section into blocks, a block representing sixty families. Commencing February 13, it is planned to hold two prayer meetings in each block for seven weeks—that is, until the Sabbath of April 1, when the evangelist arrives and his actual campaign commences. Mr. Sunday's campaign itself is planned to run from April 1 to June 24.

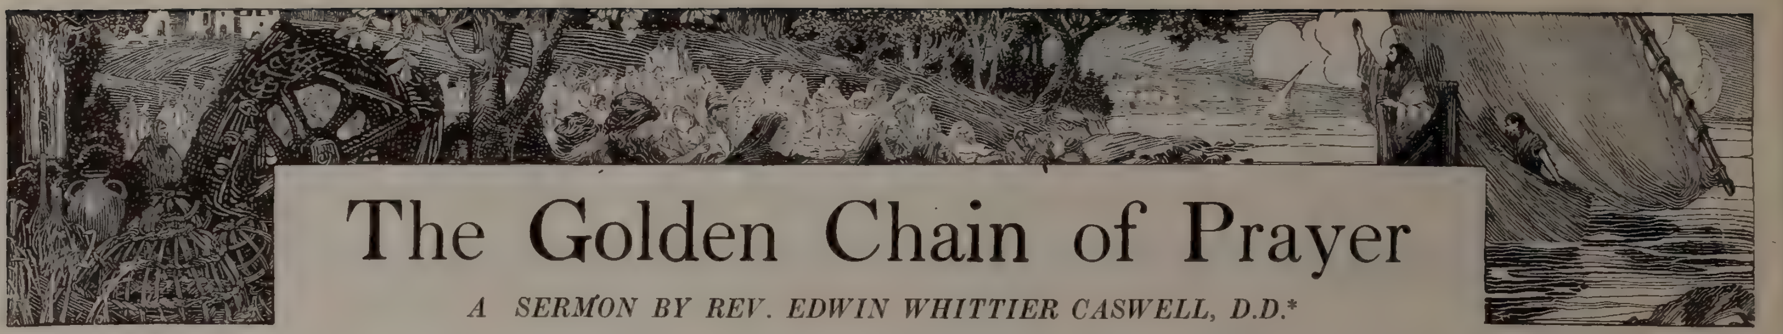
Two workers are to be secured for each block; and each prayer meeting, it is hoped, will eventually become a permanent Bible class. If only a small percentage of such prayer meetings become Bible classes, think what this means to New York.

The best feature of a Sunday Evangelistic Campaign is its tremendous by-products. Thousands upon thousands of souls will be won to Christ because of the campaign in New York City, who never "hit the trail" in the great tabernacle under Sunday's preaching. And this soul-winning has already begun. In one of the churches on "Trail-Hitters' Day," January 14, two months and a half before the campaign commences, the pastor of the church at the close of the testimonies of the visiting team asked any who wanted to settle the matter then and there to come forward. Ten men promptly made the decision for Christ and came forward, "hitting the trail" in a dignified Presbyterian church in a city where conventionality holds powerful sway. And that was not the only church in which soul-winning was openly witnessed that day in New York.

The men from Philadelphia did not come to New York in a self-confident or self-satisfied spirit. More than one had never spoken in public before in any such way as this. A big-bodied, big-hearted ex-policeman who spoke Sunday morning in a Congregational church and Sunday evening in an Episcopalian church, confided to the "captain" of his team that he had never done such a thing before, and that his wife had told him he was sure to "fall down" if he tried it. "Christ doesn't let men fall down," was the answer; "you did splendidly." The new-born, middle-aged witness to Christ seemed as pleased as a boy, and his eyes were shining as he said, "Say, I wish you'd write my wife a letter and just tell her that, will you?" The promise to do so was heartily made—and kept.

As one of the speakers said that day, the great fact in a Sunday campaign is, not the evangelist's eccentricity, not his slang, not his ripping off his coat or collar, not his jumping to the top of the pulpit as he pleads with men to accept Christ, not his baseball record, not his rare genius and extraordinary ability as a man; no, none of these things. The great fact is the supernatural power of God. Billy Sunday preaches the Gospel of Jesus Christ, the shed blood of Jesus as our Saviour and our Substitute, the only way of escape for men from the penalty and the power of their sins.

Such a campaign is God's clearing-house for answered prayer. Prayers that have been offered for a year past, for five years past, for twenty years, are going to be answered this spring in New York City. May God lay it upon intercessors throughout all Christendom, until the campaign is over, and after the campaign is over, that the heart of God may be satisfied with Christ's work in souls for all eternity as he sends this chosen herald of his to a city that so sorely needs the Good News.



The Golden Chain of Prayer

*A SERMON BY REV. EDWIN WHITTIER CASWELL, D.D.

TEXT—Matt. 18 : 19. "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven."

WE are dwelling in the supreme hour in the history of Christianity. While this most terrible European War has lifted the curtains of eternity before the gaze of earth's millions; while united prayer and endeavor have opened the doors of heathen nations to the Gospel; while all America seems electrified by the revival spirit; while the spirit of unity pervades all denominations of Christians, shall not the Christian world get together and be bound together by the golden chain of prayer, uniting our world to the throne of the Eternal?

Oh for a federation of prayer, that will open the windows of heaven and shut the gates of hell and give the only permanent peace and purity to our troubled world! Is not the way to solve the mighty problems of this age the way of the Cross of Christ, and is not the entrance gate to Calvary's summit one of intercession and supplication?

If secret prayer is blessed to the individual, united prayer is powerful for the salvation of mankind. Is it not true—"Ye have not because ye ask not?" We must plow by prayer if we would reap the mighty harvest. The Almighty has not changed since the days of Abraham, Moses and Elijah. They, like princes, prevailed in prayer. The Transfiguration glory and the Pentecostal power came in answer to prayer. United prayer today will turn men from gold to God, from the thirst of evil passions to the waters of life, from infidelity to truth as it is in Jesus. With prayer for a lever and the Cross for a fulcrum, the church of Christ can lift the world heavenward.

The power of united prayer will bring the power of the Holy Spirit upon the church, when she will speak with tongues of fire electrifying the world. Then the lost prayer meeting will be found; then the Sunday school scholars who come in at one door of the church will not pass out at the other, but will remain to help in the conquest of mankind for Christ. Then the words, "They could not cast the evil spirit out," will not stand as a charge against a powerless Christianity.

"IF two of you shall agree"—Jesus gives us the smallest number possible for unity in petition. "One can chase a thousand, but two shall put ten thousand to flight." Four shall vanquish one hundred thousand, and eight a million. What wonderful might lies in the unity of Christendom! When the church agrees in united prayer, she can fill out the blank check Jesus has given her in this promise, signed by his own crimson signature and made payable to our order at the bank of Heaven. We can fill in any amount, even to "the fulness of him that filleth all in all."

Where two are gathered in prayer, there are always three, for Jesus is there in the midst. He will inspire your petition, helping you to ask in his all-prevailing Name, and therefore to pray in harmony with the will of God.

Before every great spiritual awakening, there have been calloused knees of prayer. The Fulton Street prayer-meeting of 1857 was the beginning of an all-the-world revival prayer-meeting. When Jeremiah Calvin Lanphier, a consecrated layman, felt impelled to start a business men's prayer-meeting in the Old Dutch Church on Fulton Street, at the noonday hour, there were only six persons present at their first session on September 23, 1857; but Jesus was there in the midst, and he made that prayer service a very gate of heaven. In three weeks from that time there were more than one hundred in attendance. Soon after, the John Street Methodist Episcopal Church opened its doors, only one block away, in order to receive the overflow. When the John Street auditorium and gallery were filled, Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, and twelve other churches in Manhattan opened their doors for similar meetings. Every city and hamlet in the Republic felt the call to prayer. Nations received telephonic messages from the Throne; a world revival had started which swept millions into the Kingdom.

I once spoke at the regular anniversary of the Fulton Street meeting, about a dozen years ago, saying that when a boy of fourteen years of age, in my father's store in Ilion, New York, I heard Mr. Philo Remington say to my father, "They are having a great revival in New York City, and I think we had better ask our pastor to begin like services in Ilion." I was one of the first to seek Christ in that meeting. Following this testimony, the Rev. David James Burrell, of the Collegiate Reformed Church, New York City, gave a similar experience. He lived in a Western town, and when the tidal wave of the Fulton Street prayer-meeting reached his vicinity, he became one of the first converts. Think of the influence of a single one of those hundreds of thousands in America who then became followers of the Christ! Now many noonday prayer-meetings girdle the globe. The Young Men's Christian Association movement was born in that revival, and a mighty impulse was given to missions in all lands.

WE know that prayer is a secret, invisible power, exerted not by the voice or the personal presence, not by direct effort of individuals, not by activities in service, but by the moving of the Hand that moves the universe. How like electricity is prayer! It can be everywhere in a moment, as quick as thought. One may be on a sick-bed, helpless, able to do nothing else but pray, and yet mightier than the mightiest who is only exerting his own strength. Prayer is very close to the omnipotence and omniscience of God. Prayer, it has been said, may not change the purpose of God, but it will change his action. God does not coerce a soul; he cannot give unless we are ready to receive.

The "Prayer League meeting" held every week through the columns of the Christian Herald is participated in every week by its great army of readers. A mighty company, widely scattered in many states, presents these requests for prayer and offers its doxologies of praise for answered prayer. It is as though a multitude of noonday prayer-meetings were held far apart, yet in spirit concentrated as one vast assembly, all praying that the requests of the previous week may be answered; all united in a federation of nationalities, of churches, of societies, of kindreds and tongues, and the Divine Master in the midst of them. In all the meetings of this great Prayer League, should we not ask in His Name and claim the victory, saying, as Jesus did at the grave of Lazarus, "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me; I knew that thou hearest me always." It is as though this nation were one great gathering, where the incense of prayer and praise ascends to heaven as the dews of the morning rise to greet the sun.

Prayer "is the moment when heaven and earth kiss each other." Yea, when the soul of the Father touches that of his child in loving, sweet communion. In God's left hand he holds the laws of nature, but in his right hand he holds the laws of love, that flow out as he embraces the children of his bosom.

Rev. John Clifford tells of a young Christian, whose religious fervor had cooled down, whose early raptures had vanished and in their place had come torturing doubts, so that he said to himself, "Am I not deceived after all? Is Christianity true? Did miracles happen? What is inspiration?" Week after week he reasoned and argued. Finally he was drawn into a prayer circle, privately carried on by a group of young men, where he was lifted into a higher atmosphere. In that realm of prayer he was delivered from his doubts and his soul freed from tormenting fears.

MR. MOODY once said, "Prayer is more powerful than gunpowder." "How do you know, Mr. Moody?" a friend inquired. "Well," he said, "during the Civil War I was holding a meeting in Nashville, Tenn., when a young soldier came to me with a letter in his hand, trembling from head to foot. 'Mr. Moody,' he said, 'I want you to pray for me. I have just received a letter from my sister, and she tells me that this very evening, as the sun goes down, she is on her knees in prayer to God for my salvation. I don't know why it is, but I have been trembling like a leaf ever since I received this letter, and I am afraid that something dreadful is going to happen unless I am converted.' The prayer was offered and the soldier was saved. This young man, with all his bravery before the cannon's mouth, was at heart an infidel. He did not believe in prayer or in Christianity, but his sister's prayer of faith, six hundred miles away, made him tremble from head to foot with the ague of conviction, which the dangers of battle could not do. Therefore I say that prayer is more powerful than gunpowder."

Individual prayer is a duty and an inestimable privilege; but united intercessory prayer for the salvation of others and for the world of lost men is the mightiest human power ever exerted by the Church of the living God. It is exerting supernatural power to move and energize the machinery and methods and missions of united Christendom.

"The prayer that springs from wells beneath,
That has its sources from above,
The prayer that gives, the prayer that goes,
The prayer that prays from very love;

"The prayer that prays unceasingly,
The prayer that prays for friend and foe,
The prayer that prays untiringly—
The prayer that prays for high and low;

"This prayer is prayed in Jesus' name;
This prayer is only Spirit-given;
This prayer will always end in praise—
This is the prayer that reaches Heaven."

---

*Dr. Caswell is one of the most spiritual of our Methodist pastors today. This sermon was specially prepared for the readers of this journal.

Among the Workers

THE New York Reformation Quadricentenary Committee has appealed to the governments of England, Germany, France, Austria, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland, asking each government to permit the sending to this country of such relics of the Reformation as it may consider feasible, or in case originals cannot be transported, that replicas may be made. The American State Department has also been asked to permit such exhibits to be transported under its seal. This Reformation exhibit promises to be a great mass demonstration of the actual work of Protestantism.

WORCESTER, Mass., opened the year with union revival services, to continue through the month of January under the leadership of Rev. Milton S. Rees.

A REVIVAL conference is being planned for the thirtieth reunion of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, January 31 to February 5, "Founder's Day."

RECOGNIZING an usual opportunity for the favorable reception of God's Word, the New York Bible Society during the recent Christmas season supplied 11,063 volumes of the Scriptures to be placed in Christmas baskets containing Christmas dinners sent by missions, charity organizations and individuals to those less fortunate than the rest of us. Of the 11,063 volumes, 20 were complete Bibles, 458 New Testaments, and 10,585 portions of Scripture.

REV. WHITFORD L. McDOWELL, D.D., formerly district superintendent of the Washington, D. C., district, is the new head of the Department of Church Extension of the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

THE opposing forces in the liquor fight are lining up in great industrial centers for the final conflict. One-half the population in the wet territory lives in four great industrial States—New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and New Jersey—and one-fourth of the people in wet territory live in six great industrial cities—New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Boston and Cleveland. Rev. Charles Stelzle, who has made an exhaustive study of the liquor problem from the workingman's viewpoint, giving substantially two years of his time to this investigation, is about to inaugurate a national campaign among the tradeunionists in America, organizing a national Anti-Saloon Fellowship. He may be addressed at 105 East 22d Street, New York City.

THE St. Louis, Mo., District of the Methodist Episcopal Church (South) instituted on December 31 an evangelistic program to be furthered by personal work by groups of church members during January, to be continued by special prayer meetings within these groups during February and to culminate in special meetings in March, including decision services in the Sunday schools, leading to a church-wide reception of members on Palm Sunday, April 1. The week from Palm Sunday to Easter is to be given to "get acquainted" reception services for new members, and after Easter the members, old and new, are to be regrouped for definite service.

REV. FRANK MASON NORTH, D.D., who has been elected president of the Federal Council of Churches, has for many years been closely identified with plans of interdenominational activity. He was one of the founders of the "Open and Institutional Church League" in 1894, which, six years later, was merged into the National Federation of Churches.

A SERIES of meetings for evangelism and the deepening of the spiritual life was opened in the Garrick Theater in Philadelphia January 8, to continue until February 2, under the leadership of S. D. Gordon, widely known through his books and his "Quiet Talks" at the summer conferences.

THE Baptist Ministers' Convention of Chicago has adopted a resolution protesting against the proposed segregation, or any form of official toleration, of the "social evil" in that city.

FOR EVERY DAY
IN THE
YEAR

DAILY MEDITATION

Revs.
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
C. C. Albertson, D.D.
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

The Aristocracy of Passionate Souls

SUNDAY, February 4. Rom. 12 : 11. "Fervent in spirit." It is possible to have in life a fervor of exceedingly limited range. In the house of my being there may be a fire in only one room. The warmth may be in single aspects of character, in particular powers and demeanors. The fervor may be in work and not in worship. It may be in controversy, but not in service. It may be in a hobby, and not in a calling. We may go from one room to another and find a startling change of temperature. In one room it is like summertime, in another it is like winter. The business room is at blood-heat while the oratory is at zero. Thomas Arnold of Rugby used to say that when he could go from his knees into his schoolroom, and feel that the temperature changed in the transition, he knew that there was something very faulty and perverted in his relationship to God. When the fire of the Holy Spirit is here and not there, there is somewhere a break in our communion.

The apostle Paul enjoins a fervor which pervades and possesses the entire life. It is a matter of central heating, which keeps the whole house in the strength and comfort of a uniform temperature. It is not intensity of faculty, it is fervency of spirit. It is not a partial enthusiasm, it is a devotion which fills the life. We are to be spiritually passionate, and this is the basal passion which radiates warmth into all the faculties and powers, and imparts a sacred glow and vigor to every aspect of character and conduct. And to the great apostle this passion is just the fire of holy love; it is the ardor of entire consecration; it is the heavenly enthusiasm begotten of intimate companionship with the Lord. Yes, it is holy love, kindling everything with its hallowing flame, and transforming even the commonest bush into the radiant home of our God.

It is a familiar word, but one worth repeating, that no virtue is safe until it becomes enthusiastic. It is safe only when it becomes the home of fire. In the high realms of the spirit it is only the passionate that is secure. Noble passion carries immunity. Evil contagions find an easy prey in the lukewarm, in those whose moral fires are dull, and who do not confront the enemy with the power of a fierce destruction. The seraphim, those pure spirits who are in the immediate service of the Lord, are the "burning ones;" and it is their noble privilege to carry fire from off the altar and touch with purifying flame the lips of the unclean.

"As I mused the fire burned." That is how every fire is kindled, whether it be clean or unclean. Fires begin to burn in meditation, in contemplation, in communion. When we humbly but persistently seek the intimacy of the Spirit it is inevitable that we shall be baptized with the Holy Spirit "and with fire." We shall be seized in the mighty constraints of the eternal Lover, and we shall love him because he first loved us. J. H. J.

The Master Builder

MONDAY, February 5. Heb. 3 : 4. "For every house is builded by some man; but he that built all things is God." Not without good reason do the Scriptures employ builders' terms. The process of building is one of the most familiar arts of life. Jesus spoke in no strange language when he gave the parable of the two foundations. Heaven seems all the more homelike to us when it is described as a city whose architect and builder is God.

Nature is a great builder. The earth has been built up through incalculable geological ages. Life is an endless builder. A living tissue under the microscope reveals the activities of an invisible Artificer, laying the foundations and adding wall to wall.

Character is the product of an interior building. It begins with the first conscious act and does not end until "life's flaming glories sink to a candle's ray." The reverent geologist sees in the earth the handiwork of its omnipotent Builder. The reverent biologist sees in the ever recurring miracle of life the unwithdrawn presence of life's Originator. Viewing the changes in a living cell, one feels himself within the presence of the Creating Cause. Shall we not stand with equal reverence before the slowly rising structure of a human character? God is also the Builder here. As life adds grace to grace and glory to glory, one needs but a little clearing of his vision to catch a glimpse of him who is erecting this temple and means to dwell within it. "Ye are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." C. C. A.

Jerusalem the Mother

TUESDAY, February 6. Gal. 4 : 26. "Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all." This text may be regarded as the culminating point in Paul's beautiful allegory of Agar and Sarah. It directs the attention of the Galatians to the grave issue which they had conjured up against themselves by submitting again to the old rites and ordinances of the Jewish ceremonial law, thinking that they would thereby rise to higher perfection in their Christian profession. Paul tells them that they were exchanging their God-given evangelical liberty for legal bondage, and were setting a higher value upon external acts of piety than upon that inward holiness which the influence of Gospel grace produces in believers.

The Jerusalem which is above is the church of Jesus Christ here on earth, where the word of grace, "the law of liberty," is proclaimed, where men are taught, not to perform certain prescribed acts of worship, often with little devotion and small relish, but to give their whole lives up to a free, willing and joyous service of God, who has freed them from the yoke of bondage by Jesus Christ, who is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. In this church the believer feels at home: her ways answer to the new life which has been begotten in him. Here he feels like a free son or daughter performing all tasks gladly under the approving eye of a loved and loving mother. In this church the believer claims citizenship.

Legalism in religion may appeal to the pride of men and foster conceits, but it does not develop the essentials of Christianity. We must look higher. Real religiousness moves on an elevated plane of free consecration and leads to perfection in glory, the ultimate goal of all Christian endeavor, the "city fair and high," eternal in the heavens. W. H. T. D.

Hate Makes Our Hell

WEDNESDAY, February 7. Prov. 8 : 36. "All that hate me love death." Rev. George Matheson uses this illustration: A father says to the child, "Do not go near the fire while I am out. If you do, I shall be very angry." The father's fear is that the little one will hurt itself, and if the child disobeys the father's pain will be greater than that of the child. Is it not so that our heavenly Father warns us to keep away from the flames of sinfulness? When remorse burns and shame flames and conscience scorches, the heavenly Father suffers because he loves us so. He sent his only Son to pull us out of the fire, to heal our burnings and restore our lost lives with his healing love.

We build our own hell in our lustful hearts; hating him, we love sin and death. We go to our own place, where the worm of guilt dieth not. Think of it—men accuse God of making the hell they have kindled in their own bosoms. They say the heavenly Father is unfeeling to let them suffer, when he did all possible to keep them from touching the fire and all he could to rescue them from the flames; and when the Father's love can do no more he cries out, "How can I give thee up, O my children!"

What a climax of ingratitude to have the child try to throw the blame of his wrongdoing back upon the heart that loved him with an everlasting love! E. W. C.

The Glory of the King's Daughter

THURSDAY, February 8. Ps. 45 : 13. "The king's daughter is all glorious within: her clothing is of wrought gold." Perhaps the primary reference of this psalm was to a daughter of Solomon on the eve of her marriage. Even so, this does not deprive it of a prophetic significance. What the psalmist wrote of the bride is true of the church, so often referred to in the Scriptures as "the bride of Christ." And it should be true of Christians, individual members of the church, joined as we are in indissoluble union with the Bridegroom.

We are all the sons and daughters of the King. What then is our present glory? The very fact of kinship to the King, of adoption into the heavenly family, is reasonable cause for glorying. Is not God our Father, and are we not of royal blood? But many a noble father has unworthy children. God seeks to reproduce in us his own character. He presides over the processes of discipline by which we are made like himself. The true glory of childship is moral similitude. "We shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Godliness is nothing less than Godlikeness. The metaphysical qualities of God are beyond our attainment, and even beyond our comprehension, but the moral qualities of God are for us to aspire to. Jesus Christ is both model and type—model of goodness and type of humanity's ultimate glory. C. C. A.

The One Without Blemish

FRIDAY, February 9. John 8 : 46. "Which of you convinceth me of sin? And if I say the truth, why do ye not believe me?" Thus spoke Jesus of Nazareth. No particular charge had been preferred against him on the occasion when he uttered these words, but throughout his public career as a teacher the opposition of the leaders of his nation had always subtly implied and at times openly asserted that some deep element of wickedness must be concealed in his mysterious person. They had suggested that he must be in league with the powers of darkness. It would seem that a mere assertion of his innocence would have answered the purpose of Jesus. He might have said: "I may make mistakes; it is human to err. But I am not guilty of the things which you imply in your veiled insinuations and in your direct charges. You misunderstand the character of my actions and misinterpret my motives." That would have sufficed. What he actually asserts is, not only that he has not sinned, but that he is sinless. And this claim follows from what he has told them a moment ago, namely, that he is the Son of God.

It is impossible for God to lie, or to commit any other sin. The unbelieving Jews were not resisting an innocent man but the sinless, impeccable God. The claim of Jesus rests on his superhuman qualities. It is of special importance to us in the Lenten meditations in which we are engaging during these weeks. We are approaching again the day when we are reminded of the trial and execution of Jesus. By the testimony of his judges and of the unhappy disciple who betrayed him Jesus was innocent of the charges brought against him. He was the victim of unreasoning malice. But his self-sacrifice was the offering of that High Priest who became us, and who is holy, harmless, undefiled, separate from sinners, and made higher than the heavens. We were redeemed, not with corruptible things as silver and gold, but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot. W. H. T. D.

The Heart and the Face

SATURDAY, February 10. II. Cor. 4 : 6. "For God hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ." Beholding the face of Christ in the glorious Gospel glass, we are transformed into his image. In the mirror of nature we see as through a glass darkly some of the divine attributes. David realized that "the heavens declare the glory of God and the earth showeth forth his handiwork." While the masterpieces of the Creator's physical workmanship may call forth worship and adoration, nature cannot reveal the pardoning love of the Fatherhood nor the glory of redemption in Christ. When the veil of unbelief and sinfulness is removed by faith, we see Christ, the Saviour, in the Gospel mirror and realize that this first flash of divine radiance is salvation.

Raphael, who once began reading the New Testament that he might paint more correctly the face of Jesus, suddenly beholding the spiritual glory of his divine character, exclaimed, "My Lord and my God!" We know that it takes but a second for the human face to become etched by the power of light upon the glass in the camera. It takes no longer by the power of the light of the Holy Spirit to imprint the divine nature upon the tablet of the heart.

> Where can I find thee, Lord? Why, thou art here
> In every form of beauty which I meet:
> In skies that glow with gladness, and in sweet
> And holy hours, when silence seems discreet.

E. W. C.

◆

Good nature is a key that fits many locks.

Religion must soak in before it can flow out.

Man may be the architect of a home, but woman is the builder.

Moss grows on a man's hopes if he waits for something to turn up.

We say, "This is a hard old world!" but what are we doing to soften it?

Golden hopes of an eternity are better than a safe deposit box in a bank.

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

© International Film Service, Inc.

Admiral George Dewey

THE ADMIRAL'S FLAG IS FURLED. Admiral George Dewey, the ranking naval officer of the world, died at his home in Washington on Tuesday afternoon, January 16. Admiral Dewey was born in Montpelier, Vt., December 26, 1837. He was graduated from Annapolis in 1858. He fought under Farragut in the Civil War. Just before the breaking out of the Spanish War he reached the grade of Commodore. In January, 1898, he was assigned to the command of the Asiatic Fleet, which consisted of seven vessels, none of them heavily armored, of which the Olympia was the flagship. As the critical situation with Spain developed, Commodore Dewey, whose squadron was short of coal and carried only 80 per cent. of its normal supply of ammunition, prepared to give a good account of himself. He purchased two British colliers and took his fleet to a little-known Chinese harbor, where he coaled his vessels. From there he set sail for Manila as soon as war was declared. His victory at Manila Bay on May 1, 1898, made him at once a popular hero, and the diplomacy with which he handled the delicate situation, through the months which intervened between his victory and the arrival of sufficient reinforcements, brought him the admiration of diplomatists and military men. His return to New York on September 26, 1899, was a national event. Since March, 1900, Admiral Dewey had been head of the General Board of the Navy. In this position he greatly influenced the growth of the navy. A national funeral was planned for the admiral to be held on Saturday, January 20. The official services were held in the rotunda of the Capitol at 11 o'clock, after which a great procession of military and naval forces escorted the body to the Arlington National Cemetery, where it was interred with full military honors. Congress adjourned for the funeral.

BRITISH SHELL BID ACCEPTED. Secretary Daniels on January 17 announced that he had awarded contracts for 7,500 armor-piercing projectiles for the United States navy to the firm of Hadfields, Ltd., of Sheffield, England, the total value of the contract being $3,141,000, slightly more than a million and a half under the lowest American bid.

CRUISER THROWN AWAY. In an attempt to tow the submarine H-3 into deep water at Eureka, Calif., on January 13, the cruiser Milwaukee was herself caught by the surf and thrown on the rocks, and the monitor Cheyenne and the navy tug Iroquois, which had lines to the Milwaukee, only escaped a similar fate by severing the lines. At last reports it appeared probable that the Milwaukee would be a total loss, and plans were being made for the salvage of her machinery and guns. Many shipping men wonder at the policy that would send a $7,000,000 cruiser to salvage a $250,000 submarine when it was known that it was a hazardous venture.

ARMY AVIATORS LOST. On January 13 it was announced that an army aeroplane carrying Lieutenant-Colonel H. G. Bishop and Lieutenant W. A. Robertson, Jr., had been missing from San Diego since January 10 and had been traced to a point in Mexico fifty miles south of Calexico. At last reports civilian searching parties in automobiles, aided by Mexican soldiers, were searching the desert for the lost aviators.

TO TAX EXCESS PROFITS. It was announced on January 14 that the Democratic leaders in the House had agreed on a revenue bill to be passed if possible at this session. The plan contemplates the issuance of $200,000,000 in short term treasury notes, the sale of $231,000,000 of Panama Canal bonds already authorized, the revision of the inheritance tax by increasing its rates approximately fifty per cent., and the levying of a special internal revenue tax of from five to eight per cent. on all profits in excess of eight per cent. per annum of all persons, firms and corporations engaged in business.

MEXICAN CONFERENCE ADJOURNS. The American-Mexican Joint Commission was formally dissolved Monday, January 15. The American commissioners recommended that further negotiations should be continued by the American ambassador in Mexico. It was reported from Washington on January 12 that careful study by the Administration of reports from Mexico showed that Manuel Palez was extending his field of operations along the east coast, that Zapata was once more in possession of the state of Morelos adjoining the Federal District, and that armed bands were in force between Mexico City and Vera Cruz. While reports of the defeat of the Villa columns continue to be sent out of Mexico, it was apparent on January 16 that the Villistas were again in sufficient force in the state of Chihuahua to threaten the city with recapture.

Verner von Heidenstam

Winner of 1916 Nobel prize for literature

TO UNITE HEBREW CHURCHES. At the convention of the Union of Hebrew Congregations in Baltimore on January 16, a proposal was made looking toward the union of the Jewish orthodox and reformed churches. The union may be brought about through joint support of the Synagogue Pension Fund which is being created for the support of superannuated rabbis and the widows and orphans of rabbis. The delegates were asked to authorize the raising of a fund of $3,000,000 for the support of the work of the Tract Commission, the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, the home mission work and the Synagogue Fund, of which $150,000 was subscribed by the delegates.

WHITE SLAVE ACT LEGAL. On January 15 the Supreme Court upheld the Mann White Slave Act. Chief Justice White and Justices McKenna and Clark dissented.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. Ratifications of the Danish-American treaty, transferring the ownership of the Danish West Indies to the United States, were exchanged at the State Department in Washington on January 17. The treaty was amended by the Senate to protect the Danish church and its property rights. . . . The Senate on January 11 passed Senator Bankhead's bill forbidding the transmission in the mails of liquor advertisements or circulars. . . . France is reported to be making plans for the complete utilization after the war of the 4,600,000 horsepower provided by its waterfalls. About 20 per cent. is being utilized at present. . . . Farmers of New England have formed the New England Milk Producers' Association for the purpose of securing the full market value of their dairy products, improving the production, introducing economy in feeding, and improving agricultural conditions generally. . . . The House of Representatives at Washington on January 10 passed the Hughes Bill, which is similar to a measure passed by the Senate at the last session, appropriating money for the training and employment of teachers in state schools to prepare boys and girls for useful employment. The bill appropriates $1,700,000 for the first year, and appropriations are increased each year, reaching $7,200,000 in nine years. In order to secure a share of the money thus appropriated, a state must appropriate an amount equal to its share. . . . Higher costs are said to be forcing an increase in selling prices upon the five and ten cent stores of the country. It was announced on January 14 that one of these great chains of stores would hereafter bear the sign "Five, Ten and Fifteen Cent Store." There are said to be now more than 1,200 of these five and ten cent stores in the United States. . . . News has come via Washington of serious riots in December in Chinese Turkestan, in which from two to three hundred Chinese were killed by rioting Cossack laborers being returned to Russian territory under escort of Chinese troops after having participated in the gathering of the Chinese harvest. . . . On January 11 Franz Bopp, German consul general at San Francisco, and four of his employees were found guilty of having violated the neutrality of the United States. Consul Bopp protested his innocence and declared that he would appeal.

TO UNITE AGAINST THE SALOON. At the Prohibition National Committee meeting in Chicago on January 16, it appeared probable that a union of all associations fighting the saloon would soon be realized, a union so organized that each element, although retaining its identity, would have the support of all the others. It is expected that in organizing for united effort a meeting of delegates will be called representing the Prohibition Party, the Anti-Saloon League, the W. C. T. U., the Methodist and Presbyterian Church Temperance Societies, Christian Endeavor and the Good Templars.

President Wilson Defines Permanent Peace Conditions

BEFORE an amazed Senate at one o'clock Monday, January 22, President Wilson, having arranged to address the Senate only a few hours before, delivered a message to the nations of the world—for advance copies of the speech were cabled to foreign governments a week before—on the question of the final peace terms which will engage the cooperation of the United States. The Christian Herald must go to press before it is possible to formulate well-considered opinions upon this historic message, or to gather the views of others. All that is possible is to state below the essential features of the address, and promise our readers the complete document next week with a résumé of public opinion.

The purport of the address is to announce to the belligerent nations the kind of a peace which the United States, in the opinion of the President, would, in cooperation with all nations, be willing to guarantee. This peace must be based, it states, upon the following principles:

Peace in the present war must be concluded as between equals, not between victor and vanquished.

Complete and actual freedom of the seas to all nations.

Recognition of equal rights for all nations, great and small, must be conceded.

The principle must be accepted that all governments derive their just powers only from the consent of the governed. (A new and independent Poland is cited as one instance of what the President has in mind in this above declaration.)

All nations that need it for their proper development shall be guaranteed free outlet to the seas.

Naval and military programs must no longer be based on possible hostilities, but solely on the needs of a cooperative world peace force.

The Monroe Doctrine in principle must be adopted as a world standard, namely, no nation shall seek to extend its form of government over any other nation or people.

Alliances between nations in groups must give way to one world alliance for universal good.

The President in his speech implied that while the government of the United States would not expect to influence the terms of peace which the belligerents in Europe may agree upon, yet if those terms embody the principles epitomized above, the President believed the people of the United States would authorize their government to enter into a world alliance under which the peace of the world would be assured by "a force so much greater than the force of any nation now engaged or in alliance heretofore, that no nation, no probable combination of nations could face or withstand it."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N. Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE. For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter

Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Driving Out the Bill-Board. Chicago's bill-board ordinance, which prohibits bill-boards on residence streets without the consent of more than half of the property owners, was affirmed on January 14 by the United States Supreme Court. A movement is under foot in Chicago to abolish bill-boards in all residence districts.

Train Men Propose Strike Board. In a hearing before the House Commerce Committee on January 19, W. G. Lee, head of the Train Men's Brotherhood, suggested that a board of eight equally divided between workers and operators would be able to solve all difficulties arising over working conditions. Mr. Lee was opposing the administration bill which would force the deferring of strikes or lockouts pending investigation by government agency. This bill is being bitterly opposed by organized labor, Samuel Gompers even going so far as to declare before the committee that if the bill were passed he would advocate disregard of the law.

Employers Discuss Humanity. Two hundred of the best known engineers in the country were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor on January 19 at their Fifth Avenue home, but the meeting was not a social affair. Instead, it met for serious discussion of the problem of Americanizing immigrant laborers in our industrial plants. Raymond B. Price of the United States Rubber Company said that the condition of the country industrially in the period after peace comes will depend more than anything else upon the degree in which the country learns "to conserve workmen, the real root of industrial efficiency." Various forms of welfare work were mentioned as being good business, although some of them were said to savor of employer's paternalism. It was stated that there was no agreement of American employers as to where the organization of the human side of industry really belongs, and that there are absolutely no standards for it.

A Dangerous Trade. Bank robberies in southern Oklahoma committed by a gang which worked openly in the day-time with entire recklessness of consequences and which terrorized the whole southern tier of counties, were brought to an end on January 19 by the killing of the last three members of the band in a battle with the sheriff's posse. One member of the gang had been killed and one captured the day before in a skirmish in which a deputy sheriff was also killed.

Sunday Ends Boston Campaign. The Sunday Evangelistic campaign in Boston closed January 21 with four great meetings in the tabernacle. According to the carefully kept records, 5,196 persons "hit the trail" on the last day of the meetings, bringing the grand total for the campaign to 47,000. It is estimated that 100,000 persons turned away from the tabernacle the last day because they were unable to enter. The attendance for the ten weeks was approximately one and three-fourths million. The expenses of the campaign were $90,000 which were completely covered by the collections before the end of the ninth week. Mr. Sunday's free-will thank offering is given as $50,828.64. Mr. Sunday next goes to Buffalo, N. Y.

Lost Airmen Found. The two officers of the Aviation Corps who were lost, according to the item appearing on page 110 which went to press two days before this page, were found on January 18 by a civilian searching party. They had been four days in the desert without food or water.

Burying the Dead. An experiment is to be tried at Teachers' College, Columbia University, which if successful will mean a complete modernizing of our American school courses from the kindergarten through the high school. The experiment is trying out a "modern school" idea advocated by Dr. Charles W. Elliott and other leading educators. In this school Greek and Latin will have no part. The time for language study will be given entirely to modern languages, such as are German, French and Spanish. Sciences will be emphasized. New methods of teaching literature will be tried and practical industry and the domestic arts will be prominently featured in the courses. Organized recreation, play and games will be provided for in the courses. No attempt will be made to drag the reluctant student through courses that are designed to discipline the mind. The training will be secured through the careful and thorough study of subjects that are in themselves valuable. The experiment is to be thoroughly tried out and will be watched with interest both by educators and their victims.

"Report" from the Treasury. An omnibus public buildings bill carrying appropriations for $38,000,000 for buildings, improvements or sites throughout the country, most of which are declared unnecessary, causing the bill to be labelled "political pork," passed the House on January 19. The President has said that he will veto the bill. And it is also reported that there will be determined opposition to it in the Senate.

Mustering Out the Militia. On January 21 Secretary of War Baker announced that Major General Funston had designated additional elements of the National Guard border force for return to their homes to be mustered out, the number of guardsmen involved being given as 25,243, leaving 50,000 still on duty along the border, or one-third of the total number originally called to the nation's colors.

Balfour Explains Terms

IN a supplementary note addressed to the British ambassador, Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, on January 13, Arthur J. Balfour, the British minister for Foreign Affairs, explained one point in which the reply of the Entente Allies to President Wilson's peace note was obscure. In that note reference was made to territories taken from the Entente Allies by force in previous wars. In the new note Mr. Balfour explains that the immediate reference was to Alsace-Lorraine, and Italia Irredenta. He also explained at length the reason why Great Britain, for so many years a protector of the Turk from destruction, should now demand a complete expulsion of Turkey from Europe. According to Mr. Balfour, the answer is that circumstances have completely changed, that the Turk of "union and progress" is at least as barbarous and far more aggressive than the Turk of Sultan Abdul-Hamid, and in the hands of Germany it has ceased even in appearance to be a bulwark of peace. Mr. Balfour made it plain that he did not consider rearrangements of territory in themselves sufficient guarantees of future peace. The essential paragraphs of the new note are here quoted:

"In sending you a translation of the Allied note I desire to make the following observations, which you should bring to the notice of the United States Government:

"I gather from the general tenor of the President's note that, while he is animated by an intense desire that peace should come soon and that when it comes it should be lasting, he does not, for the moment at least, concern himself with the terms on which it should be arranged. His Majesty's Government entirely share the President's ideas; but they feel strongly that the durability of peace must largely depend on its character, and that no stable system of international relations can be built on foundations which are essentially and hopelessly defective.

"This becomes clearly apparent if we consider the main conditions which rendered possible the calamities from which the world is now suffering. These were the existence of great Powers consumed with the lust of domination in the midst of a community of nations ill-prepared for defence, plentifully supplied, indeed, with international laws, but with no machinery for enforcing them, and weakened by the fact that neither the boundaries of the various states nor their internal constitution harmonized with the aspirations of their constituent races or secured to them just and equal treatment.

"That this last evil would be greatly mitigated if the Allies secured the changes in the map of Europe outlined in their joint note is manifest, and I need not labor the point. . . . We may hope that the expulsion of Turkey from Europe will contribute as much to the cause of peace as the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France, or Italia Irredenta to Italy, or any of the territorial changes indicated in the Allied note.

"Evidently, however, such territorial rearrangements, though they may diminish the occasions of war, provide no sufficient security against its recurrence. . . . So long as Germany remains the Germany which, without a shadow of justification, overran and barbarously ill-treated a country it was pledged to defend, no state can regard its rights as secure if they have no better protection than a solemn treaty. . .

"Though, therefore, the people of this country share to the full the desire of the President for peace, they do not believe peace can be durable if it be not based on the successes of the Allied cause. For a durable peace can hardly be expected unless three conditions are fulfilled: The first is that existing causes of international unrest should be as far as possible removed or weakened; the second is that the aggressive aims and the unscrupulous methods of the Central Powers should fall into disrepute among their own peoples; the third is that behind international law and behind all treaty arrangements for preventing or limiting hostilities some form of international sanction should be devised which would give pause to the hardiest aggressor. . . . This country firmly believes that on the success of the Allies depend the prospects of peaceful civilization and of those international reforms which the best thinkers of the New World, as of the Old, dare to hope may follow on the cessation of our present calamities."

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

THE Turks are reported as receiving hard usage at the hands of the British in Mesopotamia and Egypt. Following up their advance northeast of Kut-el-Amara on the Tigris early in the week, the British stated that they again attacked and captured Turkish trenches on the right bank of the river and inflicted heavy casualties on the Ottomans. In one trench 300 yards long 200 dead Turks were found.

On the Sinai Peninsula, thirty miles northeast of El Arish, Egypt, six lines of Turkish trenches in front of the town of Rafa have been captured by the British. The Turkish relief force is reported to have been destroyed, and in addition 1,000 Turks were made prisoners. The Turkish account of this fighting differs materially from the British.

It is reported that the Deutschland and another and larger German commercial submarine are again approaching New London, Conn. To an extent this report is confirmed by the activity in preparations in the past week at New London.

The British battleship Cornwallis, a predreadnought of 14,000 tons, was sunk in the Mediterranean on January 9 by a German submarine, thirteen men being lost with the ship. On the 11th the Turks sank by gunfire a British seaplane-carrier, the Ben-Ma-Chree, in Kastelorizo harbor, five of the crew being lost. The Italians lost one of their older ships, the Regina Margherita, on December 11, in the Adriatic, the news of which was permitted to come out only on January 12.

It is now said that the fall of Premier Trepoff of Russia resulted in large part from the recently reported assassination of the mystic monk, Gregory Rasputin. A complete reorganization of the Russian cabinet is said to be impending, with Protopopoff, the conservative minister of the interior, the power behind the throne. It is worth mentioning, perhaps, that this gentleman is not unfavorably disposed toward peace.

Judging from the recent French and British newspapers, we are very far from appreciating in this country the terrible losses being steadily inflicted on the Allied shipping by the German submarines. In one very recent week, according to these same sources of information, which are not at all likely to overstate the facts for very obvious reasons, fifty-nine vessels belonging to the Allies or the neutrals were sunk.

Of late the reports reaching this country of the activities of these submarines have not been at all full, and hence it is probable that we have failed completely to appreciate how greatly they are menacing the commerce and food supplies of the Allies.

This activity has continued unchecked during the past week, six vessels a day on the average having been sunk.

One-half of all the doctors in Great Britain are now employed in army work of some character, and it is feared that in consequence of the incorporation of so many in that service, the civilian population will suffer.

The neutral states in Europe are evidently regarding the future with very anxious eyes, if the action recently taken by Switzerland and the action recommended to be taken by the Swedish king can be considered as reliable indications. The Swiss action was positive. The Federal Council of the republic ordered the almost immediate (January 24) mobilization of the fourth division of the army, as well as of such contingents of the fourth and fifth divisions as are not already mobilized. What power this mobilization is directed against is not stated, nor is there any indication. For some reason Italy has been recently strengthening her defenses along her Swiss frontier, but this does not seem to afford any clue.

In Sweden the king, in his speech from the throne at the opening of the Swedish Parliament, said among other things, "We cannot shut our eyes to the profound gravity of the present hour." He also announced the necessity of maintaining the special preparation of the land and sea forces of the kingdom, and further said that the national defenses must be still further strengthened.

The German government has prohibited all importations, except with the permission of the Imperial Commissioner. This is merely an extension of the decree prohibiting the importation of luxuries issued some time ago.

The Council of State of the new Polish kingdom was inducted into office at Warsaw on January 14.

The campaigns themselves have not been particularly interesting this week. On the western front there have been reciprocal trench raids, which, on balance, have left the adversaries about even, the usual cannonading, and some bomb fighting.

On the Russian front the Russian activity to the west of Riga has died away almost completely. Some fighting developed late in the week near Smorgon between Vilna and Minsk and is still continuing. The rest of the front was quiet.

The Greek situation has somewhat calmed. The Greek government is said to have accepted the demands of the latest ultimatum of the Allies in full.

In Rumania, hard fighting but with no decisive results has been going on along the Sereth line all the week. On the eastern end of this line late in the week the Teutons captured Laburtia, and then began edging in toward

Continued on page 122

Four Million Endeavorers

By REV. FRANCIS E. CLARK, D.D., LL.D.
Founder and President of the Movement

ON February 2, 1881, the first Society of Christian Endeavor was organized in the parlor of the home of the pastor of Williston Church, Portland, Maine. On February 2, 1917, there are 80,000 societies of Christian Endeavor, with four millions of members, throughout the world, and probably a million and a half young people gathered in societies with the same general principles, which have received their inspiration, in some measure at least, from the Christian Endeavor movement.

I mention these facts, not to boast of the society or of its growth, but simply to show what God hath wrought; for there never has been a more striking instance of a purely providential movement bringing forth large results from small and feeble beginnings.

I write of them, also, with the hope that the record may encourage some humble workers to do their best even when they feel their weakness and inefficiency, trusting in God for larger results than they have deemed possible. This has been the lesson which the Christian Endeavor movement has taught me from the beginning—how weak are human agencies and how great is God's multiplying power; how possible with God are things that seem impossible to men.

The society is now found in at least sixty-eight denominations in America, and probably in many more of the smaller denominations from whom the statistics cannot be readily obtained. In the Pennsylvania Union alone forty-six denominations are represented. Throughout the world at least a hundred denominations are represented in the Christian Endeavor Society in more than eighty different nations and large dominions, like Canada and Australia.

The constitution, pledge and other literature have been translated into at least fifty languages and dialects; and some thirty journals, larger or smaller, in many countries and in many languages, are devoted to its interests. It is well to look into these phenomena and try to realize the principles which God has been able to use for his glory and for the extension of his kingdom. These principles were formulated in the first place for the use of a single society, with no thought that they would have a mission for the young people of any other church. But a principle is a seed which springs up and bears fruit when watered and nourished by God's rain and soil and sunshine, until it multiplies itself, not a hundredfold, but a thousand times a hundredfold.

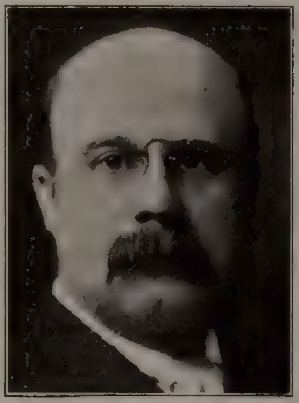
These principles seem to me to be primarily four: loyalty, pledged devotion, fellowship, service.

FIRST, loyalty. Fidelity to the church with which each Society of Christian Endeavor is connected has been from the beginning a cornerstone of the Christian Endeavor movement. It has never sought to be an organization outside of the church. For each society to do whatever its pastor and its church would have it do has always been fundamental, its allegiance to the church being only secondary to its allegiance to Christ. "For Christ and the Church" has been its motto from the very beginning.

On two different occasions I have sent out postal card questionnaires to more than a thousand pastors in all denominations throughout the United States and Canada, asking concerning the fidelity of the active members of the Young People's Society to the Sunday evening service and the midweek church prayer meeting. On both occasions a very large number of replies were received, and when tabulated, it was found that the percentage of the members of the society that attended the Sunday evening and midweek services was twice as large as that of all the members of the church. Many of the replies stated that the percentage of the Endeavorers who attended these services was four to one. This undoubtedly was not all it should be, but it certainly does not speak ill for the young people.

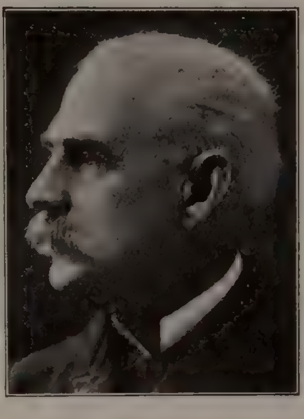
When statistics are collated on denominational and missionary contributions, it will be found that the only young people's societies outside of special missionary organizations that give practically anything to denominational missionary boards are the Christian Endeavor and similar denominational societies. In some denominations they rival the Sunday schools in such gifts. I have made a special study of missionary periodicals to this end, and believe that these facts cannot be challenged.

Daniel A. Poling
Associate President



William Shaw
General Secretary

A. J. Shartle
Treasurer



President Francis E. Clark

SECOND, the covenant idea accounts largely for the growth of Christian Endeavor, and has especially received God's good favor. The society has been known from the beginning as the society of the pledge. "Trusting," every Endeavorer has said, "in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I will strive to do what he would like to have me do." He has followed up this general declaration by promising to sustain the work and worship of his own church, and to attend and take some part, aside from singing, in each weekly meeting of the society, unless prevented by a reason which he could give to the Lord Jesus Christ.

This pledge has been loyally accepted by at least fifteen millions of past and present Christian Endeavorers. Though it has been scoffed at and derided in some quarters, it has held its own throughout all these years. While several forms of pledges are used, the real substance of all is the same, and the original form, in its exact wording, is probably used by four-fifths of the societies today.

It is the covenant that has made the weekly prayer meeting the beating heart of the society from the beginning. It has kept it alive and fresh and sweet during nearly twoscore years. It has been found to be as effective in China and India and Madagascar and South America as in the most wide-awake evangelical church in America. It is my opinion that there is no lasting solution of the difficulties that surround the weekly prayer meeting, unless a group of Christians, larger or smaller, shall adopt this central principle and agree that every one attend if possible and be ready to take part in each weekly meeting.

When the Williston Church of Portland, Me., was without a pastor for a year, it was found that not less than forty men, many of whom had been trained in the first Christian Endeavor Society, were ready to do their part as leaders of the weekly prayer meeting, thus furnishing a new leader almost every week in the active church year. Moreover, the covenant pledge has promoted not only the prayer meeting but all the activities of the society, for the sailors, for the prisoners, for the sick in hospitals, for Christian Endeavor fresh-air camps, for evangelistic street meetings, for the promotion of the Quiet Hour, for the giving of a tenth of one's income to the Lord. Endeavorers have not forgotten "to strive to do whatever their Lord and Master would have them do."

THIRD: Fellowship must not be ignored as one of the root ideas of Christian Endeavor. This can be illustrated best perhaps by the great young people's conventions to which the society gave rise. It has from the beginning been noted for these fellowship gatherings. The very next year after the first society was formed, the first convention was held in Williston Church when there were only seven societies in the world, and the audience at no time numbered more than two hundred. But it contained a foretaste and a forecast of what was to come. Eleven years later, the annual convention was held in Madison Square Garden, New York, which was crowded to overflowing and many could not get into any hall and were addressed in open air meetings.

Exactly twenty-five years after that gathering, another international Christian Endeavor Convention will be held in Madison Square Garden next July, where doubtless the same enthusiastic scenes will be repeated as in 1892. State, county and local union conventions of the society have increased very largely, so that now every year far more Endeavorers in the aggregate attend these meetings than ever before.

The convention idea, too, has taken hold of every other land. The meetings in China and India, in Great Britain and Germany, in proportion to the number of Endeavorers in those lands, are not a whit below those held in America in enthusiasm or in numbers. In fact, the proportionate number of Endeavorers that attend the conventions in missionary lands is beyond the attendance in the home country.

All this is proof of the desire of the young people in every nation to enjoy the fellowship of their comrades, to meet together for mutual inspiration and instruction, for comparing notes, for finding out the best methods that other societies have adopted, and for equipping themselves more efficiently to do their own work in their home societies. Upon this feature of the movement God has especially set his seal of approval.

FOURTH: The fourth principle which contributes to the vitality of the society is the principle of service. The kinds of service which Endeavorers are performing are innumerable. I cannot attempt to give the list. The catalogue would be far too long even for the generous columns of the Christian Herald. The Year-Book of the Chicago Union alone makes a volume of many pages in its details of the various forms of service which the Union undertakes. Its record of its work in the hospitals is most inspiring. It has conducted hundreds of out-door preaching services. It looks after the sailors at the wharves and on the ships of this great port. It does what it can for the prisoners. And this is only one, it must be remembered, of hundreds of active unions in the United States alone.

In India the unions have committees to look after the grounds of a church, to beautify the graveyards where their comrades and elders sleep, to care for the famine sufferers out of their own scanty supplies. In the time of the great plague, so-called "rat-tail" committees were formed, composed largely of the boys of the societies, whose duty it was to kill as many rats as possible lest they carry the infection from house to house, and to produce, as proofs of their faithfulness to their task, the tails of the rats that they had killed.

These instances simply show the variety of service which the Endeavorers can perform, according to their different localities, while each society has its regular and usual committees to promote the regular attendance of its members, the enlargement of its numbers, and the increase of the Sabbath school; to promote interest in the weekly meeting; to improve the singing; to enlarge the benevolences, the interest in missions, and so forth.

The outlook for the movement was never so bright as today. The Campaign for Millions, which will close next July, has already brought nearly if not quite five thousand new societies into its ranks within a few months, has added thousands to the list of its Life-Work Recruits, who have promised to shape their lives in such a way as to answer God's call to the ministry, the foreign field, or the Y. M. C. A. work, should he thus open the way to one of these lines of service.

It is our confident belief that when the report is given at the New York Convention next July, fully ten thousand new societies will be reported as a result of this campaign, and a million new members, and a million also brought to Christ and into his church.

For all these results which have been achieved, and for greater blessings yet to come, we Endeavorers give thanks to God alone, whose we are, and whom we hope to serve in larger and larger measure in the year to come.

* * *

Epigrams in Rhyme

Can any man be true to you
If not to his convictions true?
And can you that man fully trust,
If to himself he is unjust?

Much better to shine like a lamp
In the home, than try
To shine like a radiant star
In the far-off sky.

Our people can make weapons, ships and forts
At fabulous expense,
But family altars still shall ever be
Our nation's great defense.

If company with Satan you would break,
That is a step not he but you must take.

I saw a sign, a "Sample Room."
Then saw the samples on the street.
Sad wrecks of humankind whose doom
Was misery, their hell complete.

REV. W. W. VANDERHOFF.

Joyce Mayfield: Crusader

By
ALICE MARY KIMBALL

EDWIN McQUAIDE, the iron-gray man whose word was law over the Red River Division of the A. T. and L., allowed an unaccustomed warmth to creep into his tone as he bade good morning to the bright-faced, slender young girl who had just been admitted to his office.

"You may not remember me," began the visitor, glancing shyly at him across the flat-topped, glass-covered desk.

The big man knitted his brows for a moment, and looked penetratingly at the girl. He noted with unconscious approval a wholesome outdoor glow in her brown eyes, and a quiet sincerity in her manner. On her blue serge coat was pinned an exquisite bunch of trailing arbutus. The fragrance of the blossoms reminded him that the gladness of spring had come to relieve the sordidness of the crude Western town in which an unkind fate had located his division headquarters.

"Why, you're Miss Joyce Mayfield, aren't you?" he said. "That little Yankee girl who came West? I remember there was a spirit in your letter that I liked. Nothing wrong this morning, I hope?"

"It's Kin Allen. I've been working in his department for two months."

"Yes."

"He was discharged last night."

"Yes."

"And I came," faltered the girl, "because—I'm partly—to blame."

The division superintendent smiled half reluctantly, half regretfully.

"That personality of Kin's," he mused. "If he had efficiency to match it he'd be president of the road in ten years. I'm not joking about that. The boy's a wonder in some ways. I used to have great hopes for him. But within the last month he's been falling off. We've let him stay longer than we should already—because we liked him so much."

"But have you thought," persisted Joyce earnestly, her face matching the color of the arbutus on her coat, "of the reason Kin failed when he was born to succeed? He loved his work here—"

"Next to poker, possibly," put in McQuaide dryly.

"And—"

"I think I know, Miss Mayfield, what you are going to say," said McQuaide quickly. "You see, you're the third person who has been here this morning on Kin's behalf. He has great ability—we all admit that. He is lovable. I've been fond of him since he was my office boy five years ago. We've all pushed the kid ahead. But—if I should tell you, in strictest confidence, that a blunder of Kin's—a mistake he never would have made, had not his head been muddled with liquor—might have caused a wreck yesterday, and killed and crippled men and women, and little children, you understand, would you go away about your work like a good girl and not bother me any more this morning? We'll have to consider the Kin Allen incident closed."

When McQuaide declared an incident closed, people instinctively took him at his word. He turned abruptly to a pile of telegraph reports. Joyce started for the door.

SUDDENLY a vivid picture flashed into her memory. In its center was a frightened, homesick girl sitting before a typewriter in a big office, and trying to fight away the tears which would come.

On the desk—it was the noon hour—was perched a young man who draped his awkward length into the aisle in front, and talked to her until she forgot her loneliness in sheer joy at his drollery. His face was so homely—so whimsically, humorously, lovably homely! . . . It was a cheery little stenographer girl who had rattled away that afternoon.

He had told her of the politicians at the city hall who collected tribute from the gambling dens and "blind tigers," and of the "boot-leggers" who dodged the prohibition laws, and sold whisky in drug stores and groceries—almost everywhere, in fact, except in the millinery shops and churches.

"Sometimes when the church people get on their ear," he had said, "Vic Beckerman—he's the gang's fat old prosecuting attorney—starts a reform crusade. Plato Burke, a fine old Virginian, who doesn't fit in with this town at all, comes out of his library and gets the people so excited that something has to be done. Then Beckerman pounds out informations against every dive-keeper in town. The papers are full of it. The clean-up crusade is the whole show."

"And nothing comes of it?"

The boy laughed. "If old Plato Burke and his gallant band knew as much about politics as Plato does about—say Browning's sonnets, there might be a reform movement with teeth in it. But this is what happens: There is a special grand jury. Lots of noise. Indictments are brought in. Then Judge Ben Allen—he's my brother, by the way—looks off in the other direction. Ben—well, he's going to go to Congress by and by—if Ben should go after the joints here as he did in the Watonka district when he was first elected, half the prominent citizens would be in jail." Kin laughed as he spoke.

The Way Home

By W. Livingston Larned

WHICHEVER way the feet may tread,
However far the place,
We find Love's holy fountainhead,
And know its tender grace.
Our footsteps always lead us home,
Our hearts are guiding too;
And voices sound from all around.
Ah . . . Home is calling you!

Man strays to foreign lands and fair;
His missions bid him go.
And we must wander everywhere
If duty wills it so.
But through this pilgrimage of years
Some fate has planned it thus;
Our hearts keep track of safe trails back
And Home is calling us!

Youth sets bold foot outside the gate,
And faces westward ho!
The Little Mother begs him wait,
But Youth is bound to go.
And there are many lonely years,
And there are eyes made dim,
Till Love's sweet way shall fix the day
When Home will call to him.

The pathway back is red with rose;
The birds still have a song;
The same clear Childhood river flows
That same green wood along.
And oh, but it is good to feel
That old sweet ecstasy,
Its poignant grief, its great relief.
Ah. . . . Home is calling me!

REMEMBERING these things, Joyce Mayfield hesitated a minute at the door of the division superintendent's office. Then she went softly back to the glass-topped desk. When McQuaide glanced up from his papers, he found her there.

She clutched the edge of the desk with trembling hands. She bent forward. Her eyes were shining. Her words came quickly.

"I couldn't leave," she said, "until I explain why I am responsible for Kin Allen—why you are responsible—why everybody in the city is responsible. Kin isn't alone to blame because they sell whisky in every drug store—because there is danger in every place in town where a boy could have a good time. He isn't to blame for being young and full of life and popular and fond of everybody—even of people who aren't good for him. Everybody's to blame. Everybody who shuts his eyes and lets such things go on."

Joyce suddenly stopped, aghast that she had said so much, her heart pumping tumultuously. McQuaide's eyes narrowed. He shook his head.

"Your loyalty to Kin is a credit to you—and a nuisance to me," he snapped crisply. "I leave this morning on an inspection trip at eleven. This desk must be cleared before I go. I will bid you good-morning and take your suggestions under advisement."

AS Joyce left the office at two o'clock for her Saturday afternoon holiday, the main street of the city down which she passed seemed, in spite of the blue and gold April weather, the abode of dreariness and death.

"I wonder what would happen," she said to herself, "if I, Joyce Mayfield, just a plain, ordinary stenographer girl, undertook to wake people up—to make them see?" Then she found herself holding imaginary conversations with clergymen, public officials, newspaper men, club women. Suppose, without mentioning names, she told them the story of Kin—how a life had been spoiled because they were too blind to to see, too deaf to hear, too dead and indifferent to act. What would they say?

The idea came to her with a strangely stimulating thrill of adventure. It called to her as nothing had ever called before. Her breath came faster. Her spirit seemed to dance like the yellow narcissus blossoms in the park. What was it that the proverb said about Opportunity knocking only once? Perhaps this was her hour.

Of course she dared! Hadn't she dared talk to McQuaide? Was any price too great to save a friend—especially Kin?

She found herself entering the office of the Morning Democrat. She heard herself telling the story to the editor—a squat, swarthy man who looked at her in a way that made her feel uncomfortable, and occasionally winked at a younger man near by who had stopped clicking his typewriter to listen.

"I thought perhaps—you would do something—would write something in your paper to make people see," she finished, glancing appealingly at the man.

"What you suggest is a right Christian idea," said the editor, whose flippancy had been vanquished by her earnestness. "But it'd sure bust the city. Taxes'd shoot up like my new oil-well they've just brought in up at Tanaha. You wouldn't want to see the city go broke."

"Wouldn't it be better?" queried Joyce, smiling faintly. "If the city didn't have any money left at all then maybe we'd all move away to some clean, nice place—some town which can get along without being so—awfully—terribly rotten?"

The editor laughed and threw up his shirtsleeved arms.

"You'n old Plato Burke aren't very good boosters for the town, are you?" he said. "You two are sure a pair. By George, I have an idea. Plato's got his reformers at the courthouse now consulting with Vic Beckerman. You burst in upon 'em and talk. I'll send the courthouse man along with you. We'll get a little human-interest stuff into our regular spring civic righteousness story, believe me."

PLATO BURKE at the head of a delegation of citizens was calling on Judge Allen at his private chambers at the courthouse building when Joyce slipped quietly into the room, accompanied by an eager young man from the Democrat.

She felt a sudden friendliness for the white-haired old man with the poet's face who was pleading earnestly, yet it seemed ineffectually, for the consideration of human beings first—dollars afterward. She saw grouped around the judge's desk perhaps a dozen men and two or three women. The thick-necked, effusive man with an audible vest who occasionally shot a sly wink at the newspaper man by her side must be, she felt sure, Vic Beckerman the prosecuting attorney, who, as Kin had said, led the farcical reform crusades each year.

"We appeal to you, Judge Allen, to take the lead in this—to take a public stand in favor of a clean town." An athletic young man now was speaking.

"We are depending on you to see this thing through. We must have a leader in whom everybody will believe. When you were in Watonka the papers were full of stuff about 'the fighting judge.' They played up everything from your red hair to your fearlessness and enthusiasm for enforcing the law. It's unusual for a judge to be a hero to the man on the street—but you are. Just as sure as you take hold, the thing's a go! The whole political system of this town is tottering. The minute a real man with the courage to fight goes up against it, it's gone. It's up to you, Judge Allen."

What would he say—the man who had been given the opportunity to lead in so glorious a battle? Joyce bent forward, her face quivering.

He looked more like a football half-back than a judge. His face was good to see in its rough strength and ruggedness. He reminded her poignantly of Kin. The high forehead was surmounted by a pompadour of aggressive dark red hair. His eyes were alert, his movements quick and decisive. He was sitting in a swivel chair with his legs sprawled in front of him with a kind of boyish awkwardness.

She saw him smile at the appeal of the ardent young man—a suave smile. Intuitively she felt him groping about for the right words in which to frame his refusal.

SWEPT by a swift, fierce impulse, Joyce rose to her feet. She moved quickly to the midst of the group which was gathered around Judge Allen's desk.

"I just want to tell you, Judge Allen," she began, "about a boy who worked with me at the railroad offices."

Her voice was low, but electric with suppressed feeling. Even Vic Beckerman was sobered by the spell of her flaming sincerity.

"He was the kindest boy in the world. He was always doing something for somebody. He always knew who was lonely and in trouble. Why, he made friends of every starved dog in town. He used to take lost kittens home and warm milk for them. Everybody liked him. A man at the office said that he had imagination—the kind of imagination that thinks out new things and makes plans that nobody ever thought of before. I don't know about that, but Mr. McQuaide said that if it wasn't for one thing, he'd go way to the top in railroading.

"After his day's work was over—after he had bent over reports and figures for ten hours—he came down town. He was just brimming over with youth. He had so much energy he didn't know what to do with it. He loved music and glitter and sparkle and color and fun. And up and down the main streets of the city lights were always dancing and music playing way into the night. There were other young men and good times and something exciting. Oh! if all of you will think back to the time you were twenty-three, you'll understand.

"I suppose," she went on, "if this boy had been killed—if he had been burned to death in a firetrap theater or knocked down and robbed on the streets at night—there would have been a great stir. Everybody would have been trying to find out who was to blame.

"But he didn't die—all at once—so nobody cared. He began to be irregular

Continued on page 119

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

The Door Is Still Open

IN the latest note of the Allies, delivered by the British Ambassador to our State Department on January 17, not only is the sincere desire of America for peace recognized, but it is admitted that the British Government "entirely shares the President's ideas" in that respect. As the note speaks for all the Allied Powers, we can justifiably infer that the same desire is shared by France, Russia and Italy. It is the first open avowal of the kind, and while it is followed by repetition of the now familiar statement which questions whether a durable peace can be realized on present conditions, it is nevertheless a clear indication that the Allies are not averse to further discussion. With greater detail than at any time since the diplomatic exchanges began, the note sets forth the basis for a durable peace, from the Allies' viewpoint. In reasserting, as it does in conclusion, the conviction that the Allies are fighting the battle of civilization, it invites the question whether, if the war be prolonged indefinitely, there will be any civilization in Europe worth saving. If civilization is to be saved from utter collapse, the work must begin now, and not on a destructive but on a reconstructive basis. Peace and reconciliation now are the only path to safety and rehabilitation. To wait until the wreck is complete would be, as Premier Lloyd George aptly declared, "A crime that oceans could not cleanse."

The sound common-sense of the nation will unquestionably support the President in any further efforts he may make in the interest of peace. There should be, however, no secret diplomacy, at least as far as the American attitude is concerned. We must avoid any course that would tend to complicate this government in its dealings with either of the belligerent groups. Concealment breeds distrust and is liable to serious misrepresentation. Either side in the war would eagerly welcome any leaning on our part towards its interests; and if this view were taken, however ill-founded, it would be most unfortunate.

We have no interest at stake that is not shared equally by all the neutrals in common. Let our diplomacy, from now on, be open and above-board. Whatever the result, we shall at least have retained the respect of other nations and kept ourselves free from the suspicion of secret bargaining, which is inseparable from all diplomacy done in the dark.

Having put our hand to the plow we cannot draw back. The whole situation lies open before us. When America speaks, in fulfillment of its high duty, it must not be in blind parables or a maze of rhetoric, but in language that he who runs may read and understand. The door is still open and may God give us the widsom and the ability to take the steps that will widen the entrance and aid in bringing back peace to the world.

The Coming Kingdom

IN the whole range of supplication there is no single sentence at once so comprehensive and expressive as the prayer, "Thy Kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." It is the ever-coming moral and spiritual Kingdom which infinite grace is setting up in the fallen world, and we have not only the inspired utterances of the prophets, but the divine assurance of the Master himself, that it will yet come in its fulness. In all the ages there have been men who "walked with God" and waited for his salvation, who were in daily communion with him and were "continually holden by his right hand." The Kingdom is the great consummation to which all the children of God look forward with eager hope. It means complete vindication of the divine purpose in human affairs, the inbringing of the universal reign of love, the subjugation of the evil which sin brought into the world, the end of selfishness, of cruelty, of poverty, of suffering—the brotherhood of man, the redemption of the world.

This petition is the crown of all prayer, the sign of our faith in God's sure promises through his inspired prophets, of which Jesus himself gave assurance while here on earth. His injunction, therefore, that we should pray "Thy Kingdom come" is one which rests upon every Christian who at heart desires the spread of the Gospel and the furtherance of the promise of that day when the whole earth will be transformed with the glory of God. Further, this Kingdom on earth is for us the prelude of the heavenly Kingdom; the one reaches out to and merges with the other.

But as the coming of the Kingdom is God's affair, which he will bring to pass fully in his own good time, we have each of us a work to do meanwhile, in order to facilitate the divine purpose. We must be co-workers with God in preparing the way of the coming Kingdom. When we pray "Thy will be done on earth as in heaven," we must unite our efforts in order to bring the necessary conditions to pass. Ours is not only the duty of living holy individual lives, but we must strive to bring others into the Kingdom by spreading the Gospel at home and abroad until the whole world has been evangelized. If the church, or the great body of Christ's people in or out of it, neglect this duty, it is delaying by just so much the incoming of the fulness of the Kingdom.

Throughout the ages God has had his interpreters and witnesses—holy men of faith and vision—who through inspiration were privileged to look far beyond to a period more or less remote, when the Kingdom would come in its fulness. Living at a time when the great mass of the world was heathen and pagan, the faith of those men was such that they were privileged to realize, though imperfectly, the glory that was to be revealed in the latter days. That we ourselves are living near to the "latter days" is the confident belief of the great body of present-day Christians. If to Habakkuk and Isaiah, who glimpsed the coming Kingdom, it was as though it were imminent even in their time, how much more is it imminent in our own? They rejoiced in the knowledge which had been given them of the future, even while they were surrounded by innumerable discouragements amid a world of barbarism. How much more should we rejoice in the knowledge that the little group of one hundred and twenty believers which met in an upper room in Jerusalem 1,900 years ago has now grown to be a multitude of over 560,000,000, and continues to increase, despite wars, and wranglings, and world disturbances!

So let us pray and work with redoubled energy and assurance for the coming of the Kingdom. And when it does come—as come it surely will—we shall have the knowledge that our individual and collective effort has not been wanting to bring about the eternal purpose of God for the redemption of the world.

Admiral Dewey

DEWEY'S name will stand with Nelson's and with Farragut's. Manila Bay was not a Trafalgar, but in the directness and precision with which it was won, with little loss of life, it ranks as one of the most remarkable naval victories of the world. It was not as a fighter alone that Dewey was great. As an organizer, competent, resourceful, and as master of every emergency, before whom all difficulties magically disappeared, he was eminent. Whatever he did was done quickly, with the least possible noise, and decisively. He was quiet, unassuming, but a very dynamo of forcefulness. His calm "You may fire when you are ready, Gridley," marked the man. Had he never fought a single battle, still his service would have been distinguished. He was as faithful in the duties of peace as he was in those of war.

So long as we permit ourselves to be accustomed to look upon war heroes as models of high achievement, it is fortunate that our nation has for its modern hero one who possessed in a marked degree the qualities of purest patriotism and high manhood.

The "Leak" Investigation

"THE words of a whisperer," says the wise king, "are as dainty morsels. Where there is no whispering, contention ceases." In his indictment of tale-bearers and traffickers in scandal, Solomon wrote from a wide human experience, and his observations are true today, as the American public can readily testify. Our people are surfeited with the amazing "revelations" that have come to the surface in the testimony given at the investigation of the alleged administrative "leak" at the time of the issuance of the President's peace note, through which "leak" certain speculators and public officials are said to have made a harvest in Wall Street. Whether the charges made, which seem to have no better foundation than hearsay or gossip, were launched as a muck-raking adventure, or as a deliberate plan to discredit men who are prominent in the public eye, and possibly also to reflect on the Administration itself, is not now the question at issue. Whether they are the product of a disordered imagination, or the outcome of a determination, at whatever sacrifice of individual reputation, to compel a congressional investigation of Wall Street methods, the work of sifting them to the bottom, once begun, must be continued until the bottom is reached. So many well-known names are mixed up in the tangle that it is due to all concerned that the whole business should be thoroughly sifted. In no other way can the wrong be righted than by a full and complete inquiry.

Egotism

WE are all egotists one way or the other.

The ego of each one of us—that greedy, insistent, insatiable and domineering instinct which says and reiterates that the best is none too good for us—is responsible for much of the misery of mankind.

Take any girl with passable features, ordinary physique and medium intelligence. In her dreams she pictures a possible lover of supreme beauty, brilliant intellect and inexhaustible wealth, who will one day fall before her charms.

Many marriages are failures for no other reason than the insatiable egotism of both parties, which demands and keeps on demanding consideration, diplomacy, flattery, yet never proffering aught in return.

Though the girl knew this man was high-tempered when she married him, and knew of insolence too, and a carelessness in regard to keeping his word, yet she married him, with her eyes open. Then, as the years go by, these things grate on her; she refuses to face the fact that they are constitutional infirmities, and as unchangeable a part of him as the nose on his face. And she continues to nag and make life unpleasant, never realizing that she too has faults that have to be put up with.

Then a man marries a pretty face, thinking little of what is back of it. He soon comes to realize that a pretty face alone is a poor thing to live with. Or, perhaps, on the other hand, he marries an intellect alone, and, soon or late, tires of his bargain. But he lacks the philosophy to make the best of it; he fails to remind himself that he is responsible for the condition of affairs; fails to put the blame where it belongs. His egotism blinds him, and so he considers the scheme of the universe entirely at fault.

The pessimist does not exist who is not surcharged with egotism. He takes himself as the standard of measurement in weighing what little else there is of the world, and in his mind it does not nearly come up to the mark.

In our friends we expect the highest attainments: constancy, devotion, ideal sentiment, as well as sympathy and material assistance. Yet we seldom stop to question whether we deserve these things.

Truly astonishing, when we come to think of it, is the natural, inborn egotism of most poor mortals.

Half our troubles, failures and sorrows are due to the fact that we think the universe was designed to nicely fit down around ourselves, rather than we to fit ourselves into it. CHARLES GRANT MILLER.

Our Own Army Widows and Orphans

THERE is a bill before Congress for special relief for the widow and orphans of Captain Charles Boyd, U. S. A., who fell in gallant service at Carrizal, Mexico. The pity is that relief so clearly just should need to be sought in a special act. Proper provision for the dependents of those who give their lives in maintaining the honor and integrity of our nation is a national duty, not of special charity, but of exact justice.

The army officer gives his whole time and attention to the public service, at small pay which does not permit of future provision for his family. The soldier's widow and orphans should be cared for, not grudgingly, but gratefully and generously. The case of Captain Boyd carries especial appeal because of his conspicuous gallantry and heroic death; but every soldier who dies on duty is in justice equally deserving.

The present provision for each of Captain Boyd's two orphans is a pittance of $2 a month. No provision at all would be shameful enough, but a paltry $2 a month is an insult. It is not relief; it is only degradation.

The nation is calling for more men, and men of higher quality, for national defense. Is the nation really worthy of the sacrifice of the lives of good and brave men? Let it answer in its show of gratitude in such cases as that of Captain Boyd, the gallant soldier, the good husband and father.

The heart of America has been touched to its deeps by the sufferings of the war widows and orphans of Europe, and our hands have been eagerly extended to them, filled with helpfulness. This is greatly to our credit. But shall we forget the widows and orphans of our own army service? Shall our hands overflow with charity to aliens, but falter and fall back from justice to our own?

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D.D.

"Buffalo Bill"

AT the home of his sister in Denver, Colo., January 10, died Colonel William Frederick Cody. With him when he died were his wife and two daughters, who had hurried down from Cody, Wyo., their ranch home, and his sister, Mrs. L. E. Decker of Denver. Among the hundreds of telegrams of sympathy were those from President Wilson and Generals Miles and Scott. Colonel Cody as Buffalo Bill, courier, hunter, soldier, scout, politician, was known to nearly every man, woman and child in the United States and in parts of Europe, where he toured with his Wild West Show. In that show he preserved to the present generation the figures and scenes of the wild West, which were fast fading, and now with his exit are about gone. Colonel Cody was the last of the intrepid company that pushed back the frontier year by year and mile by mile and gave the West to the white man, to civilization and to Christianity. His fame ranks with that of Daniel Boone, Kit Carson, Sam Houston, Davy Crockett and others, and he was even a more popular figure than any of these pioneers of civilization. Generals Sherman, Crook, Sheridan, Miles, Terry, Custer and many others considered him the finest scout the nation ever had. Colonel Cody was born in Iowa in 1846. He was in more Indian wars than any other man living or dead. On a battlefield of the Big Horn expedition he and Yellow Hand, a famous Cheyenne war chief, had a duel, Cody with a knife and Yellow Hand with a tomahawk. The Indian chief was killed. Cody was one of the bravest soldiers of the Civil War, and earned a nation's lasting gratitude for his patriotic services. He came to be called Buffalo Bill for having taken a contract to furnish buffalo meat to the men building a railroad over the plains, and in eighteen months he shot over 4,000 of them. The state of Colorado took charge of Colonel Cody's funeral in appreciation of what the West owes to his memory. The body lying in state in the capitol was viewed by many. Under a guard of soldiers it was conveyed to the Elks' Home, where the funeral service was held. The Grand Army of the Republic and other societies to which he belonged joined in this service, the Masons having charge at the grave. A new tomb, dug out of the rock on the top of Lookout Mountain near Denver, is likely to be prepared as a permanent burial place. In carrying the United States mail through perilous districts, in his supreme bravery in the wars for his country, in his firm support of law and order amid lawlessness and disorder, he was a splendid specimen of the West and has a unique place in the pioneer history of America. The manly qualities manifested by the illustrious scout in the taming of the West can well be imitated in our warfare in conquering moral foes and saving our land for humanity and Christianity in obedience to these words: "Quit you like men, be strong." (I Cor. 16 : 13.)

Gives City 800 Trees

MRS. WILLIAM H. CHILDS, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has placed with the park department an order for planting 800 street trees in the spring. The department furnishes and plants these trees at a charge of eight dollars each. Her gift, which amounts to $6,400, will make possible systematic and uniform planting on both sides of an avenue about three miles and a half in length. During the past two years about 3,000 street trees have been planted in Brooklyn without cost to the city. The massacre of the trees in America has been cruel and wicked, and the soil and public health have suffered as the result. Now there is a commendable era of tree planting. It is said that one of the multimillionaires sets out 100,000 trees every year, and he claims that, besides ministering to the health and happiness of generations to come, he finds profit in the undertaking, as each tree grows a dollar's worth every year. The act of Mrs. Childs was one of genuine benevolent ministry to the beauty and happiness of the city. The tree in olden times was the type of life, beauty and fruitfulness. The psalmist thus likens the godly man to a tree: "He shall be like a tree planted by the streams of water, that bringeth forth its fruit in its season, whose leaf also doth not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." (Ps. 1 : 3, R. V.)

© International Film Service, Inc.

Dangerous Derelict at Sea Removed

ALL landsmen have heard of, but few have ever seen, that menace of ocean navigation, the derelict. Abandoned as lost by her crew, the ship, instead of sinking to the bottom of the sea, may remain afloat barely above the water, a peril to all ships in its vicinity. One of the duties of the United States Revenue and Coast Guard Cutter Services is to search out and destroy, when there is no chance of salvage, these floating dangers. The photograph taken on Christmas Day on the United States coast guard cutter Seneca shows Captain J. E. Brown of the cutter, and in the distance the wreck of the Brazilian ship Nepthis. The Nepthis got into trouble soon after leaving port. She was towed 5,000 miles, but finally abandoned in a storm when about 150 miles east of New York. The Seneca was then ordered out to bring the wrecked ship into port, and after a two-day search found her and got a line aboard. Heavy gales and mountainous seas, however, drove both ships about 100 miles farther to sea, and finally parted the towing rope and carried away the cutter's mainstay. The ballast of the Nepthis then shifted and the boat nearly turned turtle. After the storm had quieted a bit, however, the cutter's men were again able to get a line aboard and towed the ship to New York. The sea of life is full of derelicts that have been battered by the storm and, disabled and worthless, float whither the tide may take them. They are not only unable to make any port with their precious freight, but are menaces to others that are making the voyage. The derelict in the financial world not only gets nowhere himself, but wrecks dozens, scores, hundreds, and sometimes thousands who are associated with him. In the spiritual realm the derelict not only is worthless to himself, but is a menace to others. It is a terrible thing for a man to destroy himself, but to destroy others is still more terrible, and the responsibility will be appalling. If we but take Christ as our Captain, we shall sail the voyage of life safely. Paul thus refers to the shipwreck of the soul: "Holding faith and a good conscience, which some having put away concerning faith have made shipwreck." (I Tim. 1 : 19.)

Life Race with Wolves

THREE trappers, Charles Leonard, George Weston and Bert Parker, reached Standish, Mich., the other day from a hunting trip in the Lake Superior region and told of a race for their lives with a pack of wolves while returning from their traps. The men were on skates three miles from the nearest cabin when the wolves appeared. One of the trappers fired his rifle when the pack approached them, hitting one of the animals, and the wolves quickly tore their wounded comrade to pieces, giving the hunters time for a start. Several times when the pack was nearly on them this was repeated, until the men finally reached the cabin. There are ravening wolves in the moral and spiritual realm, pursuing and destroying many who are away from protection. The savage nature of the wolf is thus referred to by the prophet: "Their horses are swifter than the leopards, and are more fierce than the evening wolves." (Hab. 1 : 8.)

"Grant's Shadow" Dead

THE other day Captain Samuel H. Beckwith, veteran telegrapher, known through the war as "Grant's shadow," as he handled all the cipher dispatches of that general and accompanied him from Fort Donaldson to the surrender of Lee, died in the Soldiers' Home at Hampton Roads, Va. Captain Beckwith was a resident of Utica, N. Y., until he went to the retreat where he died. His dispatch book was filled with copies and originals of war telegrams, and his recollections of Grant, Lincoln and other great figures in the war were vivid and interesting. This operator at his instrument was the voice of General Grant, speaking to the officers and soldiers of the army and to the White House. Humble aids may be as important as generals. Good leaders are important, but the plain people of the world have had to bear its burdens, fight its battles, and win its victories. Nehemiah was a superb leader, but it was the people who had to rebuild the wall of Jerusalem. "For the people had a mind to work." (Neh. 4 : 6.)

Watchman Off, Three Killed

BECAUSE one man left his post of duty as flagman at a railroad crossing, another man, his fiancée, and her brother were killed on Christmas night when their team was struck by a passenger train. The watchman told the coroner that he was in the marble-yard near by when he heard the train coming and ran to protect the crossing, but he was too late, being forced to see the carriage reduced to kindling wood and the three persons in it killed. Coming out of a covered bridge over the Schuylkill with the gates lifted and no danger suspected, they drove on the track just in time to be caught by the train. The man is likely to have a sad heart the rest of his life with the knowledge that he was directly responsible for the loss of these precious lives. As a rule watchmen are the most faithful of men, and often furnish examples of the highest heroism, even giving their lives to save others. How important it is that we guard our post well! How terrible it would be if by our failure to give proper warning of moral danger the souls of our friends should be caught at the crossing and destroyed! "If the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand." (Ezek. 33 : 6.)

To Seek Crœsus' Wealth

CRŒSUS, king of Lydia, one of the early plutocrats, escorted a committee of his subjects through his palace at Sardis one afternoon, and after the committee had looked at his heaps of gold one of the visitors suggested, so the story goes, that it was wrong to have so much gold piled away, and that something was going to happen. Crœsus, shortly afterward, advised by the oracle at Delphi that if he made war upon Persia he would destroy a great kingdom, went to war and lost his throne in defeat. Half a thousand years later, as a result of an earthquake, most of the big mountain overhanging Sardis buried the city and all its treasures. Professor Howard Butler of the Department of Art and Archeology in Princeton University announced the other day that he was going over to Asia Minor very soon to dig up the buried treasure of Sardis. In 1909 Professor Butler headed an expedition to Sardis, and though he found only bronze statues, his excavations were of great scientific worth. He has just got word from the United States consul at Smyrna that his excavations are unharmed despite the war, and he will return to Sardis to look for the wealth which for more than two thousand years has been the symbol of vast riches. What an uncertainty is earthly life and fortune! Crœsus and his lost wealth well illustrate this saying: "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee; then whose shall those things be, which thou hast provided?" (Luke 12 : 20.)

The Captain of the "Jesus-Ship"

By
MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

ACROSS the page as I write flutters the shadow of the American flag at the stern, as the little white ship "Glad Tidings" carries its message of "God, man, sin, Saviour, God's power in man's heart and life, and life eternal" to one more of the long list of Japanese villages.

Captain Luke W. Bickel, saver of derelicts on the sea of life

Out here over the rudder, the Captain and I have settled the problems of the world. Since he is a saintly man, the worldly side of the argument has fallen to me.

Captain Luke W. Bickel, who insists that his outlook and sympathies are broad, ever recurs to the discussion of his beloved work, not in miserly greed over the treasures he has done so much to develop, but in never-failing enthusiasm for the work God has given him to do. I, who insist that I have ideals and faith, have often been reminded that my mind is overloaded with details of unimportant things. To his mind, I represent New York, with its boasts of efficiency and its fevered rush, its big salaries and war profits, its interest in things temporal, selfish and sometimes mean.

What a privilege, then, to spend these ten days in the beautiful channels and harbors of the Inland Sea of Japan, where rush is unknown, where Nature carries joy to the visitor, and where my arm is lame and my back nearly broken in trying to acknowledge the kindly salutations of the hundreds we have met, who love the captain and because of that first came to love the Lord!

Some day a writer of mission history will write the story of the single-handed fight that this determined but humble man has carried on and is winning against sin, superstition and indifference. I say single-handed, for when force is needed the Captain is the one who has to fight it out; but in the midst of triumphs, which are now coming, and discouragements, which came during all the seventeen years, he is always the servant, the captain, but never in his own mind the commander-in-chief.

For five hundred miles the field which he alone occupies stretches along the coast of Japan. His parish includes a million and a half of souls. A definite standing for Christianity has been won in four hundred and twenty towns and villages. In sixty-two places regular Gospel work is carried on. There are the same number of Sunday schools. Believers are found in sixty-seven different places, and most of the routine work is done by unpaid laymen, who find real reward in humble Christian service. There are kindergartens and industrial work, women's societies, men's societies and night-school classes; but there is only one appeal, one explanation, for these varied activities, and that is the frank, straightforward, flat-trajectoried appeal of religion, and that religion the Christianity of the Master.

The guest of the Captain or the reader of his wonderfully interesting articles need have no fear that he will beg for support. He will accept neither money from friends of the work nor pay for his articles. He rises or falls with the Board, and through it all his support comes.

There are things in his work that I might criticize, but there is one thing I always try to remember when inspecting the work of the missionaries: that is, that it is presumptuous for the casual visitor to criticize the efforts of those who have spent years of prayerful effort in a task with which they are more familiar than the observer can ever be. It is the old temptation to play the game from the side-lines better than the sturdy warriors on the field of effort itself.

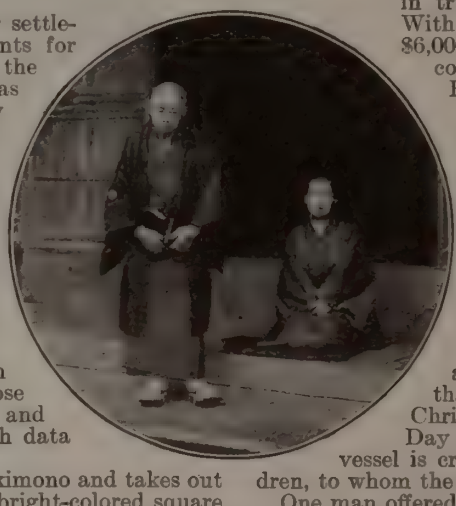
LET me picture a few of the many kaleidoscopic scenes that have passed before my eyes in the few days during which I have watched this great fight for the souls of men. We speed up the main channel of the Inland Sea, past the elaborate Tide Station, where, because it is a war zone, the wilful kodaker may not, without stealth, carry on his favorite pastime. There is not a big ship in sight, though scores of bright sails dot the seemingly landlocked basin of water.

Suddenly our fog-horn booms. There is nothing ahead of us for hundreds of yards, and I wonder at the warning blast. But almost as suddenly there appears over a lowly hut on the shore a bright banner which runs to the top of a flagstaff almost hid among the green trees of the hillside. At our stern Old Glory dips in salute to the old farmer up there on the hillside, who has snatched from the forest a small field which he calls his "Sunday field." Each Sabbath morning he and his wife toil there, and the produce goes to Christian work. In the afternoon they carry on Bible classes in two widely separated villages.

There is no time to stop or even approach the land so that a sampan can come to us for a few words of encouragement and cheer. But the flags on the two poles carry a message from the tall Captain to the little bald-headed convert and back again. It is the word "Fukuin," the name of the ship. As the white vessel moves gracefully up the channel, those flags carry one message from bridge to humble home and back. "Glad tidings, brother, Glad tidings!" Beside me the big, bony hand of an old sailor trembles on the railing.

We are in the upper room of the neat Japanese home. We have fallen flat on our faces and exchanged greetings in the deliberate and considerate manner of the East. Beside me, the Captain sits on his heels, a feat which I admire the more after trying it for ever so brief a time. In the middle of the clean mat floor a small stand supports an ugly kerosene lamp, the one jarring note in that dainty home. Behind the stand sits the Japanese pastor, and in front of it sits the church treasurer, both on the floor. In recognition of my foreign training I am allowed to sit on the window-sill, a silk cushion having been placed there for the purpose by the good housewife, who, after seeing every one comfortably settled, had bowed to each in turn, kneeling at a distance and almost touching her forehead to the floor, and had withdrawn with the cheerful resignation of the Japanese wife.

One who long lived in sin, but now is an earnest worker for Christ



A score of cases come up for settlement: the time and arrangements for a baptism on the following day; the case of a young woman who has been rescued from the cupidity and brutality of her father; innumerable station problems connected with one of the five sections of this great mission field. There is no idle palaver. Upon the pastor rests all the responsibility for correspondence and detail covering his own section, and case after case comes up for a quick but wise decision by the Captain, who will not concern himself with pettiness but whose heart beats for every man and whose brain is pigeon-holed with data of hundreds of difficult cases.

The Captain reaches into his kimono and takes out a small bundle, wrapped in the bright-colored square of silk that is the Japanese market-basket and carry-all. He and I had been talking together for a moment when I saw his eyes close and his head bow. The bundle had been laid on the stand and the pastor was praying. In that tiny bundle was an envelope containing the native preacher's salary, and before another thing was done pastor and treasurer had bowed in true thankfulness for the blessings that had come. It was a small thing. It was only the Japanese Christian pastor's way of saying "Received with thanks." That prayer to God was the Oriental way of signing a receipt.

Is this sampan waiting to carry its owner to the "Jesus-Ship?"

AROUND the room is a square of low tables, laden with food. This is a lunch and get-together for the thirty believers who have come from distant towns at considerable cost and discomfort. Some left home at two in the morning and will return after midnight. But cheer and true happiness fill the room. The sermon has been preached, the five candidates have been examined, and the baptism is to follow. There is no sanctimonious tone to the proceedings. Christian fellowship never existed in fuller measure.

In came a small young woman, whose face was wreathed in smiles. She is neither beautiful, unduly dignified, nor possessed of much decorative personality. Listen to her story. I'll make it brief. Converted just before entering Normal College, she helped one wayward friend, who brought another and another. Today she has a Bible class of more than twenty girls in a government school. Opposition arose and the authorities took up the case. These non-Christians had to agree that all she had done had been good, and hence she could not be stopped, and she goes on smiling and working and winning souls from heathenism.

I must add to this picture just a word about a belief—I almost said a hobby—of the Captain's. He believes in true evangelism, directly delivered. With a total expenditure of less than $6,000 a year, he is covering a field containing 100,000 square miles. How many schools could he build in such a broad territory for $6,000? How many kindergartens and industrial schools could he run? He reaches tens of thousands of, hearers every year with the message of God's love and man's responsibility, and each year, from that number, there spring forth a few dozen souls, touched with the fires o persecution and suffering, but brave enough to enter a government school and make that secular institution a center of Christian training.

Day after day the broad deck of his vessel is crowded with men, women and children, to whom the story of Christ is told.

One man offered to give largely to the Captain for his work. A prominent magazine offered a good price for a series of articles. Every visitor to the ship would like to give to the work. Right here is where I differ most widely with the Captain: I think that money offered to God should not be refused. Yet I respect the answer of the calm, blue-eyed man, who gives from his own salary to make both ends meet, but who will not accept money from any one except the Board he serves.

"Mine is an unusual and pectacular work, and it is blessed. while better men in our own mission toil on unnoticed. I cannot accept money to extend my work while the other work stands still for want of funds. There is one way to support me, and that is to support the entire mission work throughout the world of the Board I represent."

IN all his life the Captain has never prayed for favoring winds; his prayer is that he may be enough of a man to meet the tempest and triumph over it. But even this veteran of a thousand storms, who has sat for hours on one doorstep after another, seeking for a house in which to hold meetings in an unfriendly town, to find a way at last and to win one more village to a friendly welcome to Christianity—even he has his moments when his faith is weak.

Shaking the morning mists from our mastheads and yardarms, we nosed out into the channel and tossed the whitecaps from our yacht-like hull. We rounded a red buoy and faced the wind, our crude-oil engines driving the prow through the waves. We passed through the narrow channel and rounded the promontory.

"Out there we're going to get a blow," said the Captain. "It is going to be rough, and I'm afraid we can't get the people on board. This town we're going to is not at all sympathetic. We may have only a dozen on board."

That afternoon I stayed below. Overhead I could hear the preacher delivering his direct message to the representatives of this unsympathetic town. Finally Native Christians gathered on deck for a communion service. Does the hymn wait on the making of this picture or is that young man passing hymn books?

Five persons who were baptized by Captain Bickel while Mr. Williams was on board. A farmer, a teacher, a student, a policeman's daughter, a dock-owner's wife

I went on deck. Every chair was filled. Those who had been specially invited had been forced to sit on the deck matting—a humility hard for a special guest to undergo when he knows that one who was not invited occupies his chair, although in his own home he does without a chair and sits on the floor by preference. Scores sat along the railing and every bit of space was filled. Alongside were several sampans, loaded to capacity with those who were straining their ears to hear the Christian appeal. The arrangements were broken up by the force of numbers. The Captain could not speak because he had to be finding places for more of these "umsympathetic" visitors who wanted to hear the Word.

The only way it could be arranged satisfactorily was to have the Captain promise to return soon for a whole day with these "unsympathetic" men who came in hordes, nearly three hundred of them, from that one small, inimical village.

Sometimes, when a busy and triumphant day is over and the Captain and I lie out here on deck, while the cool breezes bring rest to our hot bodies and the little ship swings at her anchor—sometimes it is hard to have the Captain accuse me of undue Americanism, commercialism, efficiency, strategy, and of using such senseless phrases as "the evangelization of the world in this generation." Whether I dislike it or not, at such times I have to bear the mistakes of a mighty nation, whose missionaries are in every heathen land and whose charity is known to Belgium, Poland, Armenia, Serbia, and even to Germany. Some time I am going to get aroused and remind the Captain of his little faith that blowy morning, as we made our way to the "unsympathetic" town whose citizens nearly swamped the little vessel in their desire to hear the Bible read and Christianity preached.

I MIGHT tell a hundred incidents, showing how Christianity is coming into its own in one village after another: of the baptism in a pretty little bay, where five earnest people joined this band of workers in which there is no leakage, every church member not only being accounted for but called upon to do some Christian service regularly; of the large audience singing, "See heathen nations bending before the God we love;" of the Shinto priests who collected seven hundred yen for repairs to the isolation hospital and spent it in a "blow out" in honor of the emperor; of the telegram sent by the Captain to the postmaster, who is a believer, and who not only acts as local Bible worker and gives his house for meetings, but contributes largely to the work. The telegram referred to the sickness of the young boy who came to bring me to the ship and who fell sick of dysentery. It read, "Don't let them take the lad to that filthy isolation hospital. It will kill him." The shrewd postmaster showed it to the chief of police and explained that the Captain, who had thus insulted their town, knew how the seven hundred yen had been spent and why the old hospital was so filthy. It was a chance for a good lesson, "rubbing it in" a little.

I could tell of hundreds of kiddies coming aboard the Captain's vessel for a good Christian talk, some singing, and an inspection of the ship—crowds limited in membership to those who had been faithful in attendance at the local Sunday school, simply because the little ship could hold no more. Up overhead now, there is a meeting in progress. This afternoon there will be another, tomorrow others, and so on day after day, while in sixty-two places regular meetings go on. In every channel in the maze of islands the white ship is known to all as the "Jesus Ship."

I might go on telling just what I have seen and still leave untold the work in hundreds of island villages, whose inhabitants are as intelligent as are those on the more favored mainland. But I will introduce the last picture and then let the Captain tell the story.

ON board one morning climbed a short, ugly-faced little fellow, built in a lump and clad in a white suit with the brightest and biggest of brass buttons. He was barefoot and grasped the rope with his toes as he climbed aboard. He wore a straw hat, such as is known in America as a "sailor," chiefly, I suppose, because sailors, with the exception of this compact little captain of the Fukuin Maru No. 2, never wear them. Enough introduction. The Captain has a more facile pen and a more knowing heart. Let him speak of his relationship with this happy little man with the buttons:

"He came in over the stern. The winter snap was on and that fact presuppósed clothes. All he had to support his allegiance to the Mikado was half a shirt and a loincloth, things acquired, and a shock of hair thrown in by nature. His bow fairly spoke. It said, 'I'll do you the first chance I get, and I won't be long in getting one.' His crafty eyes looked in the direction of the eight cardinal points of the compass all at once. We did not want him. But he kept his eight-point eyes on us, and the next time we needed a man he was there waiting.

"He was openly, cheerfully evil. He and the devil went watch and watch. He gambled, stole and lied by preference. He drank heavily and loved to fight, for was he not a jiu-jitsu expert of seven years' training? All this he did and worse.

"Man has a soul, they say. We tried to find his, tried for two years, but never got even a glimpse. He came to the ship's daily worship with the rest, bowed his head like a saint and looked out of his eight-point eyes at the rest of the crew with a wink to which they responded. What had we come for but to change such men as these? But change there was none.

"This lasted two years, and then something happened. One of the men fell overboard in a winter gale and was drowned. God used this to move our friend's heart. We did not believe him sincere then, nor did we later on, when he professed faith in Christ. But there was a change. Even we could not deny it. The quarrelsome man became the peacemaker, and the man of evil life the example of all.

"We tried to teach him but failed. He was outside our methods, somehow. But he pored over the old Book of books in every spare moment, and so we left him to God's spirit. He developed a remarkable ability to hold a mixed audience with his powerful presentation of God's love and mercy.

"Long had we desired some systematic plan for colportage work in the islands. A word spoken in jest gave the needed clue. 'We shall have to get you a little mission ship,' said we in jest.

"'Yes,' said he, in jest also, pointing to a little Japanese sailing craft; 'one like that.'

"That night we did some thinking and praying. The result was that, through the generosity of some friends, a little vessel was built and Hirata San was placed in charge of her to carry on colportage work in the many islands we visit. When the little ship was launched, we stood on the beach and watched him as he worked up to his waist in water. The tears were streaming down his face as he worked. He was overwhelmed with the thought of God's mercy in bringing him up out of the depths. A foreman shipwright stood by who had known him of old, and said, 'Let him alone; he has a vile temper. He is so mad that the tears are running down his face because the vessel is stuck a bit on the chocks. He is dangerous at such times.'

"Three years later, that same foreman was baptized, having been led to Christ by our friend. After a most astonishing profession of faith, made before the believers assembled on the Fukuin Maru's deck, he suddenly turned to us and said, 'And, Captain, I now know what those tears meant.'"

I TOO, filled as I am with commercialism, twentieth century ideas of efficiency and scientific management; impressed as I am, not with great fortunes, but by large salaries paid for originality; fresh from New York and unable to speak a word of encouragement or friendliness to Hirata San in his own language—I, too, know what those tears meant.

When that half-sized sinner with the big sense of shame and the big appreciation of God's mercy, shed tears of joy at the launching of his little "Jesus Ship No. 2," he was simply, in his Oriental and out-of-date way, saying to God, "Received with thanks."

A Town Organized to Help the Suffering

ONE thousand dollars for the relief of suffering. That was the amount that came to the Christian Herald in one letter, but that wasn't the best of it. This thousand dollars was not the gift of an individual, but of one American city, Ardmore, Okla., and it was sent by the chairman of the Relief Committee. Ardmore, a progressive city, a growing, thriving city of the middle West, has seen the necessity for organization and system, for united effort. It has met the call of suffering by creating a committee to organize and guide its giving, and the result is this draft of $1,000. The letter accompanying the draft specified that it was to be divided equally, $250 to be sent to Armenian and Syrian relief, $250 to Poland, $250 to German widows and orphans, and $250 to Belgian and French widows and orphans.

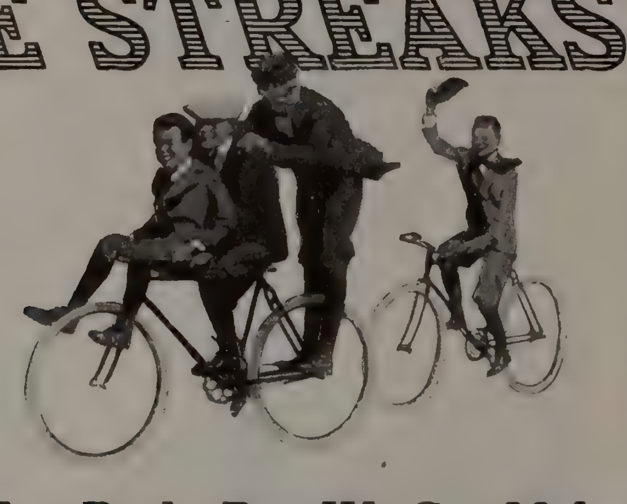
Why should there not be a thousand Ardmores? Rev. Charles C. Weith, minister of the First Presbyterian Church at Ardmore, is chairman of their relief committee. We do not know to what extent he may have been responsible for the organization and its results. But we do know that there is an opportunity in every town and city for some minister or some layman who has been enabled to share in sympathy the agony of a world in tears, to start a movement which will create a relief committee and make its work effective.

We have said before, and we must repeat it again and again, that the need grows with every day of armed conflict and that the end is not yet in sight. Christian America must give and keep on giving, even while she prays for the end of horrors and the healing touch of peace.

The monthly offering clubs continue to grow. This thoroughly practical method of supporting the Christian Herald relief work is being adopted by more members of the Christian Herald Family each week. On January 17 there were 194 members of the various clubs whose regular gifts will total a little more than $300 each month. The clubs are as follows: No. 1, for donors of fifty cents monthly; No. 2, for donors of one dollar monthly; No. 3, for donors of two dollars monthly; No. 4, for donors of three dollars monthly; No. 5, for donors of five dollars monthly; No. 6, for donors of ten dollars monthly; No. 7, for donors of twenty dollars monthly; No. 8, for donors of twenty-five dollars monthly; No. 9, for donors of fifty dollars monthly; No. 10, for donors of some amount monthly, determined by circumstances.

Please address your gifts to the Christian Herald, Room 93, Bible House, New York City. In due course acknowledgment will appear in the paper. State any preference you may have as to the use you wish made of your gifts.

BLUE STREAKS



These Tires Must Be the Best We Can Make

Guaranteed

Every Goodyear Blue Streak Bicycle Tire is our card of introduction to some boy. Through this tire he gets his first impression of The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company. And first impressions are lasting.

Some day that boy will own an automobile and we will want to sell him tires for it. Or he will own a power plant and will be a prospect for belts and packing.

Can't you see that we must give him in Blue Streak Bicycle Tires a product that will reflect credit upon the name of Goodyear?

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company
Akron, Ohio

GOODYEAR
AKRON

SMITH BROTHERS'
S.B. COUGH DROPS

Absolutely Pure. Just enough charcoal to sweeten the stomach.

ONE NICKEL

SMITH BROTHERS'
S. B.
COUGH DROPS.
S. B. Stamped on each Drop
POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.
TRADE MARK
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.
COUGH DROPS.
SB

Put a Drop in your mouth at bedtime to loosen the phlegm

Made by the Makers of S. B. Chewing Gum and Lasses Kisses

Drilling Wells is a Year Round Business

Drilling Water Wells is a profitable, healthful year-round business. There are wells all around you to be drilled. Don't you want to get into a money-making business for yourself? Write for particulars. Star Drilling Machine Co.
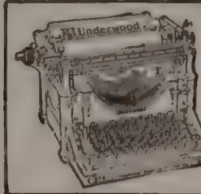
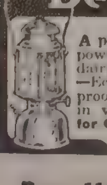
665 Washington St., Akron, Ohio



Largest stock of rebuilt typewriters in the United States. Guaranteed saving of $10.00 to $25.00 on any rebuilt typewriter bought. Remingtons, Underwoods, Olivers, Monarchs, Royals. Write for big illustrated catalogue and discounts to dealers and agents.

Dearborn Typewriter Co.
Dept. D-24 Chicago

"Best" Hand Lantern



A powerful portable lamp, giving a 300 candle power pure white light. Just what the farmer, dairyman, stockman, etc. needs. Safe—Reliable—Economical—Absolutely Rain, Storm and Bug proof. Burns either gasoline or kerosene. Light in weight. Agents wanted. Big Profits. Write for Catalog. THE BEST LIGHT CO.
470 E. 5th St., Canton, O

THE NEW
"G. S. S." Auto foot-rests

add wonderfully to the ease and comfort of running automobiles, especially for long distances. They are attachable by any one in a few minutes. Are ornamental, durable and adjustable to any sized foot, or to nearly every machine the Ford excepted. Send One Dollar Bill — with maker's name of Auto to the

"G. S. S. PEDAL COMPANY"
People's Bank Building SCRANTON, PA.

Fair Play for the Producer

HAVING noticed of late, in your editorials, comments on the high cost of living, I think it time that the farmer's side of the situation be given a little attention. The farmer is not in a position to make prices to suit himself, if he were so inclined. To bring the point before you, I will ask you who makes the prices on all farm products? Are they not made by a few men in your cities? Are they not made by men who are members of your Chambers of Commerce? Have you ever known of any board of farmers demanding a certain price? Do you know that the farmer is the only producer that has no voice in the selling price of his product? He takes what is offered, and that regardless of the cost of production, in many instances.

Some time ago the meat-packers, while in convention in Cincinnati, had the question put to them, who would stand the loss if an embargo was placed on meat products. It was agreed that an embargo would affect the prices; but the speaker said it made no difference to them, as they merely acted as a clearing-house between the farmer and the consumer, and that the loss would have to fall to the farmer or producer. He was honest, at least, and he left no doubts in our mind on the point. But why should the producer saddle the burden? Why not divide the loss with the packers?

The writer of this letter has not always lived on a Dakota prairie farm. He went to work with the whistle and he has seen about thirty-five years of the ups and downs of life in a large city. He has been one of the dinner-pail squad. I was one of many who thought that everything the farmer sold grew on trees, and that the woods were full of them. Since leaving the city, I have learned that I knew little or nothing of the questions the farmer meets with. You asked us to raise a big crop. We answer that a big crop cannot be raised at a profit to us. That seems strange, doesn't it? It can easily be proven. The crop of 1913, which was regarded as the largest crop this country ever produced, was raised at a loss to the farmers of the northwest. Why? Because we got for it less than the cost of production. We were at the mercy of a few city people. Had we had a voice in the price of that crop, we would have had at least a fair margin of profit for our labor. As it was, that crop left a bad taste with us.

When any one is asked to put special efforts into anything, he is promised some special reward. You promise us the everlasting gratitude of the people in the cities. The reward in itself is worth striving for. But allow me to ask you how we farmers are going to buy and pay for your high-priced city manufactured goods, of which we are large consumers? We will have the everlasting gratitude, it is true, and we will also have a beggarly price for our crop. Will the city people come to our rescue and, instead of asking us to pay them for their products of the factories and mills at the present rate of eight hours' work and ten hours' pay, will they let us have their products at the rate of twelve hours' work and ten hours' pay? The farmer fails to see why he should work from daylight till dark, without ever thinking of the half or full holidays that the city man never overlooks, and with no more reward than the good wishes of the city people.

You may think that the writer is heartless. Oh, no; I have sisters and brothers, as well as an old father and mother, who are feeling the effects of the high prices. However, that does not keep me from thinking that the pill that is being swallowed in the cities is bearing the city trademark. As long as the people in our cities want to get all they can, and do as little as they can in getting it, they must expect the other fellows to do the same thing. The farmer has to contend with the weather conditions in his efforts. He has a thousand and one things to meet before he is even sure of a crop. He goes at his work with the object in view of having his labor rewarded. He sometimes gets a crop, and he often does not. If he does, he permits some one, who has probably never raised a crop, to make the price at which he is obliged to sell. The farmer gets wages if the city speculator lets him have them.

This talk of an embargo is all very well in a way. It keeps hope in the hearts of the consumer, and it educates the farmer. True, it has cut the farmer out of a few dollars, as it has affected prices a little. I wonder whether it has affected the consumer as much as it has the farmer? It educates the farmer to this extent: He knows, by previous experience, that a big crop, with the doors of the world open to receive it, has meant a money loss to him. He knows that a big crop to be kept at home means all work and no pay for him. With a threatened embargo, his seed wheat at two dollars a bushel and his hired help at about double its value, what inducement is there for him to try his best to relieve the situation?

Let me go to the meat question. Let me say at the start that it takes three years to raise a three-year prime steer. I simply mention this so that we may reach a working basis, as it were. Take it that we have an embargo on meats. The packers say the loss falls on the producer, and we will not question that. That puts it to where the producer must lose to benefit the consumer. It is admitted that the free range in the West is a thing of the past. It means that cattle must be raised on land that is growing in value each year. It means that it is costing more money every year to put this stuff on the table. Suppose the price the producer gets is below the cost of production? What will the result be? Just this: The consumer will eat meat at the expense of the producer for a short time. Then he will gradually get over the habit of eating meat at all. Is it reasonable to suppose that the cattle and hog breeders will comb the country for high-class breeding stock with a loss staring them in the face? Even a farmer will get out from under as quick as he can. The breeder will either have to go back to where he started from, or get out of business. He will sell off his blooded stock at a loss in preference to keeping it and losing in the end, for lose he must.

Let me bring it a little closer to you. Last fall a certain man whom I am well acquainted with had 65 hogs fit for market. At that time the packers had their cellars empty, and they had a fairly good idea of the number of hogs that would go on the market. They knew that cold weather was due, that the feed was about gone, and that the hogs were ripe. They made up their minds that they were going to get these hogs at their own price, and they did. Now, when this man sent his hogs to market, the packers were there waiting for them. When he got his returns, I happened to meet him, and inquired how he came out. Well, it only took him a few minutes to let me see where he stood. He saved over enough breeding sows to assure him of at least a spring crop of a hundred pigs. He went home and fed these remaining sows all the feed he had left, and then threw them on the market. He saved one sow and raised a litter. That man is eating bacon, and his wife has lard to grease the griddle for buckwheat pancakes this winter. He isn't worrying about you fellows in New York, or whether you are eating or not; he gets his regular. Yes, an embargo will help out on the meat question without doubt. You can cut the head off the goose that lays the golden egg and still have the goose, but headless; you can also place an embargo on the products of the farm, which is the labor of the farmer, but in the end you will have neither.

What has become of those "back to the farm" fellows? With the farmers getting rich it seems that this is the time to get back to the soil.

What we need at the present time is a large injection of brotherly love. We need more of "Do to others as we would have others do to us" taught us. It will come, don't you think?

EDW. W. HERBERT.

The Mother Boat

By
MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

THE world has been stirred, for a breathing space, by a terrible tragedy—the murder of a beautiful, wayward young woman known as Grace Roberts. The newspapers have quoted her chance remarks and published her picture. They have built up mysteries around her, and solved them, and built up new mysteries. They have delved deep into her past—even as far back as her carefree little-girlhood.

Grace Roberts, whose real name was not that, was born and brought up in a small village. Very soon, the newspapers tell us, her beauty and cleverness began to be felt by her young friends. She was soon the most popular girl in town—swamped with invitations to go skating, to attend dances, to drive in the moonlight.

Every girl has one or two chums. "Grace" had two firm friends, and the three girls formed a little circle of their own and ruled very royally. "Grace" was the queen—the other two were her ladies in waiting.

The three girls led a gay, an exciting, a stimulating life. The mothers of the town began to grow apprehensive—with the exception of three mothers, who were, more or less, charmed at the popularity of their young daughters. "Grace" and her two chums grew a bit hard to manage, a trifle loud, a little too sure of themselves. Then the town that they lived in became too small, too conventional, too slow. Or so it seemed to them.

"Grace Roberts" left her home when she was eighteen. She has never been back. And today she is dead—a woman with a disagreeable past, a woman with a police record behind her, a woman who was brutally murdered. Her two chums have also slipped into oblivion—one was killed by a jealous admirer some six years ago, the other has disappeared—as girls often do disappear—as completely as a small, carelessly dancing sunbeam disappears when a cloud scuds across the way.

Three girls gone, and nothing beautiful left to remember them by! Three girls—young, attractive, who in the beginning had been endowed by every gift of a very kind God. And three mothers—sorrowful, shamed, silent under the burden of their grief. . . . This is the story.

WE are not here to criticize or to blame. We are not here to judge. God alone may judge. And the three girls are gone. . . . But we can see that they made mistakes, and we can see that perhaps they were not the only ones responsible for those mistakes.

There are many beautiful, soul-stirring poems about the mother listening to the first prayers of her tiny child. There are many tenderly sympathetic pictures of the mother sitting on the edge of a crib-bed telling sleepy-time stories. There are many songs of the mother who croons sweet lullabys as tired little eyelids are drooping. But can any of you, offhand, remember a song, or a poem, or a picture of a mother listening to the prayers of her growing daughter, sitting on the bedside and giving counsel, hearing the daily problems and helping to solve them? I can't think of any picture, or poem, or song, about such a subject.

Of course it isn't so simple and sweet to picture. An overgrown girl of fifteen hasn't the appeal of a golden-haired tot of five. And yet the overgrown girl needs her mother much more vitally that the tiny child needs her.

Of course some mothers do listen, at bedtime, to the prayers of their growing-up daughters. Some mothers invite confidences and give advice; some mothers are very much interested in even the smallest sort of details. But some mothers think that, when a girl is able to wash her own face with thoroughness, and brush her own hair without leaving the tangles in it, maternal responsibility is ended. Some mothers are like that. I wonder if the mothers of "Grace Roberts" and her two chums heard them say their prayers before they crept into bed? I wonder . . .

I KNOW a girl who is very popular with boys. She is a small-town girl, just as these three were small-town girls. She dances well and skates well, just as they did. She is in demand, and her callers are many.

But this girl has a mother—a real mother. That's why she will never go wrong; why the flattery and popularity will never turn her head.

Some mothers are figureheads. They will, perhaps, know their daughter's boy friends in a casual way. They will shake hands and disappear after commenting politely on the weather. But this particular mother doesn't meet the friends of her daughter in a casual way. She gets to know them, and if they are worth while they become her friends, too.

This mother dreams with her daughter over filmy party frocks. She appears, at the right moment, with cookies and hot chocolate. She gives advice and encouragement when they are most needed. She reads the same books that her daughter reads, and is able, tactfully, to see that they are the right sort of books. She is often invited to be one of the guests at parties made up of very young folk—and she is not invited out of politeness. And the very young folk are always glad when she accepts—which she often does. And, as she said to me, once,

"It's like living over my own youth—the sharing of Dorothy's good times. I can't tell you how much I enjoy her little parties, and her young friends, and her small successes."

That's the right kind of a mother to have—and to be.

WHEN a baseball team isn't playing a good game, when a quartet isn't singing well, when a parade isn't moving smoothly, some one from the crowd of bystanders is very likely to call out, "Get together, there, get together!" It's slangy, but it has the right meaning. And when I am a bystander in a crowd, and see a mother who isn't interested, or is too busy, or can't understand—when I see a daughter who is pretty, and headstrong, and full of wild youth—when I see them playing the game unskilfully, or getting the music wrong, I want to call out, loud enough for them to hear, "Get together!"

LIFE, when all is said and done, is a vast ocean. And we, drifting across it, are very very frail and inefficient, very destructible, little boats, sent out from the shore of childhood by the great hand of God. Some of us sail straight across the ocean of life without mishaps and at last gain the wonderful harbor of Peace that lies at the other side of the ocean. And very often we are able to sail without mishap because we are bound, by invisible chains of love and trust and good fellowship, to a larger, older boat that sails just in front of us—a "mother boat," which has met the storms of life and can understand the ways of the billows and the tempests.

But some of the little boats that set out so blithely across a sunny ocean drift away from the guiding craft, and the invisible chains melt away. And when storms come they are swept from their course. Some of them, after painful wanderings, find their way back, battered and worn; but some of them are shipwrecked on reefs hidden treacherously beneath the fascinatingly dangerous waves; and some of them, without warning, almost, sink out of sight, and scarcely a ripple is left to mark the spot where they disappeared.

Sometimes it isn't entirely the fault of the little boat. For the little boat is brave, with new courage and bright colors and confidence; and never having sailed before, there are many things that it cannot be expected to understand. Sometimes it is the mother boat that sails too far ahead. Sometimes it is the mother boat that forgets that the invisible chains are necessary.

. . . I pray that this little story,—this true story, has not been told here in vain.

Joyce Mayfield, Crusader

Continued from page 113

in his work. One or two days he didn't come at all. There was liquor on his breath sometimes. And yesterday he made a dreadful mistake and lost his job. I guess that's all, except that this reform mustn't be a game of hide-and-seek, Mr. Beckerman, because that boy's life is at stake. He must be saved. If he goes under, you will be to blame, and I and Judge Allen, and everybody who knew about him and refused to do anything."

The company, magnetized by her eloquence, was silent for a moment. Then, led by Plato Burke, it burst into applause.

Judge Allen arose from his seat and made his way through the eager group which surrounded her. He shook her hand warmly.

"I'm glad to see we have such a brave little patriot with us," he said. "We'll try to do the best we can, but you mustn't be too impatient. These evils which seem so tragic to you are not new. They exist in every town, in every country. They're as old as history. When you're older, you'll see that all progress moves slowly—like a big glacier——"

The girl's face fell. So she had failed, after all. He hadn't understood the danger—she turned to him fiercely.

"If a tiger was prowling about the city killing little children, would you talk of patience?" she flashed. "Would you wait until it died or went away of its own accord? If there was a war, and people's lives were in danger—oh, why can't you see that the only way to save—this boy—is to act at once—today?"

"Yes, yes," said the judge hastily, "Something ought surely to be done about his case. By the way, who is the youngster?"

"Kin Allen—your brother!"

The judge drew a quick breath. "I'll give you my decision tomorrow morning," he said quietly, to the silent committee.

FROM down the street came the sound of a band. The gathering of a mass meeting of citizens was stirring the city. Joyce Mayfield stood on the porch breathing deeply and marveling at the suddenly aroused courage of the crowd which swept away all puny fears of "hurting business" and raising taxes. It had been worth while to try to save Kin—and strangely enough in saving him a whole city was being made over.

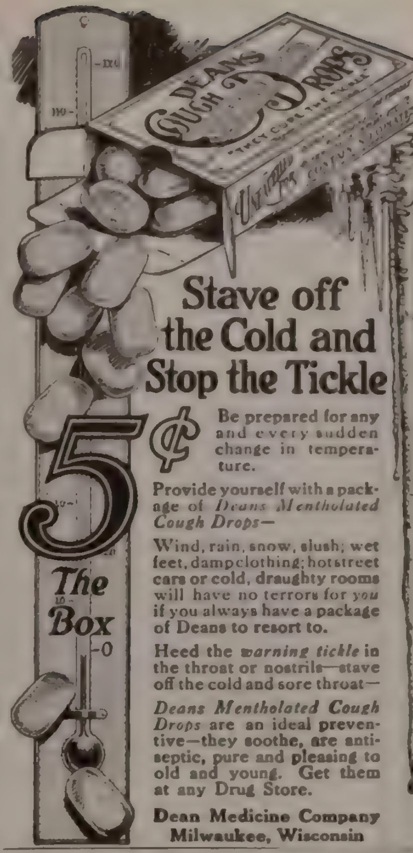
"I had to find you"—it was Kin's voice speaking—"to bring you a message from my brother. He's in the fight to stay. The war is on—a real honest-to-goodness fight against the gang. Every officer is out tonight on the biggest raid that ever happened in this state. Half the business men who have been selling stuff out of their back doors will be in jail before morning. I tell you the thing's going to stick this time."

"It's like war," breathed Joyce, her eyes flaming. "It's as exciting as Ivanhoe—or the battle of Waterloo! . . . Kin, . . . I haven't seen you for so long!"

He twisted his droll face into a grimace of mock penitence.

"The judge told me," he said, "and old McQuaide, too, that I'm the cause of all this gorgeous uproar."

Suddenly the homely face became wistful. "Honestly, Joyce," he whispered, his face close to hers, "if you really believe in me—that much—"



Stave off the Cold and Stop the Tickle

5¢ The Box

Be prepared for any and every sudden change in temperature.

Provide yourself with a package of Deans Mentholated Cough Drops—

Wind, rain, snow, slush; wet feet, damp clothing; hot street cars or cold, draughty rooms will have no terrors for you if you always have a package of Deans to resort to.

Heed the warning tickle in the throat or nostrils—stave off the cold and sore throat—

Deans Mentholated Cough Drops are an ideal preventive—they soothe, are antiseptic, pure and pleasing to old and young. Get them at any Drug Store.

Dean Medicine Company
Milwaukee, Wisconsin

THE ORIGINAL
MALTED MILK
Rich milk, malted grain extract, in powder.
For Infants, Invalids and growing children.
Pure nutrition, upbuilding the whole body.
Invigorates nursing mothers and the aged.
The Food-Drink for all Ages
More nutritious than tea, coffee, etc.
Substitutes cost YOU Same Price

To SOUTH AFRICA
CEYLON AND INDIA
AMERICAN and INDIAN LINE
FREQUENT SAILINGS
From NEW YORK DIRECT to
CAPE TOWN, DURBAN,
BOMBAY, COLOMBO, CALCUTTA,
MADRAS AND RANGOON.
For SAILING DATE, RATE OF PASSAGE, &c., APPLY TO
NORTON, LILLY & CO.
Produce Exchange Building, N. Y. City
General Agents for
Ellerman & Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd.

OSTER PIPE-THREADING TOOLS

Send for a free catalog it will help you to understand why every nation in the civilized world buys Oster U. S.-made Die-Stocks and Pipe-Threading Machines.

The Oster Mfg. Co.

2122 East 61st St., Cleveland, Ohio

Using an Oster Bulldog Stock

Revival Conference

Jan. 31—Feb. 5, Moody Bible Institute 30th Reunion. Addresses will be reported in coming numbers of The Christian Workers Magazine. Some of the speakers will be Bishop Luther B. Wilson, M. E. Church; Dr. R. A. Torrey; Dr. C. I. Scofield; Dr. A. B. Winchester, Knox Presb. Church, Toronto; Paul Rader. Subscribe TODAY. D. L. Moody Anniversary number in February, 15 cents. 4 months, 50 cents; 8 months, $1.00; 1 year, $1.50.

THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS MAGAZINE
152 Institute Place, Chicago

Hudson Super-Six

Not Like Other Sixes

Hudson Super-Six, because its difference was not known to all, has brought leadership back to the Six. Now that the difference is understood, that leadership is placed where it belongs with the Super-Six.

Late in 1915—when the Super-Six appeared—the trend was toward Eights and Twelves.

But the Super-Six—a Hudson invention—removed all the Six limitations. It added 80 per cent to the Six-type efficiency.

By its super-performance it forced the multi-cylinder types in the background. It made the added cylinders unnecessary. And numerous makers who adopted them have quit.

But that doesn't mean that the Six in general is a permanent type, or desirable.

The same shortcomings remain in it—the vibration, the friction, the wear. Those were the faults which led to the V-types, and then to the Super-Six.

The Super-Six motor, which corrected those faults, is a Hudson invention, controlled by Hudson patents. It cannot be imitated. In no way known can it be approached.

Many makers of Sixes are basking now in the Super-Six prestige. But it is the Super-Six invention—exclusive to Hudson—which added 80 per cent to the Six power and endurance. And that is the source of its dominance.

So do not be misled.

Hudson Super-Six

Did This in One Year

Note that in one year the Super-Six has won all of the worth-while records.

It has proved its supremacy in power, in speed, in quick acceleration, in hill-climbing and in endurance.

In the chief tests—for endurance—all other types have been hopelessly out-performed. In the 24-hour test the Super-Six broke former records by 52 per cent.

The Super-Six, in one year, has come to outsell any other front-rank car.

It has won 27,000 enthusiastic owners.

It has made itself the conceded monarch of the field. No man can doubt that the Super-Six is the greatest car that's built.

This year it attains an equal place in beauty, finish, comfort and luxury. And it brings out a gasoline saver—another Hudson creation.

Consider these facts when you buy a car to keep. Any type which the Super-Six so excels cannot be a permanent type.

Phaeton, 7-passenger,	$1650	Limousine	$2925
Roadster, 2-passenger,	1650	Town Car	2925
Cabriolet, 3-passenger,	1950	Town Car Landaulet .	3025
Touring Sedan . . .	2175	Limousine Laudaulet .	3025

(All Prices f. o. b. Detroit)

HUDSON MOTOR CAR COMPANY, DETROIT, MICHIGAN

Jesus and the Woman of Samaria

International Sunday School Lesson for February 11

John 4 : 1-29

Christ the Conqueror of Pride and Prejudice

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

JESUS' greatest teachings seem often to have been presented to an audience of one. This is not so surprising in the case of the cultivated, influential Nicodemus, but it is remarkable that the Samaritan woman should have been given the privilege of learning the mighty truths of the fourth chapter of John before any one else. She qualified, however, in the eyes of Christ, by her very need. The despised and the outcast need most the teaching of universal and forgiving love. The slave needs the teachings of freedom, the sinner of purity and righteousness. The woman felt keenly her disability of race, of religion, of status in life, and of sinfulness. Christ ministered unto her. She evoked the great message, though he must have passed it on to John also.

Jesus Breaks the Barriers of Race

THE poor woman was surprised that a Jew, and evidently a rabbi, should make a request of a Samaritan. The historical aversion of the two races is proverbial. The parable of the Good Samaritan gains its poignancy from this background of contempt. The fundamental basis for the hatred was racial—the Samaritans were the descendants of the Babylonish colonists brought in by Shalmaneser King of Assyria when he carried the Lost Tribes into exile (II Kings 17). Not only were they despised as the offspring of foreigners and heathen, but there was the added contempt felt for "half-breeds"; for there remained a strong admixture of original North Israelitish stock.

What a sad story of race hatred the history of man presents! One last mad outburst of the old feeling has in our time set the torch to European civilization. The mingled fear and prejudice toward aliens is at the bottom of it all. Yet the New Testament is a mighty protest against it. Beginning with Christ's absolute disregard of Jewish anti-Samaritanism here, it goes on to Peter's vision and ministry to the Italian Cornelius (Acts 10) and Paul's proclamation of the new humanity, "where there is neither Greek nor Jew, barbarian, Scythian, bond or free." In the common fatherhood of God all unbrotherliness of race to race vanishes away, for "we are his offspring." The man who delighted to call himself the apostle to the Gentiles, though a Hebrew of Hebrews, declared this truth on Mars Hill to proud Greeks to whom all outsiders were barbarians.

Do we not need to learn anew the lesson of human brotherhood? We have active agencies at work sowing the seeds of suspicion and ill-will for our Japanese neighbors. A popular newspaper referred to them as the "soulless, conscienceless, monkey-like little brown men of Japan" in one of its editorials. A great deal of Christian influence is necessary to counteract such contempt. Then, too, we have a problem of Jew and Gentile in New York that will never be solved on a lower basis than Christ's. And still with us are 10,000,000 Afro-Americans, the negroes who have been Americans longer than many of us, and feel keenly the un-Christian prejudice of great groups of their fellow citizens.

Jesus Disregards Sex and Caste

BEFORE the disciples so much as perceived that Jesus' hearer was a Samaritan, "they marveled that he was speaking with a woman." And yet women had as honorable a place among the Hebrews as among any ancient people. What a marvelous difference Christ has made in the status of woman everywhere, claiming for her the equal favor of God, safeguarding her rights and honoring her abilities!

Jesus was a rabbi and a well-educated man. The woman was poor and common. The disciples marveled the more that he spoke to such a woman. It was characteristic of the Pharisee's code to regard even the common mass of Jews as a lower caste: the people of the land, "sinners that know not the law." Greece and Rome, India and Egypt have had their various caste lines. The world is still afflicted with class hatred, and in heathen lands with permanent grades of social inferiority.

But the religion of Christ stands for mutual esteem and honor. "One is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren." Christianity tends inevitably to break down class distinctions. James in his letter, written early in Christian history, sternly admonishes the church to avoid discrimination. "My brethren, hold not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ with respect of persons." Thus early was there danger of drawing the lines that Christ ignored. He sat at ease in the rich man's house and with equal fraternity partook of the poor fisherman's fare.

Jesus Overlooks Sectarian Differences

AS soon as Jesus began to press into the principles of her inner life the Samaritan woman tried to turn aside the conversation to the sectarian differences of Jerusalem and Gerizim. Probably, too, she was in all sincerity anxious to know the truth of the matter. Which place was the correct one for entreating the Father? Perhaps, superstitiously, she imagined all her troubles might be due to this. Jesus sweeps away the whole matter of place and form, and declares that the realm of worship is in the spirit.

How strangely the great organized church of the Middle Ages ignored that teaching! But would not a majority of our present day Christians stand convicted if all formalism and sectarianism of their faith were removed? What would some people have left? Many great sects seem to believe that if Jesus came again he would disregard all other temples but theirs, and commend them as alone correct in ritual and doctrine. But Christ would not even deign to decide between competing factions as to their historic accuracy of dogma. He would commend and bless earnest spiritual seeking after God wherever found, and would unsparingly condemn those who magnify the non-essentials of religion.

"Neither in this mountain nor in Jerusalem shall ye worship the Father." Worship is not a matter of place, or of externalities at all. How impatient he would be of so many confusing claims and counter-claims of sect and party, between which the multitude have given up in despair! Whole groups of Christians excommunicate one another! Perhaps to rival faiths claiming the first place Jesus would say today, "Neither!" Pointing to the humblest publican standing afar off, he would give a parable of true prayer again.

The Religion of the Spirit

CHRIST'S religion teaches that God is personal, righteous, interested in his creatures, and that, as Augustine taught, "our souls are restless till they find rest in him." There is a correspondence between the Eternal Spirit and the spirit in man. Moreover, there is a forthreaching of God that surpasses the yearning of his children for communion with him. He needs no bloody sacrifices. He requires no irksome forms nor magic rites. No external authority possesses the secret of his presence.

"Speak to him thou, for he heareth,
And spirit with Spirit can meet;
Closer is he than breathing,
Nearer than hands or feet."

The thirst of the soul for God is satisfied by the grace that Jesus imparts. His teaching, his life, his intercession satisfy the longing and the questioning of awakened hearts. Many draughts of water have we drawn from other teachers, but none have permanently satisfied but his alone. It is living water. Moreover, it is no external and inaccessible spring. It becomes a well of water springing up within the soul of the believer. The spiritual life is an inner and personal thing. This fits exactly the teaching of the irrelevancy of the place of worship. The soul is competent to know the abiding presence of Christ for itself without earthly intermediaries. "Whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely."

Unexpected Harvests

JESUS must have seen a growing response in this woman's heart, for he felt refreshed and strengthened and filled with hope. He had found a rich harvest of the spirit in an unexpected place. We are so easily discouraged in spiritual reaping. We give people up too easily. We look upon a heathen village or an American slum with despair, when Jesus sees it white unto harvest, calling for laborers. The David Livingstones and Jane Addamses are those who share this divine insight that Jesus manifested supremely. There is spiritual hunger and thirst after righteousness in the most unattractive personalities. Doors would fly open at our touch which we in our blindness imagine are bolted and barred.

Lord, open our eyes that we may see the need and the opportunity that confront us every day as we pause in our journey to meet another human soul by the wayside.

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

Items for Missionary Sunday

INTERESTING information about mission work leads to generous and intelligent giving. If we would interest the children and young people of our Sunday schools in the children and young people of other lands, we must tell them something about these folks. It is our plan to present from time to time recent happenings in mission fields which can be used on Missionary Sunday. These can be read by the superintendent or by a teacher, or, better, by one or more scholars. Below are a few samples:

Waiting Two Hours for Sunday School

In Cerro, one of the suburbs of the growing city of Montevideo, Uruguay, an earnest Sunday school worker, Miss Estella C. Long, has recently been doing some remarkable work. Cerro is a community of about 12,000 people, made up of what are generally considered by the city folks as the "lower" classes. When Miss Long went to this suburb, seven months ago, she found a Sunday school of fifteen; today there are 170 in the Spanish department and twenty in the English department. This Sunday school meets in her house, which has four rooms and two large enclosed patios. It begins at 3:30, but as early as one o'clock the children gather at the door, and they are all there long before the school starts. At two o'clock the young men come in to arrange the rooms, and at three o'clock the English and American children arrive, occupying the parlor and bedroom. Benches and chairs are brought in, and planks are laid on kerosene boxes. In the primary room many of the little ones sit on the floor. The scholars range in age from the one hundred babies on the cradle roll to old men and women past seventy.

One day a fine-looking Russian came and informed Miss Long that he had a Russian Sunday school in his house. There are hundreds of Russians thereabouts, and a number of these have been gathered into Miss Long's school. She is now seeking for Sunday school literature in Russian for the use of this new school.

In Montevideo are located two of the great packing-houses. Over 2,000 of the workmen have formed a club with a night-school, and Miss Long gives them English lessons once a week. A class of sixty women and children come once a week for sewing circle; two hundred girls and women from the canning factory have asked what can be done for them. Fifty boys and girls and young men are gathered in the morning and evening classes. Miss Long is expecting two other teachers to help her soon and hopes shortly to have a school organized. All honor to this worker, who is laying the foundation for a brighter future for these needy people!

Joined with a Future Czar

When the empress of Russia learned that the American Sunday school scholars were with their nickels, sending tens of thousands of Testaments and Gospels to Russian soldiers through the World's Sunday School Association, she was so moved and delighted that she asked that her thirteen-year-old son, the future Czar of Russia, should be united with these American Sunday School children in the gift. And so, upon the first page of all these Testaments, is an inscription which says to the soldier that the Testament is presented to him in the name of the American Sunday school scholar and His Imperial Highness, the Czarevitch. The empress sent twenty thousand of these Testaments in her own special train to the soldiers at the front.

Who can estimate the influence of these gifts of American children upon the future of this great empire?

India's Sunday School Growth

The first Sunday school in India was established at Serampore, Bengal, in 1803, when three boys were the founders and teachers. There are now 16,936 Sunday schools in India, with 636,614 teachers and scholars, speaking forty-five dialects. Every year the India Sunday School Union conducts an All-India Scripture examination, covering both oral and written work. In 1915, this examination was taken by 20,495 students in twenty-eight different dialects, and of these 17,492 passed the tests satisfactorily. The call in India is now for teachers to instruct the millions of low-caste people who are asking to be taught concerning Christ.

Making the "Hair-House"

WE do not think of women as house builders. Those who have traveled in countries less civilized than our United States may have observed women assisting at such labor. In the Palestine villages the women, with jars balanced on their heads, carry the water for the mortar, hand both stones and mortar to the masons, roll the clay roofs to prevent leakage, in some parts plaster the houses inside and outside themselves, and make the grain bins.

To the Bedouin woman's lot, however, falls the entire burden of making the roof, walls and floor of the house or tent. She makes it from beginning to end herself. She may, as a child, have had to shepherd the goats that grow the necessary hair; but in all cases she first spins the goat-hair into coarse yarn, and then, with the aid of the most primitive loom, if it may be called a loom, weaves the cloth. This loom consists of pegs driven into the ground between which the warp is stretched. The woof is passed through rolled on a stick instead of a shuttle, and with a gazelle's horn she pulls this thread tight against the previous one. When the cloth is made she sews the strips together and attaches the ropes. The Bedouins call this operation "building the house," for they never call these abodes tents, but "hair houses." The setting up of a new tent is the occasion for much rejoicing, and the owner usually sacrifices a goat or sheep in its honor.

The majority of the goats are jet black, and the tents are naturally of that color. Therefore Solomon used the simile in his Song, saying, "I am black, but comely . . . as the tents of Kedar." (Song of Sol. 1 : 5.) In the Revelation we have a similar allusion to this material, for we read, "And the sun became black as sackcloth of hair" (Rev. 6 : 12). In fact, this is the sackcloth always alluded to in the Bible, for it is not confined to the use of tent-making alone.

These Bedouin tents are often quite large; still the ordinary one usually consists of two compartments, one a living apartment, where the women stay, and the other for the reception of guests. This partition is often elaborately woven, usually in wool of black and white, while for the rugs placed on the ground dyed wool is used.

The women of the better-class Bedouins hold themselves above all manual labor. These, of course, are ignorant of the art of spinning and weaving, for it is all done by their slaves.

JOHN D. WHITING.
American Colony, Jerusalem.

All Foods Are There

16 Elements in Quaker Oats

Nature makes many foods, some rich in one element, some in another.

But in the oat she combines them all, in just the right proportions.

There are 16 elements in oats. Here science finds the perfectly-balanced food. One could live on oats alone, plus the fat in milk.

Here Nature stores a wealth of vim-food, to energize the user. And here she lavishes exquisite flavor to delight.

So the oat is to people like honey to the bee. Like the nut to the squirrel. It is all-in-all.

Quaker Oats

The Superlative Vim-Food

We get Nature's choicest oats, then discard two-thirds. That to get the queen oats only, rich in flavor and aroma.

Those big, plump grains—and those alone—are flaked for Quaker Oats.

That's the reason for this luscious flavor which has won the world to Quaker. It is known to people of every clime.

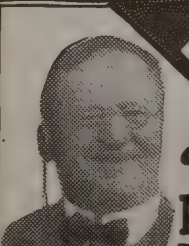
In cottage and palace, all the world over, this is the favorite brand. Yet asking for it brings it to you without extra price. Don't miss this premier dish.

10c and 25c per package
Except in Far West and South

An Aluminum Cooker for $1.00

Made to our order, extra large and heavy, to cook Quaker Oats in the ideal way. Send us our trademarks—the picture of the Quaker—cut from the fronts of five Quaker Oats packages, or an affidavit showing the purchase of five packages of Quaker Oats. Send $1.00 with the trademarks or affidavit, and this ideal cooker will be sent to you by parcel post prepaid. We require the trademarks or affidavit as assurance that you are a user of Quaker Oats. The trademarks have no redemption value. This offer applies to United States and Canada. We supply only one cooker to a family.

Address the Quaker Oats Co., 1708 Railway Exchange, Chicago



DEAF?

"I Now Hear Clearly"

You, Too, Can Hear!

Inasmuch as 260,000 users of the "ACOUSTICON" have had the same results from it as Mr. Garrett Brown, whose photo appears above, we feel perfectly safe in urging every deaf person, without a penny of expense, solely and entirely at our risk, to accept a thorough trial of the

1917 Acousticon

No Deposit FREE No Expense

All you need to do is to write saying that you are deaf and will try the "ACOUSTICON." The trial will not cost you one cent, for we even pay delivery charges.

WARNING! There is no good reason why everyone should not make as liberal a trial offer as we do, so do not send money for any instrument for the deaf until you have tried it.

The "ACOUSTICON" has improvements and patented features which cannot be duplicated, so no matter what you have tried in the past, send for your free trial of the "ACOUSTICON" today and convince yourself—you alone to decide. Address

GENERAL ACOUSTIC CO.. 1314 Candler Bldg., New York
Montreal, Que. Office, 621 New Birks Bldg.

LEARN THE SECRETS of Right Living and Right Thinking

What would you give to be the absolute master of yourself—to get up in the morning facing the day's problems with a light heart and the conviction that each day will be the most successful of your career? How often you have said to yourself, "I work hard but I don't seem to get ahead fast enough," and you have wondered why. Every one has faculties and reserve energies which, if properly used, would easily win for them undreamed-of successes. Some day health getting will be your most important business. Why not begin before too late?

The Davis System of Right Living and Right Thinking will show you how to get well and stay well, how to become thoroughly efficient, mentally and physically, how to make every day a success, to increase or decrease your weight and how to attain a useful, healthful, vigorous old age. It effectively removes chronic ailments and gives the apparently healthy man or woman greater energy, endurance and mind power.

This System is now offered in a series of easily mastered and personally directed lessons which you will enjoy practising and from which benefits are derived almost from the beginning. Governor Capper of Kansas says: "I am much pleased with your course in health and efficiency; it is one of the best things of the kind I have ever seen and I am sure it will be helpful to anyone who follows the advice and instruction given by you!"

The Davis System has proved invaluable to thousands of teachers, writers, bankers, physicians and other prominent men and women. If you will write to Virgil A. Davis, M.D., 216 Minor Bldg., Kansas City, Mo., he will send you FREE his very interesting booklet, "Supreme Living," which thoroughly explains his unique system. Send for this booklet today.

MARVEL FREE TRIAL
COMPLETE BATH OUTFIT HOT WATER
WE PAY FREIGHT
BIG BATH TUB

NO PLUMBING—MOVE ANYWHERE
The Thermotub, a combined bathtub and water heater, that provides every home with an outfit that gives all the bathing comforts of a modern bathroom. Requires no sewerage. Move it to any room. Full length tub. Plenty hot water in few minutes. Cost per bath very small. Write today for full information.
The National Home Equipment Co.
101 National Bldg. Detroit, Mich.

JUST DAVID By Eleanor H. Porter
Author of "Pollyanna"

Everyone who has read "Pollyanna" should read "Just David." He is as lovable as the heroine of the Glad Book. Mrs. Porter believes that the idea of the possibility of happiness should be held up to people, but she does not attempt to preach about it. She simply lets her characters speak.

"Just David" is not only a story of amazing popular appeal, but in its way a genuine masterpiece as well. Everyone who reads it has the same enthusiasm. David is one of those characters that seem too real to stay inside a book.

We will send a copy of "Just David," postpaid, to any present subscriber as a reward for sending us one yearly subscription accompanied by $2.00.

Or, we will renew your subscription to the Christian Herald for a year and send a copy of "Just David," postpaid, for $2.50.

Christian Herald, Bible House, New York, N.Y.

The War in Europe

Continued from page 111

Galatz from the south and captured the town of Vadeni on the railroad between Braila and Galatz.

This town is within about four miles of Galatz, but between it and that city runs the river Sereth, a most formidable obstacle to the Teutons, and one which will take some days to cross. The south bank of the Sereth, as far to the west as the confluence of the Buzeu with that river, appears to be firmly and completely in Teutonic hands, so that they are everywhere in this region up to the river.

The fighting continued severe near Vadeni, and on Wednesday the Russians succeeded in reoccupying that town, but were the next day driven out again. On the western end of the Sereth line, north of Focsani and in the mountain valleys of the Moldavian frontier, fighting was severe all the week, but no important changes of position resulted.

The mystery which has for some time surrounded the fate of three or four dozen steamers of various sizes and characters on the Atlantic, all of whom were overdue a longer or shorter time, bids fair soon to be completely dispelled.

Last Monday evening a Japanese steamer, the Hudson Maru, turned up at Pernambuco, Brazil, with a German prize crew and 237 men belonging to the crews of other vessels on board, which other vessels had been captured or sunk by a German commerce-raider on the high seas.

This raider, whose name is uncertain, apparently set out from a German port late in November, and, evading the British blockade in the North Sea, commenced operations in the North Atlantic early in December, and since then has moved steadily southward, destroying Allies' shipping as she went. The cables are somewhat contradictory as to the names of her victims, but from the admissions of the British admiralty and information from other sources which seems entitled to credence, it appears certain that the following ships have fallen victims:

British—Georgic, 10,077 tons; Mount Temple, 9,792 tons; Voltaire, 8,618 tons; Dramatist, 5,421 tons; Radnorshire, 4,302 tons; Netherby Hall, 4,461 tons; King George, 3,852 tons; Minich, 2,890 tons; St. Theodore, 4,992 tons, and Yarrowdale, 4,652 tons.

French—Bark Asuieres, 3,103 tons; bark Nantes, 2,679 tons.

Italian—San Giorgio, 6,392 tons. A tonnage of 68,723.

There are reasons to believe, however, that the roll of victims is not complete and that it will be more or less largely added to in the near future. As a result of this raid, insurance on vessels to South American ports has jumped to 10 per cent. A dispatch from Berlin on January 19 stated that the steamer Yarrowdale had entered a German port under command of a prize crew on December 31. She carried with her into port 469 prisoners, the crews of one Norwegian and seven British steamers captured by the German auxiliary cruiser in the Atlantic Ocean. Three of the vessels sunk were armed British merchantmen. The dispatch stated that the bringing in of the Yarrowdale had been kept secret for military reasons until the British admiralty announcement of January 17. The raider is reported to be operating under strict orders to provide complete safety for the crews of all intercepted vessels and latest reports indicate that no lives have been lost through the operations of this commerce raider. The sea rover is said to have armed and manned the British steamer St. Theodore as a sea raider.

Young People's Topics for February 11

Continuing the Work that Lincoln Began

Epworth League Topic. Ps. 68 : 31; Rom. 10 : 12–15; Gal. 3 : 28; Luke 10 : 30–35

LINCOLN'S great work was the restoration of the Union. Feeling that he was the instrument of God's will, Lincoln moved only when, after prayer, he felt that the thing he contemplated was the thing God willed. He knew that the union could not exist half slave and half free, but he saw in the abolition of slavery only a part of the remedy for disunion. Lincoln became the great emancipator, but, through four years of bitter struggle, he was the prophet of a more perfect union. Never at any time did he lose sight of this object.

The genius of America is liberty to all men and equality among all men in citizenship and opportunity. The African negro had come to this country under duress; he had been denied liberty and education. When set free he faced the opportunities of freedom with almost no equipment that would enable him to turn these opportunities to his own advantage. He needed help. In 1865 the South was crushed. She needed help herself and could do nothing for these former slaves, so suddenly turned citizens. It was then that the Northern churches saw and entered the open door to a great opportunity for Christian statesmanship, and the work for the Freedmen began. Today nearly 500 schools, in whole or in part supported by the churches, North and South, white and colored, are forging, from the sterling material of these sons and daughters of Africa, citizens as reliable, as capable, as true and as faithful as the nation owns.

There is still much to do toward a more perfect union. Since 1865 men of every color, creed and race have entered the open doors of this land of liberty. Industrial slavery is not unknown in the land that in 1863 abolished involuntary servitude. Equality of opportunity is even now more a phrase than a fact. The Americanism of most of us is local rather than national, exclusive rather than inclusive. If we would complete the work of Lincoln, we must be willing to beat down every barrier of race and section, of pride and birth, ready to place the Union first, ready, if need be to die, for actual liberty, for real equality, for untrammeled opportunity for all; ready to see God's hand and to work his will in the making of a new, strong, unified, Christian America.

Christian Confession

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Luke 19 : 1–10

CONFESSION, open, public, audible confession of allegiance to Christ is one of the fundamentals of Christian doctrine. Christ himself said, "Whosoever shall confess me before men, him shall the Son of man confess before the angels of God." And Paul says in Rom. 10 : 10, "With the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Jesus Christ, who came to seek and to save that which was lost, who died on Calvary that you and I might live eternally, demands of us that, having benefited by his death and passion, we shall stand up before the world and declare our faith in and our fealty to him. It is a reasonable demand.

Just now the church is discussing the advisability of returning to the old requirement in evangelistic meetings of requiring each convert to stand, declare his faith, and acknowledge the work of grace in his heart. It is strongly felt that the signing of cards after a hurried passage down a sawdust trail is not an acceptable confession or one that impresses the signer as a definite and final severing of the bonds of sin. In the early church each believer declared his faith before baptism, and in baptism the believer publicly acknowledged salvation. Baptism is therefore a form of confession, but it is not a substitute for verbal confession. A holy life, a forgiving and helpful spirit, self-denial for the good of others, unselfish service, all of these evidence the work of Christ in our lives and each of them is convincing evidence in support of our spoken confession. To some of us audible statement in public seems almost impossible, yet we must not forget that we are promised the help of God's Spirit when we try to do his will, and he is mighty who has promised.

A Ballot for You to Vote

IN order that we may be better able to render service of the most satisfactory kind to every member of the great Christian Herald Family, we ask all of our friends to read the list below, which shows the present departments in the paper, and to indicate their personal choice of these departments by marking them, in ink or pencil, in the order of preference, 1, 2, 3, 4, etc. This will be a very great help to the editors and publishers. If there is any one of the departments in which you have little or no interest, indicate this frankly by drawing a line through it.

One thing more we would beg you not to overlook. It is that you should jot down, in as few words as possible, any new feature which you believe would be attractive and helpful to the paper during the current year.

When you have gone over the list, voting on each according to individual preference, and putting down your new suggestions, cut it out and mail it to the Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

Sunday School Lesson
The Weekly Sermon
Mr. Arnoux's War Articles
Margaret Sangster's Articles
Our Mail-Bag
Merrry Moments
Young People's Topics
Articles on Prophetic Fulfilment
Frank Carpenter's Letters
The Widows and Orphans Fund
Daily Meditation
Editorial Page
Bible and Newspaper
Week in the World's News
The Prayer League
The Serial Story
Missionary Articles
Cover Page Pictures
Financial Department
Short Stories Complete
Maynard Owen Williams's Letters from Japan

What new features would you suggest to make the paper more interesting? . . . .

. . . .

. . . .

Paint Without Oil

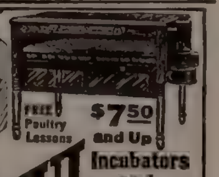
Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

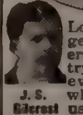
A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof, sanitary and durable for outside or inside painting. It is the cement principle applied to paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manufacturer, 107 North Street, Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can save a good many dollars. Write today.

Get Chicks That Live and Grow



FREE Poultry Lessons
$7.50 and Up
Incubators and Broodors



Learn why the biggest money makers in the poultry business everywhere use
J. S. Gilcrest
SUCCESSFUL

23 years' experience. Cabinet-made—scientifically ventilated. Hot water heating plant. Write for Free Catalog—ask about poultry and eggs, and "Successful" Grain Sprouters. Famous booklet, "Proper Care and Feeding of Chicks, Ducks and Turkeys," 10 cents.

J. S. Gilcrest, President and General Manager
DES MOINES INCUBATOR CO 389 Second St., Des Moines, Ia.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

THIS week is thankful week. The letters that have come to the editor's desk make the Prayer League a League of Praise. The one hundredth Psalm insistently suggests itself, and we read it over again and again. Who should be more ready to "make a joyful noise unto the Lord," and who should more certainly "enter into his gates with thanksgiving and into his courts with praise" than he who, through prevailing prayer, has entered into the holy of holies, he who has touched hands with the infinite Father in the secret place of prayer?

By its very nature prayer must eventuate in praise. This law is well exemplified by the experience of the League. Hearts have been uplifted that were bowed down, courage has come in place of despair, guidance has been given where all was dark and where no way appeared, and those thus blessed have returned to praise the Father and to bless God for his goodness.

A Friend in Texas writes: "I wish to send grateful acknowledgment for answered prayer. The request was sent that my brother might secure employment along the lines he had been trained for. He had been seeking employment for months and was very much discouraged. In less than two weeks he had secured the best position he has ever held. I gladly send acknowledgment, that some other discouraged one may be brought to have renewed faith in the efficacy of prayer."

G. L. is grateful to the League for its prayers, which she is certain strengthened her sister and brought her safely through a serious operation to rapid recovery.

Mrs. A. G. P. says: "I do believe your prayers have been answered. My son has given up the drug habit and is free." She asks prayers that he may be kept.

W. H. L. has received from a debtor a sum of money due him but uncollectable through legal means. He praises God for this wonderful answer to prayer and asks us to pray that he may be guided in the use of the income from the new investment into which he has put this money.

Mrs. A. R. C. says: "I am writing my first letter this year to thank God for answered prayers." She is enjoying improved health, and young people for whom she has been praying have been brought closer to Christ and inspired with greater zeal for his service.

Miss E. E. B. thanks God for restored health and for the wiping away of misunderstandings.

F. S. G. also thanks God for restored health, because with renewed vigor of body he has been enabled to meet and conquer some financial problems that were pressing him sorely.

Mrs. J. W. S. thanks God for answered prayer.

J. W. asks prayer that she may be enabled to live nearer to God and that her husband and children may also experience a deeper work of grace. Also that her sister, working in a city away from her own people and alone, may keep her heart stayed on Christ and that her father, living in a Masonic home, may be kept and comforted.

Sister A. S. M. is happy in the restoration of her son's mind, for which the League has been praying. Now she prays, and we will pray with her, that he may yield his heart to God and become a follower of Jesus.

Mrs. H. A. W. tells of a revival, for which she had asked our prayers, in Boone, Iowa, in which five hundred souls were saved. She asks prayer that her husband, who is still in sin, may be saved.

Mrs. H. H. J. feels that she was saved by prayer and kept by God's grace in a serious operation from which she recovered after the physician in attendance had given her up. She thanks the Great Physician for restoration to health and family, and now she asks the League to pray that revival meetings now in progress may be blessed with an outpouring of the Holy Spirit.

Mrs. M. C. asks prayer that she may be delivered from the preying torment of baseless jealousy which is destroying her peace of mind, undermining her health and ruining the happiness of her married life.

C. G. asks prayer that her husband may be saved from drink and from sin. She asks also that the perfect union of their home, now broken by his sin, may be restored for the sake of the five children still at home.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Lebanon, Ore.; Sanger, Calif.; Walker, Minn.; Madison, Tenn.; Tenino and Kent, Wash.; Poage Lane, W. Va.; Atwater, N. Y.; Orland, Ill.; Carter, Mont.; Westline, Pa.; Anderson, Ind.; Salinsville, Ohio; Athens, Ohio (prayer for a great revival at Hebbardsville Methodist Church); Indianapolis, Ind. (in the Methodist Church); Louisville, Ohio (that many may be saved during revival and the church stand more firmly); Macomb, Ill. (pray for an outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the work); Irvington, Ala. (that many may join the new Presbyterian Church there).

S. E. P. and Mrs. I. W. ask prayer that their sons' minds may be restored; four friends ask prayer that their minds may be strengthened; Miss L. H. N. asks prayer that brother's mind, Rev. D. R. A. that daughter's mind, Mrs. M. W. that daughter-in-law's mind may be restored.

Miss L. J. B. asks prayer that cataracts may be removed from eyes and sight restored; Mrs. J. C. G., that eye may be healed; Mrs. H. W. Y. asks prayer that mother's sight may be restored; nine friends ask prayer for restoration or strengthening of sight for other relatives, friends or themselves.

Twenty-nine friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace and assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Six parents ask prayer that their sons may be delivered from the liquor habit; two wives, their husbands: six readers, that friends or relatives may be delivered from the habit.

Eighteen parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; nine wives, their husbands; Mrs. H. W. B. asks prayer that a son may be saved and return to his mother; thirty-two readers ask prayer for the conversion of relatives or friends.

Five readers ask prayer for special spiritual blessing for others.

Fifty-one ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including Miss R. R., that a mother may be cured of cancer; Mrs. E. C. S. asks prayer that a friend may be cured of cancer; thirty-eight ask healing for themselves, including Mrs. L. W., who asks prayer for strength to pass safely through an operation. Eleven friends ask prayer for restoration of hearing for themselves or others.

Eighteen ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Thirty-five friends ask prayer for the granting of various desires and needs.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

Mrs. E. E. H., Hallstead, Pa.; H. B. A., New Lisbon, N. J.; Mrs. G. O. S., Emporium, Pa.; Mrs. W. H. P., Suffield, Conn.; Mrs. A. M., Oneco, Fla.; Mrs. M. E. Y., Winslow, Ark.; A. R. E., Seibert, Colo.; Mrs. M. D. H., Norris City, Ill.; J. B. H., Lancaster, Pa.; Mrs. E. R., Harris, Mo.; Mrs. I. N. T., Salinsville, Ohio; Mrs. E. M. R., Excelsior Springs, Mo.; A. M. C., Woodstock, Va.; Mrs. M. B., Russell, Mont.

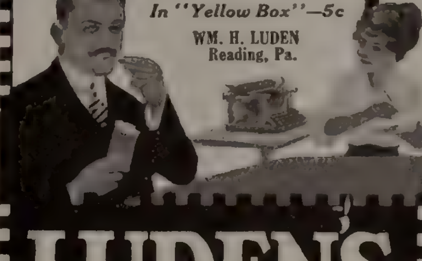
◆

Called Higher

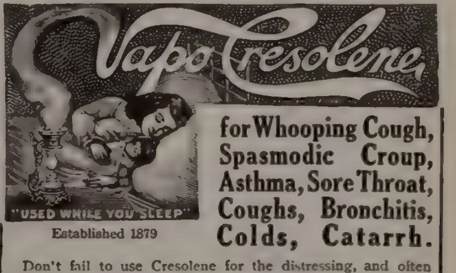
J. L. Cooper, Selin's Grove, Pa., 75 years; Mr. Fasold, Sunbury, Pa.; J. M. Cory, Yates City, Ill., 88 years; Henry Robins, Sunbury, Pa., 84 years; Sylvester Hartson, West Branch, N. Y., 78 years; Mrs. S. F. Mifflin, Beach Haven, Pa., 72 years (subscriber for many years); Miss Catherine McGehan, Niles, Ohio; Rev. Charles Vahlsing, Los Angeles, Calif., 69 years; James Croggon, Washington, D. C.; Mrs. F. A. Krouse, Mound City, Kan., 86 years; Jessie T. Benson, New York City; James Creighton, Marrowville, Kan., 84 years.

Mrs. D. R. Anderson, Milwaukee, Wis.; Mrs. M. G. Jenkins, Mineola, Texas, 69 years; Mrs. Francis J. Alstott, Holly, Colo., 72 years; Mrs. Jane Huttleston, Niagara Co., N. Y., 84 years; Mrs. Phœbe F. Finnie, Oxford, Fla., 93 years; Mrs. James McDonnell, Archie, Mo., 63 years; Mrs. Margaret M. McCurdy, Coleman, Okla., 72 years; Mrs. Annette H. Watson, Ann Arbor, Mich., 80 years; Roger S. Crosier, Bridgeton, N. J., 73 years; Mrs. L. M. Blanchard, Edgewood, Iowa, 73 years; Mrs. Louisa Lemon, Keyser, W. Va., 79 years.

Only $1241
(Ready to Erect)
OUR famous Winsom. Sent all material cut—ready to put on the foundation. No wasteful sawing of lumber on the ground or in the carpenter shop. Nothing to pay for except what is actually used—a big saving on labor cost. Your carpenter can begin erecting the home at once. That's where you save time, also. You can be in your new home a month or two months sooner than by the old way of building. Get information. Send coupon below.
The Sterling System of Home Building
Saved $700
"I saved $700 over estimate of usual cost."—L. C. W., Penn.
"I will save between $400 and $500—D. G., Michigan.
"Saved at least $450."—P. J. J., Penna.
"Saved at least $600."—C. D., New York.
"I saved about $300."—C. E. H., Iowa.
"Saved between $300 and $400."—O. C. D., Ohio.
Find out about the Sterling Ready Cut System of home building. The modern way—the way that saves you money on material and on labor and saves your time. The system that gives you the best designs of the ablest architects without extra cost. Do not build until you see what a big saving you can make by the Sterling System. Compare the Sterling System which saws the material to exactness with automatic machines with the old handsaw method with all its mistakes (paid for by you.) Get the facts. Then decide. We will gladly tell you all about this modern way of building. Let people who have bought Sterling homes tell you of the savings they made. (See testimonials in this ad. These names and others furnished on request.) Get this information without fail before you contract for a home. Also learn how we extend credit if you want it. Send the coupon now.
Mail the Coupon For Our Plan Book
Get our Book of Sterling Homes. A wonderful collection of designs. Taken from actual photographs. Also floor plans and specifications. Shows you just what you get in a Sterling home—and what you ought to get whatever way you build. Filled with valuable information. Gives you hundreds of suggestions, ideas and facts about home building. Send for it.
Write NOW! Don't delay on this. Even if you will not build until Spring, get this book and post yourself while you have leisure time to go into this matter. Be ready when the time comes to decide just what is best in design, arrangement and price. Mail the coupon and ten cents (to pay for postage and wrapping.)
International Mill & Timber Co., Dept. 2491 Bay City, Mich.
International Mill & Timber Co.
Dept. 2491 Bay City, Mich.
I want all the information I can get on building, especially if it will save me money. Send your book "The Sterling System of Home Building". I enclose 10c for postage and wrapping.
Name ....
Address ....

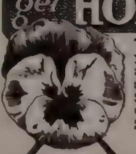


LUDEN'S Relieve the Strain on the Voice
Big aid to singers, speakers, teachers, preachers, salesmen. Stop throat tickle—clear the head.
In "Yellow Box"—5c
WM. H. LUDEN
Reading, Pa.
LUDEN'S MENTHOL CANDY COUGH DROPS



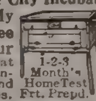
Vapo-Cresolene
"USED WHILE YOU SLEEP"
Established 1879
for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Catarrh.
Don't fail to use Cresolene for the distressing, and often fatal affections for which it is recommended.
It is a simple, safe, effective and drugless treatment.
Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough and relieves Spasmodic Croup at once.
In asthma it shortens the attack and ensures comfortable repose.
The air carrying the antiseptic vapor inspired with every breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat, and stops the cough, assuring restful nights.
Cresolene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Diphtheria.
Cresolene's best recommendation is its 37 years of successful use. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.
For Sale by Druggists
Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your Druggist or from us 10c in stamps.
THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO. 62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

Save Money
Quick Shipment
direct from manufacturers. Highest quality warm air furnace at wholesale price. Write for catalog filled with helpful hints on home heating and telling how you can save money on this powerful heating plant. One register—easy to install. We pay freight. Cash or easy payments
Write for Catalog No. 927
KALAMAZOO STOVE CO.
Manufacturers
Kalamazoo, Mich.
"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"
Trade Mark Registered



get HOLCO Seed Book
Tells you what and how to plant in your vegetable and flower garden and when to plant it. Makes crops sure and dependable.
Send 10c. for one package each of Giant Pansy and Radish Seeds and get the book FREE
THE HOLMES-LETHERMAN SEED CO.
232 N Cleveland Ave., Canton, O.

FOR IRRITATED THROAT
BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES
Used by speakers and singers for 60 years.
NEW 10c BOX FITS THE POCKET
Regular Sizes 25c, 50c, $1. At Druggists.
JOHN I. BROWN & SON, Boston, Mass.



Big Money In Poultry
My Big Free Poultry Book, "Hatching Facts" tells how you can make money raising chickens—all about My World's Champion Belle City Incubator and Brooder—My Low Price—My 10-Year Money-Back Guarantee and My $1000 Gold Offers. Your chance to earn extra money. Learn what this means to you before you buy an incubator. Sales to date, 524000. Send for this book today. Jim Rohan, Pres.
1-2-3 Month's HomeTest Frt. Prepd.
Belle City Incubator Co., Box 127 Racine, Wis.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES For 50 yrs. Standard Relief for Asthma (Inhalation) All Druggists; or by mail, 35c.
STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.

Miss Ruth M. Tyndall

Miss Myrtle Elliott

E. L. Bugbee

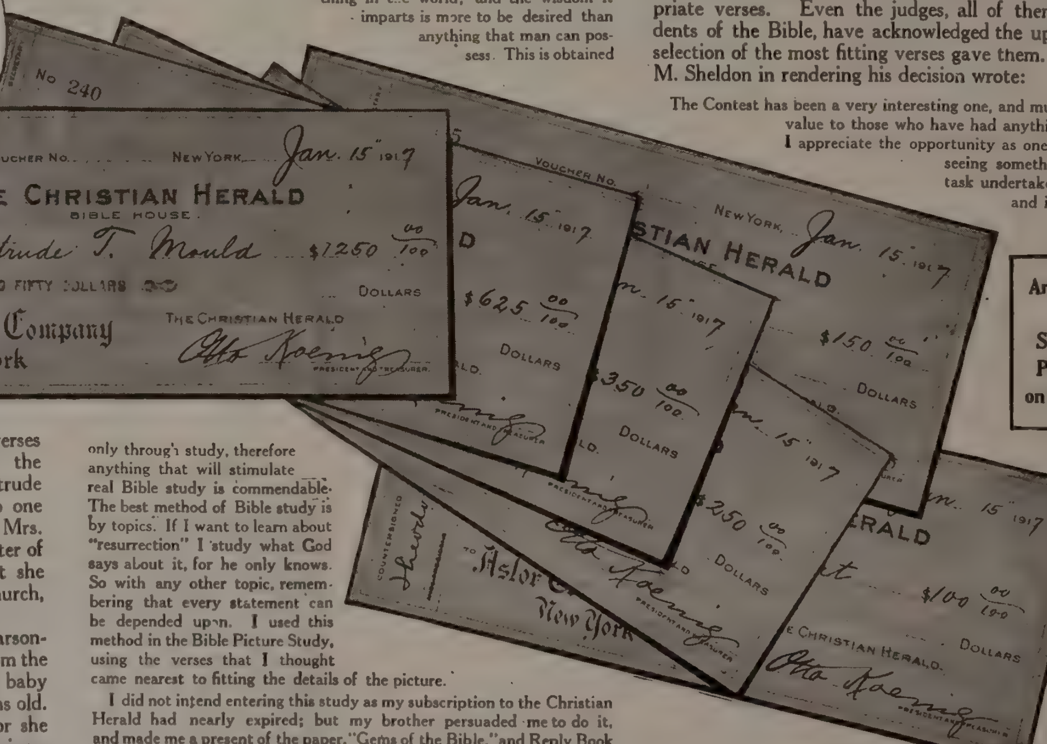
Ida Goeldner

Robert A.Stewart

A TALK WITH THE WINNERS OF THE FIRST BIBLE PICTURE STUDY

WELL, the winners in the Christian Herald First Bible Picture Study have been announced, and all of the 63,000 contestants now know whether or not they have been successful. It has been a wonderful source of inspiration and a wonderful spur to the study of the Bible. Just think of it! Sixty-three thousand families, over a quarter of a million persons, reading two thousand Bible verses every week for twenty weeks. We have had so many friends write us that they have been less attracted by the monetary prizes than by the desire to improve their knowledge of the Bible. Certainly, hundreds if not thousands of people have been induced to read it and study it when they might not have been so induced by any other means.

Mrs. Gertrude T. Mould



No 240

VOUCHER NO. ... NEW YORK Jan. 15 1917

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
BIBLE HOUSE

PAY TO THE ORDER OF Gertrude T. Mould $1250 00/100

TWELVE HUNDRED FIFTY DOLLARS DOLLARS

TO Astor Trust Company
New York

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Otto Koenig
PRESIDENT AND TREASURER

COUNTERSIGNED Theodore Waters

Jan. 15 1917
$625 00/100
DOLLARS
$350 00/100
DOLLARS
$250 00/100
DOLLARS
$150 00/100
DOLLARS
$100 00/100
DOLLARS
CHRISTIAN HERALD
NEW YORK, Jan. 15 1917
Astor Trust Company
New York
Otto Koenig

First Prize Winner Weeps with Pride

OF course everybody could not win but it was a joy to announce to those who did win the fact that they had been successful in selecting the most fitting verses for the pictures. For instance, one of the staff of the Christian Herald carried the good news to Mrs. Gertrude T. Mould of Little Falls, N. J. Now, personally, no one connected with the Christian Herald had ever met Mrs. Mould before; and what was the surprise of the writer of this article who carried the news to her to find that she lived in a quaint little parsonage beside a country church, and that her husband was the pastor thereof.

The writer was ushered into the living room of the parsonage by Mrs. Mould, who was glad to meet any one from the Christian Herald. In one corner of the room was a baby carriage and in it a tiny bit of humanity just two months old. It was easy to see where Mrs. Mould's heart was, for she called attention to the baby before she thought of the business of the moment. And when that was mentioned, did she give vent to any joyous exuberance? No, she burst into tears, and thanked God for being vouchsafed the opportunity not to win the money, mind you, but of being called first in her capacity for fitting Bible verses to pictures. Asked if she had any particular idea for the use of the money, she looked towards her baby and declared that one tithe should go for the work of the Kingdom; the rest invested for baby's future.

Second Winner Gives Tithe to Church

MISS RUTH M. TYNDALL, who won second prize, is the teacher of an Intermediate Bible class in the People's Tabernacle, an institutional church on the upper East Side of New York. Like Mrs. Mould, she gave way to no exuberance; in fact, she was without words. The very news seemed to leave her bereft of speech. Her father talked for her most of the time. She also had decided that if she won a prize one-tenth should be given to the endowment fund of the church. Miss Tyndall has always been interested in church work but takes especial interest in that of the Sunday school.

Third Reward Will Pay for Nursing Course

MISS MYRTLE ELLIOTT, who won third prize, is a nurse in the State Hospital at Columbus, Ohio. The good news was flashed to Miss Elliott by telegraph. She replied immediately, stating that it has been her high ambition to take a post-graduate course in nursing. "While I am a registered nurse," said Miss Elliott, "I feel like going further. There is so much we can do for humanity if we are efficient. My mother has taken the Christian Herald for a long time, and a friend at the hospital asked me if I meant to go in for the Bible Picture Study. So I did. I entered it with a high hope to win. I derived much benefit from the study, and if I had not won one thing I would still feel amply repaid."

Fourth Prize Will Repair Flood Damage

THE winner of the fourth prize, Mr. Ervin L. Bugbee of Emporia, Kan., wrote as follows:

> Your telegram notifying me of winning the fourth prize in the Bible Picture Study was received. I have been a Bible student for twenty years, and believe it to be God's revelation of himself to man. It is not only the greatest book in the world, but the greatest thing in the world; and the wisdom it imparts is more to be desired than anything that man can possess. This is obtained only through study, therefore anything that will stimulate real Bible study is commendable. The best method of Bible study is by topics. If I want to learn about "resurrection" I study what God says about it, for he only knows. So with any other topic, remembering that every statement can be depended upon. I used this method in the Bible Picture Study, using the verses that I thought came nearest to fitting the details of the picture.
>
> I did not intend entering this study as my subscription to the Christian Herald had nearly expired; but my brother persuaded me to do it, and made me a present of the paper, "Gems of the Bible," and Reply Book on condition that I enter. I am a farmer by occupation, and most of the time spent in this study was during the wet weather and floods of last summer, which destroyed most of the crops on the river bottoms in this vicinity, so the money will be very acceptable. Prov. 3 : 5, 6, "Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. In all thy ways acknowledge him, and he shall direct thy paths," can be depended upon even in Bible Picture Study.

Fifth Award Delights a Governess

MISS IDA GOELDNER, of Newark, N. J., who won fifth prize, is another earnest worker who is much interested in Bible Study. She expressed herself as delighted with the result of her efforts. She is a governess, and the money won by her will prove very acceptable indeed.

Sixth Winner Makes a Discovery

ROBERT A. STEWART, of Pittsburg, won sixth prize. He writes that the Christian Herald Bible Study was brought to his attention by one of his friends. He says:

> I took a hand at it and am very glad I did so. One of the results of this study was to be deeply impressed by the grandeur as well as beauty of Habakkuk's writing. I liked the several selections that were taken from Habakkuk, especially the verse, "The mountains saw thee, and they trembled; the overflowing of the waters passed by; the deep uttered his voice, and lifted up his hands on high." This prompted me to look up the whole chapter, and also after reading it resulted in my committing the entire chapter to memory. I find myself often wondering about Habakkuk, whether he was large or small, whether rich or poor, and if the latter and he were living today I would invite him to my house and treat him to the best I had, even though that might not be much. A man has to write something that has great merit that will stand through twenty-five hundred years.
>
> I will probably use my money in paying off a small mortgage that now rests on the home place.

Judges Feel Work Well Repaid

AND so on, down the list of winners. Every one with whom we have communicated seems to have been inspired less by the idea of winning the money than by the study of the great thoughts which were contained in "Gems from the Bible." So many of our readers have written us that the weekly arrival of the Christian Herald was a matter of great interest to those who participated, as each contestant was anxious to immediately see the new pictures and to take up at once the pleasure of finding the appropriate verses. Even the judges, all of them veteran students of the Bible, have acknowledged the uplift which the selection of the most fitting verses gave them. Rev. Charles M. Sheldon in rendering his decision wrote:

> The Contest has been a very interesting one, and must prove of great value to those who have had anything to do with it. I appreciate the opportunity as one of the judges of seeing something of the great task undertaken by the Herald and its friends.

Announcement of the Second Bible Picture Study on opposite page

Dr. Wilbert W. White was also struck by the greatness of the undertaking when he wrote:

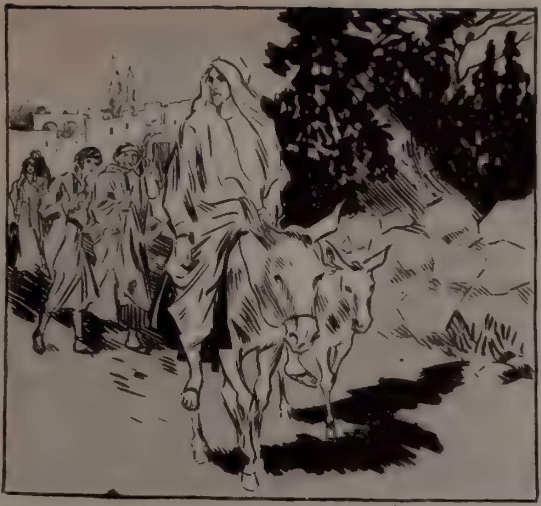
> I am impressed anew by the magnitude of the task you have on.

John Wanamaker wrote:

> I feel highly honored in being selected as one of the judges in this great Study which you have conducted, in which so many thousands have participated, and which cannot fail to have a permanent result to all who have been interested in it in storing up the Word of God in their hearts.

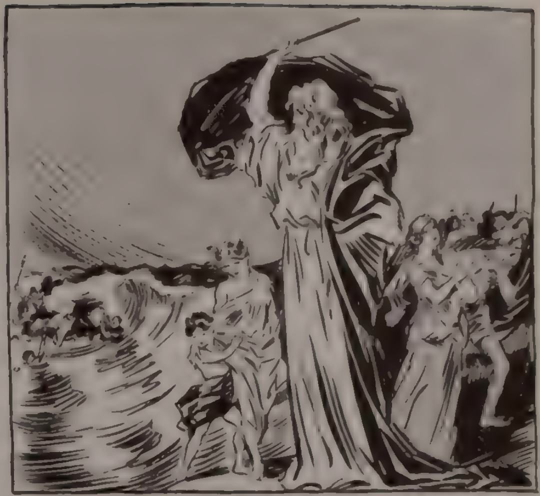
More Than Eight Million Verses Examined

SOME idea of the magnitude of the task will be understood when we state that 9,727 different verses were submitted for sixty pictures. The lowest number submitted for any one picture was 84; the greatest number for any one picture was 466 for picture No. 51. From two to three hundred different answers were submitted for many pictures. All told, the number of verses examined, including duplicates, was considerably over 8,000,000. All of these had to be sorted, arranged for each picture and then given to the judges for decision. It is no wonder that the decisions were delayed as long as they were. Rather is it wonderful that the result is announced in as short a time as it has been.



Picture No. 5

SECOND BIBLE PICTURE STUDY



Picture No. 6

A Feast of Pleasure—A Mint of Value

MENTAL AND SPIRITUAL REWARDS

HAVE YOU joined in this enjoyable and lucrative pastime? In addition to spiritual quickening and enlightenment, $5,628 in cash rewards will be given to those sending us the greatest number of best answers.

Isn't it pleasing to think that you do not need to be a Bible scholar to take part in this Study? It is open to all—young and old—and so simple that any one can understand it and get great benefit—spiritual, educational and monetary—from it.

Examine the two pictures above (Nos. 5 and 6) carefully. How interesting they are! Surely they must recall to you scenes from the Old or New Testament. Possibly you can quote from memory one or two verses applying to them. If not, do not be discouraged, for the book "Pearls from the Bible," which we will send to you in accordance with our offers, contains every verse that will be used in our Study.

Should you find more than one verse applicable, you may submit as many as five verses for one picture in the "Answer Book" included in the Bible Picture Study Outfit.

You will find this Study exceedingly fascinating. The sooner you begin, the more enjoyment you will have. So why not start now?

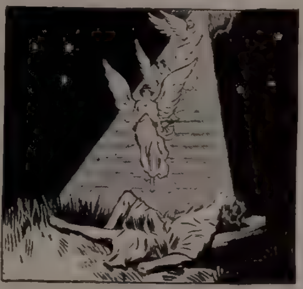
OBJECT LESSON PICTURE

Here the attractive plan of the Bible Picture Study is made plain by a single illustration.

Look carefully at the picture below. Bear in mind the fact that it illustrates the meaning of some verse or verses from the Bible.

Can you recall any such verse or verses? Sometimes a long-obscured Bible "pearl" is in this beautiful way revealed again without making it necessary to consult the Bible.

Let us consider these verses, however, and determine which is best fitted to the picture:



And he said, Hear thou therefore the word of the Lord: I saw the Lord sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left. I Kings 22 : 19.

And he dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven; and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it. Gen. 28 : 12.

How much then is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days. Matt. 12 : 12.

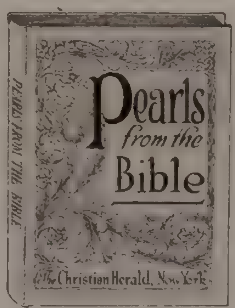
For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. James 1 : 20.

It is apparent that the second verse is best suited to the picture. The picture makes this verse seem more real, doesn't it? And the verse brings out more forcibly the meaning of the picture.

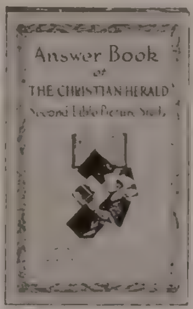
Now, consider for a moment the entertaining and educating value that you can receive by fitting Scriptural verses to sixty such pictures. This is exactly what the Second Bible Picture Study involves. As a means of enjoyment, it is a pastime par excellence; and as you have seen by this single example it can make the Bible more real, a more constant factor in your life and in the life of every man, woman or child who participates in the Study. Everyone may compete without any charge whatever, too—as you may see for yourself by sending for the Rules, which give detailed explanation of this and every other feature of the Study.

THE COMPLETE OUTFIT

Below is shown "Pearls from the Bible," the handy compilation of 2,000 Bible verses, from among which you will choose those that best fit the pictures. The illustration is much reduced—the book is coat-pocket size; the type is clear and easy to read.



Below is a small illustration of the Answer Book, in which you can write and submit your selected verses. The Answer Book is as large as a copy book, so you'll have plenty of room for writing. It contains the Rules and other information also.



"Pearls from the Bible," the Answer Book and all pictures which have appeared up to the time you start, constitute the complete Outfit given with the Christian Herald as explained in our offers below.

How to Obtain the Outfit

Can You Send a Subscription for an Acquaintance?

You may obtain the Bible Picture Study Outfit, consisting of "Pearls from the Bible," the Rules and "Answer Book" as a free premium if you obtain and send to us a new six months' subscription of another person at $1.00. (Use Coupon No. 1.)

Or you may renew your own subscription now, to run for one year from the time to which it is already paid, and receive the Bible Picture Study Outfit, for $2.35. (Use Coupon No. 2.)

Coupon No. 1

FOR A NEW SIX MONTHS' SUBSCRIPTION

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City

Gentlemen: For the $1.00 enclosed send the Christian Herald to the following new subscriber for 6 months:

Name...

Address..

....

For securing this new subscription send Outfit to...........

Name...

Address..

....

1 31 17

1000 CASH REWARDS

First	$1,000.00 in Gold
Second	800.00 in Gold
Third	600.00 in Gold
Fourth	400.00 in Gold

ALSO 996 OTHER CASH REWARDS

All Aggregating $5,628.00

In the event of a tie for any reward, the full reward tied for will be paid each tying participant.

"Pearls from the Bible" a New Compilation

Those who have remembrance of our First Bible Study may ask themselves whether Pearls from the Bible, the book of Bible verses we offer you in this Second Bible Picture Study, is similar to "Gems from the Bible," which was used in the first competition.

Pearls from the Bible is not simply a collection of Bible verses, as was the book issued in the former Study, but a careful grouping of promises, precepts and prophecies. Gems from the Bible is useless in this Second Study. Pearls from the Bible is the only compilation of the 2,000 Bible verses from which participants will make their selections in the Second Bible Picture Study.

Coupon No. 2

FOR RENEWAL SUBSCRIPTION

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York City

Gentlemen: Please renew my subscription to the Christian Herald for one year from the date to which it is now paid, and also send me the Bible Picture Study Outfit for amount of $2.35 enclosed.

Name...

Address..

....

1 31 17

Correspondence

Bible Study

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."
2 Timothy, 2:15

Correspondence Study Has Been Demonstrated as a Most Efficient Educational Method

The Moody Bible Institute has a fully equipped department exclusively devoted to teaching by correspondence.

Our aim is for careful business administration, most efficient teaching, and courteous attention to all inquirers and students.

Our courses are thoroughly tested and increasingly popular. Notwithstanding the world war, which has affected our work in many parts of the world, the absorption of the people in the prosperous business conditions in our country, and the opposition of destructive criticism, large gains were made last year over any previous year. Our courses will satisfy your needs.

We Offer These Eight Courses

Synthetic Bible Study
—a fascinating study of the contents of the whole Bible, "really in a class by itself."

Practical Christian Work
—for soul winners and workers in exceptional forms of Christian service.

Bible Doctrine
—a biblical course in the great doctrines of the Christian faith.

Bible Chapter Summary
—a unique method of becoming acquainted with every chapter in the Bible.

Introductory Bible Course
—true to its name.

Evangelism
—nothing in modern evangelism overlooked.

Christian Evidences
—an old subject brought up to date.

THE SCOFIELD BIBLE CORRESPONDENCE COURSE
—a scholarly, comprehensive, tested for a quarter of a century, and taken already by ten thousand students, is still presented as the most comprehensive course in Bible study ever offered by correspondence.

Write For Full Particulars to
The Moody Bible Institute
153-163 Institute Place Dept. F-8 Chicago, Illinois

101 Samples of Beautiful Wall Paper FREE

IN our 1917 Wall-Paper Book—filled from cover to cover with hundreds of offers that will help you to radically reduce the cost of wall papering your home. Send for book of samples today. Satisfaction guaranteed or money back.

Address House Nearest You Montgomery Ward & Co. Dept. A169
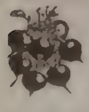
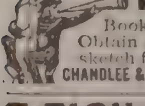
(Satisfaction Guaranteed or Your Money Back)
NEW YORK CHICAGO KANSAS CITY FT. WORTH PORTLAND, ORE.



SAMPLE OUR SEED

Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c. One packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Earliest Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce, 10c to new customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG FREE.
C. N. Robinson & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore, Md.



Patent Your Ideas!

Books "What to Invent" and "How to Obtain a Patent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report as to patentability.
CHANDLEE & CHANDLEE 1164 F Street, Washington, D. C.

HIGH-VALUE PATENTS

—the ONLY kind Wanted and BOUGHT by Manufacturers. Send 8c postage for new book of Extraordinary Interest to Inventors
R. S. & A. B. LACEY 13 Barrister Building, Washington, D. C.

The Chinese Woolflower

introduced by us three years ago is now acknowledged to be the greatest new garden annual. It is a success everywhere, plants growing 2 to 3 feet, a pyramid of color, its many branches bearing great balls of wool-like substance and most intense crimson scarlet. Flowers develop in June and none fade before frost, ever brilliant and showy beyond belief. Seed per pkt. 10 cts., 3 for 25 cts.

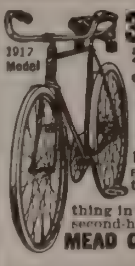
New Mastodon Pansies. For immense size, wonderful colors and vigor they are marvels. Seed 10 cts. per pkt., 3 for 25 cts.

Everblooming Sweet William, a startling novelty, blooming in 60 days from seed, continuing all the season, and every season being hardy. Flowers large, colors exquisite—pkt. 10 cts.

These 3 great Novelties, with two more (5) for only 20 cts. See Catalog for colored plates, culture, etc.

Our Big Catalog of Flower and Veg. Seeds, Bulbs, Plants and rare new fruits free. We are the largest growers in the world of Gladiolus, Cannas, Dahlias, Lilies, Iris, etc.

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Inc., Floral Park, N. Y.



30 DAYS FREE TRIAL

and freight prepaid on the new 1917 "RANGER" bicycle. Write at once for our big catalog and special offer.

Improved Models, prices reduced. Extraordinary new offers. You cannot afford to buy without getting our latest propositions. WRITE TODAY.

Boys, be a "Rider Agent" and make big money taking orders for bicycles and supplies. Get our liberal terms on a sample to introduce the new "RANGER."

TIRES, equipment, sundries and everything in the bicycle line half usual prices. A few second-hand bicycles $3 to $8 to clear.

MEAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. F-71, CHICAGO

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it, write
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

The Reformation Celebration

THE New York Reformation Quadricentenary Committee, organized by the Lutheran Society, has opened permanent headquarters in the Fifth Avenue Building, 200 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y., Rev. O. H. Pannkoke in charge. The committee is organizing a great general recognition of the Four Hundredth Anniversary of the Reformation. The celebration will continue through 1917 and have its climax on the 31st of October, the day on which, in 1517, Luther nailed his ninety-five theses to the doors of the Castle Church of Wittenberg, which is commonly considered the beginning of the Reformation. The leading clergymen of Greater New York are cooperating with the committee.

Dr. Burrell writes: "I hail the Four Hundredth Anniversary of the Reformation, because, in my mind, that great movement stands for the vital propositions which, like Jachin and Boaz, guard the gateway of the Temple of Life. One of these is the sinner's freedom of immediate approach to Christ, with no ecclesiastical functionary to block the way. The other is an open Bible, with the liberty of personal interpretation as against all prescript except that of the Spirit of the living God."

Rev. S. Parkes Cadman writes: "Your commemoration is timely and wise."

Professor David Starr Jordan, chancellor of Leland Stanford University, writes: "It is our duty in America to do our part in honoring this great prophet of freedom and apostle of religious sincerity."

President Butler of Columbia University says: "To recall to the mind of the twentieth century the significance of the great movement known as the Reformation is valuable public service. The modern mind is threatened, as was the mind of the sixteenth century, with the dominance of a philosophy of life and religion which operates to minimize the functions and the freedom of the individual, and to make each individual merely a cog on the wheel of a powerful and dominating group. The pious zeal and the individual's everlasting desire for expression and for responsibility, which were foreshadowed in European history by St. Dominic and St. Francis, as well as by Roger Bacon, and which later found such an epoch-making voice in Martin Luther, need to find new expression today. The tyranny which threatens in the twentieth century is not the tyranny of any church, but the tyranny of a majority in the state, a majority so constituted that it is not content with guiding the ordinary business of government, but which seeks to conform to a single and narrow type the occupations, the gains, the amusements and the modes of living of every individual. If the world needed a religious and philosophical reformation in the sixteenth century, in order to emancipate the individual, surely it needs a social and political reformation in the twentieth century for the same purpose."

Dr. W. H. P. Faunce, president of Brown University, writes: "America has peculiar reason for celebrating the anniversary of the Reformation, since America is the only land where the principles of Luther have penetrated the entire social order. His defiance of intrenched wrong, his willingness to stand with the minority or to stand alone, his independent interpretation of Scripture, his faith in home and school, his delight in the task of the pioneer—all this makes him congenial and inspiring to the American people."

Dr. Rush Rhees, president of the University of Rochester, writes: "America is peculiarly indebted to the Reformation, for that was the great crisis in the emancipation of the human spirit from the control of human authority. America needs today a fresh infusion of the temper of the Reformation, for that enfranchisement of the human spirit was accomplished through a clear and controlling recognition of God's presence and of his authority speaking through the conscience."

Dr. H. N. MacCracken, president of Vassar College, writes: "For Americans the Reformation is memorable and commemorable because it gave to the world a conception of public opinion as a governing force—public opinion, which is the embodiment of the unrestricted private opinions of men. Upon public opinion America—its freedom and its future—rests."

Dr. Henry Louis Smith, president of Washington and Lee University, writes: "Modern democracy, which is now transforming all human customs and institutions, took its rise in the Protestant Reformation. The great doctrines of the sonship of the individual believer, the equality of all souls in God's sight, and the right of each child of God to worship his Father in his own way, laid the foundation of modern democratic civilization, now happily spreading over the whole world. It is eminently fitting, therefore, that the whole Protestant world should celebrate the Quadricentenary of a movement which thus inaugurated a new and nobler era in human history."

Dr. W. L. Pickard, president of Mercer University, Macon, Ga., writes: "The fact that I am not a Lutheran by no means blinds me to the great good the proper celebration of the Reformation would do. Luther belongs to all, yes, to the whole human race."

Merry Moments

WHEN the Merry Moments column was started we announced that we could only return contributions when postage was enclosed. Some contributors, evidently forgetting this, have written inquiring as to the non-return of their contributions.

SPEAKING FROM HEARSAY. In the south you often hear many amusing speeches from the negroes, who love to use, or misuse, high-sounding words. One day an old darky came to us and asked, "Madam, you hasn't any fence wire what you would like to expose of, has you?" Another man, happening to be in an instalment store, asked, "Does you sell things on de extortion plan?" One darky persisted in owing a small grocery bill, and always had some excuse ready when asked about it. When the grocer came to his house collecting, the wife explained: "Oh, yassah, yassah! I know Mose been slow, but he been contending to pay dat quarter all 'long, sah."

THE LADY SPOKE LAST. My five-year-old boy and my three-year-old girl were talking. Glenn said, "I'm older than you," and was feeling elated over the fact. Ila, who always has a ready reply, said, "Well, I'm newer than you."

VERY PUZZLING. Eddie, who had always attended a Baptist Sunday school, was taken on a visit to Sunday school at a Methodist church. "Mamma, how is this?" he said. "I thought you said this was a Mefodist Sunday school."

"So it is, my dear."

"Well, but, mamma, the lesson was all about John the Baptist."

WHICH WAS WHICH? Jimmy's mother had told him to stay near the window and watch for the bride and groom and come and tell her when he saw them coming. After waiting for some time his patience was rewarded, but he forgot to run and tell his mother. When they were quite near he suddenly remembered and called out lustily, "Mamma, here comes the Bribe and the Gloom."

ROOM FOR A LARGE COMPANY. A little girl had been reprimanded by her mother for telling a falsehood. "Where do you think little folks go to that tell such stories?" asked the mother.

"I don't know," said the little girl, unconcernedly; "the same place big folks go to, I suppose."

EASY FOR THE HEN TO BE GENEROUS. Mother to small son: "Bobby, dear, I hoped you would be unselfish enough to give little sister the largest piece of candy. Why, see, even old Biddy gives all the nice big dainties to the little chicks, and only keeps an occasional tiny one for herself."

Bobby thoughtfully watched the hen and chickens for a time, and then said: "Well, mamma, I would too, if it was worms."

Some of us are like the planets; we shine with borrowed light—a good wife, for instance.

Republic Pennsylvania
Lee
"Nobby" Tread
"Chain" Tread
Kelly-Springfield
"Usco"
Goodyear
Michelin
Congress
Keaton
Imperial Nassau
Gaulois
Knight
Empire
Racine
Quaker
Federal Ajax
Miller
Hardman
Dreadnaught
Portage "Daisy"
Batavia
Braender
Marathon
Globe
Lancaster
Hood

All Cars are

"100% Skid Proof"

only when equipped with

Weed Chains

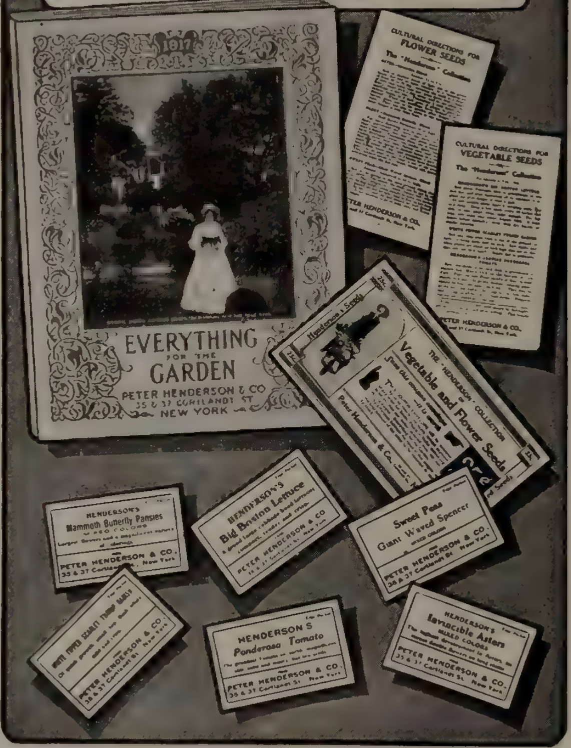
on all four tires, regardless of the brand or type of tires used.

The proper sizes of Weed Chains to fit all sizes and styles of tires are carried in stock by dealers everywhere.

American Chain Co., Inc.
Bridgeport, A·C·C Connecticut

All for only 10c

We make this offer because we want you to know Henderson's Seeds and Henderson's service, and to obtain a complete distribution of our new catalogue among those interested.



1917
EVERYTHING FOR THE GARDEN
PETER HENDERSON & CO.
35 & 37 CORTLANDT ST
NEW YORK
CULTURAL DIRECTIONS FOR FLOWER SEEDS
CULTURAL DIRECTIONS FOR VEGETABLE SEEDS
Vegetable and Flower Seeds
Henderson's Mammoth Butterfly Pansies
Henderson's Big Boston Lettuce
Sweet Peas Giant Waved Spencer
Henderson's Ponderosa Tomato
Henderson's Invincible Asters
PETER HENDERSON & CO.

Henderson's Remarkable Seed Offer for 1917

To demonstrate the superiority of Henderson's Tested Seeds, and to quickly obtain a large distribution for our mammoth annual catalogue, "Everything for the Garden," we have made up a collection of six of our best specialties which we will send for 10c, together with our catalogue. This is beyond question one of the most liberal introductory offers we or anyone else has ever made.

Here is the Offer

1 "Everything for the Garden"—our 208-page 1917 catalogue. It is handsomely bound with a beautifully lithographed and embossed cover. Contains 32 colored plates and over 1000 illustrations. It is a library of everything worth while for the farmer and gardener.

2 Henderson's White Tipped Scarlet Radish. Of quick growth, small top, flesh white, mild and crisp.

3 Henderson's Big Boston Lettuce. A grand, large head lettuce. Compact, tender, crisp.

4 Henderson's Genuine Ponderosa Tomato. The grandest tomato on earth. Magnificent size, solid and meaty, with but few seeds.

5 Henderson's Invincible Asters. Mixed Colors. The highest development in Asters. Immense double flowers, on large stems.

6 Spencer Giant Waved Sweet Peas. Mixed Colors. A glorified new race, surpassingly superior to the older sorts.

7 Henderson's Butterfly Pansies. Mixed Colors. Largest flowers and a magnificent variety of colorings.

8 Complete Cultural Directions for these vegetable and flower seeds.

9 Coupon Envelope, accepted by us as 25c toward any order of not less than $1.00 for our seeds, plants and bulbs.

Every empty envelope counts as cash

When you receive Henderson's Collection of Specialties, keep the coupon envelope in which the collection is enclosed. This coupon envelope will be accepted as 25c cash payment on any order of one dollar or over. Send us 10c with the coupon below and you will receive our catalogue, the six packets of Henderson's Tested Seeds and the coupon envelope worth 25c

1917 A Garden Year

At no time in many years has the importance and the necessity of the home garden been so great as this year. Peter Henderson

Our country is facing a critical situation in the matter of food supply, and yet a partial remedy is in the hands of every individual. One half of your summer living expense is for vegetables that should come out of your own garden. A space even as small as 25x50, planted with seeds of a high quality such as Henderson's, is sufficient for a family of six throughout the entire season. Fresh, crisp vegetables every day should be reason enough, but in addition, the saving makes it of the greatest importance.

To get the full results from your garden, you should plant the best seeds obtainable. Seventy years of successful seeds growing and selling make Henderson's the standard.

Everything for the Garden

is the title of our 1917 catalogue. It is really a book of 208 pages, with 32 colored plates and over a thousand halftones, all from actual photographs. Our annual catalogue is always exceptional, but this year we believe it the most beautiful and complete we have ever published.

After all it is the results that count, and that is the reason for our specialty collection described above—we are anxious for a trial and comparison of our seeds, and believe that this unusually liberal offer gives a fair opportunity for such a trial. Read the complete details, and send in ten cents, with or without coupon. It is a condition of this special offer that you mention this publication or use the coupon.

Peter Henderson & Co.,
35 and 37 Cortlandt Street,
New York

Now!

Send in the coupon or a letter, enclosing 10c, coin or stamps. You will be pleased with what we send you.
Make this year a garden year.

1917 Offer Coupon

Peter Henderson & Co.
35 and 37 Cortlandt Street
New York

I enclose 10c, for which send me your catalogue, "Everything for the Garden," and the six packets of seeds enclosed in coupon envelope good for 25c as explained in your advertisement published in Christian Herald.

Name ....

Address ....

....

Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 7, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 6. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

© Underwood & Underwood

AN OLD-TIME ARAB GUN SHOP AT BETHLEHEM (PALESTINE)

COPYRIGHT 1916 BY THE PROCTER & GAMBLE CO., CINCINNATI

There are three very good reasons why glassware should be washed with Ivory Soap

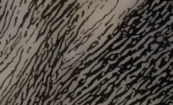
(1) It is easier to polish. Ivory Soap contains no uncombined oil or other ingredients that cannot be rinsed off easily. No soapy film clouds the surface.

(2) After washing with Ivory Soap, every piece is worthy of holding the daintiest food or beverage. Ivory is made of the choicest materials and its purity is unquestioned. To know that tableware is washed with Ivory is to be sure that it is clean in the strictest sense.

(3) The work does not harm the hands. Ivory Soap is so mild that it cannot redden or roughen the skin. Used for this or any other kind of cleaning, it leaves the hands soft, smooth and white.

To Clean Cut Glass.—Wash in thick, lukewarm Ivory Soap suds. Use a soft brush for deep cuttings. Rinse in clear water of same temperature. Immerse in blue water made very soapy with Ivory Soap. Dry with old linen, wiping each article with several cloths. The same treatment makes pressed glassware look almost like cut glass.

IVORY SOAP . . . . 99$\frac{44}{100}$% PURE



IT FLOATS

THE·CHRISTIAN·HERALD
·AN·ILLUSTRATED·NEWS·WEEKLY·FOR·THE·HOME·

Abe Lincoln

By
CHARLES GRANT MILLER

WASHINGTON taught the world to know us. Lincoln taught us to know ourselves. The first won for us our independence. The last wrought out our manhood and self-respect. Let us give to each the glory due him. There is enough for both, and for the nation. In honoring them we lift ourselves toward their level. In taking as guides these two fixed stars, we find our right way as a people.

The world over, this is the Age of Lincoln. As he filled his own country and his own century, growing from humblest birth to highest place, to martyred death and world-wide fame, so does he go on and will go on growing, through all the countries that are and all the centuries to come, as an inspiration and a hope for all mankind.

That is, if we keep the Lincoln as he was—if we stand faithful at the sepulcher of this martyred one and see that no false spirit issues forth in his stead.

IN the adulation that is being given to Lincoln in these later days, there is danger of his being taken from us as the human man that he was, and deified into the unknowable. Thus has the world been robbed of the real Achilles, the real Cæsar, the real Washington, who have passed from human semblance to fanciful shadows.

As stands the pyramid, a mystery,
Cleaving, wedge-like, the misty realm of Time,
And hides within its depths the unknown king
'Twas built to memorize; so common fame
Covers with cloudy fiction the real man,
And leaves a shadow to the worshipers.

Let us not thus be robbed of the plain Abe Lincoln! Let us keep the man as he was—a man; one of the noblest of earth, and, as such, one of the most precious possessions of a people.

LOOK at Abe Lincoln's face. Nature never gave that face as an indication of any character to be sentimentally etherialized. His habits of life molded its lines in steel. One may control one's voice and discipline one's manner, but the face is beyond command. Day and night, waking and sleeping, one's character is being traced there, to be read by all who care to read.

And as we must hold to the sad, rugged, homely, intensely human face of Lincoln, and love it for what it is, so let us hold to him, too, just as he was—the grandest, most really human figure looming up in our history as a nation.

With all his awkwardness of figure, with all his homeliness of manner, with all his simplicity of speech—that was Abe Lincoln.

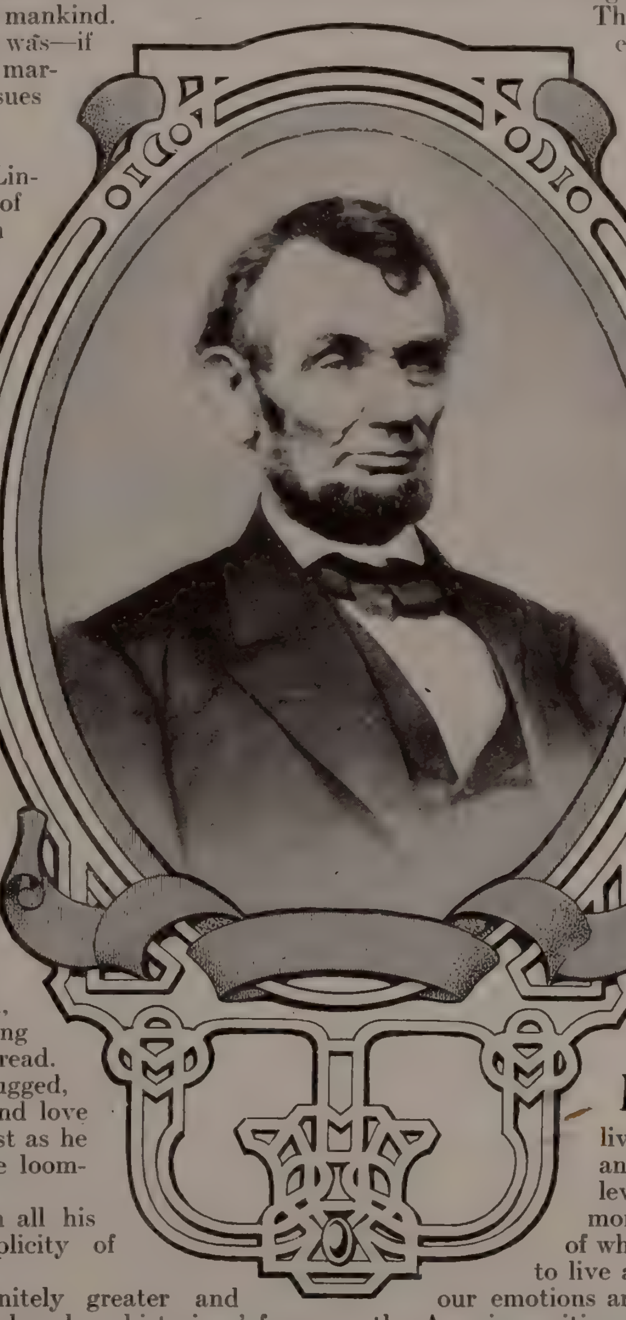
And let us keep him—plain Abe—infinitely greater and infinitely more sacred than any mythological god or historians' fancy or poets' dream.

Coming from next to nothing, he arose nearest to everything.

Born of the poor whites of a slave state, and inheriting the hatred held by his class for the negro, yet his hand freed the millions of black slaves. A self-made man, with scarcely one winter's schooling from books, he contributed some of the finest gems of the world's enduring literature, unsurpassed in all the classics for loftiness of thought and depth and limpidity of sentiment. The man who could open a cabinet meeting, called to discuss the emancipation proclamation, by reading Artemus Ward, was the same man who could guide, with clean mind and iron hand, the diplomacy that kept off fatal interference of Europe, while conducting at home the most horrible of civil wars that had ever afflicted a people. He reached with ease the highest and the lowest levels, and on the same battlefield where he called for a comic song he left a record of eloquence never attained by mortal lips before.

STRANGE conflictions of the strongest reasonings, senses and passions! But it only seems such. He was the human, kneeling in reverence to the Higher; the human, surrendering in prayer for Guidance; the human, inspired by faith in the Right; the human, in touch with the Divine. Seek the secret of his powers beyond the mortal, and we find it here. His intense humanness ever submitted itself as the ready instrument of Almighty God.

The United States has set up for its citizens the highest standard; it has made the highest demands of civic duty upon its people that any country has ever made. It did that at its birth. In great moments in its history, as when Lincoln spoke of "government of the people, for the people and by the people," that high demand has ever been enforced. No other country has ever had such moral progress and material prosperity; and upon the success of the United States in working out our ideals wisely and successfully, in spite of dangerous influences, more than upon the success of any other country in the world, the future of mankind depends.



WHEN the great war is ended, whatever else may be the results, the United States will be the world center of finance, industry and civilization. As that center has been driven by militarism from Babylon and Egypt to Rome, and from Rome to London, Paris and Berlin, so it will be driven from London, Paris, and Berlin to America. This is not only because Europe is being weakened, demoralized and shattered by the war, but also because of the high character and exalted ideals of the American people. This ascendency was bound to come in time; the Europe-shattering war has only hastened it. It means far more to us than mere money-making or the exercise of temporal power. The Lincoln ideal of service and supply is not grounded in greed or pride. It must be in humility and in fear of God that we assume our place as the big brother in a world brotherhood.

IDEALS and traditions are for a nation what they are for an individual man. Just as the man lives largely according to the level of his ideals and habits, so nations are bound to stand at the level of their ideals and traditions. We all have moments in our lives when there come to us visions of what our own lives might be if we were able always to live at that standard to which we sometimes rise when our emotions are touched; and it is some such ideal as this that the American citizen should always keep before him. He should hold ever the splendid vision of the Republic, not only prosperous and powerful, but pure and an example to the world. "Malice toward none and charity for all," offers broad basis for world brotherhood at peace.

FULL humanness that is sympathetic, reverent, prayerful, firm in faith, is the simple secret of Lincoln's surpassing greatness and enduring power. The high source of that greatness and power is ever open. Save for the touch with divinity, which is offered to all of us, Lincoln was but a man. Master in mind and body and spirit—yes; but only a man. In his brain the eagles of inspiration had their eyrie. In his heart dwelt infinite love for all the oppressed of his time and of all time. In his soul was a pure spring of promise for all humankind.

THE WAY TO TRUE GREATNESS

A SERMON

By

REV. J. H. JOWETT, D.D.[*]

TEXT—Matt. 20 : 26. "Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister."

SURELY one of the deepest sorrows of the Lord was occasioned by the undiscerning spirit of his disciples. They never seemed to know when to laugh and when to cry, and their incongruous interposition in the narrative always comes with a jar. They wear sackcloth at a wedding, and they flaunt loud and jaunty colors amid the solemnities of a funeral. They rarely seem to intervene with the requisite sympathy, with the right note and tone, with the trend of a congenial ambition. The Master is thinking along one line; they open their mouths and were themselves thinking along quite another. Their thoughts ran along the lower plane; they were "of the earth, earthy"; their purposes moved to common and commonplace ambitions. Their interpretations of their Lord's teaching sought the lower road, and rarely soared away into the heavenly and the divine. The Lord warned them against "the leaven of the Pharisees," and their understanding immediately hurried away to common bread! And as for want of sympathy, what can be more obtrusive than their quarrel with one another when they were making their way to the upper room?

And here, in the narrative before us, with this sad and darkening environment, they were contending with one another who should be greatest! I do not think much of the indignation of the ten, expressed so zealously against the two ambitious brothers. Their indignation was not born of an outraged conscience, but of a wounded self-conceit. That is a very subtle ministry, and it is found in most of our lives. We are often angry, apparently in defense of an aggrieved heaven, but in reality we are angry to gratify our offended selves. Our indignation is impure flame; it is unclean fire. The Lord knew it, and so it was not only to the two brothers that he addressed his words; he spake to all when he said, "Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister."

BUT how extraordinary and apparently contradictory is the counsel! It smites all our popular notions, and brings them to the dust. For what is the familiar notion of greatness? It is associated with places of dominion, with titled preeminence, and with material glory. To be great is to be exalted in fame, to receive the adulation of the multitude, to be clothed in purple and fine linen, and to fare sumptuously every day. But none of these elements enter into the conception of our Lord. There is nothing of material sovereignty, nothing of the encumbrances of riches or estate, nothing of earthly popularity; it is nothing that rests on the outsides of things; it is entirely inward and ethereal; the Lord's conception of greatness consists in spiritual dignity, in spiritual power and influence, and in spiritual joy.

And again, how amazing and extraordinary are the means by which the Lord declares that greatness is to be attained! "Whosoever will be great, let him be your minister." How it blocks up the ordinary roads! What are the familiar paths to popular greatness? We must make money; that will open any door. We must put a good value upon ourselves; the world takes us at our own judgment. We must be aggressive, avoiding the back seats, and audaciously pushing forward to the uppermost place at the feast. These are the crowded and well-trodden roads that lead to temporal greatness. Our Master turns away from them all. "Let him be your minister!" The way to true greatness is by the self-suppression of kindly service. And what kind of service is it to be? "The Son of Man came not to be ministered unto but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many."

The latter part of the great verse explains the former part. To minister is to give life, to shed blood, to expend strength. It means sacrifice to the point of exhaustion! It is the ministry of a generous self-suppression. The way to become great is to give our life to the lifeless, our strength to the strengthless, our thought to the thoughtless, our love to the loveless, our moral and spiritual blood to the morally and spiritually anemic. In these roads we shall become great in a splendid and elevated dignity, great in an equally splendid and invincible power, and great in the possession of a profound and consistent joy and peace.

LET any man minister to his fellows and he will become great in spiritual dignity. Is there anything like sacrifice for bringing harmony into one's own soul? There is no unifying power like self-sacrifice. "Life goes all to ravels and tatters," says Thomas Carlyle, "where self-denial enters not." The life goes to ravels! The ends of the character get loose and you cannot keep it whole. It goes to tatters! The character becomes thin and threadbare and patchy, and you cannot keep it sound. Do we not all know people whose character is out at the elbows, and raveling at the edge? Do we not take our figure of speech from the garments, and describe such character as "seedy"? Do we not frequently meet people whose character is all patchy and not of a piece? It is so difficult to keep the character from fraying, to keep it fine and firm and well knit, to make it a comfortable and comforting and enduring robe. Pride cannot do it. There are some things in the life that pride can keep in order, but it allows other things to go to rot. Courage cannot do it! There are many seedy characters who are brave, and their bravery does not preserve the entirety of their soul. No, it is only self-sacrifice that is creative of spiritual unity. Where self-sacrifice reigns there is no raveling, there are no tatters; all the powers are knit together in a firm and splendid unity. Unity is the first element in true dignity, and this is the product of sacrifice.

SHELTERED

By Jane Burr

AH baby dear, how sweet it is to rest
With you so precious, here, upon my breast!
Our walls are thick, our hearth-fire glowing gold,
Our love is warm against the winter's cold.
They tell me over there the summer grass
Was trampled down by maddened men . . . alas!
They tell me all the roads are choked with mud,
With slime and ooze and crimson human blood,
And yet I never think of fields of strife
With happiness so crowded in my life.
So many fragile baby things to make,
So many tasty bits to boil and bake,
So many toys for baby's finger-tips,
So many kisses saved for daddy's lips—
I never think of battlefields and strife
With happiness so crowded in my life.

But ah, my arms would shelter if they could
All Europe's throng of shattered motherhood!

But it is not only that sacrifice brings to life the dignity of unity; it also ensures the dignity of elevation. Self-sacrifice both unites and lifts the life! "I will set him on high!" And what follows the uplifting? Surely the life that is elevated becomes magnanimous. Elevation gives comprehension, breadth of vision and outlook. "Thou shalt behold the land that is very far off." It is the man who lives in heavenly places in Christ Jesus who is absolutely delivered from small-mindedness, from the narrow range of vision, which breeds so many irritations. The self-seeking character is very small in its outlook, and it is therefore very irritable in the life. If we live in a teacup an added drop of vinegar will distress us; if we live in an ocean we shall never taste it!

People who are always thinking about themselves are always sensitive and morbid. The people who are thinking of others, whose lives are spent for others, do not feel pin-pricks, and they are careless of both criticism and applause. Is not this the true greatness? And this greatness is the fruit of self-sacrifice.

AND further still, the life lifted up by self-sacrifice has the supreme companionship of communion with the mind of Christ. Up in the heavenly heights we are living along his plane, we share his outlook and purposes, we rejoice in his glory. We rise, not into any particular virtue, but into the region of all the virtues. We have ascended into the spiritual tropics, and we bring forth fruit abundantly. "Whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister." Such men will be great in power and holy influence.

Our life becomes contagious when it becomes sacrificial. Life that is cold and calculating remains uninfluential and unimpressive. That is true of a poem or a sermon; if there be no spirit of sacrifice in its birth there will be no heart-work in its ministry. Sermons that cost nothing do nothing. No idea ever succeeds, except at the expense of sacrifice. "I, if I be lifted up, will draw." That is eternally and universally true. There is no magnetism comparable to the magnetism of self-sacrifice. When our lives are lifted up in blood-shedding ministry, we shall be endowed with unspeakable powers of grace. And surely if we have this power we shall also be endowed with joy.

Self-sacrifice is so commonly looked upon as a species of surgery! The very word has gathered round about it all the gloom of an operating chamber. It is quite other than this. Self-sacrifice enshrines the principle of vitality, and not only vitalizes others, but vitalizes self. It is active and reactive. The heat of our sacrifice thaws the frozen currents of our own soul. And so joy is born, "joy unspeakable and full of glory." The world's joy is farthest away when we need it most, it is most tasteless when we are most tired. The joy of the Lord comes to us when our surroundings are become dim and gloomy, and even when night is at hand! "At eventide it shall be light."

---

[*] Pastor, Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

FOR EVERY DAY
IN THE
YEAR

DAILY MEDITATION

Revs.
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
C. C. Albertson, D.D.
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H. T. Dau

Breaking the Awful Silence

SUNDAY, February 11. John 11 : 23. "Jesus saith unto her . . ." Who likes to break the silence when some sorrow has stricken our neighbor dumb? The stroke has fallen, and that which was so beautiful lies in apparent ruin. There is a strange silence. All the bird-song is hushed, as when a gun has just been fired in a grove. And who likes, I say, to break the silence? We often just take the hand of the one who is smitten dumb, and we clasp it in a masonry of sympathy which has no other speech.

And sometimes those who do speak only intensify the pain of the silence, and make it harder to bear. Their words have no significance. Their wallets have no cordials. Their lamps have no light: Their ministry has no grace. What has the materialist to say, that is worth saying, when the heart is aching in the unfamiliar pangs of bereavement? What word of comfort has the secularist when there seems to be nothing in all the wide world but a newly made grave? What song has the agnostic which can fill the silence with a quickening hope? All these attempted ministries may disturb the sorrowful, but they leave the desolate soul in a silence which is all the more desolate because of their futile effort to break it.

How many such fearful silences there are today! In how many millions of lives the sunshine has fled, and all the birds are hushed, and it seems as though the final night has fallen, and as if there will be spring no more. "Speak thou, availing Christ, and fill this pause!" And the Lord Jesus Christ will speak in the awful pause. And his word is not as a mocking echo in the halls of death. It fills the vacancy with life and light. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." The grace of his speech is as ample as our need, and his comforts are as deep as our pain.

His word besets us behind and before, and it lays its hand upon us. It covers the entire field over which our soul is wandering in pathetic vagrancy. It throws its hallowing grace over our yesterdays. It enfolds us in our present journey, and it lights up tomorrow with eternal hope. When the Lord Jesus breaks the silence, he breaks what makes the silence deadly; he breaks the bondage of the soul, and spiritual assurance is born, and the winter is past, and the time of the singing of birds is come. He is waiting to speak to us if only we will listen. "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." "Speak, Lord, thy servant heareth!" J. H. J.

Coming to His Own

MONDAY, February 12. John 1 : 11, 12. "He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." Nazareth rejected Jesus because Nazareth was blind. It was the blindness of familiarity, the "misinterpretation of the near." Gadara rejected him because Gadara preferred its swine. Some people think more of their pig pens than of their schoolhouses and chapels. A Perean, when he heard that the Gadarenes had preferred their swine to the Messiah, remarked, "Those people always did have a strong family feeling." The priests rejected Jesus because he was wiser and purer than they. We are never quite willing to forgive superior people. The Pharisees rejected Jesus because he was not of their school. Some people would rather be eternally lost than be saved by a system they have not subscribed to. There was a thief who rejected him because of very hardness of heart.

Whatever the reasons were that prevailed in many minds, leading them to reject Jesus, it is grateful to recall that he was not rejected by everybody. The pure in heart received him, and the poor in spirit, the meek, the merciful, the peace-loving, the mourner, the persecuted. The humble received him. Peasants received him, eating their black bread and bitter herbs, bought and sold with the land they tilled. Slaves received him, torn from their native lands by war's rude hand, or born to be hewers of wood and builders of pyramids. Women received him, who had learned the vanity of life's best gifts, and the bitterness of life's worst. Children received him, charmed with his gentle touch and winsome voice. A few wise, a few rich, a few noble received him, in whose lives learning and wealth and power had not quenched the longing for moral worth. And what of it? What difference did it make to those who received him? The poor lost their sense of poverty. Mourners received with him a wonderful realization of the reality of immortality. The wise had their perception of truth made vastly keener. The noble were lifted to new heights of nobility. "To them gave he power." C. C. A.

Light and Salvation

TUESDAY, February 13. Ps. 27 : 1. "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?" Dangers past and dangers impending converge in the mind of the psalmist and put this assertion of calm courage and confidence on his lips. It would be interesting to know the exact occasion in David's life when these words were uttered. Was it when he was fleeing from his son Absalom? When the papal excommunication and the imperial interdict had been published against Luther, he was asked where he would now abide. He answered: "Sub divo," that is, Under heaven, or in God's hand.

There is something sublime in the calm confidence with which a Christian faces perils. "And take they our life, goods, fame, children, wife, when their worst is done, yet have they nothing won, the kingdom ours remaineth." The Christian knows that he is at peace with God: faith in Christ has given him a good conscience. There is no condemnation for him, since he is in Christ. What can harm him? Sin? It has been canceled. Death? It is turned into a sleep for him. The devil? He has been bruised. The world? It is crucified unto him. Every agency of evil has been divested of its power to do him real harm. It can only reach the physical part of his existence and his temporal interests. Through the gloom of evil days he sees a light shining, the salvation of his Lord. Though his physical prowess and his animal courage are gone, there is a strength manifest in his life that enables him to do all things: Christ is his strength, and no power on earth can prevail against that support. W. H. T. D.

Sacrificial Service

WEDNESDAY, February 14. I John 3 : 16. "Because he laid down his life for us, we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." Is it not enough for the servant to be as his lord? Our hearts must bleed for men if we would bless them. Should not our prayers for the unsaved often include groans of agony, crying with Moses, "Blot me out of thy book, but save this people alive"? or with Paul, "I could wish myself accursed for my brethren and kindred's sake"? Oh for wrestling Jacobs who will not let thee go until the victory comes—who can die but never surrender!

Dr. J. H. Jowett tells of one who prayed for loved ones, saying, "Promise me, dear Lord, that thou wilt save them. Oh, give me a token that thou wilt." Then her Lord seemed to clasp her outstretched hand in his and to give her the promise. She felt a piercing pain as though a nail had been driven through the palm. She had become so absolutely one with the interceding Saviour that she entered into the fellowship of his crucifixion. Her prayers were red with sacrifice, and she felt the grasp of the pierced hand.

Should we not be like the engineer who plunged his engine down the hillside to save his trainload of passengers from running on a broken rail; or like the chaplain who gave his shoes and socks to a wounded soldier, suffering ever after from frozen feet; or like the firemen who every week imperil their lives to rescue people from burning buildings? Should not all Christians know more about sacrificial service, seeking to obey every call to come over and help those in sin, sorrow and need? E. W. C.

Power Through Gladness

THURSDAY, February 15. Neh. 8 : 10. "Neither be ye sorry; for the joy of the Lord is your strength." The Hebrews were—and are—a tragic race. We could expect, so far as their national circumstances and racial characteristics express themselves in psalm and liturgy, to find a deep longing for peace. But it is joy oftener than peace they seem to covet. And here it is joy that is promised, gladness, and power through gladness.

There is a power in gladness, a power which, like mercy, is twice blessed; it blesses him who is glad, doing him good like medicine, and it has the quality of contagion, communicating itself to others. Gladness, like a river in freshet, overflows its own banks. Why are some people sought for their society, who, without any great personal charm, are desired for their companionship? It may be their brilliance, or their goodness, or their leadership, but it is more likely to be the power of their gladness. Pollyanna is a type of the welcome guest. A face may carry on it the peace of God. And if it does, it preaches a powerful sermon to all to whom peace is a thing to be desired. Of such as seek peace, peace in the midst of strife, there are many. But there are more who seek joy. The young, the hopeful, the virile, the vigorous, the exuberant, seek joy. There is a joy of the Lord. These words say so. Some faces say so. Some lives attest the power of spiritual gladness. It was at the very end of his life Jesus spoke about his joy, and spoke about his joy being ours. His joy? The joy of poverty, of homelessness, of crucifixion? No, the joy of knowing he was in the divine order; the joy of conscious harmony with the laws of his own being; the joy of a calm outlook into the future. C. C. A.

Work and Worry

FRIDAY, February 16. I Thess. 4 : 11, 12. "Study to be quiet, and to do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you; that ye may walk honestly toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of nothing." Work and worry have become allied terms in our speech, because we fail to keep them apart in our activity. Some declare outright that work is worry and misery, but they do not see that for the most part they are making labor loathsome to themselves by their perverted view of labor. Work is a noble thing, a precious privilege, a joy. We must only keep distracting care and the feverish excitement which are the inevitable accompaniments of dishonest enterprise, selfishness, and greed from entering into our calling. When the inner poise is gone out of a workman's heart, he will begin to do bungling work. When he tries to attend to other people's business besides his own, he will not recognize his true interests and will commit errors of judgment that will prove costly. When the passion for success seizes a workman, so that he no longer discriminates between fair means and foul, his reputation becomes unsettled, and that will unsettle him.

Our business should never master us; we must remain sovereign over any enterprise in which we engage. This requires study, and there is no better guide for such study than the commandments of the Lord. Christ must be not only a silent partner in our business, but the President of the establishment, and not an honorary president either, who only lends his name to our undertaking for a lure, but the acting president who furnishes the morale for the whole business and has a word to say about every detail. Such study brings rich results: a quiet mind, respect from others, and sufficiency of means. No one who has gone to work on Christian principles and carried on his work on such principles has ever rued his action. "Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord; that walketh in his ways. For thou shalt eat the labor of thine hands: happy shalt thou be, and it shall be well with thee." W. H. T. D.

Commending Christ

SATURDAY, February 17. Matt. 16 : 15. "Whom say ye that I am?" Nothing pleases Christ more than the bringing of lost men to him. Actions speak louder than words. "Things seen are mightier than things heard." In recommending a soul to Jesus, we endorse the cause, kingdom and person of Christ more than by the most eloquent eulogy. Dr. Russell Conwell, desiring to write a story of General Garfield's life after he was nominated for the presidency, secured from James G. Blaine a letter of introduction to General Garfield. When Garfield read the letter, a pleasant smile illumined his face as he said, "That is a great thing for James G. Blaine to do." The thought of endorsing Conwell was swallowed up in the idea that Blaine was to assist Garfield in his election to the presidency, though Blaine had been a competitor for the nomination himself. So when we bring a soul to Christ, it is the strongest commendation of our Lord we could make. Having trusted and proved him ourselves, we bring our dearest friends to receive the same blessing; having learned to love him, we long to have all the world love him too.

Here is the highest expression of loyalty to the fatherhood of God, the divinity of Jesus and the love of the Spirit. E. W. C.

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

Germany Explains Deportations. The reply of the German government to the protest-inquiry of the American government regarding the deportation of Belgians for labor in Germany, which was dispatched from Berlin on December 13, was made public in Washington on January 23. The reply explains the conditions existing in Belgium, and the difficulties of administration which had to be met and solved. The German government expresses its belief that the government of the United States has been incorrectly informed about the cause and the execution of measures taken. The charge is made that the serious problem of unemployment in Belgium is "caused by the British policy of isolation, which has cut off Belgian industry from the importation of raw materials and the exportation of manufactured goods." This measure, it is declared, has forced into idleness 1,200,000 Belgian factory workers and more than 500,000 other Belgians whose labor was more or less indirectly related to the work in the factories. The note states: "From the standpoint of Belgian economic life, for which the unemployed form a heavy burden, from the standpoint of public order and public morals, which are most affected by the general unemployment and its accompanying consequences, this situation makes it extremely desirable and urgent that efficient measures for improvement shall be taken. This necessity has been recognized and has been pointed out also by fair-minded Belgians since a long time." The note calls attention to the fact that under the Hague agreements and international law it is generally held that a power occupying conquered territory is charged with the maintenance of public order, in which it is authorized to apply the existing laws of the country occupied and to make such additional regulations as the situation may require. It states that "the maintenance of public order doubtless implies that able-bodied persons, as far as they live on public charity by their idleness, become a public calamity and nuisance, and should be held to work." Since there was no work to do in Belgium, the note states, the only thing possible was to assign them to work in Germany, where a large number of Belgian workers had already voluntarily accepted work, were properly fed, received high wages, and enjoyed a far-reaching liberty of movement. The note expressly states that "employments to which a hostile population cannot be coerced in accordance with international law are, of course, excluded." Latest reports to the American State Department indicate that the number of persons deported is a little under 125,000. The German government invites the United States to satisfy itself regarding the facts covered by the note and offers all facilities to any member of the embassy in Berlin whom the government of the United States may instruct to make an investigation. Ambassador Gerard has been instructed to accept this invitation. The German government charges that conditions have been completely distorted by a slandering press campaign, and in closing calls attention to the deportation to Siberia of part of the population of East Prussia during the occupation of that territory by Russian troops.

© International Film Service, Inc

The trail of the "Leak" leads Congressional plumbers to New York. First session of the committee at the Custom House. Front row, right to left, Sherman L. Whipple, counsel; Representatives Cantrill, Garrett, Henry (chairman), Campbell and Lenroot

Pershing is Coming Home. Washington announced on January 23 that General Pershing was drawing in his outposts preliminary to the return of his troops to American territory after ten months in Mexico. It was announced from Mexican sources that Mexican factions would probably fight for control of the territory evacuated by General Pershing, the Villistas being reported as having 8,000 men in the state of Chihuahua, ready to follow Pershing's withdrawal. The return of the Pershing troops and their disposition along the border is expected to release the bulk, if not all, of the guardsmen still held in the Federal service.

Codifying the Law of the Sea. At the annual session of the American Institute of International Law, meeting at Havana on January 22, Dr. Alejandro Alvarez, the general secretary of the Institute, and a Latin-American authority on international law, proposed a code of rules to govern the relations of neutrals and belligerents on the high seas, the draft having been made at the suggestion of Secretary of State Lansing. The principal items in the code provide for absolute freedom of commerce between neutrals among themselves and between neutrals and belligerents in all items not actually contraband. The code would repeal the right of search and would forbid a commercial blockade of one belligerent by the navy of another. Private property at sea is declared inviolable, and the sinking of vessels is forbidden under any pretext whatever, although contraband cargoes may be confiscated or destroyed. The code is interesting in principle, as it shows the lines along which American opinion North and South, and of neutrals generally, is crystallizing about the serious problems which have arisen during this present war. It is one thing to propose a code and quite another thing to get it universally adopted, however.

Another Extra Session?, January 20 marked the end of the seventh week of the present session of Congress, which on that date had just six weeks left before March 4. With the session thus more than half over, Congress has not acted upon any of the important measures indispensable to the operation of the government. The revenue and appropriation bills are still in committee, and the Administration's program of labor legislation is in the same condition. This situation has caused the President and the leaders in Congress to make extra efforts to get the work done. The President was reported to be planning for three conferences a week at the Capitol with congressional leaders in the interest of speed. He is particularly interested in the Webb Bill permitting the combination of corporations for foreign commerce, the Corrupt Practices Bill, the Porto Rican Bill, the water power and public land leasing bills, and appropriation and revenue measures. If this Congress should adjourn without providing for the operation of the government, an extra session would be imperative.

Leak Inquiry Moved to New York. The inquiry by the Rules Committee into the question of the now famous "leak" was halted on January 17 pending the employment of counsel. Mr. Sherman L. Whipple, a Boston democrat and a noted trial lawyer, was finally chosen as counsel for the committee. After the employment of counsel, the hearings were reopened in New York on January 23, in order that the committee might have the advantage of access to the books and accounts of the various members of the Stock Exchange. Inclined at first to resist, the members of the Exchange finally agreed to submit all of their records, with the understanding that no names or facts should be made public unless tangible evidence supporting the "leak" charges should be unearthed.

Christmas Ship to Carry Refugees. It was announced from Washington on January 20 that a thousand American refugees were in Beirut awaiting transportation to this country, these refugees being mostly naturalized citizens of the United States. It is planned that the cruiser Des Moines and the naval collier Cæsar, which have total accommodations for 300 persons, shall transport these refugees to an Italian or Spanish port, from which they can secure transportation to the United States.

Can't Sell Blue Sky. The laws of Ohio, South Dakota and Michigan, designed to curb the selling of fraudulent securities and referred to as "blue sky laws," were held constitutional by the United States Supreme Court on January 22. The decision reversed the lower courts.

Senate Halts Anti-Strike Bill. The Senate Interstate Commerce Committee on January 24 by a vote of ten to five rejected the main principle of President Wilson's strike prevention program. The provision prohibiting strikes and lockouts pending an investigation was omitted from the bill by the committee. The program as the committee has worked it out is said to provide for a board of inquiry to be appointed by the President to investigate industrial disputes when mediation and conciliation fail, and to make public their findings. The bill would also prohibit physical obstruction of trains during a strike, and would authorize the President to take possession of common carriers in case of war or insurrection.

Britain Stops Shell Order. News dispatches of January 24 announced that the British government had refused permission to Hadfields, Ltd., to proceed with work on the contract for shells for the American navy "so long as the exigencies of war continue." Washington at this writing had no official information.

Japanese Cabinet Attacked. The majority groups in the Japanese parliament on January 24 began a campaign against the Terauchi administration by introducing in the House of Peers a resolution of lack of confidence. The premier insisted that the nation could be governed by a cabinet which did not have a majority in parliament. Facing the certainty of an adverse vote and declaring that "While he maintained the confidence of the Emperor he could not accept the verdict of the House, Premier Terauchi brought about the dissolution of the House of Representatives of the Japanese Parliament on January 25. Elections for the new House will be held in April or May.

Fragments of News. The Winnisimmet Ferry, the oldest ferry in the United States, which for 286 years had carried traffic between Boston and Chelsea, Mass., and which for several years has been losing money because of the competition of more modern transportation, discontinued its service January 19. . . . The Senate on January 23 amended the legislative appropriation bill to increase by 15 per cent salaries of employees receiving less than $480 a year and to increase by 10 per cent salaries from $480 to $1,000. . . . According to statistics of the Census Bureau for 1915, the birth rate for the year for the United States was 24.9 per thousand, the death rate was 14 per

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald, at the Bible House, Fourth Avenue, 8th and 9th Sts., New York City. The Officers are: Otto Koenig, President and Treasurer, Bible House, N. Y. City; Geo. H. Sandison, Vice President, Bible House, N.Y. City; Theodore Waters, Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $2.00 a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner available. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico, add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

thousand, showing an increase of 1.1 per cent annually in population, exclusive of immigration. . . . Coal teamsters of Chicago went on strike on January 20 without warning, and the city, which has been fighting a near coal famine, barely able to keep itself in fuel, was immediately reduced to an uncomfortable extremity. . . . The foreign business of the United States for 1916, which totaled $7,873,000,000, established, it is claimed by the Department of Commerce, a new record in world trade which will place America at the head of the nations in commerce. The exports for the year reached the total of $5,481,000,000, and the balance of trade in favor of the United States was $3,089,000,000. . . . The complete compilation of the results of the Sunday Campaign in Boston showed that 60,509 persons had hit the trail during the meetings. The Free Will offering was $51,800.

DUTCH INDIES ROCKED. An earthquake on the Island of Bali in the Malay Archipelago on January 25, killed fifty natives and injured 200 persons. More than a thousand houses, factories and temples were destroyed. The island has an area of about 2,100 square miles and a population of nearly 700,000.

BRITISH MUNITIONS PLANT DESTROYED. A series of explosions on January 19 in a chemical plant in London which was making munitions destroyed the works and wrecked buildings over a considerable area of the city. Reports indicated that deaths from the accident would exceed fifty, and that at least one hundred persons were seriously injured. No attempt was made to tabulate minor injuries.

MAY BE THE DEWEY ISLANDS. A movement is under way in Washington to have the name of the Danish West Indies, which name obviously will be untrue when the change of ownership becomes effective, to the Dewey Islands. The islands are still under the jurisdiction of the Danish governor, who will retain his jurisdiction until the formal transfer, and the raising of the American flag, which will take place as soon as the purchase price is paid.

© Clinedinst

Dr. Cary Grayson

White House physician, nominated by the President over 137 ranking officers to be a Rear-Admiral in the navy. The nomination aroused much opposition

© G. V. Buck

Admiral Benson

Chief of naval operations U. S. N., became ranking officer of the navy by the death of Admiral Dewey and now heads the General Board

General Uhlrich Wille

Commander of the Swiss army, who considers as imminent the invasion of Switzerland by one of the belligerents and urges complete mobilization

The War in Europe

By ANTHONY ARNOUX

FOUR months ago in Parliament it was said that the total losses of British tonnage through capture, submarines and other war risks amounted to about 2,300,000 tons. Since that time the submarine campaign has been fast and furious, and, including the exploits of the present raider, fully 700,000 tons more have been sunk, so that it seems quite fair to say that Great Britain has lost about 40 to 42½ per cent. of all her commercial ships available for the transportation of foodstuffs and raw materials to and exports from her shores.

Reports from France, Italy and Switzerland indicate that the scarcity of coal is becoming very embarrassing, while those from Germany and Austria seem to point to considerable suffering among the civilian populations of those countries on account of the shorter food rations.

On the whole, it begins to look as though all the belligerents and some of the neutrals were in for a very hard winter in one way or another.

Whisperings indicate that the Swiss mobilization of the entire army, fixed for January 24, is prompted by fear that Italy may attempt to seize the Italian-speaking cantons of the republic, on the ground that they naturally belong to those vague and mysterious territories which the Italians group in the phrase "Italia irredenta."

Whether these whispers be true or not, it is clear that Switzerland is very much disturbed in mind as to future possibilities, and as the Swiss are not a nation of sentimentalists, but are sincere lovers of their country, it seems probable that they have not imagined the danger, whatever it is.

The question as to whether or not neutrals who take service on an armed ship belonging to a belligerent lose their neutral status, and on capture of such belligerent ship by the enemy become liable to be treated as prisoners of war, seems destined in the near future to be brought up for a definite solution.

The Continental naval powers have always contended that the acceptance of such employment forfeited such neutral status, just as would have been the case had the neutral enlisted in the regular naval forces of the belligerent.

Great Britain and the United States have always taken the opposite view, and hold that the neutral does not in such case forfeit his standing as a neutral, and therefore is not liable to be treated as a prisoner of war.

The case will probably pass from academic to practical discussion on the state of facts arising from the presence of certain Americans among the prisoners brought into a German port by the captured British steamer Yarrowdale. These Americans, with the other neutrals taken, it is apparently the intention of the German government to hold as prisoners of war on the view of international law above outlined. Judging from Washington dispatches, the government of the United States intends to dispute this view of the law.

It is also asserted that one of the vessels captured by this German raider, the Saint Theodore, has been armed and a German crew placed on board of her, and that this vessel is now herself engaged in raiding the commerce of the Allies. Here again is a divergence in views of international law, as the United

Continued on page 154

Historic Address of the President to the Senate on January 22

"ON the 18th of December last I addressed an identic note to the governments of nations now at war requesting them to state, more definitely than had yet been stated by either group of belligerents, the terms upon which they would deem it possible to make peace. I spoke on behalf of humanity and of the rights of all neutral nations like our own, many of whose most vital interests the war puts in constant jeopardy.

"The Central Powers united in a reply which stated merely that they were ready to meet their antagonists in conference to discuss terms of peace.

"The Entente Powers have replied much more definitely and have stated, in general terms, indeed, but with sufficient definiteness to imply details, the arrangements, guarantees and acts of reparation which they deem to be the indispensable conditions of a satisfactory settlement.

"We are that much nearer a definite discussion of the peace which shall end the present war. We are that much nearer the discussion of the international concert which must thereafter hold the world at peace. In every discussion of the peace that must end this war, it is taken for granted that that peace must be followed by some definite concert of powers which will make it virtually impossible that any such catastrophe should ever overwhelm us again. Every lover of mankind, every sane and thoughtful man must take that for granted.

"I have sought this opportunity to address you because I thought that I owed it to you, as the council associated with me in the final determination of our international obligations, to disclose to you, without reserve, the thought and purpose that have been taking form in my mind in regard to the duty of our Government in these days to come when it will be necessary to lay afresh and upon a new plan the foundations of peace among the nations.

The Part of the United States

"It is inconceivable that the people of the United States should play no part in that great enterprise. To take part in such a service will be the opportunity for which they have sought to prepare themselves by the very principles and purposes of their policy and the approved practices of their Government, ever since the days when they set up a new nation in the high and honorable hope that it might in all that it was and did show mankind the way to liberty. They cannot, in honor, withhold the service to which they are now about to be challenged. They do not wish to withhold it. But they owe it to themselves and to the other nations of the world to state the conditions under which they will feel free to render it.

"That service is nothing less than this—to add their authority and their power to the authority and force of other nations to guarantee peace and justice throughout the world. Such a settlement cannot now be long postponed. It is right that before it comes this Government should frankly formulate the conditions upon which it would feel justified in asking our people to approve its formal and solemn adherence to a League for Peace. I am here to attempt to state those conditions!

"The present war must first be ended; but we owe it to candor and to a just regard for the opinion of mankind to say that so far as our participation in guarantees of future peace is concerned it makes a great deal of difference in what way and upon what terms it is ended. The treaties and agreements which bring it to an end must embody terms which will create a peace that is worth guaranteeing and preserving, a peace that will win the approval of mankind; not merely a peace that will serve the several interests and immediate aims of the nations engaged.

"We shall have no voice in determining what those terms shall be; but we shall, I feel sure, have a voice in determining whether they shall be made lasting or not by the guarantees of a universal covenant, and our judgment upon what is fundamental and essential as a condition precedent to permanency should be spoken now, not afterwards, when it may be too late.

The Elements of Permanent Peace

"No covenant of coöperative peace that does not include the peoples of the New World can suffice to keep the future safe against war, and yet there is only one sort of peace that the peoples of America could join in guaranteeing. The elements of that peace must be elements that engage the confidence and satisfy the principles of the American governments, elements consistent with their political faith and the practical convictions which the peoples of America have once for all embraced and undertaken to defend.

"I do not mean to say that any American Government would throw any obstacle in the way of any terms of peace the governments now at war might agree upon or seek to upset them when made, whatever they might be. I only take it for granted that mere terms of peace between the belligerents will not satisfy even the belligerents themselves. Mere agreements may not make peace secure. It will be absolutely necessary that a force be created as a guarantor of the permanency of the settlement so much greater than the force of any nation now engaged or any alliance hitherto formed or projected, that no nation, no probable combination of nations could face or withstand it. If the peace presently to be made is to endure it must be a peace made secure by the organized major force of mankind.

"The terms of the immediate peace agreed upon will determine whether it is a peace for which such a guarantee can be secured. The question upon which the whole future peace and policy of the world depend is this:

"Is the present war a struggle for a just and secure peace or only for a new balance of power? If it be only a struggle for a new balance of power, who will guarantee, who can guarantee, the stable equilibrium of the new arrangement? Only a tranquil Europe can be a stable Europe. There must be not only a balance of power, but a community of power; not organized rivalries, but an organized common peace.

"Fortunately, we have received very explicit assurances on this point. The statesmen of both of the groups of nations now arrayed against one another have said, in terms that could not be misinterpreted, that it was no part of the purpose they had in mind to crush their antagonists. But the implications of these assurances may not be equally clear to all—may not be the same on both sides of the water. I think it will be serviceable if I attempt to set forth what we understand them to be.

Peace Without Victory

"They imply first of all that it must be a peace without victory. It is not pleasant to say this. I beg that I may be permitted to put my own interpretation upon it and that it may be understood that no other interpretation was in my thought. I am seeking only to face realities and to face them without soft concealments. Victory would mean peace forced upon the loser, a victor's terms imposed upon the vanquished. It would be accepted in humiliation, under duress, at an intolerable sacrifice, and would leave a sting, a resentment, a bitter memory upon which terms of peace would rest, not permanently, but only as upon quicksand.

"Only a peace between equals can last; only a peace the very principle of which is equality and a common participation in a common benefit. The right state of mind, the right feeling between nations, is as necessary for a lasting peace as is the just settlement of vexed questions of territory or of racial and national allegiance.

The Equality and Democracy of Nations

"The equality of nations upon which peace must be founded, if it is to last, must be an equality of rights; the guarantees exchanged must neither recognize nor imply a difference between big nations and small, between those that are powerful and those that are weak. Right must be based upon the common strength, not upon the individual strength, of the nations upon whose concert peace will depend. Equality of territory or of resources there of course cannot be; nor any other sort of equality not gained in the ordinary peaceful and legitimate development of the peoples themselves. But no one asks or expects anything more than an equality of rights. Mankind is looking now for freedom of life, not for equipoises of power.

"And there is a deeper thing involved than even equality of rights among organized nations. No peace can last, or ought to last, which does not recognize and accept the principle that governments derive all their just powers from the consent of the governed, and that no right anywhere exists to hand peoples about from sovereignty to sovereignty as if they were property.

"I take it for granted, for instance, if I may venture upon a single example, that statesmen everywhere are agreed that there should be a united, independent and autonomous Poland, and that henceforth inviolable security of life, of worship and of industrial and social development should be guaranteed to all peoples who lived hitherto under the power of governments devoted to a faith and purpose hostile to their own.

"I speak of this, not because of any desire to exalt an abstract political principle which has always been held very dear by those who have sought to build up liberty in America, but for the same reason that I have spoken of the other conditions of peace which seem to me clearly indispensable, because I wish frankly to uncover realities. Any peace which does not recognize and accept this principle will inevitably be upset. It will not rest upon the affections or the convictions of mankind. The ferment of spirit of whole populations will fight subtly and constantly against it and all the world will sympathize. The world can be at peace only if its life is stable, and there can be no stability where the will is in rebellion, where there is not tranquillity of spirit and a sense of justice, of freedom and of right.

Free Access to Free Seas

"So far as practicable, moreover, every great people now struggling towards a full development of its resources and of its powers should be assured a direct outlet to the great highways of the sea. Where this cannot be done by the cession of territory, it can no doubt be done by the neutralization of direct rights of way under the general guarantee which will assure the peace itself. With a right comity of arrangement no nation need be shut away from free access to the open paths of the world's commerce.

"And the paths of the sea must alike in law and in fact be free. The freedom of the seas is the sine qua non of peace, equality and coöperation. No doubt a somewhat radical reconsideration of many of the rules of international practice hitherto sought to be established may be necessary in order to make the seas indeed free and common in practically all circumstances for the use of mankind; but the motive for such changes is convincing and compelling. There can be no trust or intimacy between the peoples of the world without them. The free, constant, unthreatened intercourse of nations is an essential part of the process of peace and of development. It need not be difficult to define or to secure the freedom of the seas if the Governments of the world sincerely desire to come to an agreement concerning it.

© Underwood & Underwood

Here lies the stranded American submarine H-3 and in the distance careened upon the rocks is the $7,000,000 cruiser Milwaukee which threw herself away in a vain attempt to save the $250,000 diver

"It is a problem closely connected with the limitation of naval armaments and the coöperation of the navies of the world in keeping the seas at once free and safe. And the question of limiting naval armaments opens the wider and perhaps more difficult question of the limitation of armies and all programs of military preparation. Difficult and delicate as these questions are, they must be faced with the utmost candor and decided in a spirit of real accommodation if peace is to come with healing in its wings and come to stay.

"Peace cannot be had without concession and sacrifice. There can be no sense of safety and equality among the nations if great preponderating armies are henceforth to continue here and there to be built up and maintained. The statesmen of the world must plan for peace and nations must adjust and accommodate their policy to it as they have planned for war and made ready for pitiless contest and rivalry. The question of armaments, whether on land or sea, is the most immediately and intensely practical question connected with the future fortunes of nations and of mankind.

The World's Desire

"I have spoken upon these great matters without reserve and with the utmost explicitness because it has seemed to me to be necessary if the world's yearning desire for peace was anywhere to find free voice and utterance. Perhaps I am the only person in high authority amongst all the peoples of the world who is at liberty to speak and hold nothing back. I am speaking as an individual and yet I am speaking also, of course, as the responsible head of a great Government, and I feel confident that I have said what the people of the United States would wish me to say.

"May I not add that I hope and believe that I am in effect speaking for liberals and friends of humanity in every nation and of every program of liberty? I would fain believe that I am speaking for the silent mass of mankind everywhere who have as yet had no place or opportunity to speak their real hearts out concerning the death and ruin they see to have come already upon the persons and the homes they hold most dear.

"And in holding out the expectation that the people and Government of the United States will join the other civilized nations of the world in guaranteeing the permanence of peace upon such terms as I have named, I speak with the greater boldness and confidence because it is clear to every man who can think that there is in this premise no breach in either our traditions or our policy as a nation, but a fulfilment, rather, of all that we have professed or striven for.

Monroe Doctrine for the World

"I am proposing, as it were, that the nations should with one accord adopt the doctrine of President Monroe as the doctrine of the world. That no nation should seek to extend its policy over any other nation or people, but that every people should be left free to determine its own policy, its own way of development, unhindered, unthreatened, unafraid, the little along with the great and powerful.

"I am proposing that all nations henceforth avoid entangling alliances which would draw them into competitions of power, catch them in a net of intrigue and selfish rivalry, and disturb their own affairs with influences intruded from without. There is no entangling alliance in a concert of power. When all unite to act in the same sense and with the same purpose all act in the common interest and are free to live their own lives under a common protection.

"I am proposing government by the consent of the governed; that freedom of the seas which in international conference after conference representatives of the United States have urged with the eloquence of those who are the convinced disciples of liberty; and that moderation of armaments which makes of armies and navies a power for order merely, not an instrument of aggression or of selfish violence.

"These are American principles, American policies. We can stand for no others. And they are also the principles and policies of forward looking men and women everywhere, of every modern nation, of every enlightened community. They are the principles of mankind and must prevail."

Comments of the Press on the President's Speech

AMONG the American press views differed, as might have been expected. The New York Times declared that "in one bold stroke, President Wilson removes the obstacles to world peace guaranteed by the world over which our peace league folks have been wrangling. . . . His address to the Senate is the President's greatest utterance. . . . It not only gives voice to the sentiment of the American people, but gives notice to all the world that in the great adjustments at the end of the war our views must be consulted." The New York Evening Mail declared: "It was a great speech. It was a blow in the face of those forces among the belligerents which looked to conquest, the acquisition of territory, the dismemberment of their opponents"

The Chicago Tribune said: "Mr. Wilson's proposals, however well they square with American theories and convictions, call for a good deal of consideration. . . . We build Utopias easily in our blessed land." Of the suggestion that each nation or people be left free to develop itself according to its own desires the Tribune said: "In the concrete this would seem to call for the relinquishment of Egypt and India by England, the withdrawal of Russian and British authority in Persia, the surrendering of Korea by Japan, of Tunis by Italy, of Morocco by France, and of the Philippines and Porto Rico by the United States."

The New York Evening Post said: "What the present holds for us is the act of an American President taking his courage in both hands, and uttering a word heard around the world; and that word is for peace, for the free expansion and the friendly intercourse of all the peoples of earth, and for a world order such as poets have longed for and prophets have proclaimed. No carping can destroy this lofty attitude, and we must not forget that the President's voice will carry to Europe as the voice of the United States, the voice of a mighty nation."

The New York World said: "Our belief is that President Wilson has enunciated the broad principles of liberty and justice upon which alone a durable peace is possible and under which the democracy of the world will ultimately come into its own."

The Kansas City Star said: "President Wilson undoubtedly has presented to the country a lofty ideal, and one that must arouse the sympathetic attention of the world."

The Baltimore Sun declared the speech a bold utterance, and the Baltimore American called it a pro-American doctrine. The St. Louis Republic said: "President Wilson is seeking to do away with war by proposing to the world an agreement upon the idea which in the United States has made one people of 100,000,000 whose forefathers came from every country of Europe."

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat said: "President Wilson's address to the Senate yesterday was an extraordinary event, amazing in its suddenness, spectacular in its setting, disquieting in its potentialities and admirable in its purpose. It is either a monumental mistake or an act that will fill a flaming page in history."

The New York Sun said: "For at least a thousand years to come a certain fact of yesterday will stand among the double-starred curiosities of history. It is the fact that the same President of the United States who, through administrative inefficiency, failed for nearly four years to secure peace just across our own border in Mexico, mounted a rostrum where he had no business to be, to lecture the whole world on the terms upon which peace in Europe should be made."

The New York Staats-Zeitung said: "Upon the principles enunciated by the President yesterday must be based the only saving peace that can come to the world, and the only peace for the permanency of which the American people can willingly loan their support." The Des Moines, Iowa, Register and Leader said: "The question before the United States is not whether we shall forsake our isolation, but whether we shall forsake it on the side of peace or on the side of war. President Wilson has spoken for peace."

Opinion abroad seemed to be rather more favorable on the continent than in England.

The Westminster Gazette under the heading "The Washington Sensation" asked whether "if President Wilson had suffered what the Entente Allies have, he would patiently listen to a third party telling him he must be content to end the war without winning it and to forget penalties against the enemy who had sprung the war."

The Central News said: "The extreme opinion, which in fairness must be given, is that the President is selling the Allied cause to Germany."

Baron Sydenham, former chairman of the British Air Board, said: "The strength of President Wilson's address lies in the high ideal by which it was inspired. He sees as in a vision a new world in which there shall be no preparation for war, but a solid union of all peoples acting in the common interest. That is an ideal in which all right-thinking peoples of all countries can share."

In Berlin, the Kreuz-Zeitung declared the message an appeal to the conscience of nations. The Germania asked whether the President's demand for universal self-government implied a change in the German political system, and decided that this was improbable, because the message itself set forth the right of self-government to all nations. The Tageblatt fully endorsed the general principles of the message and declared that the problems of Gibraltar, the Suez Canal and other strategical positions ought to be taken into consideration. The Socialist Vorwarts said: "The President of the United States has laid down principles for a future European peace which are as much acceptable as a basis of discussion

Continued on page 154

Peter's Roses

By Jean Mahan Plank

THEY were blooming sumptuously—the roses in Peter's greenhouse—on the March morning that he told me the Great Thing.

I had gone over to gather two or three dozen for the birthday of a friend, following Peter soon after breakfast. As it was Saturday, I left Peterkind at home in the bungalow with Firio San, our little art student.

Greenhouses in Pasadena being not really houses, but a succession of pergolas, I strolled slowly under the shimmering vines, sprayed by the soft March sunrays striking through the foliage, and reveling in the riot of roses, roses everywhere. Such colors! In Peter's hands, the usual delicate, fragile, bloodless beauty of the roses of Southern California gives place to the healthy richness of roses of the North. But the colors—tawny yellow with centers of apricot; white with delicate pink edges; salmon with brown foliage; orange, buff, peach, and such red, red roses as never were!

Does Peter love his roses? I have never heard him say so; but when any one says roses to him, there comes a soft light in his kind gray eyes, and a smile shines through his strong, Emerson face; a light and smile almost like those which glow and shine when he suddenly sees Peterkind and me.

They flashed that morning as I turned a corner and entered the little bungalow office. When Peter left his desk, however, and put both hands on my shoulders instead of around me, something told me that he had more on his mind than simply greeting his wife after a separation of three-quarters of an hour.

I looked about. "Where is Jessie?" I asked. That is the young girl who makes up wreaths and bouquets.

"Gone to Los Angeles on some errands," Peter responded absently.

"Then there's no one else in this part of the grounds?"

He shook his head. I snuggled up to him with that little chuckling feeling I always have when I know I'm all alone with Peter.

"Oh, let's talk!" I bubbled; "must you work?"

He laughed and looked at me strangely.

"Well, I've something to talk about now, Rosebud," he said. "I found it here on my desk when I came over. I was just coming home again when you came in."

My face sobered. He hastened to add: "Nothing bad, Rosebud. At least—" He laughed again.

"Let's sit on the steps," I suggested. "You know we have always threshed things out on these steps ever since I was old enough to talk." I drew him to the door.

STILL wearing that strange look, Peter sat down on the worn wooden top step, and I lower down so I could clasp his knee. A rose vine climbing over the roof of the little office bungalow, and hanging from its wide eaves, dropped crimson velvet petals upon my white flannel gown. I let them wind about my fingers, and they felt just like the clasp of tiny baby hands.

"Rose, you remember I had made a thorough preparation for college when I was seventeen——"

I dropped the rose-leaves and listened tensely. I love to have him talk about those years.

"And you know I couldn't go on, because——"

"Yes, because"—I helped him tell it—"because father died and mother collapsed, and there were the three boys to be educated and the business kept going. So of course you gave up college and just stayed home and worked the greenhouse."

Peter's smile shone. His hand reached out to smooth my hair. "But I wasn't without a consolation, Rosebud, while the boys were going to school and getting married and well settled, and even when mother died."

I looked up. "The books?"

"Well—yes, the books, of course. But before you can remember, when I was sixteen, father and mother gave up hoping for a little sister for us boys, and they began to talk about adopting an orphan baby-girl."

This was a part I always loved to hear. I leaned closer to him.

"So, one day, when I came home from school, mother called me into the living-room, and there, in her lap, was the cunningest little year-and-a-half-old baby you ever saw. She had blue eyes——"

"Which became greenish, later——"

"And golden hair——"

"Which turned tow-color——"

Peter's hand went over my mouth. He continued: "Well, when I saw that frail bit of a being, and felt the tiny fingers close over one of mine, I thought of a delicate little rose I had been working over that morning in the greenhouse, trying to save its life; and right away I said: 'Let's call her Rose!'"

"Peter! You named me—or her, I mean? I didn't know that before."

"Yes. Mother was pleased with the name, so Rose it was. As the years went by——"

"Lots of years, Peter, in which you grew more and more silent, more and more kind and patient; spending long days in the greenhouse, and in the evenings going straight to your bookcases—which gradually came to line the walls—and took out the books one by one, and fingered them as if you loved them."

"The books were a consolation, that's true, Rosebud," he admitted musingly; "but at times they made me sad too. I never told you before, Rose; I didn't want that sweet sympathy of yours to take on an unnecessary burden; but even when I was a boy studying for college, my one great aim and idea was to write a book. It was a vague idea, but I knew I wanted it to be a book that would help—a book that people who worked would take off the shelf when they were tired, and catch a sentence here and there."

"Yes, yes, I know," I interpolated eagerly; "like the books you keep at the end of the shelves nearest the kitchen, where I can run in and read a bit while I'm waiting for the potatoes to boil."

Peter laughed fondly. "The ones you call 'Emerson books.'"

A COUNTRY CHURCH

BY W. Livingston Larned

THE breath of spring is sweet today,
And warm, with promises of rose
The very mountains seem to pray:
Each stream a sacrament that flows.
A white spire rises to the blue,
And fluttering pigeons, at its crest,
Bring down the Sabbath sky to you,
And fill the whole sweet day with rest.

God must have searched the countryside,
Until he found this little place
On which to build, and to abide,
So fair it is with holy grace.
Around about, the fresh green hills,
And meadows, and a winding road,
That wanders onward where it wills,
Past virgin wood and man's abode.

The doors are closed; the organ hushed;
Twixt prayer and prayer, the hour now;
But April's maiden cheek is flushed,
And buds are bursting on each bough.
You tiptoe up the well-worn stair;
Then, breathless, with uncovered head,
Catch faint, soft sound of whispered prayer,
As spring untombs her living dead.

The organ-loft of mountain peaks
Sends down an anthem, and you hear
The sermon that all Nature speaks
When God—and summer rains—are near Earth, conscious of its mighty part,
Grows radiant with an altar fire,
And from the wide world's happy heart
There sings a magic Sabbath choir.

I LAUGHED too. You see, I didn't have a college education either, although Peter tried to drive me to it. But the time when I might have gone was just the time when mother was failing the worst, and I knew what the double expense would mean to Peter. So, for the only time in my life, I think, I refused to obey him. But as the years passed, and I bustled and sang about the housework, I began to dip into that end of the bookcases near the kitchen while I waited for a cake to bake, or for the folks to come to supper. I began to find wonderful things in Emerson's books, and after a while similar things written by other people. But I didn't have time to fix so many names in my mind, so I got to dubbing them all "Emerson books." I have a friend who calls them her "Bible books." Anyway, whatever you name them, they are books that just send you out again to your work with a new song on your lips and a new hope in your heart.

"Yes," Peter went on, "I wanted very much to write a book like that. But still I'm glad I've had the life and the work. For the sake of the little Rose-baby, I learned to be tender and loving to the little rose-flowers. I finally found myself fairly making a specialty of roses, and they certainly act as if they liked my care."

One of his roses, at this juncture, laid her head upon his knee. "And the Rose-baby, Peter? There is part you have forgotten."

He stooped and kissed my cheek. "The Rose-baby was the dearest thing in life to me."

"You didn't tell her so, Peter," I murmured with my face against his knee.

"No. How could I spoil that innocent young life by setting my selfish——"

"But all the time," I put in softly, half wanting to cry, "that innocent young life was making romances in her heart. She imagined a wonderful knight who would protect the life and satisfy the heart. And then one evening—remember, Peter?"

"Remember!"

"The innocent young life found out that her knight was sitting right there with her before the grate fire and reading a splendid book, and looking like a picture of Emerson. Wasn't it wonderful, Peter?" I raised my head and reached up my arms to him wistfully. "You won't mind very much, will you, that the book didn't get written?"

"But, Rose—" he hesitated, "I've written a book."

I sprang to my feet. "Peter Barlow! Why didn't you tell me?"

He arose too, and held my excited hands in his.

"But darling, it's only a book about roses. Kind of dry stuff. It has sort of grown with the years, and when I sent it off to find a publisher, I didn't tell you, because I didn't want you to be disappointed. But here's a letter I got several months ago." He drew it from his breast-pocket and handed it to me; then he stepped into the office.

The letter puzzled me just a bit. The name of the man who wrote it was about as familiar as my own, for it's on the backs of a lot of the "Emerson books."

"Why, he says he wants two more," I called to Peter; "but what does he mean by—" I began to speak slowly, but suddenly stopped. One of my "lights," as I call them, flashed over me.

Peter came out carrying a lovely book bound in rose-color and moss green. He smiled, then laughed.

"It's queer how pleased any finished work makes a fellow. Now I'm as tickled over this book on growing roses as if I'd really written the book I dreamed of in my fanciful boyish days. After all, it may help a little—help people to do their work well. Perhaps it's all for the best."

"Peter"—my voice was breathless—"let me take that book—now—home with me." He put it in my hand. I added remorsefully: "I know you haven't had time even to glance at it, but, someway—I want to see it first."

"Well, it's your book, Rosebud. You'll see that on the front page."

As he spoke, Jessie came hurrying through the pergolas. I didn't want to talk to anybody just then. I waved my hand to her, clasped the rose and green volume in my arms, hastened over the two blocks between the greenhouse and our home, and vanished behind the closed door of my bedroom.

SITTING in a low rocker, I turned the rose and green book over and over, and read the title.

"'The Spirit of the Rose.' Dry stuff, indeed!" I scoffed. I opened the book at random and read:

"The life of a rose always suggests to me the three-fold aspects of a prayer. The pushing up through the dark earth to find the light is Aspiration; the steady, persistent working toward the bud is Faith; and when, with abandon, it throws its perfumed petals wide open to the sun, there is Resignation, like that of the soul which rests its hopes and its work in the Will of God."

The dryness of this stuff made me thirst for more. I turned the pages.

"When a rose-bush acts in this way, it reminds me of people who make wreckage of their lives by praying with persistent demands for the wrong things. Their desires become ghosts before they are realized. They are the footballs of their own longings."

Again my eye was caught by sentences that stood out from the context.

". . . as in Emerson's line, 'You must be like them if you desire them.' If we would put ourselves to achieving the likeness that draws the friend, the qualities that command the place, the virtues that expand the powers, instead of grieving like froward children, how soon should we find ourselves, by causal relation, connecting with the current that inevitably flows to the Desired!"

I closed the book, stopping only long enough to glance ecstatically at the dedication: "To my Rose-Queen—My Wife"; then I laid the volume reverently in the center of my bed-spread, and went out to make a mince pie for dinner. I found time, moreover, to help Peterkind gather some of the newly ripened, downy apricots before twelve o'clock came, bringing Peter up the path with some ribbon-grass plants for the base of my sun-dial.

He waved his hand to me and went on around the bungalow toward the sunny place at the back of the grounds in which the dial stands. I ran to my room, seized the new book and dashed through the house and down the back path to the circle of rose-trees which Peter had already reached. The dials in the center of this circle.

I held the book, opened, close to my heart, which was beating rapidly. "Peter—Peter Barlow!" I said

Continued on page 153

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

The President and World Peace

PRESIDENT WILSON'S peace speech before the Senate is closely identical in spirit and scope with what the Christian Herald has been contending for and what we have been praying for. It, therefore, needs little interpretation to our readers, except as to details.

The message is not directed wholly, or even primarily, to governments. It is directed to mankind. It is not in the guarded language of cunning diplomacy, but in the bold, open utterance of the human heart. It is the voice of freedom offering hope to the world's oppressed, the spirit of peace drawing close to the battle-shambles.

It is indeed an uplifting program which the President has submitted for the world's consideration. The greatest war of all time has been fought to a standstill, and a situation has arisen which baffles the ablest warriors and the most astute statesmen. With every nation in Europe yearning for peace, the wisdom of the cabinets, the skill of the strategists, can hold out no hope. With Germany, on the one hand, willing to discuss terms with a view to ultimate peace, and on the other the Allies willing to make peace only after Germany shall have been decisively beaten, the prospect was only one of continued struggle.

Now, with a blow like that of a mighty hammer, Truth has struck the door wide open again. President Wilson, as the spokesman of the peace-loving millions in all lands, declares that peace, come when it will, should be a peace without victory.

It must be clearly understood that the President does not seek to dictate terms of peace; but simply sets forth the only conditions under which the United States would hereafter become party to any concert of powers to preserve future peace. "The present war must first be ended," he says, and "we shall have no voice in determining what the terms shall be," but "the treaties and agreements which bring it to an end must embody terms which will create a peace worth guaranteeing and preserving, a peace that will win the approval of mankind, not merely a peace that will serve the several interests and immediate aims of the nations engaged." Before America will join in guaranteeing permanency of peace, the settlement, in the President's judgment, must include these four essential items:

1. No triumph for either set of belligerents.
2. Recognition of the principle that just government rests on the consent of the governed.
3. Freedom of the seas.
4. Limitation of land and naval armaments.

As to the soundness of three of these propositions all Americans are traditionally agreed. That governments derive just power only from the consent of the governed is the first fundamental of our Declaration of Independence. America has always demanded freedom of the seas. America has always sought to minimize naval and military establishments. The President has only projected upon the world screen these three traditional American principles. It is only in the first item of the four that it is not certain that the President represents the united idea of America. And this—the ending of the war without victory to either side—is a question with which neutral America has nothing directly to do, and is not called upon to deal until after its decision. And yet this, because of its appeal to the superficial emotions and to partisan feelings, is to be the very subject of fiercest controversy among us. The extreme pro-Allies regard this point as pro-German, and the extreme pro-Germans regard it as pro-Ally. Over this futile furore we need not be concerned. In truth, the proposition is pro-All—for belligerents and neutrals, big and little. A vision so vast is opened to us that the great war itself becomes but an incident and partisanship in it shrinks to insignificance.

THERE are those who mock at President Wilson's peace suggestions and deride them as visionary and impertinent; but all who consider the address seriously as it deserves, will take a different attitude. The nations that are praying for peace welcome the President's words as an evangel of truth, spoken when truth was sorely needed. Even while the partisan journals and some of the political leaders in Great Britain, France and Russia flout the message, those great British journals that are really representative of enlightened public opinion, like the Manchester Guardian and the London Daily News, endorse the address as "a splendid policy, nobly expressed," which will be received joyfully "by men of good will and enlightenment everywhere." "This," the Guardian affirms, "is no vision of Utopia, but the well thought out and justly framed scheme of a man in a great position and versed in great affairs. His words will find an echo in many hearts; and words are sometimes deeds."

President Wilson's message strikes no absolutely new note, but it sets in a new key, and at the fitting moment, thoughts that have been expressed at different times by many others since the war began. We can recall, over a year ago, how voices were raised both in the United Kingdom and Canada, declaring that after this war there must be no more mastery of the seas, that all nations alike must be securely confirmed in the right to self-government and development, and that the great armaments should be reduced to the point needed for safeguarding peace and no more. Now, after two and one-half years of this tremendous conflict, at an almost incredible sacrifice of blood and treasure, the problem has become so urgent that Europe can no longer afford to close its ears to the appeal of reason and humanity. The President's voice, therefore, comes at the fitting time. All the five continents have heard the message. Can any one doubt that, whatever governments may say, the great majority of all the peoples themselves will give it a joyful endorsement? It is the wise counsel of the head of a great and friendly nation, who is showing them the only safe way to obtain release from the powers of darkness which, if not soon restrained, will leave Europe a shattered wreck.

IT is being, and will continue to be, erroneously asserted that the President's proposed course involves abandonment of the Monroe Doctrine. It is not abandonment which is proposed, but extension. Stern aloofness from unrighteous foreign intrigues is one thing; hearty cooperation in world peace and justice is quite another. So long as the alliances of Europe were of jealousies and rivalries and contests for balance of European power, we could not safely become entangled in them nor permit those alliances to threaten the peace or hinder the progress of the republics of our hemisphere. But a world-wide compact, based upon the rights and freedom of all nations and all peoples, to maintain peace and justice throughout the world, is a very different matter. The President puts it clearly in proposing, as it were, that the nations should, with one accord, adopt the Monroe Doctrine as the doctrine of the world—that no nation should seek to extend its own policy over any other nation or people, but that every people should be left free to determine its own policy, its own way of development, unhindered, unthreatened, unafraid, the little along with the great and powerful. It is not the Monroe Doctrine's form or scope that is unalterably fixed, but its principle. It is not we who up to this time have limited its form or scope. As far as the world accepts the principle it is the property of mankind. And we who have nurtured, tested and defended it for a century would be recreant and craven not to stand for it wherever it may stand.

IS America strong enough to assume this responsibility? That depends upon America. The strength needed is not military, but moral. Now is the test of America's fidelity to its long-asserted ideals.

No man can know where this course may lead. But we do know that, actuated by justice, humanity and courage, it leads in the direction of right. The rest is with God.

Optimist and Pessimist

JIM JONES is an optimist, and Sam Smith of the same town is a pessimist. When it rains Sam Smith complains that it is going to be muddy; but Jim Jones, wreathed in smiles, says that rain is a mighty good thing to lay the dust. When the sun shines again Sam kicks about the dust; but Jim, still smiling, sees that sunshine dries up the mud. Sam complains that business is not half as good as it was when it was twice as good as it is; Jim congratulates himself that business is twice as good as it was when it was only half as good as it is.

These two men, living in the same town and under the same natural conditions, see things oppositely, and the one is always happy and the other always miserable. The difference lies back of their eyes, not in front of them.

The pessimist goes about with a lantern, peering into the dark places, looking for meanness and things to find fault about. The optimist goes about in the bright sunshine, looking for the beautiful things, and finding lots of them.

The pessimist not only warps his mind, but his physique as well, and his influence on others is decidedly depressing. The optimist rises in the morning with gladness in his heart, sunshine in his face, and smiles upon his lips. The mere privilege of living is priceless joy to him.

Happiness, it has been said, is a mosaic composed of very small gems. Each, taken singly, may be of little value; but when all are grouped together, arranged and set, they form a pleasing whole.

One who must try to get away from himself and out of his natural environment to find happiness will never find it. We carry with us the beauty we visit and the song which enchants us or else they don't exist for us at all.

The Folly of False Pretense

SOME wit once remarked of a fine house that it was Queen Anne in front but Mary Ann at the back.

So with many a one's character. In front, on its public side, it is classic and beautiful; but on its rear, or private side, it is coarse and unclean.

Let's not be Corinthian pillars in front and dirty wall at the back. Let's see to it that the back yard of the character is as clean as the front yard. Let's make the life as pure and beautiful throughout as it shows on the front, so that we may fearlessly conduct any visitor not only into the parlor and dining-room, but through the kitchen and cellar. We must be ready to entertain angels as well as mortals, and fear not the all-penetrating vision of either.

There is a vision which penetrates walls of brick and plaster, which reveals things hid, which is as keen in darkness as in light, which sees the garbage barrel from the front veranda, though we had supposed it safely hidden behind the house.

We are as transparent as crystal. The least spot or taint or blemish or false pretense in us will become visible to all keen eyes. When we most try to conceal we are most loudly proclaiming our secret. What a man thinks sitting in his easy chair in his front room will inevitably find expression in his kitchen, his cellar and his back yard; and just as surely will the garbage in his back yard poison the thoughts that he thinks sitting in his front room. What, then, avail walls, words, clothes, manners, or any other form of professions that are lies?

Life with many is a masquerade, in which they seek to disguise themselves with masks—that are as transparent as glass. What a farce!

Let's put away pretense and resolve to serve reality. Let's be just what we would appear to be. It would simplify our lives amazingly. Anyway, we are fooling nobody but ourselves.

Hard Work and Poor Pay

"ANYBODY who works for a living in Chicago is a 'sucker.' A good hard-luck story will get money on the street any time."

So says a professional beggar who for years has played easy "suckers," and, as he imagines, without working.

But the chances are that to catch his "suckers" he has had to work harder than many an honest man who makes a good living. And now he is in the poorhouse.

It is harder to beg a dollar than to earn one.

It is harder to frame a plausible lie than to tell the truth; harder to appeal to generosity than to business sense.

And he who gets a dollar for nothing in this world has to exert enough ingenuity and effort to have earned it twice over.

The faker, binding his arm to his body and displaying an appealing empty sleeve, stands all day and far into the night in all kinds of weather for a charitable pittance which an honest workingman at wholesome and congenial occupation would despise as paltry pay.

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D.D.

Pearl in New Year's Dinner

AS he was eating his New Year's dinner, Mr. John N. Roach, Sr., of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., struck something hard with his teeth. It was not a bone, as might be expected, but a pearl—a real pearl of commercial value. He learned from experts that the stone was worth $1,000. He gave it as a present to his daughter. There is the story of a man in lower New York, a professional oyster-opener, who watched every shell he opened for forty years for a pearl that would make him rich, and never found one. And here is a man not hunting jewels who finds one in his dinner. There were many jewelers among the Jews. Among their choice gems was the pearl. Christ thus refers to it in teaching the paramount value of his salvation: "Who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it." (Matt. 13 : 46.)

Saves Mother from Fire

PETER SCHNELLER, a boy of thirteen, dropped what he was doing the other night when the engineer of the St. Mark's Avenue Hotel in Brooklyn stuck his head through the door of the basement kitchen and yelled, "Hi, Pete, you better skedaddle; the building's afire." Pete started in haste up the stairs to the top floor where his sick mother and sister Elizabeth, three years old, were. He got up two flights nicely, but on the third stairs the smoke was black and stifling. He touched the button and threw on the electric lights. On the fourth stairway his eyes were so stung that he could not see, and so he crawled up them and along the hall to his mother's room with the floors burning and roaring. He grabbed Elizabeth in his arms, took his mother by the hand and got them to a fire escape and half way down it, when the firemen swinging around the corner saw them and hoisted ladders and helped them down amidst the cheers of the crowd. Just then the father came around from his bakery just in time to give them all a hug and tell Pete what a good, brave boy he was to go up and save mother and sister from the flames. This thirteen-year-old boy was a real hero. He never thought an instant of his own life in his earnest desire to save his mother and sister. What an inspiration he gives us to undertake the physical and spiritual salvation of others! The words Paul spoke of himself can be used with reference to the boy: "Neither count I my life dear unto me." (Acts 20 : 24.)

Pathetic Meeting of Sisters

TWO sisters, separated by thousands of miles and a quarter of a century of time, met unexpectedly at the Home of the Daughters of Jacob in New York, which is a home for aged women to which none under sixty years can be admitted. The sisters were both Russians, born in Kovno. The elder one, Heinde, left for the United States twenty-five years ago. The younger, Jennie, followed after five years, but failed to find any trace of her sister. She became Mrs. Jennie Horowitz and lived in Brooklyn. Her husband died last year and last month she was admitted to the Old Women's Home at the age of sixty-seven. Heinde, who became Mrs. Leibowitz, lived with her daughter in the Bronx until last week, when she, an old sick woman of eighty years, was admitted to the same Home for the Daughters of Jacob. Neither knew that the other was there. The younger women aid in serving the older and sick ones. Mrs. Horowitz was sent with a bowl of chicken soup to the new inmate, Mrs. Leibowitz. "Here is some broth for you," said Mrs. Horowitz kindly, as she entered the room where the partially paralyzed woman lay. Then the bowl crashed to the floor as the sick woman screamed, "Sister, sister, sister!" Mrs. Horowitz fell to the floor in a faint, from which she soon revived. The head nurse heard the crash of the bowl and the scream and ran to the scene, and learning the facts she left the sisters to themselves for a time. Families are scattered over the face of the earth, some to meet occasionally, others never to meet. Some have gone out from our homes into the other life. They will never come back to us, and we shall not see them again with our physical eyes. But the precious Saviour came to tell us that death is not the end, but only the beginning of life, and that our loved ones who have gone away from us are awaiting us, and that we shall go to them and enjoy their blessed companionship forever in the home where Christ is, which makes it heaven. This is the promise to our loved ones and ourselves: "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." (John 14 : 2.)

Leading His Favorite Horse at the Funeral of Prince Oyama

PRINCE OYAMA, who was born in Kagoshima in 1844 and recently died, had a state funeral in the city of Tokio December 17, 1916. In 1877 Oyama commanded a brigade in the Satsuma rebellion and was afterward under-secretary and later minister of war. In the Chino-Japanese War he achieved a series of brilliant successes, capturing Kiaochau, Port Arthur, Weihaiwei, and other cities. At the breaking out of the Russo-Japanese War he was made commander-in-chief of the the forces in Manchuria. Modern Japan in her elder statesmen and generals has presented some of the greatest leaders the Far East and the world have had. Oyama was a national idol. Fortunately Japan has a younger race of statesmen and generals, worthy successors of those who have gone. The emperor and people of Japan at the death of Prince Oyama might have repeated these words of David the king at the death of one of his generals: "Know ye not that there is a prince and a great man fallen this day in Israel?" (II Sam. 3 : 38.)

Buried in Soldier's Uniform

WILLIAM BISHOP, father of Rev. George Bishop, pastor of the Bushwick Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church of Brooklyn, an old man of fourscore years and four, made a dying request that he be buried in his soldier's uniform. The request was granted, and his widow of fourscore years and his four devoted children put his body asleep as a soldier under the flag and among the flowers till the reunion on the other side. Mr. Bishop enlisted in the Civil War at its beginning, and continued in it, being with the Union forces at Appomattox. He carried the colors in more than twenty battles, and the Stars and Stripes were woven into the very texture of his soul. What a splendid symbol of the soldier of the Lord Jesus Christ, with the Cross as his standard and Christ his Captain! One of the great moral soldier heroes on leaving the world said: "I have fought a good fight." (II Tim. 4 : 7.)

Governor Stops Mob

REESTABLISHMENT of law and order through the personal efforts of Governor A. O. Stanley of Kentucky was effected the other night after a period of intense excitement which threatened the death of Circuit Court Judge Charles Bush and District Attorney Denny Smith at the hands of a mob, which had become angered because the trial of Luke Martin, a negro, charged with the murder of Guthrie Duiguild, a white man, had been deferred. Notified that the mob was threatening the lives of the court officials, Governor Stanley chartered a special train and started for Murray, saying he would give the mob "a chance to lynch the governor of Kentucky first." His first move, on reaching the scene of disorder, was to deputize seventy-five citizens and order them to prevent at all costs any outbreak. His next was to make an address to the crowd, which filled the courtroom when court convened. "A little more than a year ago," he said. "I put my right hand upon a Bible and called God to witness that as chief magistrate of Kentucky and supporter of the law I would maintain its integrity. I have come here to plead with you to allow the law to take its orderly course, and to declare that I am here to uphold the law and to protect this court, with my own body if necessary." The special train was left standing with steam up, ready for an emergency. Open threats were made on the streets that any attempt to remove Judge Bush from Murray or to prevent the trial today of Martin would place the governor's own life in danger. The governor spirited Martin into another county, went to the hotel and with his deputy sheriffs protected the judge and prosecuting attorney and broke up the mob. Martin will be tried by due process of law and will be convicted as he should be, if the evidence is against him. Good for Governor Stanley! He is a brave man, and deserves the congratulations of his own state and the nation. A large number of the riots that disgrace our civilization would never occur if the governors and sheriffs had the courage of the Kentucky governor. There was a mob in Ephesus which threatened the life of Paul, and an officer of the law by his physical and moral bravery quieted it, saying among other things: "For we are in danger to be called in question for this day's uproar, there being no cause whereby we may give an account of this concourse." (Acts 19 : 40.)

$500 Prize After Death

IT has just been announced that Dr. J. Noble Stockett, Jr., an instructor at Dartmouth College, who ended his life in September because of overwork, is the winner of $500 for an economic essay. Dr. Stockett was only twenty-seven years of age. His exceedingly brilliant mind goaded him to excessive study, which unbalanced his reason and drove him to suicide. This is another one of the many victims of a laudable ambition. The enterprising workman stuffs his lungs with the dust of the factory, the inventor chokes with the fumes of the laboratory, the merchant wears his heart out prematurely by the speed of the race, the accountant crumples himself up physically by bending over his desk, the student goes insane by his voracious appetite to know. We do not understand the maladjustments of modern civilization that make these wrecks so common. We shall see them some day, and remedy them. The fate of the brilliant instructor calls to mind these words: "And further, by these, my son, be admonished: of making many books there is no end; and much study is a weariness of the flesh." (Eccles. 12 : 12.)

Tramp Walks 180,000 Miles

HENRY J. FERRIER, a most remarkable tramp, was taken before a police court in New York the other day for not having a muzzle on his great Dane Leon. He told Magistrate Breen that he had left his home in Paris on July 12, 1890; that since then he had traveled on foot 180,000 miles, and had visited every country on the earth, including Alaska, Iceland, Siberia, Tibet, and China; that he had been in every large city in the world. He said he had worn out 300 pairs of boots, fifty suits of clothes, and 150 shirts. He said he made his way selling a book with an account of his travels and photographs of himself. The people in the court room looked with amazement not unmixed with suspicion when he produced twenty-five autograph albums, with the signatures of many of the leading rulers and officials of the world. Judge Breen signed his name and let Ferrier and his huge dog, finely harnessed, go. The tramp said that he was going to sail for France to visit the family he had not seen since 1890. Mankind is a race of tramps. Mother understood what it meant when burdened with work or saddened with sorrow, but with a countenance lighted with the face of Christ, and with a sweet voice, she sang: "I'm but a pilgrim here, heaven is my home." The restless, trudging pilgrims of earth, when the tramp is over, turn their faces, like Ferrier, toward home. Israel's poet caught and thus expressed the thought: "I am a stranger with thee, and a sojourner, as all my fathers were." (Ps. 39 : 12.)

SECOND BIBLE PICTURE STUDY

The Bible Picture Study a Secret of Power

WHEN a hopeful seeker after fortune drives a well in land where he believes he will find oil, and there suddenly gushes out a terrific torrent of oil that assures his fortune is made, he feels somewhat as we of the Christian Herald felt when the results of our first Bible Picture Study came flooding through the mails.

We, however, were not after a fortune for ourselves, but for our readers. We hoped that through the Bible Picture Study all who took part would receive a great deal of benefit in Bible knowledge, and we knew that many of them would receive material reward. But we have been fairly overwhelmed by the testimony as to the benefits which the participants in the first Study received.

The cash rewards, especially the larger ones, appear in every case to have been a blessing to the recipients. They were well worth the winning, and served worthy purposes in every cace. But we are particularly delighted and encourage by the realization that so many, thousands upon thousands, now know far more about all of their Bible than they ever knew before; have a better command of the English language; have more retentive memories; have greater powers of concentration; have cultivated the art of self-control; are better Bible teachers, and better Gospel workers, and better men and women for having engaged in that First Bible Picture Study. Small wonder, then, that we are now both planning and hoping for the same benefits in even greater measure for those who engage in the Second Bible Picture Study.

What You May Experience

WE like to feel that in every feature of our Bible Picture Study there is an impulse for good. In the Second Study, now beginning, there is the same interesting path to Bible knowledge as before—the repeated acquainting of the participant with Bible verses that bring home everlasting truths. In the cash rewards, too, the opportunity for good is hardly less, for the one thousand cash sums may return happiness and comfort to their winners, and a tithe may indeed be given to any good purpose the giver may choose.

"It is more blessed to give than to receive" is realized with greatest satisfaction when, out of some bounty that good fortune has granted, a part can be given to the furtherance of some good work. This has been realized to the full by many winners in the First Bible Picture Study, now ended. It will be realized as well by many winners of the Second Bible Picture Study, which is just starting.

$5,628.00 Will Be Distributed

IN all, $5,628.00 will be awarded in the Second Study, beginning with a cash reward of $1,000.00, and continuing through one thousand separate rewards. Among the gifts are such sums as $800.00, $600.00, $400.00, $200.00, and so on, each in cash. Here indeed is an abundance, any one of which may be gained by you who are reading these lines.

These sums are but an incentive to the real purpose of the Second Bible Picture Study, which is that of Bible instruction, by the use of pictures portraying scenes or truths from the Bible.

A series of sixty of these pictures will be printed in the Christian Herald, and any one entering the Study at any time can obtain all the pictures which have appeared, and also the handy Outfit for competing in the Study.

We have selected 2,000 verses from the Bible, and have designated them the official list of verses in the Study. Participants will choose from this restricted list the verses that they believe best fit or answer the pictures. Those making the best selections will be declared winners of the Study, and awarded the cash rewards.

Convenience of the Outfit

ALL the 2,000 verses (comprising a carefully compiled series of promises, precepts and prophecies) have been printed in a handy little volume called "Pearls from the Bible," and all participants are offered this convenient booklet, in connection with the Christian Herald, as explained below.

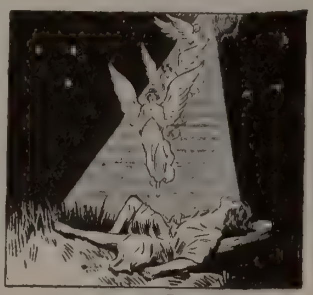
With "Pearls from the Bible" an Answer Book is given, in which the verses selected for the pictures may be written. In the Answer Book as many as five different verses may be submitted for each picture.

Thus by securing the pictures from the Christian Herald, and by securing "Pearls from the Bible" and the Answer Book, a participant will be fully equipped to engage in the Study most conveniently, spending many a pleasant and interesting evening in the worth-while competition. Every one may compete by making up his or her own Outfit, if desired—that is, by drawing each picture, by writing the verses down on sheets of paper, and by hunting up the verses in the Bible itself, according to the references by book, chapter and verse number which we will supply on request. The Rules, free to every one, tell all details of how to compete without making any outlay whatever.

An Object Lesson for You

HERE is an example picture, to show you how the Study itself operates. It shows a young man asleep at the foot of a ladder leading from earth to heaven, Angels are ascending and descending.

Glance over the verses, and see if you can find one that fits what the picture shows.



Example Picture

And he said, Hear thou therefore the word of the Lord: I saw the Lord sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left. I Kings 22:19.

And he dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven; and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it. Gen. 28:12.

How much then is a man etter than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days. Matt. 12:12.

For the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God. James 1:20.

Did you choose the second verse? We knew you would, for that verse corresponds to the picture, and the other verses do not.

Now Look at the Two Study Pictures

GLANCE now at the two Bible Picture Study pictures. Couldn't you choose, from among the 2,000 verses, one or more to fit each of those pictures? You need no special Bible knowledge, for you can look over the verses as well as any one, and form your opinion as to which verse best applies to each picture. And in doing that you will immeasurably increase your Bible knowledge, and learn much of sacred history and joy-bringing truths.

It is not difficult, in looking over the short list of 2,000 verses comprising "Pearls from the Bible," to find verses that correspond more or less closely to the pictures. Then comes the pleasant task of determining which verse or verses fit best of all for each picture. Those participants who best exercise their common sense and judgment in making selections will gain the rewards.

You yourself may win first reward, while gaining a priceless fund of Bible knowledge and spiritual strength. You, as well as any other person anywhere, can read over the short list of 2,000 verses, and select those that fit the pictures best. We cordially invite you to enter and compete, on an equality with all.

How to Secure the Complete Outfit

1. Free with a NEW 6 Months' Subscription

THE complete Outfit for convenient participation in the Second Bible Picture Study consisting of "Pearls from the Bible," the Answer Book, and all pictures (back pictures are sent you free when you order the Outfit), may be secured by any subscriber who sends in one new six months' subscription to the Christian Herald, accompanied by the regular price of $1.00. You may secure this subscription from some friend or neighbor who will pay the dollar, or you may give the subscription as a present to a friend or neighbor, and yourself forward the dollar. The Christian Herald will be a welcome guest in any home, and it may accomplish much good in bringing a Christian influence where now not enough thought is taken of the spiritual side of life.

2. With a Renewal Subscription

Or you may renew your own subscription for one year, enclosing $2.35, and thus at little extra cost you will be sent the complete Outfit.

Whichever way you wish to enter the Study, you can use the Order Form herewith.

"Pearls from the Bible" a New Book

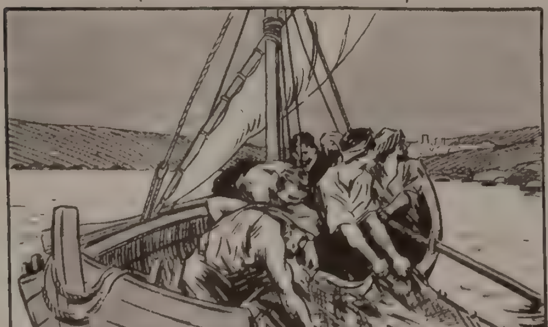
The Second Bible Picture Study is new in every respect—new pictures, new list of verses ("Pearls from the Bible") and a new Answer Book.

"Pearls from the Bible" is a careful grouping of Promises, Precepts and Prophecies. "Gems from the Bible" (the book used in the First Bible Picture Study) is useless in the Second Study. "Pearls from the Bible" contains all the verses which will be eligible as answers in the Second Study.

Prospectus Mailed Free

The Prospectus, giving more detailed information about the Christian Herald Second Bible Picture Study, will be mailed free on request. Ask for the Bible Picture Study Prospectus. Address: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York City, N. Y.

Picture No. 7



BIBLE PICTURE STUDY COUPON

CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York

Gentlemen: For the enclosed $——— send the Christian Herald for 6 months / 1 year to

Name ....

Address ....

....

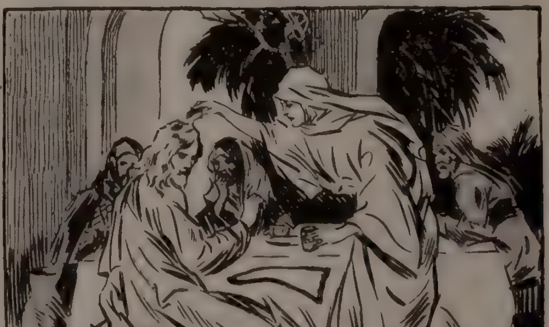
Send the Bible Picture Study Outfit to

Name ....

Address ....

....

Picture No. 8



Japan Training For World Trade

By
MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

A woman is a woman
the world over

JAPAN is taking the war lightly. With her ammunition contracts with Russia; with prosperous America buying her silk at good prices; with good crops already reaped and promising, and last but not least, with the banner of the Japanese merchant marine reaching an ever increasing number of ports, Japan is for the first time in many years, if not in history, a lending nation.

"Full speed ahead" is the order of the day in industrial and shipping circles, and what has brought death and destruction to Europe has brought activity and prosperity to the Japanese, whose part in the war has been done. From Tsingtau to Tsinanfu, the military flag of Japan boldly waves above the railway, and the fine hotels of Germany's Pacific Paradise are being boosted in the tourist centers of Nikko, Hakone, Tokyo and Kyoto. They are under Japanese management now.

The tiny Japanese cat is playing with the ungainly Chinese rat, wondering whether to devour it or to make friends. In many newspapers there are articles urging the advisability of making friends with China, but with no other motive than eventually to reap larger profits by such methods. Nowhere is there thought of danger from China in a direct way. If the Open Door promises profits, Open Door let it be. But there is no consideration for the opinion of America or Europe in the argument. Japan has the envied but not enviable habit of looking out for number one, whether it be in publicity, diplomacy or commerce.

HERE in the beautiful Inland Sea Vulcan sweats and toils that Neptune may be conquered. The scene is one of entrancing beauty. Awkward sampans and white-winged sailing ships dot the blue. Green hills shoot down to the water's edge, and detached rocks, surmounted by grotesque pines which cling with bared roots to naked stone, jut from many a promontory.

In the hollows between the hills lie the villages, almost hidden in the deep green of stately trees over heathen temple and humble home. Terraced fields, representing months of patient toil, clamber up the towering hillsides. Reforestation has kept Mother Earth from being denuded here as she has been behind the ill-smelling smelter at Ashio. Graceful volcanic peaks rise in every direction, pointing heavenward in some part of every fair prospect, in which hazy hills melt away into the soft distance.

A white lighthouse casts its Polyphemus glance from a sugar-loaf of wooded rock, and from shady points of vantage a summer home or a picturesque shrine dominates the view of curving bay and craggy rock. But man has conquered nature. In several small harbors the rattle of compressed air riveters beats an agonized tattoo on the hollow hulls of building ships. The scent of soft-coal forges robs the air of its freshness and adds a smudge to the blue of the vaulted sky. Through the dark smoke the hot ugly glare of forge fires adds a dramatic red to the picture. The idyllic scene has been touched with the call for ships to carry the world's commerce, and the fair countryside frowns at the twentieth century order "Full Speed Ahead."

At Kobe and Nagasaki giant cranes cut the sky line in jagged contour, and the English-speaking tourist is greeted with signs a blind man could read; "7,000-TON FLOATING DOCK." It is the way that the artistic Japanese in his fair land has responded to commerce and publicity and modernism. Night and day the skeletons of ships take on form and slip from the ways to make room for more and larger vessels.

YESTERDAY, here on deck, within sight of the Stars and Stripes that Captain Bickel has made to represent good will and friendship throughout the Inland Sea of Japan, I had an interview with Kobayashi San, the principal of one of Japan's ten navigation schools. His former students are now sailing the seven seas. Most of them carry with them a personal introduction to missionaries and seamen's homes throughout the world, signed by Captain Bickel and bearing a hundred or more addresses of potential friends from the Canal to the Capes.

Kobayashi San speaks English better than most Japanese, though he has little chance to practice. His work is on the little island of Yugeshima, whither the English-speaking traveler seldom comes, but he has kept with him these forty years the knowledge of English which he gained from an early missionary in Niigata.

With his sweeping Panama, his heavy beard and moustache, his vivacious manner, he would look as much at home in the Place de l'Opéra as in this lonely island of the Inland Sea, where one has storms for companions and indescribably delicate sunsets for friends. He is like no other Japanese I have ever seen. Frank, full of fun, witty, and, as he says, having "a bit of American in his head," he is as interesting in the way he acts as in the way he talks.

In the harbor of this out-of-the-way island we were discussing the extension of the American navy. Imagine a cowboy in the West giving thought to whether Japan built one more battleship or adopted a new foreign policy!

"When you get those new ships, where will you get the men to handle them?" asked this principal of a school in which a hundred young men are taking the first three years of a nine years' course to fit them to be captains of merchant ships. "You can build ships in a short time, but it takes much longer to build officers."

He ought to know, for in the school which we had visited, from fencing-mask to sextant, chronometer, compass and bowline, the whole equipment is for the training of officers in Japan's constantly growing commercial fleet.

It is a good school. It makes men. Kobayashi San is not a Christian. If he were he might lose his job, and that might keep the Little White Ship from stopping here on its rounds, and Ito San, the preacher, might not be able to continue his regular Christian services in the big assembly hall of the school. He is willing to risk his own soul in order that his young charges may hear Christian preaching and sing Christian hymns, which number a full half of all the songs in the school song-book. The dean of the school holds regular weekly Bible classes, and when village meetings are held his home is used as the preaching place.

Eating is a favorite sport of the Japanese, as of some other races. This man is indulging in some hot cakes.

THERE may be other reasons why the vivacious friend of the church does not unite. Perhaps his Samurai training seems sufficient. But his son, a student in one of the largest American universities, is a Christian. If he were not, the father, with twinkling eyes, insists that he would break his neck, or words to that effect.

One cold winter day this master of men, whose motto, he says, is "Have one fist ready to smash and the other ready to soothe," brought alongside a boatful of students. Slapping one of them on the back, he called to the tall Captain on the deck above:

"Here's one for you. He's a trifle headstrong at times, but he's a good man. He wants to become a Christian. When can he be baptized?"

The Captain pleaded cold weather as a cause for delay.

"It'll strengthen his faith, captain. He is leaving soon for a long cruise, and he ought to have all the strength he can for his first voyage."

A careful investigation was made, and the young man was examined by the Captain. Then, in the bitter cold of winter, he was baptized. He has been a credit to his master and Master ever since.

Christian teaching is a regular part of the exercises of this government school to equip sturdy sailor lads for a life battle on the seas, and the kindly but strict head of the school ascribes the good discipline and

The concrete ship at the training school, on which future mariners learn the ropes before they begin to develop their sea legs

A glimpse of one of Japan's smaller dockyards crowded with ships being made ready for Japan's commercial opportunity.

character of his lads to the regular instruction in the Book of books and the frequent visits of the Captain, whose pure white vessel is a source of envy to these potential masters in steam.

The last thing Kobayashi San wants is strict Scripture and lax discipline. He says the mission schools soothe with both hands. Here in Japan one school, at least, might well be abandoned; for while its students are learning Christian hymns, the principal is learning and practicing un-Christian humility to such an extent that the students run the school and leave it with contempt for their well-meaning but mild-mannered principal, and with a diluted form of Christianity that capsizes at the first capful of opposing wind. For such Christianity this masterful man has no use.

Not a single harsh word was to be heard in his school, but when he gave an order it was carried out. If he had asked his whole school to plunge into the water in their clean clothes, they would have done it. A lad who becomes a Christian in such an environment is "worth raising." Twenty-four-hour-a-day piety and laxity of discipline cannot give character that stands the test.

The school grounds are spick and span. The school garden contains no weed. When a visitor enters the study room, there is a quick command by the student in charge, and every white-clad student is erect and at attention. "Prussian methods," you say. Yes, and all directed to the development of individual worth and responsibilities. These students are not to be stokers but captains. No discipline is too strict for the training of those who are to command.

AFTER three years of training in one of the ten schools, or in the college in Tokyo, the young men go to sea to serve three years more. They would become stiff and too old for training if they stayed in school long. Three years they serve as apprentices in active service, with study every day and frequent examinations. They then have a second mate's certificate. Three years more of examinations and tests, and the apt scholar can become a captain at twenty-eight.

The merchant marine in Japan is not a trade or a last resort for drunken ne'er-do-wells. It is a career. The apprentice in training expects to be treated as a gentleman.

At present Kobayashi San is in trouble. He tried to resign, and his resignation was not accepted. The incidents are somewhat personal, but will illustrate something of the rottenness of Japanese life in some of its phases.

Like a tale from the ancient mariner is this old Japanese junk not yet ready to leave the seas to the steel creations of the modern shipyards.

The provincial governor visited the school on a tour of inspection and was so much interested that he stayed for some time, studying the models and observing the exercises of the students, who have a solid stone vessel for practice in handling sails.

The wealthy man of the village, whose guest the governor was to be, became impatient while waiting for the visiting official from the mainland. He soothed his feelings with saké, which is a drink ill-suited as a soothing syrup. As the tardy party arrived near his dwelling, followed by hoi polloi and the town police force, the would-be host began to exhaust his vocabulary in telling the principal of the navigation school what he thought of him. His saké-vocabulary is rude but ample, and the best thing the principal could do was to send in his resignation, according to the fixed custom of proud men in Japan when they are insulted.

But he cannot resign. As for the wealthy man, whose second concubine Kobayashi San and his wife refuse to entertain as a guest, he has money; and the governor, such is his strength of character, does not dare to offend him. Verily, the lot of an honest man is hard in Japan. He must wink at many things which we think are not right and which, in our own set, we wink at. But Kobayashi San, peace to his troubled soul, has not learned to wink.

He is not the winking kind. Somewhere back of his gaiety and good humor is an all-pursuing conscience; so in spite of his troubles and his fifteen years' absence from the cities of the mainland, he will probably go on making men, weeding out good ones for Captain Bickel to examine and Ito San to baptize, and sending them all out on the deep with little pocket-books containing the names of Christian institutions in the rough ports of the world and a personal introduction, from his friend the Captain, to those who would rather see a sailor an upright master of himself than a drifting sot.

JAPAN'S shipping is on the boom. New lines are reaching out for trade with the continents and islands of the seas. Japan is the coming Britain of the Pacific, the Phœnicia of the Far East. Heavy subsidies are pouring profits into the pockets of shipowners, and each vessel, from tug to liner, is paying for itself every day the war lasts.

Commercial connections are being made in new territory. Many say that these markets will revert to those who held them before the war broke out. But the Japanese are persistent and polite. A passenger on one of their liners knows what it is to be looked after. They are branching out in industry, and wages are almost as low as ever. Japan is sacrificing womanhood and manhood to win world markets. Other nations will be slow to pay the same price for gold.

The Panama Canal is now used by several Japanese lines, and the sun flag is as common on the water front in New York as is the Red, White and Blue. Some day, if you are in social service work in a seaport, there may come into your office an erect, strong officer, wearing the uniform of the Japanese merchant marine. Possibly he will carry in his pocket a letter of introduction to you as a helpful friend. If so, treat him right. You can neglect him and turn him over to those who will give him drops in his booze and set him adrift penniless. But it is not worth the price.

It was not for this that the Little White Ship was sent to these beautiful but sinful islands. It was not for this that the "old Captain" turned with longing toward a school where seamen are trained. It is not for this that Kobayashi San, with his blunt ideas and ideals, and his wife, into whose home the sick boys have been received to be nursed at her hands, are trying to forget the insult hurled at them by the village Crœsus. While trouble threatens and a worthy task faces them, they have opened the school once more and issued what is to them a brave, honest order—the short but stirring order of the new Japan: "Full Speed Ahead!"

The World's Neighbor

FOR 1,900 years Christendom has been echoing the question so fully answered by the Saviour: "Who is my neighbor?" And the answer comes back with added emphasis that "he was neighbor who showed mercy." Our neighborhood perforce includes not this block nor the next, nor this ward, nor this town, but every place where human need, disclosed, reveals a door of opportunity for us.

For over two years now America has been neighbor to the world, and in many a stricken land the American flag is now a symbol of life and hope and of Christian fellowship as well. The relief work carried on by the Christian Herald committees and by other committees engaged in similar activities may well be doing more than keeping souls and bodies together. It is highly probable that this work is laying the foundations for a wider and deeper appreciation of Christian love and service and for reorganization of civilization along lines that will more truly approach the Christian state than any which Christendom has yet known.

The Christian Herald Family has given and given again, and is still giving in increasing measure. More and more the members of the Family are beginning to comprehend the magnitude of the need which calls, and which keeps calling for help. We must organize. We cannot depend upon the favoring impulses of our hearts, but must plan carefully and prayerfully, in the full knowledge that it is a long and a strong pull, and that the end is far away.

The Monthly Offering Clubs are steadily growing. We are convinced that they offer the most logical solution to the question of regular relief, for regular it should be. The clubs are as follows:

No. 1, for donors of fifty cents a week; No. 2, for donors of one dollar a week; No. 3, for donors of two dollars a week; No. 4, for donors of three dollars a week; No. 5, for donors of five dollars a week; No. 6, for donors of ten dollars a week; No. 7, for donors of twenty dollars a week; No. 8, for donors of twenty-five dollars a week; No. 9, for donors of fifty dollars a week; No. 10, for donors of some amount monthly, dependent on circumstances.

Please address your gifts to the Christian Herald, Room 93, Bible House, New York City. In due course acknowledgment will appear in the paper. State any preference you may have as to the use you wish made of your gifts.

Mrs J Wilson Galbreath	$5.00
—— Reno, Nev.	5.00
C F Blackman	5.00
F H McGowan	5.00
Mrs A Nesmith	5.00
Mrs C E Smith	5.00
A A Augenstein	5.00
Mrs A Harris	5.00
Mary L Bogardus	5.00
Zona Tombs	5.00
Mrs Elizabeth Aiken	5.00
O Lindeman	5.00
John Stettler	5.00
Dr J T McCrory	5.00
Mary Knott	5.00
Samuel Z Beam	5.00
Mrs J C Weil	5.00
F E Mathis	5.00
Dora Miercort	5.00
Mrs J A Hardy	5.00
Johanne Buermann	5.00
S W Rogers	5.00
Mrs Ira M Webber	5.00
Jennie M Ballou	5.00
Mrs F K Hauck	5.00
Mrs J P Stroman	5.00
Miss Nettie Crevelier	5.00
Mr & Mrs W M Mayhew	5.00
S P Johnson	5.00
Mrs Elmer Sutphin	5.00
H S Kenyon	5.00
D W Cowdry	5.00
Mr & Mrs C Engstrom	5.00
Rosenhurst, Stuart, Fla	5.00
Mrs E O Beedle	5.00
Helen & Hazel Stett	5.00
S J Filebey	5.00
Mrs J W Robinson	5.00
Mrs E Low	5.00
E L B	5.00
Mrs M C Foust	5.00
Mr & Mrs Wm J Trautmann	5.00
Friend, Kenton, Ohio	5.00
Mrs G B Loynes	5.00
— Tiskilwa, Ill.	5.00
Jesse F. Davis	5.00
Ben Adams	5.00
Genevieve Ames	5.00
Amos Gregson	5.00
Mrs J H Safford	5.00
Mrs Eliza M Jordan	$5.00
Mrs James A Laird	5.00
H L Terpening	5.00
Mrs B L Vallandingham	5.00
A M Price	5.00
Rudolph A. Schutz	5.00
Mr & Mrs T S Sheriff	5.00
A Barrow	5.00
Rev J C Kepford	5.00
Ernest E Chase	5.00
Chas Hodge	5.00
J N Ward	5.00
J K Adams	5.00
Ella R Wiley	5.00
Mrs H H Hill	5.00
John H Brandow	5.00
N W Merrill	5.00
David Lantz	5.00
Mr & Mrs E E Thornton	5.00
Mattie G Burton	5.00
Miss J H Mason	5.00
Ann B Kammerer	5.00
Lou A Pratt	5.00
W E D	5.00
J C Conrod & Family	5.00
— Springfield, Mo	5.00
C J Handorf	5.00
Chas Woehrle	5.00
H E Lyons	5.00
Mr & Mrs Clarence Blasius	5.00
H C Schuler	5.00
Mr & Mrs L A Walker	5.00
—— Marshall, Minn	5.00
Devas Rennis	5.00
Miss Alice L Seal	3.00
C E Baldwin	3.00
Mrs J M Bradley	3.00
Nellie Koch	3.00
J R Humphry	3.00
Mrs E B Diehl	3.00
Mrs Susan E Wells & Flora M Hopkins	3.00
D L K Hathaway	3.00
Casper K Conger	3.00
Mrs B A Hicks	3.00
Mrs L T Spicher	3.00
Mrs A C Spooner	3.00
—— Tiosa, Ind.	3.00
J Newton Phelps	3.00
S S Gray	3.00
Mrs A C Waterman & Addie A Hastings	$3.00
Mrs B E Barksdale	3.00
N A Candy	3.00
T H & D W Fleming	3.00
Mrs T H Becker	3.00
Hattie K Woodruff	3.00
Mrs Annie G Burnham	$3.00
Mrs P E Stillman	3.00
Mrs Alice M Burroughs	3.00
Mary J Foster	3.00
Mrs Julia Knuckey	2.50
John R Edmunds	2.50
M M O	2.50
George Buzzell	2.50
Mrs Lloyd R Lowry	$2.50
Miss Eila Carson	2.50
Miss Evelyn Martin	2.50
B E Neill	2.00
Mrs Warren Graves	2.00
—— So Portland, Me	2.00
Miss Maude Hill	2.00
Miss Bessie Thornton	$2.00
Mrs Tillie A Fox	2.00
Mrs A P Crosgrove	2.00
Sarah J Hughes	2.00
Akron, Colo	2.00
Mrs J S Olson	2.00
Florence M Felton	2.00
Mrs R Thiming	2.00
—— Nihill, Mont	$2.00
W W Rockwell	2.00
Jr Epworth League, Milton, Pa	2.00
Esther Mains	2.00
Mrs J R Richards	2.00
Mrs Frank Mussen	2.00
"For Alice's Sake"	2.00
Mrs S S Rorvig	2.00
McTyeire S S, Rushville, Ill.	2.00
Friend, Hinsdale, Mass	2.00
Mr & Mrs James A Bancroft	2.00
H L Horter	2.00
Family, Williamsport, Pa	2.00
Miss Jane Clark	2.00
Mr & Mrs A E Eggleston	2.00
Goldie Walter	2.00
Mr Joseph & Mary Patton	2.00
Harry S Miller	2.00
Miss Louisa D Diercks	2.00
Mrs E J Martin	2.00
Mrs A L Trevett	2.00
Mrs Wm G Horton	2.00
A Follower of Christ, Marshfield, Mo	2.00
Mr & Mrs O C Borth	2.00
M F F	2.00
C Kops	2.00
Mr & Mrs John Kosten	2.00
Mrs E D Kelsy	2.00
Mrs W H Hickox	2.00
Kate I Darcy	2.00
B F Gardner	2.00
Subscriber, Lebanon, Pa	2.00
Mrs L Weaver	2.00
R B Trott	2.00
Mrs S V Hunt	2.00
Friend, Lexington, Mass	2.00
Mrs R S Y	2.00
Harriet E Hutin	2.00
Viola Caster	2.00
Mary F McClelland	2.00
Glen & Edna Cosens	2.00
Mr & Mrs Peter Johnson	$2.00
Mr & Mrs W A Semmler	2.00
Clara M Stevens	2.00
Lucy E Hollis	1.50
H E Barlow	1.50
Miss Eleanor R Breck & Sister	1.00
Mrs B L Culver	1.00
N F J	1.00
Mrs Fannie Sunderland	1.00
Mrs H M Seiler	1.00
—— Clayton, N Mex	1.00
Jno Parkhill	1.00
Wm A Grierson	1.00
Mrs Julia Kraus	1.00
Mrs John De Mik	1.00
In His Name, Highland, N Y	1.00
—— Tunkhannock, Pa	1.00
Mrs E Toft	1.00
Mrs M H Nell	1.00
Mrs W J Sturges	1.00
Mrs C H Forbes	1.00
Mrs Hector Wicks	1.00
Mrs Elias Johnson	1.00
Mrs John Helvig	1.00
Mrs Halvor Durby	1.00
Mrs Lars Britson	1.00
Mrs M A Stavely	1.00
Ellis Giles	1.00
Horace Ryder	1.00
John F Clothey	1.00
Geo Richert	1.00
J E Carlson	1.00
Mrs G W Gustafson	1.00
J E Covington	1.00
——So Williamsport, Pa	1.00
Bertha Lucas	1.00
Sympathizer, Winona, Miss	1.00
S Cooper	1.00
Noah Pillsbury	1.00
G W Mowry	1.00
Emma Mosier	1.00
H L S	1.00
Mrs W G James	1.00
—— Glendale, Ore	1.00
Mrs E Atwell	1.00
Mr & Mrs D C Lyons	1.00

Continued on page 154

Pioneers and Pathfinders

By
LOUIS E. ORCUTT

AMERICA is the land of the pioneer. From the first Pilgrim who set his foot squarely on old Plymouth Rock to the homesteader who only filed his papers last year, the pioneer, rugged, indomitable, has typified that leadership which makes it possible to build up a nation from the ordinary materials of average mankind. We customarily speak of the pioneers as men of a past age, whose work is done, and we picture them in our mind's eye as gray-haired grandfathers, leaning upon their sticks or sheltered in quiet corners where the youth of today listens to their tales of '49 and earlier. Yet not long ago there was a meeting of pioneers in New York, and not a man in the lot had passed the years of active life, while only a few bore the hoary crown which is the glory of honorable age.

These men were the men who saw the beginning of the automobile industry and who helped to direct it from a small beginning to the position of national importance which it now holds. Before the pioneer has always gone the man who spied out the land and laid the course for the stream of life and commerce that was to follow. For every group of pioneers there has been a pathfinder. The men who laid out the transcontinental railways were justly called pathfinders, and these pioneers of the automobile industry are equally entitled to the name; the automobile has not only sought out the path by which people and commerce might travel, but has been the moving force in most of the accomplishment of the good roads movement, which, before the advent of the automobile, progressed with difficulty.

In 1901, only fifteen years ago, the total number of automobiles licensed within the United States was 5,000. Licensing was not, however, universal, and there were many unlicensed cars, how many there are no statistics to show, but probably not more than as many again as those licensed. In 1916, the total motor vehicle production was 1,617,708, of which 1,525,578 were passenger cars, and 92,130 were motor trucks. The total retail value was $1,088,028,273. In 1915 the production was 50,369 trucks and 842,249 passenger cars. In 1915 the average price of the passenger cars sold was $672, while in 1916 it dropped to $605, and this although prices were constantly tending upward for all the material entering into the car. In 1916 the total number of cars licensed in the United States was 3,500,000, and yet only fifteen years ago the pedestrian, and to some extent the financier, laughed at the automobile of their day and derided the idea of its ever amounting to anything.

With an increase of 80 per cent. in production over the preceding year, it is but natural that we should wonder what the record of the industry will be in another year. Some manufacturers are frankly preparing to double it up. Some are talking about a saturation point, by which is meant the point where the number of machines in use will represent an ultimate consumption, and new business will consist in replacements and in new purchases more or less in proportion to the growth of population. It is generally admitted that although there may be a saturation point, it has not yet been reached.

LAST year the automobile industry was estimating the number of persons in the country with an income of $1,200 a year or better, and was basing its estimates of future sales upon the presumption that every man thus included was a possible prospect for an automobile sale. Predictions made on that basis seem to have been exceeded. Figuring is now being done less on the basis of the desire of any particular person to own a car, and more upon the status which the automobile is acquiring as a necessity. It is known that there are 24,000,000 horses now in use in this country. If one-third of them worked singly and the other two-thirds worked in pairs, we would have a market for 16,000,000 automobiles in the ultimate replacement of these horses. There is little work that a horse does now which some form of automobile is not prepared to take over and do better than the horse, and it is now seen that the great increase of automobile sales is based largely on the fact that the self-propelled vehicle is performing an indispensable service to mankind. Every man whose business touches more than one point is interested in shortening the distance between those points whether the measure be miles or minutes. Every man whose business includes the transportation of material is interested in securing this transportation promptly and at the lowest possible cost. Thus the salesman, the manufacturer, the contractor, the distributor and the farmer are all served more efficiently by the automobile than by any form of horse-drawn vehicle.

Searchers for the saturation point have also discovered that there are in the United States some 3,500,000 farmers operating 100 or more acres. It is estimated that each of these men not only has a sufficient income from the farm to afford a moderate priced automobile, but that the automobile and the automobile tractor can afford to each farmer on a hundred acres or more (and to many farming less acreage, intensively) a service in value out of all proportion to the cost of the machines. But if each of these farmers had a car today that would take every car running today. Auto sales experts now estimate that there are in the United States of America 7,500,000 who need automobiles.

Like the bicycle, the automobile has passed through various experimental stages and has now reached a condition of practical standardization. The different ranges of income and the different requirements of use have called for various types of cars, and a class of cars has naturally risen to fill the demand of each of these developing markets. But certain factors have governed in all the classes, and as a result there is a great similarity in line, in balance, in general appearance through the whole field of motor cars.

BEGINNING with one cylinder, the cylinders multiplied to two, then to four, then to six, then to twin fours and sixes; but the developments of the past year have been toward a further improvement of the fours and sixes rather than toward the development of the multiple-cylinder engines. In 1916 there were fifty-eight companies manufacturing fours exclusively, forty-three making sixes, twelve manufacturing eights and five manufacturing twelves, while only six companies manufactured both fours and eights, and only two manufactured both sixes and twelves. The twelve-cylinder car was, however, a benefactor to the trade, inasmuch as it forced the perfecting of the self-starter, which opened up a new and very wide field for the sale of motor cars, since it made it possible for a woman to drive her own car as easily as she used to manipulate the reins of old Dobbin.

In the gasoline cars during the past year the greatest efforts have been concentrated on the further refinement of the four-cylinder and six-cylinder engines. Valves, which through the practice of years had seemingly settled down comfortably alongside the cylinders, have during this past year shown a tendency to creep over on top, and one or two manufacturers have doubled the number of valves for each cylinder in an effort to bring to the gasoline engine the fullest measure of flexibility. In the meantime gasoline has advanced in price until the advantage in efficiency of the internal-combustion engine over the steam engine operating on the same fuel has been countered by the possibility of using cheaper fuel in the development of steam, and the year 1917 has seen the announcement of a steam car using kerosene as a fuel and claiming to get more miles out of a ten-cent piece than any gasoline car of equal weight and power. It is possible that if the prices of kerosene and gasoline remain in their present relation the gasoline car will see serious competition from this older power, which has been ruled out largely because it couldn't compete on the same fuel.

The men who were pioneers fifteen years ago are today, with some younger men who have been developed by the industry, the leaders in what has become one of America's greatest industries, there being more than $1,000,000,000 invested in companies which merely manufacture automobile accessories. The export business of 1916 was only about one-tenth of the whole, reaching $100,147,636, and American cars are beginning to find a market wherever there are both men and roads, while the automobile has already shown itself capable of forcing the construction of roads where, but for it, a footpath would have continued to satisfy for generations more as it had for generations gone.

STEAM railroads, electric railroads and surface car lines in the cities have all begun to feel the competition of the automobile. With 3,500,000 cars ready at any minute to carry their owners a mile or a dozen at their will, with some of these 3,500,000 operating as jitneys, capable of leaving their beaten track to drop a passenger at a convenient door, the harvest of nickels and larger coins which once flowed into railway coffers has shown a considerable abatement. It is freely predicted, in some quarters, that the automobile eventually will replace cars for local and interurban passenger traffic.

Whatever may happen to other forms of transportation, we can be sure of one thing; that the automobile has passed out of the class of luxuries into the catalogue of necessities, and that 1917 will see at least half a million more new American families entering the company of car-owners, a company which those who enter seldom leave.

Our National Parks

THE campaign of the Department of the Interior, in which it was associated with the Western railways, to impress upon the American people the scenic grandeur and vacation possibilities of the National Parks, resulted in greatly increased travel to the parks in the season of 1916. In 1915, as many as 12,563 private automobiles were registered at the portals of the parks. In 1916 this number increased to 19,848, carrying 78,916 tourists and paying in fees $65,311. The money received from these fees is expended in the construction of improved highways. The appropriation of Congress for the improvement and protection of the parks in the fiscal year 1916 was $252,550, which was increased to $511,300 for 1917. An appropriation of $50,000 by Congress for the purchase of private holdings within the Sequoia National Park, holdings on which were standing the largest of the Giant Redwoods, proved inadequate by $20,000, and this sum was donated to the government by the National Geographic Society. Steps are now being taken to replace all the horse-drawn stages in Yellowstone Park with motor equipment. This park is now self-supporting, due largely to revenue derived from automobile fees. Yosemite National Park was opened to private automobiles for the first time in 1916, and of 33,390 visitors to the park last summer 14,166 came in private machines. A new $150,000 hotel and a large hydro-electric plant are under construction.

BEING a practical housekeeper, I have the same daily problems to solve in these days of high cost of living that you have. I have them in my business as well.

This experience has taught me how to make with our Sparkling Gelatine, dainty desserts, salads, etc., that are perfectly delicious, and that serve the most people at the least cost,—below is a recipe that proves it.

In the March Magazines I will give another economical recipe.

Mrs. Charles B. Knox
President

KNOX IVORY JELLY

Soak 1 envelope Knox Sparkling Gelatine in half cup milk 5 minutes. Scald 3 cups milk with ¾ cup sugar, and add soaked gelatine. Strain, cool slightly, add 1 teaspoonful vanilla and turn into a mold first dipped in cold water and chill. Serve with a boiled custard, preserves, melted currant or other jelly or canned fruit.

KNOX
SPARKLING GELATINE

One package will make a jelly serving 18 people or you can measure the gelatine to make an individual dish.

Recipe Book FREE

We will send you this book, "Dainty Desserts for Dainty People," on receipt of your grocer's name. If you have never used Knox Gelatine, enclose 4c in stamps if you wish a pint sample.

KNOX GELATINE CO., Inc.
455 Knox Ave.
Johnstown,
N. Y.

KNOX SPARKLING No 1 GELATINE
KNOX ACIDULATED No 3 GELATINE

Burpee's Seeds Grow

Burpee's Sweet Peas

For 25c we will mail one regular 10c packet (40 to 50 seeds) each of CHERUB, rich cream, edged bright rose; KING WHITE, the finest pure white; MARGARET ATLEE, best cream pink; ROSABELLE, a large deep rose; WEDGEWOOD, a lovely light blue. Also one large packet (90 to 100 seeds) of the BURPEE BLEND OF SUPERB SPENCERS FOR 1917.

Burpee's Annual for 1917 is better, bigger and brighter than ever before. 204 pages. Thirty (30) varieties illustrated in colors. It is mailed free. Write for it today and please mention this publication.

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO.
Burpee Buildings Philadelphia

REO
"THE GOLD STANDARD OF VALUES"

The New Reo Six Roadster $1250

The New Reo Six "All Seasons" Roadster $1400

The New Reo Six Sedan (Springfield Type) $1750

Note: All prices are f. o. b. factory, Lansing, Michigan and subject to increase without notice.

TELL YOU A SECRET:—We'
new Reo model several weeks greatly in excess of the possible announce it in the public pri aggravate the situation and s orders we could not fill.

THE REPUTATION made by past two years, was the reas course.

MANY OF THE ORDERS had season—for, as all the world kn supply the demand for this thousands.

AND, AS MANY BUYERS, who passenger cars and hence sixes, sixes or none, the orders remai
we stopped production and ch
ment to make this new improv

AND NATURALLY we felt in h orders first.

THIS NEW SIX CHASSIS is in same that has been so popular du

REO M

The New
REO SIX
7-Passenger Touring Car
$1250

Here Is the New Reo Six—$1250

een delivering this ut demand was so
ply we did not dare until now, lest we p the factory with

Reo Six during the r that demand, of

ined over from last
we were unable to el—not by several they needed seven-sted on having Reo on the books while ed over the equip-

odel.

bound to fill those essentials the very

the past two years.

REFINED AND IMPROVED in many important details, making for betterment in performance and in riding qualities but essentially the same in design, for we Reo Folk saw to it that this Six was fundamentally right before we let the first one leave the factory.

SINCE THEN WE HAVE incorporated such changes as we thought would enhance the pleasure of riding in this car—longer wheel base; improved spring suspension; improved carburetor; silent, spiral-bevel driving gears; and other features formerly found only in Sixes of the highest price.

BODY DESIGN IS NEW—in keeping with the progress of the art, the vogue and the preference of buyers.

THIS CONCESSION we always make to the buyer—a body made to his taste and in the latest style.

IN THE CHASSIS we give him that which we know he ought to have—if our long experience and engineering ability is worth anything.

IN EXTERNAL DETAILS it is your ideal of a luxurious equipage—in mechanical principles and construction it is our idea of what constitutes a good automobile.

REO 3-UNIT SYSTEM makes what we believe to be "the Most Accessible Automobile in the world"—hence the low upkeep cost of Reo Sixes.

"50 PER CENT OVERSIZE" in all vital parts—such as bearings, shafts, frame, gears, wheels, wiring, radiator, etc.—makes this Reo Six somewhat heavier than some of other similar "rated" power and passenger capacity.

THAT IS THE BEST GUARANTEE of the quality that is in this Reo Six. For we do not skimp on either the size of parts nor quality of material to meet a price competition.

ORDERS FOR THIS NEW REO SIX must be in your Reo dealer's hands well in advance of the time you desire delivery.

DEMAND IS TREMENDOUS and will increase immeasurably as the big Spring demand opens up and as owners begin to extol the superiorities of this big, beautiful, New Reo Six. For surely at $1250 this is "The Gold Standard of Values" in Sixes.

TOR CAR COMPANY - LANSING, MICHIGAN

REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

GENUINE HAS TRADE MARK ON THE PACKAGE

To make a good cup of Cocoa Begin Right!

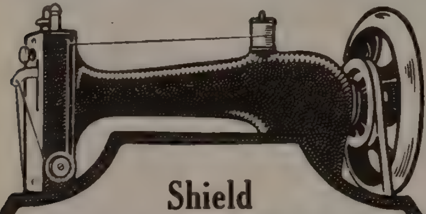
CHOOSE

BAKER'S

Prepare it carefully, following the directions on the package, and you will find that every member of the family will thoroughly enjoy this delicious and wholesome beverage. Its healthfulness is assured by its purity and high quality.

Grand Prize
Panama-Pacific Exposition, San Francisco, 1915

Made only by
WALTER BAKER & CO. LTD.
ESTABLISHED 1780
Dorchester, Mass.



Shield
Your Sewing Machine

3-in-One Oil protects the delicate working parts. Prevents clogging up and excessive friction, which cause a sewing machine to run hard and wear out prematurely.

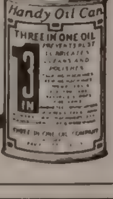
3-in-One

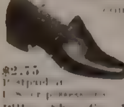
makes any sewing machine run wonderfully easy. It's light enough to flow to the very bottom of the deepest bearing, yet has sufficient viscosity to stay in the mechanism and give long, efficient service.

Unlike the many so-called "fish-oils", 3-in-One never gums or dries out. Gathers no dust or lint. Instead, it actually works out any dirt that has collected in the bearings. Keeps them bright and clean. Use 3-in-One to polish the wooden case of your machine. Restores the freshness—preserves the wood. Use it on the nickel and metal parts—prevents rust and tarnish. 3-in-One is sold at all stores—in 25c Handy Oil Cans and in 10c, 25c, and 50c bottles.

FREE Sample of 3-in-One and Dictionary of Uses sent free.

3-in-One Oil Co.,
42 CM. Broadway,
New York





Ladies EASE YOUR FEET!

Testimonials from every state prove the surpassing comfort-bringing qualities of our line of unlined vici kid, O'Sullivanized

PILLOW SHOES

Neat, Long-wearing, Restful, Sensible

Foot Comfort is our first consideration. Write today for our catalog of Pillows for Winter, Summer, outdoor and home wear.

$2.75 Postpaid in [illegible]

Pillow Shoe Co., 184 Summer St., Dept. 3, Boston, Mass.

Our Mail-Bag

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag, provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

READER, Greenville, Tenn. Can a minister of the Northern Presbyterian Church step into a Southern Presbyterian church, or vice versa, and administer the rites? Can he call a sessional meeting and preside? Can he accept work without a transfer, or act in any capacity before being installed?

A very good authority, Rev. Charles C. Albertson, D.D., Lafayette Presbyterian Church, to whom the foregoing has been submitted, replies: "In view of the fact that the Northern Presbyterian and the Southern Presbyterian are quite as separate as though they were of different denominations, so far as administration is concerned, a minister of a Northern Presbyterian church can 'step into' a Southern Presbyterian church only as a matter of courtesy. If he were invited to do so by the session, it would be perfectly proper, just as it would be proper for a minister of any other Christian denomination to be invited to 'step into' the church or pulpit. Whether a minister of another denomination can call a sessional meeting and preside depends upon the provision of the discipline of the Southern Presbyterian Church, with which I am not familiar. In the Northern Presbyterian Church, there is a provision that the session shall be moderated by the pastor, or, in his absence, by any other minister who may be requested to do so by the session or appointed to do so by the presbytery. A minister of any Christian church is permitted to 'accept work' in a Presbyterian church by courtesy, and can serve as stated supply at the request of the session. It is customary, however, for the session to ask permission of the presbytery to supply its pulpit, in case the pulpit is vacant. Any Christian minister who has been ordained is at liberty to administer the rites on proper occasion, at the invitation of the session."

Mrs. J. T. F., Auburn, Mass. Please explain Luke 23 : 31.

Jesus is here calling the attention of the Jews to the things which they might expect in the future, and by way of impressing the warning on his hearers, he uses himself as an example. He contrasts what is being inflicted upon himself—who is the green tree, and the fruitful vine which has borne good fruit—with the greater misery that may be expected to come upon them, the dry, unfruitful tree.

C. L. D., French River, Minn. All of the Jewish ceremonial law, including the prohibition against eating pork and the "unclean" animals, was done away with when Christ came to institute the new order of things, and to substitute the service in the spirit to that in the flesh. At what is known as the first church council, described in Acts 15, the decision was definitely made that Gentile Christians were not to be compelled to keep the Jewish ceremonial law. The council sent a letter to the new converts, setting them free from all these ceremonial requirements. The great burden of Paul's preaching was that we are saved not by keeping the law of Moses, but by faith in Christ.

Mrs. J. H. L., Parke, Pa. The Jews had nine prominent feast days, to wit: The Feast of the Passover, of Pentecost, of Tabernacles, of the New Moon, of Trumpets, of Purim (or Lots), of Dedication, of the Sabbatical Year and of Jubilee. You will find a complete description of each of these feasts in our new premium book, "445 Additional Bible Questions Answered."

M. H. L., Wakefield, Neb. 1. The Ark of the Covenant was the vessel in which the tables of the law were preserved. It was a small chest or coffer, three feet nine inches in length, two feet three inches in breadth, and the same in height, in which were contained the various sacred articles mentioned in the quotations. It was made of shittim-wood, and covered with the mercy-seat, called also the propitiatory, that is, the lid or cover of propitiation; because, in the typical language of Scripture, those sins which are forgiven are said to be covered. This lid was made of pure gold; at either end was a cherub; these looked toward each other and embraced the whole circumference of the mercy-seat with their expanded wings, between which the Shekinah, or symbol of the Divine Presence, manifested itself in the appearance of a cloud, hovering, as it were, over the mercy-seat. From hence the divine oracles were given. The high priest once every year, on the great day of expiation, appeared before the mercy-seat to make atonement for the people. The ark was placed in the sanctuary of the temple of Solomon. Before his time it was kept in the tabernacle, and was moved about as circumstances dictated. 2. Divine healing was unquestionably a gift bestowed upon the early church, and which, if the church were true to its mission today, would be as much in evidence now as in the times of the apostles. Even today there are undisputed cases of divine healing. We should be very much disposed, however, to regard with suspicion any person who made a profession of divine healing for commercial gain. If, through strong faith and pure and holy living, some should attain to this wonderful gift, it would be profanation to estimate its value in worldly terms, for it would be beyond price, as indeed all of God's gifts are.

G. L. W., Elberton, Ga. The Rhodes scholarships at Oxford University were provided in the will of Cecil Rhodes, statesman and capitalist, who died at Cape Town, South Africa, March 26, 1902. They cover a three years' course. The division of the scholarships is as follows: From three to nine scholars from each of the British colonies, two from each state and territory of the United States, or 100 in all. It is directed that in awarding the scholarships account shall be taken of different qualities—literary and scholastic attainments, love of outdoor sports, strong manly qualities, such as courage, generosity, kindness, high moral character and desire to serve in public affairs. Americans must have completed the work of at least two years in some college of liberal arts and sciences. The upper age limit is twenty-four years at the time of entering Oxford. The candidate must be an American citizen or the son of a citizen and unmarried. Each student receives an allowance of about $1,500 a year, payable in quarterly instalments, which is just enough to pay expenses. As no expense money is available until the student enters Oxford, he must have $100 to $200 of his own. Inquiries as to details by intending candidates may be addressed to any college.

A. J. C. Send old numbers of your journal or any other good reading to the nearest hospital, asylum, almshouse or rescue mission, where they will doubtless be appreciated.

J. A., North Judson, Ind., writes: "I see in the Christian Herald the question, 'Was Jesus a pacifist?' I say yes, and we are not ashamed of our Leader, the Prince of Peace. The best preparedness is to follow his example and teachings. I was glad when the President said in his message, 'The voice of the people is for peace.' I want to see the United States set an example of peace and good will to the world." This, from a farmer friend, fairly represents the spirit of many letters we are receiving on the same subject at the present time. We rejoice to know that all at heart are for peace.

Troubled Mother, Va. We sympathize very sincerely with any Christian who, being a church member, finds it difficult on account of domestic or other duties to attend services or take any part in church work. We do not regard this, however, as a sufficient reason why one who is so unfortunately situated should wish to have her name removed from the church membership roll on the ground that she is useless. If her work has been appointed her at home, with the care of children, that is her first duty; and few pastors, if any, would consent to dropping one for such a cause. There should, however, be some opportunities, even if they are rare, to attend worship, and if these are not availed of, the individual is not living up to her privileges. Somebody ought to "lend a hand," so as to make attendance possible, at least occasionally.

C. F. S., New Britain, Conn. There is an old tradition that the Coronation Stone, which is fitted under the seat of the coronation chair or throne of England, is the identical stone upon which Jacob pillowed his head at Luz, when he had the vision of angels passing up and down the ladder from heaven. The tradition adds that the stone was brought to Ireland and thence to Scotland, where it was used for coronation purposes at Scone for many generations, and after the Union it was taken to Westminster. There is no historical corroboration of the tradition.

S. J. F., Dresden, Kan. 1. Unquestionably the illustration of the rich man and Lazarus was a parable. It is the only parable in which a proper name is employed, and Lazarus was probably chosen because it was a common name in those days. There are some writers who claim that both men in the parable were real personages, and one tradition is preserved which has given the name of the rich man as Dobruk, while another gives it as Nimeusis. Neither of these traditions is deserving of serious consideration, however, and the ablest Bible authorities agree that the Saviour had in mind simply two types of men, which he used to illustrate the point of his discourse. 2. In II Thess. 2, the "falling away" mentioned by Paul meant a period of widespread apostasy, a time of denial of God and of the religion of Jesus as Saviour and Messiah. Many hold that we are now entering on the fulfilment of that prophecy, and that the time of apostasy has already begun.

J. W. R., Rabun, Ala. However dark and unpromising may be the outlook, we believe it to be the conviction of the philosophic part of the human race, and especially of all who have faith in God and in the Gospel of his Son, that there is coming a day when war will be no more, and when the brotherhood of man, and the peaceful and happy condition foreshadowed by the prophets, will come to pass. We are now living in a time of prophetic fulfilment, but even that may reach a climax sooner than the world expects. In his own way God will convince the world of the wickedness and folly of war; indeed, he is convincing it today, as we see by the attitude of the European populations, who are all praying that the present may be the "last war."

Anxious Inquirer, Bloomington, Ill. The cult you mention teaches a philosophy rather than a religion. It is designed to teach the triumph of mind over matter—of optimism and confidence over the obstacles to success in life. It is, in a certain sense, a doctrine of make-believe; at least it is so presented in some of the books on the subject. Self-confidence may be bred of vanity, or it may arise from the consciousness of real merit, and the possession of qualities that can win. Certainly the confident man is more likely to get recognition from the world than the diffident one.

G. F. M., Carman, Ill. Thanks for your very frank letter. We do not believe any one to be justified in judging as to the comparative standard of morals in country towns and small places. There are doubtless many rural neighborhoods that are models of Christian living and religious activity, while there are others that sadly need a new infusion of spiritual energy. As to the lack of the latter in the place you mention, it might be well for you to write to the American Sunday School Union, Philadelphia, Pa., which has founded scores of Sunday schools and churches in just such neighborhoods as you describe.

Charles Hodge, Batavia, N. Y. I herewith enclose $30.00, $27.00 of which was contributed by the Batavia M. E. Sunday school, of which I am a member. It is the outcome of my efforts in the past few weeks to arouse the church people of this town to the importance of responding to such pathetic appeals for the war sufferers in Europe, if they would save their own souls. I have distributed 300 circulars (Save-a-Life Movement) and I'm trying to interest our daily paper. I am 55, a member of M. E. Church 38 years. I wish I could make it $30,000. I see those starving children in my dreams. Yours for the advancement of Christ's Kingdom.

Our Batavia correspondent, in presenting this great charity to his church, has done well. His circular is right to the point and produced results which will be most helpful to the Relief Committees in their work in behalf of the widows and orphans of the lands at war. We believe God has laid this task especially upon the people of Christian America, and no church should neglect the opportunity to have a share in it.

G. J. J., Lancaster, Ohio. What is meant in Mark 8 : 18?

If you will compare this passage with the parable in Matt. 15 and 16 (read Matt. 16), you will observe that Jesus is discouraged at the lack of faith displayed by the Pharisees. Though he is doing things more wonderful than they had ever witnessed, and saying words the like of which they had never heard, the Pharisees persist in their hardness of heart and unbelief. As he told them in Matt. 16, they are keen to distinguish the signs as to the weather and the seasons, but slow and stupid to see with their eyes the fulfilment of the prophecies in Himself, and to hear with their ears the message of the Gospel.

Reader. Is there an interval between death and the life to come!

There are no passages that directly assert that a person goes directly to heaven or hell after death, but there are passages from which the inference may be made. These are: Luke 23 : 43, the assurance of Christ to the thief on the cross; Luke 16 : 19-31, the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus, and others. We have treated this subject in detail in our book, "555 Difficult Bible Questions Answered," to which we beg leave to refer you for fuller explanation.

"Simply My Work"

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

A RATHER famous authoress was being interviewed just after the publication of her best and most successful book.

"What do you want me to talk about?" she asked the interviewer.

"Oh," she was answered, "anything at all—to begin with. What, for instance, do you think of literature as a pursuit?"

"Literature as a pursuit?" questioned the famous authoress rather blankly. "Literature as a pursuit? I never thought of it in quite that way. It's simply my work, and I do it."

Perhaps that is why the famous authoress usually wrote books that were successfull as well as good.

THIS week we'll be celebrating Lincoln's Birthday. We'll stop working for a day and put flags out and get down his picture from the dusty bookshelves to show to the children. And as we look at his homely, rugged face—the face that, with all its homeliness and ruggedness, is the kindest, tenderest face in the world; the face that, with all its kindness and tenderness, is a strong face—we'll probably indulge in a little hero-worship.

We'll probably think of how he pored over battered text-books in the evening, in front of the rude cabin fireplace. We'll probably think of his humor and his humanity. We'll probably remember how he freed the slaves. We'll remember how, even while he was busy saving a nation, he could still find time to be courteous to a rebel mother, to hear the last word of a dying Confederate soldier. We'll remember that, as a President of the United States, he gave his soul, his heart, and in the end his life, to fill his great position honorably.

I wonder if any reporter ever interviewed Lincoln. I'm inclined to think that, if he did, he might have asked a question something like this:

"Well, Mr. Lincoln, what do you think of politics—as a pursuit?"

And I'm inclined to think that Lincoln would have answered, looking down humorously on his questioner,

"Why, I never thought of politics—of the presidency—as a pursuit. It's just my work, and I do it!"

Perhaps that is why Lincoln was capable of being our greatest President.

THERE'S a little school teacher I know who has a class of troublesome children. The words "troublesome children" should be put in quotation marks, for that's what they are called by the school board. But if you look carefully at the children you'll see that many of them have odd, dead-looking eyes; that not a few of them have abnormally large, queerly shaped heads. They aren't very bright—and they do most extraordinary things. They aren't bad, they just don't know.

Before the little school teacher came to town, the "troublesome children" were just about unmanageable. They had been scattered through a number of classrooms and had succeeded in throwing a damper on a proportionate number of classes. They had caused the resignation of several good teachers, who asserted that they "couldn't and wouldn't stand them!" And then the little teacher came to town and suggested to the school board that all of these children be put in a separate class of their own. "Then," she said, "they won't upset more than one class. And maybe"—and there was a brave note in her voice—"they'll make some sort of progress."

The school board was frankly interested. But——

"Who," they questioned, "will take charge of the class?"

The little teacher squared her slender shoulders. "I will," she said.

It took just a month to organize the class. It took just six weeks to get the class interested. At the beginning of the second month the class had learned the meaning of discipline. At the end of the third month the class had begun to acquire knowledge. At the end of the year the class had finished the amount of work prescribed for them. They passed into the next grade and the teacher passed along with them. Nobody envied her position, although she really did seem to enjoy it.

It was on the last day of school that the school board made a tour of inspection through various class-rooms. Last of all they turned, by common consent, to the class of "troublesome children." As they filed quietly through the door they saw that the children were having their final exercises. A little girl, with the most abnormally large head of all, was reciting from memory and with some show of expression a little verse. The other children and the little teacher clapped enthusiastically, if decorously, as she finished.

The head of the school board stepped forward. He was a tall, thin man with benign eyes and silvery hair.

"Young lady," he said, "I want to thank you—and to shake your hand. And, before the rest of the board, I want to say that I don't know how you managed it."

The little school teacher's eyes opened very wide, indeed. And then she smiled sweetly at the school board.

"Why," she told them pleasantly, "it's nothing. It was my work and I did it."

"IT'S my work—simply my work—and I did it!" That's what people who have done a really successful, worth-while bit of work, usually say. And then, because the folk who do worth-while work are often loath to talk of it, they usually change the subject. But they don't say quite enough.

Do you think that, if the famous authoress and the little school teacher had just done their work in a mechanical way, that it would have been such very good, commendable work? Do you think that if Lincoln had been President only in a matter-of-fact, business sense, he would have been honored as he has been honored? Do you? I don't!

The famous authoress said, "It's simply my work—and I did it!" She left unsaid, "because I loved it, and my heart was in it, and I wanted to do it!"

The little school teacher said very much what the famous authoress said. But she left unsaid—"Why, I wanted to help those children. I liked them, I was sorry for them. It was my work, and I wanted to do it!"

That is the secret of success, of bigness. Be able to say, "It's simply my work and I did it"—and be able to leave many other words, unsaid, in your heart. If you have the real spark of greatness, other people can supply the unsaid words.

◆

THE first week of the Chinese New Year, February 4 to 11, 1917, has been suggested by the China Continuation Committee as a special week of evangelism, in which every member of the churches of China may take part, with a view to reaching all classes of people. The idea is to train lay workers to carry the entire evangelistic movement, in the extension of Bible study and evangelism growing out of Bible study, to unreached villages in China. The aim of this special week of evangelism is the enlistment and training of every church member to take some active part in evangelistic work. A similar plan was carried out during the autumn of 1915 in South India; 3,800 villages were visited, of which 835 were absolutely new, where no Christians resided; 8,400 meetings were held, and over 200,000 men and 100,000 women heard the Gospel; 6,433 persons decided for Christ, 1,600 being women. If such results as these were obtained in India, it is hoped that the week of evangelism in China will have an equally successful outcome.

THIRTY years as a Sunday school superintendent is the record of J. K. Mettinger of the Sanford, Fla., Methodist Episcopal Church, who recently resigned. The Sunday school had forty-five members when Mr. Mettinger became its leader. Now it numbers over 400. He organized the school at once as a missionary society and began to set aside for missions the second collection of each month. In the thirty years these collections totaled $2,250.

Tooth Mountain Cut Columbia River Highway

More of Them Are Sold—and Why

The first time a man buys a certain make of automobile tire he does so largely on faith.

Some friend has recommended it, or an advertisement has appealed, or the repute of the maker has won him over.

But the second time he buys that make of tire, he does so from an entirely different reason. His own experience is behind the purchase—performance, pure and simple, has made the sale.

We point this out to emphasize the significance of Goodyear Tires' tremendous popularity. More of them are sold to the motorists of America than of any other brand.

More of them are sold—not today only, but day in and day out. The upward sweep of Goodyear sales has never been headed since its start.

Obviously, performance underlies this astonishing dominance of a market solicited by more than 200 makes of tires.

Obviously, performance consistently and convincingly superior holds this dominance against all aggression.

Over such performance, day in and day out, Goodyear quality stands guard.

It insures you bigger returns from your tire investment than you have commonly known.

Goodyear Tires, Heavy Tourist Tubes and "Tire Saver" Accessories are easy to get from Goodyear Service Station Dealers everywhere.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, Akron, Ohio

GOODYEAR
AKRON

LEWIS-BUILT HOMES
Machine-cut
Factory to you
AT THE INSIDE PRICE
$694
5 Rooms and Bath

Modern Method of Home Building is factory efficiency applied to the building business; enabling you to buy your house, complete, with all lumber and millwork cut-to-fit by machinery; all hardware, paint, shingles, even nails, etc., included, at lowest factory price

1917 Prices Based on 1916 Costs

Our preparedness is your gain. Dodge the exorbitant prices—compounded profits—extra labor—extravagant waste—and tedious delays of the old-fashioned building method. Investigate this newer, better, quicker system already tried and approved by thousands of home-builders.

Get Our Catalog of 100 Houses

Cottages and Bungalows; make your selection; we ship the complete house direct to you, ready-cut, at factory price. Accurate plans and full instructions free. Machine-cut lumber saves 40% carpenter labor. No waste. No delays. No costly mistakes. One price. One profit. One responsibility. Money-back guarantee of satisfaction.

WRITE TODAY for catalog showing actual photographs, floor plans, full specifications and prices. Enclose 4c. postage. (Also Home Furnishings catalog on request.)

LEWIS MANUFACTURING CO.
Dept. 293 Bay City, Mich.
Western Branch LEWIS-BUILT HOMES Portland, Ore.

Become* the woman you wish to be

REGAIN your health, poise and figure. You can be so well and weigh what you should. I can help you. I know I can. Not one drop of medicine.

My way is the natural way—a scientific system, combining exercise, bath, diet, sleep and deep breathing.

In a few short weeks, with my help, you will surprise your family and friends.

80,000 Women Are My Friends

I have won their friendship and respect because I have made them well, taught them how to keep well, reduced and increased their weight, given them perfect figures—all in the privacy of their rooms—and I have kept their confidence. May I help you?

Physicians approve my work; their wives and daughters are my pupils. Medical magazines advertise my work.

These facts are cited modestly—with only a desire to prove that I can and will do all I promise. Remember,

You Can Be So Well! You Can Weigh What You Should!

It is easy to be well, to be free from nagging ailments. Even the most chronic afflictions, in nine cases out of ten, are vastly benefited by my help. And I want so much to help you.

If you have any of the following derangements, mark an X after it and send to me:

Excess Flesh in any part of body
Thin Bust, Chest, Neck or Arms
Round Shoulders
Incorrect Standing
Incorrect Walking
Poor Complexion
Poor Circulation
Lame Back
Headache
Sleeplessness
Lack of Reserve
Nervousness Irritability
Constipation
Indigestion
Dizziness Weakness
Rheumatism
Colds
Torpid Liver
Mal-assimilation

I can build you up or reduce you, You thoroughly enjoy my simple directions and you feel so satisfied with yourself.

Write to me! Ask for my Booklet No. 24—sent you without charge. Let me tell you all about my wonderful experience! Then you will understand the great work I am doing for womankind; and how I can help you.

Susanna Cocroft, Dept. 18, 624 Michigan Ave., Chicago

Freight Prepaid

Let Us Cook 90 Meals

Put a Kalamazoo in your home on our 30 days' trial plan. Let us show you what Kalamazoo stove quality is and how to save money. Your money promptly returned if not satisfied. 300,000 owners now recommend Kalamazoos. Let us refer you to some near you.

Quick Shipment Direct From Manufacturers

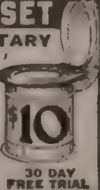
Write for our catalog and see color illustrations of newest style ranges—new features, white enamel splasher backs, etc. Highest quality at wholesale factory prices. We pay freight and make quick shipment. Ask for Catalog No. 103.

KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., Mfrs., KALAMAZOO, MICH.
Stoves, ranges, gas ranges, furnaces, white enameled metal kitchen kabinets and tables; 3 catalogs—please say which you want.

A Kalamazoo Direct to You



INDOOR CHEMICAL CLOSET

NO SMELL — NO GERMS — SANITARY

Use in any room. Needs no plumbing, sewerage or running water. Chemicals in closet kill germs. Fine for the sick and old folks.

Destroy Outdoor Closet

Put in a warm Indoor Sanitary Closet. Empty twice monthly. Only attention necessary. Satisfied users and Boards of Health endorse it. Fully guaranteed. Write now for free literature.

Sanitary Closet Co., 42 Colton Bldg., Toledo, O. 30 DAY FREE TRIAL

LEPAGE'S GLUE 10c
HAS HUNDREDS OF USES

Jesus Heals a Nobleman's Son

International Sunday School Lesson for February 18
John 4 : 43-54

Faith and Miracle

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

JESUS was coming back to Galilee famous, because of the things which he had said and done in Judea. Jesus himself testified that "a prophet hath no honor in his own country." How true it is that we find it hard to set the supreme valuation on people whom we have always known! The brothers of Jesus refused to believe that their own brother was the Messiah until after his crucifixion. How sad, but how natural! The young fellows who have grown up in the same town with a great statesman, who have shared school and play with him, hardly credit him with all the ability he really has. We ought to think more highly of our old friends.

Yet, on the other hand, when the famous man comes back to the home town every one is anxious to claim acquaintance with him. "So when Jesus come into Galilee, the Galileans received him."

The Rebuke of Jesus

AND now we find a king's officer (basilicos), who had heard of Jesus, coming to Cana and begging him to go to Capernaum to heal his fever-stricken son. How strange is Jesus' answer: "Except ye see signs and wonders, ye will in no wise believe." There seems a strange brusqueness here. It was so natural an appeal. We can best understand the rebuke of Jesus by looking back at the preceding verses. Jesus had just found true spiritual faith among the despised Samaritans. The woman at the well had brought her acquaintances. Jesus had been heard eagerly. He appears to have worked no miracles, but to have spent his two days' visit in declaring his spiritual mission as Redeemer from sin and Revealer of God. The good seed found receptive ground.

Now, upon coming again among Jews, the old craving for great wonders was manifest. The request of the nobleman was for temporal and not spiritual help. Despite the man's great need Jesus preferred the Samaritan faith. "Except ye see signs and wonders ye will in no wise believe." He was not referring to the distressed father, but used the plural for the people in general. It always hurt Jesus to realize that most of the hearers were too dull of soul to accept the truth for its own sake. Truth had to be authenticated by marvels.

Miracles a Hindrance and a Help

THE fact is that the miracles were both a help and a hindrance to Jesus in his great program. Given such a marvelous personality, unusual power was to be expected. Unite to such ability and insight the quality of pity in a superlative degree, and he could not refrain from doing what he could. Yet early we see a certain constraint in the Master, as he pressed earnestly forward with his teaching ministry, that "the loaves and the fishes" were more sought than "the words of eternal life." For example, when he cured Peter's wife's mother of the fever (Luke 4), a multitude of sick were brought to him. He could not turn them away. "He laid his hands on every one of them, and healed them." But when it was day, he went into a desert place. The multitude followed him seeking miracles. "But he said unto them, I must preach the Gospel of the Kingdom of God to the other cities also: for therefore was I sent." Not to give temporary health to those who would become sick again and die at last; not to give bread for a day's supply; but for eternal guidance, bringing the bread of life.

Because men in their selfishness and slowness of heart fixed their eyes on the physical benefits and the marvelous to the exclusion of the truly spiritual, miracles could actually hinder Jesus. "An evil and adulterous generation seeketh after a sign; but there shall no sign be given unto it, but the sign of Jonah" (Matt. 16 : 4). "And the Pharisees came forth, and began to question with him, seeking of him a sign from heaven, trying him. And he sighed deeply in spirit" (Mark 8 : 11). Jesus never performed a miracle for its own sake, but only to answer a need or to teach a truth.

Whenever possible Jesus linked up a moral truth to the remarkable manifestation of power. At once examples occur to every Bible reader. The "sign" was quickly used as a text for the thing signified. But in our present chapter, the man who received the benefit pressed on and reached the greater truths himself. Such ministries as this also made hearts tender and minds open that otherwise would have been hard to reach. It is interesting to see how in this case the officer advanced step by step in faith.

The King's Officer

IT is believed by many that this "nobleman" was Chuza, a steward of Herod the king. We find in the eighth chapter of Luke a beautiful reference to the ministering women who accompanied Jesus and his disciples. In gratitude for great blessings these women provided for their needs. Among them are mentioned Mary Magdalene, who had been mad, and Joanna the wife of Chuza, Herod's steward. How beautiful to imagine the grateful mother of the healed child ministering to Jesus from her wealth, and, more than that, "following him" herself!

Can you picture the desperate father, being told the child will die, going off as a last resort to the Teacher of whom rumor reached him? He would not trust a servant; perhaps the Great Physician would not come for a servant. It was taking a chance, with just faith enough, on hearsay, to try. But it brushed aside all comment with the prayer, ' Sir, come down ere my child die."

Judge then of the effect upon him of meeting Christ. For Jesus said, "Return home, thy son will live." And the man believed the word that Jesus spake unto him. Ah, that was a faith based on surer grounds, a swelling confidence in the Master of Life. He had seen Jesus, and so he accepted his mere word. He returned home at once.

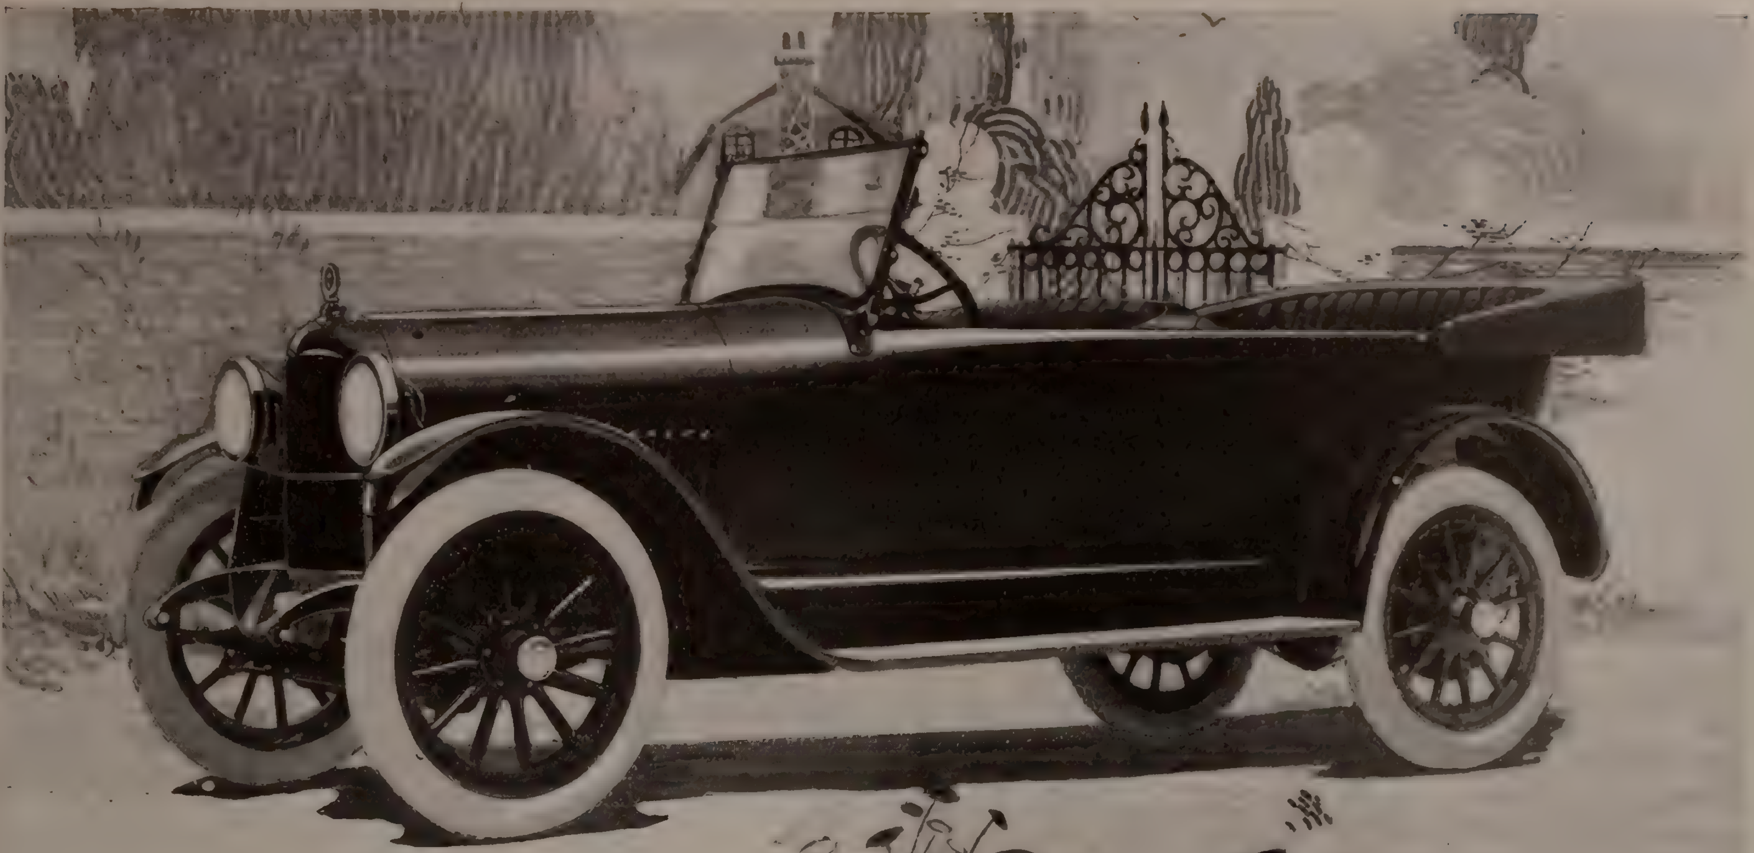
Then at the glad home-coming to the restored boy we read that this same officer "himself believed and his whole house." Another sort of belief this! First the faint hope, then an assured confidence in the possibility of the cure, then an acceptance of the Healer as the Messiah and Leader of men. The boy and the boy's mother became sharers with his father in a supreme joy. The Christ had come, and to them!

Light on What Makes a Miracle

IT has been the deepening conviction of thinkers everywhere that all genuine miracles are not reversals of law but the utilization of a higher law. To the ignorant heathen, the trained missionary is one who works miracles every day. To the wisest of his fellow countrymen the things that Jesus did were equally inexplicable. God in his mercy and providence does not abuse nature for his children, but he uses the forces which he made. He who made all can use all.

Today's lesson gives us a miracle of a kind at which some people mock. "It was a mere coincidence," they say, "that the boy became well." Why, of course it was coincident, and of course people who are sick sometimes recover wonderfully. The coincidence here makes it miraculous! The servants and the nobleman compared the time when the fever left with the time when Jesus spoke. That was the wonderful thing for them. Recently in class a student called attention to the explanation given in the Bible of the crossing of the

Continued on page 150



PAIGE

The Most Beautiful Car in America

For seven consecutive years, we of the Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company have demonstrated our ability to conceive and produce the type of automobiles that appeal instantaneously to the American people.

All our models have been immediate successes. Our announcements and the endorsement of the public have been almost simultaneous. As a consequence, the history of Paige at the automobile shows has been one long, unbroken series of triumphs.

Such being the case, it must indeed be significant when we say the reception accorded to our new models has far surpassed anything of the kind we have ever experienced.

At the earlier automobile shows it has amounted to a genuine ovation.

The Paige booths have been thronged with visitors from morning until night. Hundreds of disinterested men and women have personally sought out the officials of our company and congratulated them in the most glowing terms.

Seasoned motor car distributors from all sections of the nation have been equally lavish in their praise, and each day our mails are filled with communications expressing the same enthusiastic approval.

So you can see we have reason to feel proud—and do feel proud. We know, too, that every Paige owner will share this feeling with us when he first sees and rides in "The Most Beautiful Car in America."

Stratford "Six-51"	7-passenger	$1495	f. o. b. Detroit
Linwood "Six-39"	5-passenger	1175	f. o. b. Detroit

Paige-Detroit Motor Car Company, Detroit, Michigan

Why Some Foods Explode in the Stomach!

By WILLIAM ELDRIDGE

"THE combinations of food that most people eat three times a day inflict nothing less than a crime against their health and are the direct cause of 90 per cent. of all sickness."

This is the rather startling statement of Eugene Christian, the Famous New York Food Scientist, whose wonderful system of corrective eating is receiving so much eager attention throughout the Nation at the present time.

According to Eugene Christian we eat without any thought of the relation which one food has to another when eaten at the same time. The result is that often we combine two foods each of great value in itself, but which when combined in the stomach literally explode, liberating toxins which are absorbed by the blood and form the root of nearly all sickness, the first indications of which are acidity, fermentation, gas, constipation, and many other sympathetic ills leading to most serious consequences.

All of this, states Eugene Christian, can be avoided if we would only pay a little attention to the selection of our daily menu instead of eating without any regard for the consequences.

This does not mean that it is necessary to eat foods we don't like; instead Christian prescribes meals which are twice as delicious as those to which we are accustomed.

Not long ago I was fortunate enough to be present when Eugene Christian was relating some of his experiences with corrective eating to a group of men interested in dietetics, and I was literally amazed at what he accomplished with food alone and without drugs or medicines of any kind.

One case which sticks in my mind was that of a mother and daughter who went to him for treatment. The mother was forty pounds overweight and her physician diagnosed her case as Bright's Disease. She had a sluggish liver, low blood pressure and lacked vitality. The daughter had an extreme case of stomach acidity and intestinal fermentation, was extremely nervous, had chronic constipation, and was 30 pounds underweight.

Christian prescribed the proper food combinations for each. Within a few weeks all symptoms had disappeared, and within three months the mother had lost 33 pounds and the daughter had gained 26 pounds, and both were in perfect health—normal in every particular.

Another case which interested me greatly was that of a young man whose efficiency had been practically wrecked through stomach acidity, fermentation and constipation, resulting in physical sluggishness which was naturally reflected in his ability to use his mind. He was twenty pounds underweight when he first went to see Christian and was so nervous he couldn't sleep. Stomach and intestinal gases were so severe that they caused irregular heart action and often fits of great mental depression. As Christian describes it he was not 50 per cent. efficient either mentally or physically. Yet in a few days, by following Dr. Christian's suggestions as to food, his constipation had completely gone, although he had formerly been in the habit of taking large daily doses of a strong cathartic. In five weeks every abnormal symptom had disappeared—his weight having increased 6 pounds. In addition to this he acquired a store of physical and mental energy so great in comparison with his former self as to almost belie the fact that it was the same man.

But perhaps the most interesting case that Christian told me of was that of a multimillionaire, a man 70 years old who had been traveling with his doctor for several years in a search for health. He was extremely emaciated, had chronic constipation, lumbago and rheumatism. For over twenty years he had suffered with stomach and intestinal trouble which in reality was superaciduous secretions in the stomach. The first menus given him were designed to remove the causes of acidity, which was accomplished in about thirty days. And after this was done he seemed to undergo a complete rejuvenation. His eyesight, hearing, taste and all of his mental faculties become keener and more alert. He had had no organic trouble—but he was starving to death from malnutrition and decomposition—all caused by the wrong selection and combination of foods. After six months' treatment this man was as well and strong as he had ever been in his life.

These instances of the efficacy of right eating I have simply chosen at random from perhaps a dozen Eugene Christian told me of, every one of which was fully as interesting and they applied to as many different ailments.

There have been so many inquiries from all parts of the United States from people seeking the benefit of Eugene Christian's advice and whose cases he is unable to handle personally that he has written a little course of lessons which tells you exactly what to eat for health, strength and efficiency. This course is published by The Corrective Eating Society of New York.

These lessons, there are 24 of them, contain actual menus for breakfast, luncheon and dinner, curative as well as corrective, covering every condition of health and sickness from infancy to old age and for all occupations, climates and seasons.

Reasons are given for every recommendation based upon actual results secured in the author's many years of practice, although technical terms have been avoided. Every point is explained so clearly that there can be no possible misunderstanding.

With these lessons at hand it is just as though you were in personal contact with the great food specialist, because every possible point is so thoroughly covered that you can scarcely think of a question which isn't answered. You can start eating the very things that will produce the increased physical and mental energy you are seeking the day you receive the lessons and you will find that you secure results with the first meal.

If you would like to examine these 24 Little Lessons in Corrective Eating simply write The Corrective Eating Society, Dept. 342, 460 Fourth Ave., New York City. It is not necessary to enclose any money with your request. Merely ask them to send the lessons on five days' trial with the understanding that you will either return them within that time or remit $3, the small fee asked.

Please clip out and mail the following form instead of writing a letter, as this is a copy of the official blank adopted by the Society and will be honored at once.

[Advertisement]

CORRECTIVE EATING SOCIETY,
Dept. 342, 460 Fourth Avenue, New York City

You may send me prepaid a copy of Corrective Eating in 24 Lessons. I will either remail them to you within five days after receipt or send you $3.

Name.................................. City..................................

Address.................................. State..................................

The Sunday School Lesson

Continued from page 148

Red Sea. Exodus 14:21 says, "Jehovah caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind all night." But this student made the mistake of saying, "Then it wasn't a miracle, it was a coincidence." Don't you suppose, if we were fleeing from a cruel enemy with all our loved ones and our countrymen, and the sea were blown back just when we were in direst need, that we would get down on our knees and thank God? It would be miracle enough that God used his giant forces for us.

An Answered Prayer

SHALL we not say that every answer to prayer is also a miracle in the true sense? This nobleman approached Christ and offered his request. It was granted, and he went home to rejoice in seeing that answer. But throughout the Christian ages a great multitude have prayed to an unseen Lord. The answer has come—in redeemed lives, in mighty missions among the heathen, in great schools among the poor, in an uncountable number of wonderful ways. Shall not our knowledge of this enable us to make the venture of faith? "Blessed are they that have not seen, and yet have believed."

As the nobleman knew Jesus better he trusted more and more. If our faith is not growing can it be because we are not using what we have? Can it be we are not coming closer to the Master and learning more of his power and his grace?

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. Brown, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

How to Develop the Lesson Facts

A YOUNG ladies' class teacher secures the lesson facts "frequently by assigning some one to present the salient facts of the lesson."

A teacher of young men says: "I use an outline and work up to the leading facts."

A Junior teacher of boys: "I develop the lesson facts in story form. As the children do not use lesson books and do not learn the lesson before coming to school, they cannot answer questions on the lesson; but they do answer questions on the last Sunday's lesson when I review that."

Another Junior teacher says: "One main truth of that particular class should be selected and the story planned to impress that one truth."

The teacher of a class of young men says: "No prescribed way; sometimes I tell the facts; sometimes they tell them; and other times we take verse by verse."

From a married ladies' class teacher: "In story. Make it real. Visualize."

A teacher of high school girls has this method: "If possible, I develop facts by comparison—something in the life of the pupil, or some one they know."

In a class of twelve to fourteen year old boys the teacher's method is: "By telling the story and asking questions, and by referring to the passages of Scripture bearing on the facts I wish to emphasize."

A teacher of thirteen-year-old girls says: "I ask them to tell me the facts, writing them on the blackboard as they are mentioned; then we unfold them together, finding the deeper and more practical points."

A sensible teacher of boys at the "foot-hill" age—fifteen to seventeen—writes: "I never present a big number of ideas; just one or two central truths, and dwell long enough to feel sure it is clearly and forcibly presented. It is better, to my mind, to hold boys twenty minutes and stop, than to lose attention in keeping on thirty to thirty-five minutes."

An Intermediate class teacher says: "I generally tell the lesson story and then we read it in the Bible. It is better understood and evidently interests more than if read first."

From a teacher of Intermediate boys: "I develop the lesson by discussion. I seldom ask many questions, and seldom lecture; but I am careful to have the question settled and not in doubt."

With a class of married men, the plan is this: "I bring out the conditions. Next, reasons or motives; then the main facts under consideration; then the results, showing causes and effects."

A teacher of college girls says: "I am always careful that the class understand clearly the facts, the history back of them, et cetera, and then develop them in a way suited to the class."

The plan used by a teacher of young ladies: "If parables, by the history that brought forth the parable. Sometimes use poetry; sometimes the lives of men, both Biblical and others."

And here are the answers from a group of teachers:

"I try to find correlative facts in the word of God."

"Usually read or have lesson read in instalments."

"Principally through question and answer."

"By showing similarity between then and now."

"By question, discussion, illustration, and application to present-day conditions."

"Sequentially."

"As there is little preparation, I use the lecture method principally."

"Through questions which come to me as a result of personal study."

"I bring out the characters of the lesson."

"I make about three points—live ones."

"By story told as vividly as possible."

"In story form, giving in my own words the Biblical account."

"By the analytical method, usually."

"By getting scholars to ask questions."

"By question and brief synopsis."

"By giving an important place or incident first, and then tell the story, so that the incident stands out prominently."

"I have objects to show them that illustrate the lesson."

"I get a child to tell the story in his own words."

We shall in next issue show plans of lesson illustration.

Among the Workers

REV. A. S. PAYNTER, of the India Christian Mission, who visited the United States last summer, reached Ceylon and the headquarters of the mission on September 5, having been absent from his field for eighteen months, the longest absence since 1883, when he began his work. The work was carried on in his absence by Mrs. Paynter. Miss Mary F. Houston, a graduate of the Hephzibah Missionary Training Home, New York, has joined the working force of the mission.

UNION evangelistic meetings under Rev. J. D. Belknap, who had recently closed a meeting at Haines Falls, N. Y., were opened in Woodstock, N. Y., the first week in January.

CONSECRATION for service, evinced by the volunteering of five hundred for missions and the ministry, marked an evangelistic campaign recently concluded at Oswego, N. Y., under the leadership of Evangelist Oliver C. Miller. Two thousand persons were reported as confessing Christ during the meetings.

EVANGELIST FRANK A. MILLER, after four months' work in Nebraska, Illinois and Missouri, opened union meetings January 3 in Hicksville, Ohio.

PORTLAND, Me., began evangelistic meetings the first week in January under the leadership of Rev. Milford H. Lyon. Evangelist Lyon went to Portland from Camden, N. J., where eight weeks of special effort are reported to have brought about 5,000 conversions.

SINCE beginning the work of placing Bibles in the guest rooms of hotels, the Gideons have supplied 307,736 Bibles to hotels in the United States and 23,000 in Canada. They are now putting them out at the rate of about 3,000 a month.

HOW TO LIVE
AUTHORIZED BY THE HYGIENE REFERENCE BOARD OF THE LIFE EXTENSION INSTITUTE, INC.
FISHER AND FISK

"If You Want to Live Longer and Better— Read This Book"

Just Published

Authorized by and prepared in collaboration with the Hygiene Reference Board of the Life Extension Institute by IRVING FISHER, Chairman, Professor of Political Economy, Yale University, and EUGENE LYMAN FISK, M.D.

HOW TO LIVE

The Nation's Foremost Book of Health

Opinions of Some Eminent Authorities

DR. J. H. KELLOGG, Supt. Battle Creek Sanitarium, Battle Creek, Mich., says: "Unquestionably not only the most authoritative but the most readable and most comprehensive book on personal hygiene which has ever been published."

THE JOURNAL OF THE AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION says: "It is a conservative statement of the principles by which the individual may attain and keep good health. . . . This book should be a non-fiction 'best-seller,' and physicians should be propagandists in its behalf."

DR. EUGENE C. HOWE, Department of Hygiene, Wellesley College, Wellesley, Mass., says: "It is the biggest thing that has happened in hygiene. We have had thirty copies put into the general library for reference use for my class in Personal Hygiene."

THE NEW YORK TIMES says: "A volume, the scientific accuracy of which is vouched for by William J. Mayo, M. D., ex-President of the American Medical Association; Alexander Graham Bell, M. D., Board of Scientific Directors, Eugenics Record Office; Major-Gen. William C. Gorgas, and about ninety other men renowned in the fields of medicine, surgery, bacteriology, industrial hygiene, etc., may well be accepted as the most authoritative epitome thus far available in the great but hitherto neglected realm of individual hygiene."

DR. RUPERT BLUE, Surgeon-General U. S. Public Health Service, Washington, D. C.: "It is the true story of personal hygiene, told in a plain and straightforward manner."

DR. LUTHER H. GULICK, Pres of Campfire Girls of America: "If its teachings could be put into effect, humankind would reach a new level in a single year."

DR. S. S. GOLDWATER, formerly Commissioner of Health of New York City: "Cannot every practitioner in the country be requested to promote the circulation of the book?"

Surgeon-General W. C. GORGAS, War Department, Washington, D. C.: "It is the most practical and useful book on the subject that I know of."

DR. HARVEY W. WILEY Pure Food Expert: "I give the book my unqualified approval."

This new book represents the official result of the extensive study, investigation, and research of the Hygiene Reference Board of the Life Extension Institute, which is composed of many of America's foremost citizens, including such physicians as: Drs. William J. Mayo, Ex-President American Medical Association; Russell H. Chittenden; William H. Welch, of Johns Hopkins University; John F. Anderson, Director, U. S. Government Hygienic Laboratory; Dudley Allan Sargent; Cressy L. Wilbur, New York State Health Department, etc., and many eminent men in public life, including Ambassador Page; Alexander Graham Bell; David Starr Jordan, and others. Introduction by Ex-President William Howard Taft.

This Book Tells You How To Keep Well

From the most modern and dependable scientific data Prof. Fisher and Dr. Fisk have built up a most entertaining book of wide-spread popular usefulness, covering such subjects as:

How to Avoid Colds
What it Means to Eat Hastily
What to Eat and How to Eat
Eating to Get Fat
What to Eat to Get Thin
Hygiene in the Home
Outdoor Living and Sleeping
Blood Pressure
Hardening of the Arteries
Deep Breathing and Exercise
Curing Acid in the Blood
How to Cure Insomnia
Treatment for Nervous Troubles
Fifteen Rules for Good Health
Effects of Alcohol—Tobacco
How to Cure Constipation Without Drugs
Eugenics—What It Is and What It Is Not

State Boards of Health Recommend It

The State Boards of Health of Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Pennsylvania and New York endorse and recommend it. A copy was purchased for every official of the Pennsylvania State Board of Health.

Dr. A. T. McCormack, Secretary of the Board of Health of the State of Kentucky, obtained and read a copy and then immediately ordered 12 more copies for some friends. When a member of such a responsible body as the State Board of Health does such a thing you can readily appreciate how valuable the book must be.

One Man Orders A Thousand Copies

Prof. Robert T. Legge, Department of Hygiene, University of California, Berkeley, Cal.: "I wish to compliment the publishers as well as the authors for producing this timely live book. I have adopted it as a text-book for my freshman classes next semester, and have placed an order with our Co-operative store to have on hand at least one thousand copies for the coming semester."

23,000 Already Sold

Prof. Sutherland Simpson, Department of Physiology, Medical College, Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.: "It is the best book of its kind that has ever come into my hands. This was to be expected from the men who are responsible for it. I have advised each of my students (about 500) to procure a copy."

Prof. Thomas A. Storey, Department of Hygiene, The College of the City of New York, New York: "I have referred this book to over eleven hundred college students, and have sent copies of it with my compliments to several of my friends. I believe it to be the best book on practical hygiene that has yet appeared."

The Book Covers the Following and Many More Topics. These Are Just a Few Taken From the Index:

Constipation
Air Baths
Alcohol — Its effect on heart, kidneys, weight, morals, brain, nerves, offspring, etc., etc
Amusements
Apoplexy
Athletes
Autointoxication
Table of Food Values
Bathing
Blood Pressure
Deep Breathing
Catarrh
Mortality Tables
Cigar and Cigaret Smoking
Colds
Clothes
Consumption
Cooking
Dancing
Death Rate
Defectives
Degenerate Tendencies
Despondency
Diseases caused by incorrect Food Combinations
Disinfection
Drafts
Habit Forming Drugs
Dyspepsia
Exercising the Emotions
Diet and Endurance
Eugenics
Eye Strain
Fat
Fatigue Feet
Flat Foot Foods
Games
Grippe
Habit of Happiness
Headaches
Health Foods and Drinks
Heart Troubles
Heredity
Habit of Hurry
Evils of Idleness
Infectious Diseases
Outdoor Living
Overstrain
Overweight
How to Cure Insomnia
Intestinal Intoxication
Laxative Drugs and Foods
Malaria
Marriage
Meat
Melancholy
Mineral Oils
Nicotine
Patent Medicines
Poisons from Constipation
Relaxation
Art of Serenity
Sex Hygiene
Sleep
Sunlight
Tobacco Heart
Underweight—How to cure it by diet

Satisfaction Guaranteed—Absolutely—Or Money Back

Sign and send us the coupon herewith with $1.12 and we will send you immediately a copy of the book. If it is not satisfactory, for any reason, send it back, and we will refund your money right away. We are so certain of the value of this work that we do not hesitate to thus insure you against any risk whatever.

Order this book to-day and thus place your two feet firmly on the road to good health and all-round personal efficiency.

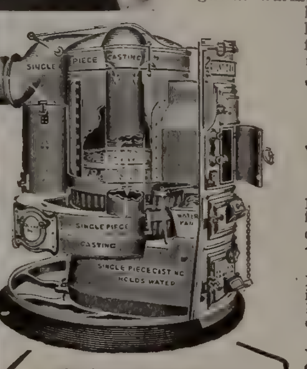
The S. S. Scranton Co., 103 Trumbull Street
Hartford, Conn.

Examination Order Form — HOW TO LIVE

THE S. S. SCRANTON CO., 103 Trumbull St., Hartford, Conn.

I enclose $1.12 for which send me your new book, HOW TO LIVE. If I am not satisfied with it, I may return it within ten days and you will refund what I have paid, and I shall owe you nothing.

Name...
Address...
City..............................State..............................



Warm Moistair

The Safer Way to Heat Your Home

WHEN the cold blasts of winter make the timbers creak and the children are shut up inside, there is nothing half so comforting as to know that down in the basement there's a trusty Round Oak Moistair Heating System on the job. The

ROUND OAK
Moistair Heating System

keeps a constant current of delightful warm, clean, fresh air circulating throughout the house. It also humidifies this air — keeps it moist and healthful, free from dirt, dust, gas, and is

"Makers of Good Goods Only"

The Only Heating System That Automatically Ventilates and Humidifies

When you replace your present heating plant, or build, insist on this more healthful system. It banishes all health dangers due to the stale, breathed-over, poisonous air —is durable—easy to operate—easy to keep clean.

Humid air at 68 degrees is more comfortable than DRY air at 75. This fact together with the saving effected by other Round Oak features means literally a saving of tons of fuel. Note in panel opposite other exclusive features.

More than 60,000 Round Oak Systems in use. You know the Round Oak STOVE! The Round Oak Heating System is made by the same makers; and is backed by over 46 years' experience. Investigate!

Five Star Points of Round Oak Supremacy

* Health Only Heating System that automatically ventilates and HUMIDIFIES.

* Comfort Delivers pure, warm, ever-changing moistair, free from dust gas, smoke—fitted with gas-tight doors and dampers.

* Economy Longest fire travel all inside casing; improved hot blast RING; extra deep fire pot; extra large combustion chamber affords perfect combustion; most heat on minimum of fuel.

* Convenience Simple regulator controls entire system. Self-cleaning. Ash pit dust-proof—seamless; fitted with sprinkler. Non-leak door frames cast on—not bolted. Easy to operate.

* Durability Materials used stand highest physical tests. All hinged pieces DRILLED, not cast. Never a bolt, where a rivet will do! Tight fittings guaranteed. GOOD FOR GENERATION OF SERVICE.

Valuable Book — FREE

also complete Heating Plan drawn up by Round Oak Engineering Experts to meet your needs. Book fully explains System—contains Blank which filled out and returned to us brings you without obligation, Plan, full costs, and name of our nearest dealer. Write for book—now.

Sold by many dealers on easy terms. To get the Genuine, insist upon the trademark showing the Round Oak Indian.

The Beckwith Company
Round Oak Folks
52 Front Street Dowagiac, Mich.
Established 1871

Come to Detroit The Automobile Center and

LEARN THE AUTOMOBILE BUSINESS-BECOME INDEPENDENT

With the New Building and Thousands of Dollars Worth of New Equipment, Our's is the Largest Exclusive Auto School in the Country

Detroit trained men get preference and jobs quickly. Think what it means to learn in the Michigan State Auto School. Factories endorse our School, glad to employ our graduates or offer them territory. Men are needed everywhere as testers, repair men, chauffeurs, garage men and salesmen. Hundreds of our graduates start in business for themselves.

Get Better Job—or—Go In Business

We teach you to handle any auto proposition. Students actually build cars from start to finish, getting factory training in assembling, block-testing, road testing, everything. Special complete course in Oxy-Acetylene brazing, welding and cutting, separate from regular course. All leading types of starting, lighting and ignition systems in operation. Six-cylinder Lozier, eight-cylinder King used for road instruction. We have a new Chalmers "6-30" chassis with 3400 r. p. m. motor, also a 1917 Detroit-6 and an Overland. Just added Delco System, used in Buick, Hudson and Packard Twin-6. Have a 1917 Willys-Knight complete chassis.

Detroit Is the Place to Learn—Start Any Time

There are 44 auto factories in Detroit and 140 accessories and parts factories. We operate Westinghouse, Autolite, Bijur Service Stations. This has added thousands of dollars' worth of equipment and makes our electrical department unequaled. Students get actual experience in handling all kinds of electrical auto equipment. We have just installed a Sprague Electric Dynamometer for block-testing purposes for students' use. The Michigan State Auto School is the only Auto School having this equipment. Auto factories need Dynamometer men constantly. School open all the year. You graduate in from 10 to 12 weeks. Enter classes any time, any day. Three classes daily: morning, afternoon, evening.

There is a great demand for Michigan State Auto School students. Auto factories call for men constantly to fill permanent places.

Follow the Crowd to the Michigan State Auto School. Come to Detroit. This Is One of the 1916 Classes.

Money Back Guarantee
We guarantee to qualify you in a short time for a position as chauffeur, repair man, tester, demonstrator, garage man or automobile dealer, or refund your money.

Auto Factory Co-Operation

We have arrangements with the Auto factories to put them in touch with men who intend going into business for themselves. The factories are looking for trained men to represent them. Come here and start right; get the information first-handed and don't wait.

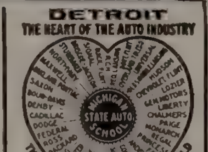
Additional Building and Equipment

23,000 square feet of additional floor space in our new building, thousands of dollars' worth of new equipment, plenty of room for students to work in our new building at 687-89-91 Woodward Avenue. Our school has grown by leaps and bounds, students come from all over the world. Graduates have started in business for themselves; others have accepted good jobs both in Detroit and over the country. Their work has proven that we train them right. We are constantly adding new equipment.

Act Quickly—Now—Don't Wait

Get full particulars, "Auto School News" and New Catalog, both absolutely free, or better still, jump on the train, as hundreds have done, and come to Detroit, the "Heart of the Automobile Industry," and learn right.

MICHIGAN STATE AUTO SCHOOL THE OLD RELIABLE SCHOOL
A. G. ZELLER, President
4402 Auto Bldg., 687-89-91 Woodward Ave., 11-19 Selden Ave., Detroit, Michigan, U.S.A.



DETROIT
THE HEART OF THE AUTO INDUSTRY
MICHIGAN STATE AUTO SCHOOL
THE AUTOMOBILE CENTER OF THE WORLD
44 AUTOMOBILE FACTORIES
140 ACCESSARY FACTORIES

After 20 Years in a Gunn

10 Years not so protected

Be Good to your Books

When you need a bookcase to really preserve your books, as well as add to the artistic beauty of your room—something in Colonial, Mission, Claw-foot, etc., designs, handsomely finished, dust-proof, easily taken apart, no ugly iron bands, do not fail to look at

GUNN Sectional Bookcases
Are Lower in Price than Others

at your dealer's. Our free new catalogue in colors will help you make a satisfactory selection at prices lower than others. Four sections shipped in a little box, instead of set up, mean a big saving in freight and cost to you. Something entirely new and interesting, "In an Emperor's Den," will be sent also. Dealers everywhere.

THE GUNN FURNITURE CO.
1824 Broadway, Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

MUCH has been said of the potency of a mother's prayer, nor will the story of sons reclaimed by the power of God through the prayer of holy mothers ever be fully told until time ceases and the last link in the chain of human life has been coupled with eternity. We often speak of a mother's prayer and a father's example. We like to picture the stalwart, upright, uncompromising Christian father, the living example to his sons. But fathers have hearts, and fathers as well as mothers know how to lay hold upon the horns of the altar in supplication for their sons. Sons, too, who have heard a godly father's voice raised in prayer at the family altar day by day, if they do go astray, though sons of such fathers are more often found in the way of righteousness, find it as impossible to forget such a father's prayers as to go beyond the influence of their mother's petitions. David was a father. He set his sons a good example for the most part, but he failed to direct their lives, to discipline them, and to guide them to a real knowledge and understanding of Jehovah.

A prince royal, flattered, ambitious, eager for power, urged on by self-seeking politicians, Absalom sought to be king in his father's place, and to drive him from the throne. Then the father heart took command, and even as he gives orders for the suppression of the rebellion, we hear David charging Joab and his armies to "deal gently with the young man Absalom." Then when the battle is over and the messenger comes to the king, the first question is not of the fate of armies or of the kingdom, but "Is the young man Absalom safe?" And when the news is finally told, we see David weeping and crying, "O my son Absalom, my son, my son Absalom! Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!"

Ever since the days of David, broken-hearted fathers have cried as did this shepherd king of Israel in the day of his overwhelming grief: "Would God I had died for thee, O my son!" And the cry of these fathers will be heard and will follow the erring boy, dead in sin, even as does a mother's prayer; and sometime, somewhere, the boy will pray, too, and the power of God in Christ Jesus will bring back to life the dead soul. Then a message of salvation will go from that altar of penitence to gladden the waiting father's heart.

A father, H. S. M., comes to the Prayer League "asking with all the earnestness of my soul that prayers be made for my son, W. C. M." He says his son was once converted, but fell under the spell of drink, and when last heard from, in October, 1913, was a member of the Twenty-eighth Infantry, U. S. Army, stationed at Columbus, Texas. He asks prayer that God may save his son.

Mrs. T. E. B. asked for prayer ten years ago, and she says God answered the prayer and gave her ten times more than she had asked for.

M. A. I. thanks God for the saving of her son, who, though ill, is now "on the Lord's side." She says to every discouraged mother, "Never, no, never, give up."

Mrs. C. A. J. praises the Father for the complete recovery of a dear one after a dangerous operation. She says that during her life of sixty years God has many times answered prayer.

Mrs. J. M. acknowledges an answer to her prayer for word from her daughter. The daughter has written home.

Mrs. T. W. S. asks how often a request for prayer for the same object may be sent to the Prayer League. We would say, as often as the burden demands relief. The League does not forget. Each member of the League in prayer at the noon hour is expected to include in his petition a prayer for all as yet unanswered prayers. Remember the parable of the importunate widow. Christ there portrayed the value of persistence in prayer. If your prayer is not yet answered, if God has not yet shown you his will in the thing about which you pray, ask again.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Meriwether, Ga.; Golden, Colo.; Columbiaville, Mich.; Corydon, Ky.; Wauchula, Fla.; Saginaw, Mich.; Excelsior Springs, Mo.; New Albany, Ind. ("pray for a great blessing on our revival meetings just opened here"); Weston, Mass. ("at the New England Church here"); Coatesville, Ind. (at the Union Valley Church); Paw Paw, Mich. (that many may be saved during union tabernacle revival); Nashville, Tenn. (asks prayer "that His Holy Spirit may be poured out on pastor and church, that the Sabbaths in this city may be kept holy"); Hicksville, Ohio ("pray for union meetings opening here January 3"); Athens, N. Y. (asks prayer for "the unconverted men of our congregation"); Spencerport, N. Y.; Admire, Kan. (in the Methodist Church); K. L. W. asks prayer for a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit at Laurel, Md., and in the city of New York); and prayer is asked for world-wide prohibition.

Miss R. T. Milton, Iowa, asks prayer "that a godly minister may be sent to our church."

Mrs. E. R. H. asks prayer that son's mind may be restored; two wives, their husbands; L. R. D. asks prayer that pastor's mind, four sisters, that their brothers' minds may be restored; a mother asks prayer that mind may be strengthened; fourteen friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for themselves, friends or relatives.

A reader asks prayer that tumor on one eye may be removed and sight strengthened; Mrs. M. L. S. asks prayer that a niece's eyes may be healed and sight restored; thirteen friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for themselves, friends or relatives.

Sixteen friends ask prayer for restoration of hearing for themselves or others.

Thirty-seven friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Fifty-eight friends ask prayer for the granting of various desires and needs, including A. M. S., that a young man who disappeared may be heard from.

Fifty-nine friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Mrs. A. G., Mrs. W. B. M., Mrs. J. W. S., Mrs. E. H., H. S. M., Mrs. F. A., Mrs. A. E. P., Mrs. J. S. W., ask prayer that their sons may be delivered from the liquor habit; a distressed mother asks prayer that three sons may be delivered from the habit; four wives, their husbands; L. S. asks prayer that brother and his wife may be cured of the liquor habit; fourteen, that other friends or relatives may be delivered from this habit.

Mrs. H. D. asks prayer that son may be cured of the drug habit; "Sister" asks prayer that brother may be cured; J. M. W. asks prayer that son may be cured.

Thirty-five parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons, including Mrs. J. B. H., that son may be saved and become reconciled to his wife and children; another, H. S. M., "that son may be saved and I may hear from him"; twenty-one wives, their husbands; sixty-three, for other relatives or friends.

Fourteen readers ask prayer for special blessing for others; including Anxious Mother, that a young minister may be blessed in his work.

Seventy-nine ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including E. I. F., that a dear one may be healed without an operation; another, M. S., that father may be cured of cancer; Mrs. S. R. H., that daughter may be restored to health without an operation; eighty-two friends, for healing for themselves, including Miss R. B. L., "that I may regain the use of limbs"; another, Mrs. A. J. K., that an operation on neck may be successful; another, Mrs. W. L. P., that cancer may be cured; another, Mrs. H. C. G., "that I may be healed without an operation"; Mrs. H. A. C., "that I may regain the use of limb without an operation."

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

A sister, Orange, Calif.; Mrs. S. D. F., Brownstown, Ind.; Mrs. L. C., Lincoln, Ill.; Mrs. A. J. R., Old Mystic, Conn.; Mrs. F. B., Cincinnati, Ohio; A Young Mother, Camden, Ohio; Mrs. B. I. Miller, Islington, North London; Miss L. B., Tyrone, Pa.; A. M. S.; Huffman, Ark.; Herald Reader, Macomb, Ill., Mrs. A. F. K., Ithaca, N. Y.; Mrs. R. C. A.; Portage, Wis.; A. M. G., Lancaster, Pa., L. M. M., Warwick, Pa.; Mrs. N. S. S., Sanford, Ky.; Mrs. A. L. B., Escondido, Calif.; E. C., Brooklyn, N. Y.; C. A. W., Oriskany, N. Y.; Miss W. S. F., Perkasie, Pa.; Mrs. T. J. B., Huntsville, Mo.; Y. D. B., Jackson, Miss.

If Your Floor Is Marred And Worn—Paint It

Not with ordinary paint, but with a paint made expressly for floors, a paint used by many of the largest railway and steamship companies with wonderful success. That paint is

Sherwin-Williams Inside Floor Paint

It covers every defect and gives you a most attractive, smooth surface that cleans easily and stands up well under the hardest kind of wear. Put up in cans, ready to apply; many good colors. The Sherwin-Williams dealer in your town can supply you.

Send for Free Booklet "The A B C of Home Painting"

It tells how to paint, varnish, stain or enamel every surface in and around your home. Complete directions by an expert painter, told in simple terms.

Decorative Helps Free

Before you decide on a color scheme for your house or for any room or rooms, write to our Decorative Department for suggestions. This service, the most complete of its kind in the world, is free to all users of Sherwin-Williams Products.

SHERWIN-WILLIAMS PAINTS & VARNISHES

COVER THE EARTH

Address all inquiries to 719
Canal Road, N. W., Cleveland, Ohio

Showrooms—New York, 116 W. 32d St.; Chicago, People's Gas Bldg.; San Francisco, 523 Market St. Sales Offices and Warehouses in principal cities. Best dealers everywhere

Peter's Roses

Continued from page 137

in a low tone that I tried to make steady; "you've done it, Peter. Listen to this!" I read:

"'Any one who accepts the tenet that the condition for happiness is the yielding of our will to Infinite Beauty, is bound to find joy in work, thereafter if never before; and his joyful labor will inevitably bring him to perfection. Because a man's hand laid willingly upon that of the Divine insures the liberation and growth of his genius.'

"Why, Peter Barlow, you've written the book you wanted to—a book that will make men see the spiritual beauty behind the physical loveliness of the world. Why, that's what that man meant when he wrote that your book was literature! It's an 'Emerson book'—a 'Bible book'—a book to keep in the end of the book-shelves nearest the kitchen. Peter—Peter—darling!"

I RAN into the outstretched arms, put my own about the dear neck, and sobbed with high and holy joy. Peter's face had been changing as my words poured out—wonder, incredulity, then a pleased flush darting across the strong features. But now he just held me steadily. I felt light kisses on my hair.

Soon the eager thoughts found controlled expression.

"When you were that boy, Peter dear, the boy of sixteen praying to do a noble work, yet cheerfully resigning it in order to work God's will, perhaps you were put at once into the best way of doing the noble work. . . . And, Peter, I was reading, the other night while the pudding baked, a book—this one was by Carlyle—and he spoke of all labor having its summit in heaven; and he said there was the sweat of the brow, and the sweat of the brain, and, higher still, the sweat of the heart. I think your book has come from the sweat of the heart, Peter, through what Carlyle called 'acted heroisms.' . . . And then I pulled out another book—McDonald's, I think—which said the only wise thing for a man to do, when he is haunted by the 'hovering of unseen wings, with the scent of unseen roses,' is to work, and at the work the Lord gives him to do; then the wings and the roses will come without asking, and his dream will come true in a different, and better, way than if he made a business of following the wings and hunting for the roses, which would surely vanish. . . ." (Where the pauses are in what I said, Peter had been punctuating my remarks with kisses.) "And, dear," I finished, "your book has grown out of the ideal condition for work—I learned that, too, from the books. . . . It should have its roots in the soil, with its blossoms reaching out toward heaven. A part of the time given to actual handwork for the world's body, fitting a man to give true service to the world's spirit."

WE seemed to be just one soul as we stood there, much as it was, six years before, when I told Peter that a little Peterkind would come soon to us to be loved into manhood, and usefulness, and heaven. A sudden queer, very human jealousy flashed.

"Peter, which is dearest to a man, the child of his loins or the child of his brain?"

Peter gave a low laugh, comprehending. He raised my chin.

"The man's wife," he answered—with such satisfactory evasion that jealousy fled, abashed.

At this point, subtly conveyed suggestions from some place near the bungalow reminded us that two young creatures were likely to be more interested, at that particular hour, in hot mince pie than in roses and books. As we started on the sunlit path to the house, Peter pointed smilingly at the second line of the motto on my dial. I made it up myself because he wanted the dial to be a sort of expression of me. It's not at all profound, and I couldn't put it in Latin, but he likes it.

Pleasure fears Time.
Work forgets Time.
Love vanquishes Time.

31 Extra Features
24% Added Luxury
100% Over-Strength

Mitchell SIXES

Now Also An $1150 Model

Your Mitchell dealer now can show you the Mitchell in two sizes. One is called Mitchell Junior. It is simply a reduction of the larger Mitchell.

It is for men who want a 5-passenger car, and who don't want to pay for size and power not needed. It has 40 horsepower—enough for five passengers. It has a 120-inch wheelbase—more than ample room.

It brings all the Mitchell attractions—nearly all the Mitchell extras—in a car at a lower price. We have doubled our capacity to build as many as we build of larger Mitchells.

Hundreds of Extras

In both the Mitchells you will now find hundreds of extra features.

There are 31 features—like a power tire pump—which nearly all cars omit. To include them this year on the Mitchell output costs us $4,000,000.

There are many added luxuries. We have added 24 per cent to the cost of finish, upholstery and trimming. The Mitchell is now one of the handsomest cars in the world. And savings made in our new body plant pay for all this added beauty.

And the Mitchell now has 100 per cent over-strength in every vital part. That is, each part is twice as strong as need be.

Our former standard was 50 per cent over-strength. That gave us marvelous endurance. But this new standard means a lifetime car.

Due to John W. Bate

All these extras are paid for by factory savings. They are due to John W. Bate, the great efficiency expert, who built and equipped this plant.

Under his methods our factory costs have been cut in two. Nowhere else could a car like the Mitchell be built at anywhere near our cost.

The result shows in these extras. Over 440 parts in the Mitchell are built of toughened steel. The most important parts are built of Chrome-Vanadium steel. Steering parts and axles are all oversize. Then the extra features and extra luxury are found in no other car at this price.

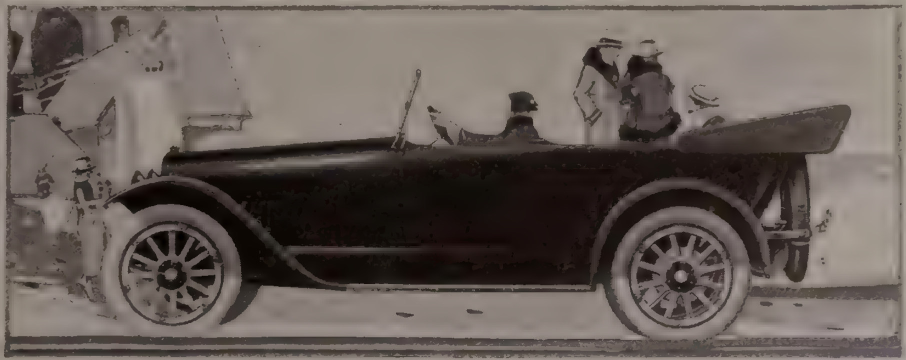
Go and see these extras. See what they mean to you. It will certainly mean, if you buy a fine car, that you want a Bate-built Mitchell.

TWO SIZES

$1460 For 7 Passenger Six—48 h. p. 127-inch Wheelbase.
$1150 For Mitchell Junior—40 h. p. 120-inch Wheelbase Six.
Both Prices f. o. b. Racine.

MITCHELL MOTORS COMPANY, Inc.
Racine, Wis., U. S. A.

(253



Write Today For This New Book

Hobart M. Cable Pianos and Player-Pianos

LET us send you this new book—and others—to help you judge values in pianos and know all that "Quality First" means when selecting your lifetime treasure.

Piano-making and buying secrets are interesting and well worth your while to know.

Investigate First

Before selecting any piano or player-piano, use caution. Secure "QUALITY FIRST" in these wonderful tone Hobart M. Cable Pianos and Player-Pianos. Then you'll take no risk in buying a lifetime treasure for your home and all the family. Investigate.

Prices Right—Terms are Liberal

You can pay as convenient, or cash if you wish. Liberal exchange offers too. Any choice Hobart M. Cable beautiful, wonderful tone instrument shown, or delivered in your parlor no matter where you live. Write today.

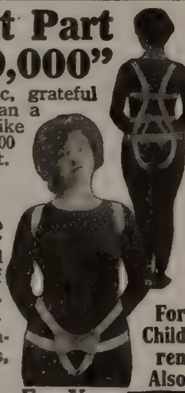
The Hobart M. Cable Company
Factory, La Porte, Ind., U.S.A.
232 Cable Street

Sent FREE

To the Music Lover

Reminder Coupon for All Books, etc.
Splendid latest books and confidential advice given. Before you buy any piano please write first. NOW.

To the Music Lover
HOBART M. CABLE PIANO CO.



"I Would Not Part with it for $10,000"

So writes an enthusiastic, grateful customer, "Worth more than a farm," says another. In like manner testify over 100,000 people who have worn it.

The Natural Body Brace

Overcomes WEAKNESS and ORGANIC AILMENTS of WOMEN AND MEN. Develops erect, graceful figure.

Brings restful relief, comfort, ability to do things, health and strength.

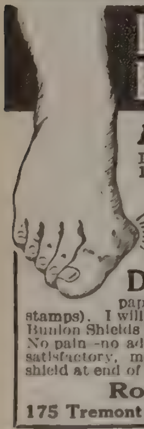
For Children Also

See What It Will Do For You

Does away with the strain and pain of standing and walking; replaces and supports misplaced internal organs; reduces enlarged abdomen; straightens and strengthens the back; corrects stooping shoulders; develops lungs, chest and bust; relieves backache and nervousness. Comfortable and easy to wear.

Wear It 30 Days Free at Our Expense

Write today for illustrated booklet, measurement blank, etc., and read our very liberal proposition.
HOWARD C. RASH, Pres. Natural Body Brace Co.
171 Rash Building SALINA, KANSAS



It's no fun to have a Bunion

It Hurts—It Burns

Don't suffer any longer. My generous 10-day Free Trial Offer means absolute freedom from foot-misery due to bunions.

Positive Relief Guaranteed

Do This! Simply trace the outline of your foot on a piece of paper and send it to me with 50c. (coin or stamps). I will send you one of my famous, sanitary Bunion Shields for 10 days trial. Relief is immediate. No pain—no adhesives—instantly removable. If not satisfactory, money will be refunded on return of shield at end of 10 days. Send TODAY.

Robert E. Turner
175 Tremont Street, Dept. F, Boston, U. S. A.

HatchEggsNewWay

New kind of Incubator. Built round like hen's nest. No cold corners. Only 1 gal. of oil, 1 filling of lamp to hatch.
FREE BOOK Describes 16 wonderful features. Mail postal today before you forget
RADIO-ROUND INCUBATOR CO., 432 Main Street, WAYNE, NEB.

GREIDER'S FINE CATALOGUE

of fine bred poultry for 1917; 67 breeds illustrated and described; information on poultry, how to make hens lay, grow chicks—all facts. Low price on stock and hatching eggs. Incubators and brooders. 25 years in business. This book only 10 cts. Send today.
B. H. GREIDER, Box 14 Rheems, Pa.

ORNAMENTAL FENCE

Handsome, costs less than wood, more durable. We can save you money. Write for free catalog and special prices.
KOKOMO FENCE MACH. CO.
North Street, Kokomo, Ind.

The War in Europe

Continued from page 135

States holds that a ship cannot be transferred from one flag to another at sea, and claims that such transfer must take place in a port, the Continental nations of Europe claiming that it can take place at sea. If the Saint Theodore should sink an American ship or a ship with Americans on board, this question of law might become an important one.

ON the western front during the week there were no events of any importance; a little bombarding, a few trench raids or very minor skirmishes here and there, and the story is told.

On the Macedonian front only unimportant skirmishes took place, involving no changes of position as a result. The weather on this front continues very bad, and it seems highly improbable that any movement of real importance can take place until the middle of March.

On the Austro-Italian front there were only the routine artillery duels, most violent perhaps on the Carso plateau. Not a single infantry clash was reported during the whole week.

The British Parliament will meet again on February 7. This country has again cut down the amount of beer which can be brewed in the United Kingdom, so that now it is only about one-half of the quantity brewed before the war. This will save about 286,000 tons of barley and 36,000 tons of sugar.

All the early part and middle of the week under consideration there was only stagnation on the Russian front. In the latter part of the week, however, on January 23, quite a battle broke out on the extreme northern end of the line to the west of Riga. In this fight, which lasted a couple of days, the Russians themselves admit that they were driven back a mile and a half, though the Teutons lay no claim to any specific advance. About 1,500 prisoners were taken by the Germans.

There were a couple of minor naval fights on Tuesday of this week between destroyer flotillas, one in the North Sea and the other in the Channel. The net result was, according to the English report, that each side lost a destroyer; the casualties on the English side are said to have been three officers and forty-four men. No report of the German casualties has reached us.

On the Rumanian front, nothing of any particular interest has taken place. In the North Dobrudja, the Bulgarians crossed the southern arm of the Danube near Tultcha, but were forced by the Russians to withdraw again to the south bank.

In the center the Germans captured one village, Nanesti, and its bridgehead to the north on the Sereth. On the northwestern part of this front the struggles in the frontier mountains continued, honors being about even. The Germans claim to have taken about 200,000 Rumanian prisoners.

On the Mesopotamian front there was a fight near Kut-el-Amara between the British and the Turks, but the accounts are diametrically opposed.

A new loan to Great Britain of $250,000,000 was brought out in the United States this past week.

The British auxiliary cruiser Laurentic, formerly the White Star Liner of that name, was recently sunk off the west coast of Ireland, date not given, with the loss of about 180 of her crew. It is not announced whether she was torpedoed or sunk by a mine.

—

THE birthday of Emperor William was celebrated on Saturday, January 27, by a notable gathering of rulers and military leaders at the great headquarters in the west. It had been predicted that the Kaiser would make this celebration the occasion for a monster stroke in the interest of peace; but his only action, aside from an order of general amnesty, was a message to the Berlin Academy of Sciences, in answer to their birthday congratulations, in which he is reported to have said: "The unshakable will to victory of the German people, who are prepared for every sacrifice of blood and treasure, will, I trust God, preserve the Fatherland from the ruin contemplated by its enemies, and will force by the sword the peace necessary for the blessed development of the people."

◆

Comments of the Press

Continued from page 136

for the governments of the Central Powers as the war aims laid down in the Entente's reply were impossible of debate for them."

Dispatches from Petrograd reported that the speech was received with the warmest approval and sympathy in government circles, with few dissenting voices.

The Handelsblad of Amsterdam, Holland, considered the address "ideal, beautiful and calculated to create a lasting peace provided it were accepted by all." Dutch papers also speculated as to whether the free Poland would include Prussian and Austrian provinces.

Senator Cummings on January 23 offered a resolution in the Senate setting apart Monday, January 29, for a full and free discussion of the President's address. The resolution was, however, resolutely opposed by most of the Democratic senators and it was impossible to agree upon a day for the debate, and equally impossible to lay the Cummings resolution on the table. It remained on the calendar and it appeared quite certain that the proposals outlined in the President's peace address would eventually be fully debated upon the floor of the Senate.

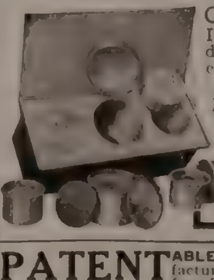
Senator Borah of Idaho on January 25 introduced a resolution calling upon the Senate to reaffirm its faith and confidence in the Monroe Doctrine and in the policies of non-intermeddling in European politics, advocated by Washington and Jefferson.

Additional Gifts to Christian Herald Fund for Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Continued from page 141

Albert Ertz	$1.00
Mrs E S Lovell	1.00
Rev Giles B Cooke	1.00
Mrs J T Hays	1.00
Friend, Switzer, S C	1.00
A Jenkins, H Harding, E McKechnie Others	1.00
Mrs M A Kirtley	1.00
Mary A Gates	1.00
Mrs N E Christian	1.00
D Cameron	1.00
Mrs C A Maguren	1.00
Caroline Nelson	1.00
Addie James	1.00
Mrs S U Heasly	1.00
Mrs E N Hammond	1.00
Mrs A C Kickhoefer	1.00
Mrs Otis Christie	1.00
J A Heston	1.00
Mrs J Coerter	1.00
Mrs J C H	1.00
Chickadee Club, Duluth, Minn	1.00
Mrs W Warren	1.00
Mrs Rebecca Smith	1.00
Mrs I F Bilbro	1.00
Mrs Maggie Potter	1.00
John W Patterson	$1.00
—— Winnetka, Ill	1.00
Mrs Jacob Zimmerman	1.00
A W Allen	1.00
Miss E B Dickinson	1.00
Mrs De Witt C Haines	1.00
Mrs E C Frost	1.00
Alex Hamilton	1.00
B L Redwine	1.00
T J Wilson	1.00
Mark E Taylor	1.00
Mrs Miles Derr	1.00
Jennie M Leiser	1.00
Mrs Hardill	1.00
—— Anderson, Ind	1.00
Louisa L Housel	1.00
Mary J Housel	1.00
Harley Caraway	1.00
A M Seate	1.00
Mrs L A Howard	1.00
A B Bradford	1.00
H A Dalby	1.00
Mrs M E Wilks	1.00
—— Castos, Okla	1.00
MissLottieGrant	.50
Mrs B Ann Tuller	.50
Mrs Carrie Sandvold	.50
Mrs M O Anderson	.50
Mrs E M Rod	$ .50
MrsOMReierson	.50
Mrs Ole J Jacobson	.50
Mrs O L Rasmuson	.50
Mrs John Young	.50
Friend, Mt Morris, Ill	.50
Kitty McFall	.50
Gladys McFall	$ .50
Mrs Pirtle	.50
EmersonOaks,Jr.	.50
—— La Grange, Ky	.50
H J Kelly	.50
Mrs R H Grant	.25
Mrs Lucy Campbell	.25
Friend, Phila, Pa	.25

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.



Let Me Quote You a Special Price On My Rapid Fireless Cooker

Cook every meal on it. If you are not satisfied and delighted I will refund every cent. Get my direct to you. Cooker is aluminum lined throughout. Full set of famous "Wear Ever" aluminum cooking utensils comes with it. Ask for free book of valuable recipes.

Special Low Factory Price

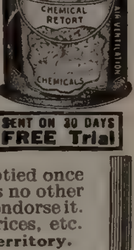
William Campbell Co.
Dept. 2 Detroit, Mich.

PATENTABLE IDEAS WANTED. Manufacturers want Owen Patents. Send for 3 free books; inventions wanted, etc. I help you market your invention without charge.
RICHARD B. OWEN, 53 Owen Bldg., Washington, D. C.



Comfort Indoor Closet
Odorless Sanitary Germ-Proof

Every home without sewerage needs one. Most convenient, meritorious home necessity in a century. A boon to sick people. Can be placed anywhere in house.

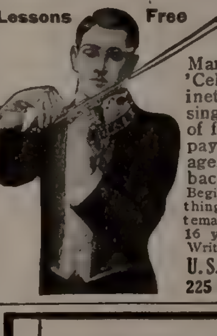
Makes Outdoor Privy Unnecessary

Put a warm Comfort Toilet in your home, a guarantee of healthy, sanitary conditions. Germ-life killed by chemicals in retort. Emptied once a month—no trouble. Needs no other attention. Boards of Health endorse it. Write now for literature, prices, etc. Agents Wanted—Exclusive territory.

SENT ON 30 DAYS FREE Trial

COMFORT CHEMICAL CLOSET CO.,
542 Factories Bldg., Toledo, Ohio

To SOUTH AFRICA
CEYLON AND INDIA
AMERICAN and INDIAN LINE
FREQUENT SAILINGS
From NEW YORK DIRECT to
CAPE TOWN, DURBAN,
BOMBAY, COLOMBO, CALCUTTA,
MADRAS AND RANGOON.
For SAILING DATE, RATE OF PASSAGE, &c., APPLY TO
NORTON, LILLY & CO.
Produce Exchange Building, N. Y. City
General Agents for
Ellerman & Bucknall Steamship Co., Ltd.



Learn Music AT HOME!

Lessons Free

New Method—Learn To Play By Note—Piano, Organ, Violin, Banjo, Mandolin, Cornet, Harp, 'Cello, Guitar, Piccolo, Clarinet, Trombone, Flute or to sing. Special Limited Offer of free weekly lessons. You pay only for music and postage, which is small. Money back guarantee. No extras. Beginners or advanced pupils. Everything illustrated, plain, simple, systematic. Free lectures each course. 16 years' success. Start at once. Write for Free Booklet Today—Now.
U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 7
225 Fifth Avenue, New York City

The New Conn Catalog is Ready

ALL the new Conn instruments are shown in our new catalog. Write for it today. It is free. Send your name and address. Any Conn instrument will be sent to you on trial. Convenient payments in small amounts may be arranged. But first write for the catalog.

C. G. Conn, Ltd.
Dept. 2492, Elkhart, Ind.

AGENTS—Only One in the World KEROSENE (Coal Oil) BURNER

JUST OUT

Fits in any cook-stove. Makes its own gas from Kerosene (coal oil). Gives every home a gas stove. Absolutely safe. Cheapest fuel known.

Wonderful Labor Saver

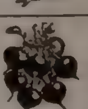
Agents just coining money. Women wild about it. No more coal or ashes to carry. No more danger from gasoline.

Safe, Clean, Odorless, Cheap

Every home a prospect. Low price makes quick sales. Easy to carry and demonstrate. Big profits. Your territory is open. Write today.
Thomas Burner Co., 2324 Gay St., Dayton, Ohio

NEUBERT'S BOOK FREE

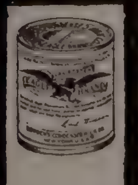
Finest, Biggest, Most Valuable Poultry Guide. 62 BREEDS Chickens, ducks, geese, turkeys. Hardy, pure bred, beautiful. Fowls, eggs, incubators at low prices. America's Pioneer poultry farm. 22 years at it. BOOK and Catalog FREE.
F. A. NEUBERT, Box 654, Mankato, Minn.



SAMPLE OUR SEED

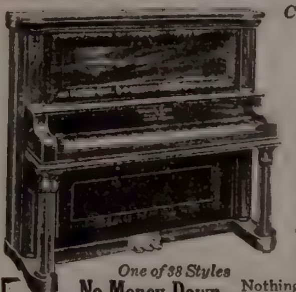
Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c. One packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Earliest Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce, 10c to new customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG FREE.
C. N. Robinson & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore, Md.

Egg-o-hatch applied to eggs during incubation strengthens the chick and weakens the shell. It supplies free oxygen, absorbs the carbon dioxide and rots the shell. Makes better hatches of stronger chicks. Booklet free. Sample, treats 100 eggs, 10 cents. Package, treats 600 eggs, 50 cents. postpaid.
Geo. H. Lee Co., 633 Lee Bldg., Omaha, Neb.



Gail Borden
EAGLE
BRAND
CONDENSED
MILK
THE ORIGINAL

"Eagle Brand" adds an appetizing richness to cakes, pies, puddings, ice cream, etc.



Four Weeks' Trial

Choice of 38 Styles of the Superb

Wing

Yes, we will ship you on four weeks' absolutely free trial, all charges prepaid, direct from our own factory, any highest-grade Wing Piano, or Player Piano.

One of 38 Styles

No Money Down Nothing on arrival; no freight either way; no deposit.

Use it and enjoy it four full weeks; then, if you wish, ship it back at our expense. You alone are the judge. You will be amazed at our rock-bottom direct price on the Wing, guaranteed 40 years. Easy monthly payments or cash.

Valuable Book—FREE "The Book of Complete Information About Pianos" sent free and postpaid. Valuable 140-page book. Tells how to judge pianos. Beautiful catalog of new art styles also sent and particulars of great Free Shipment Offer. Write today—now.

Wing & Son (Est. 1868), 9th Ave. & 13th St., Dept. 2492 New York

Send Us Your Old Carpets
We Dye Them and Weave
Velvety Rugs

Beautiful new rugs in plain, fancy or Oriental patterns — any color you want, any size—totally different and far superior to other rugs woven from old carpets.

Rugs, $1.00 and Up

Reversible, seamless, soft, bright, durable rugs, guaranteed to wear 10 years. Money back if not satisfied. Every order completed in three days.

You Save 1-2

Your old carpets are worth money, no matter how badly worn.

FREE Write for book of designs in color, our liberal freight payment offer and full information.

OLSON RUG CO.
Dept. C-30. 40 Laflin St., Chicago, Ill.

Beautifully Curly, Wavy Hair Like "Nature's Own"

In three hours you can have just the prettiest curls and waves! And they remain a long time, when Liquid Silmerine is used before rolling the hair in curlers.

Liquid Silmerine

is perfectly harmless. Easily applied with brush. Hair is nice and fluffy when combed out. Silmerine is also a splendid dressing. Keeps hair fine and glossy. Directions with bottle. At your druggist's

Keeps Skin Smooth, Firm, Fresh Youthful Looking

To dispel the tell-tale lines of age, illness or worry — to overcome flabbiness and improve facial contour — there is nothing quite so good as plain

Powdered SAXOLITE

Effective for wrinkles, crowsfeet, enlarged pores, etc., because it "tightens" and tones the skin and underlying tissue. No harm to tenderest skin. Get an ounce package, follow the simple directions—see what just one application will do. Sold at all drug stores.

Snug Comfort for Tired Feet
in
Parker's Arctic Socks
Reg. in U. S. Pat. Off.

Warm, restful, healthful, for bed-chamber, bath, sickroom. Easier than stiff-sole slippers. Worn in rubber boots absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric lined with soft white wool fleece. Washable, unshrinkable. Parker's name in every pair. In all sizes at dealers or sent postpaid for 25c a pair.

J. H. PARKER CO., Dept. C, 25 James St., Malden, Mass

Building on Facts

FORWARD movements have before now burst full-fledged from the ardent intellect of some leader of men, and great church organizations have been asked to fall in step with the fully organized movement thus developed. Some of these movements have moved, some of them have developed excellent static qualities almost upon their inception. Presbyterianism, however, is approaching the problem from a different direction. Before it institutes a contemplated new movement, it is making a thorough canvass of the stock on hand of the material upon which it may build a permanent campaign. Surveys are being made in various synods of the country, the most recently completed being in New England. The Synod of New England is found to be essentially a city synod. The synod now embraces fifty-one congregations, forty-one of which were visited in the survey by William P. Shriver, secretary of the City Immigrants Work of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions, who conducted the survey Twenty of the churches now in the New England Synod were found to be facing crucial down-town conditions.

In 1770 there were eighty-six Presbyterian congregations in New England, the majority of which afterward affiliated with the Congregational Church. The Presbyterian Church marked time for many years, but is now said to be experiencing a healthy growth. According to the figures developed by Mr. Shriver's campaign for information, the denominational strength in New England is: Congregational, 267,000; Baptist, 167,000; Methodist, 161,000; Episcopal, 144,000; Presbyterian, 12,500, the total figures for Roman and Protestant Christians being 1,906,000. Thirty-eight of the fifty-one Presbyterian churches are located in cities in locations characterized by changing populations. The conditions point to these churches as centers for fellowship, fraternal and community service. The property value of the churches in the synod amounts to $1,660,000, with encumbrances of $107,715. The membership has increased 3,000 in four years, 900 being received in the last year. Immigration into this country in the last five years has included 150,000 English, 130,000 Irish, and 60,000 Scotch. One-third of these Scotch immigrants settled in New England, one-half of these in Massachusetts.

As a result of the survey, the New England churches will give further study to the possibilities of work in down-town communities, will inquire into the workings of endowed churches to discover whether such endowments have encouraged the work of the church or otherwise, and will form a Strangers' Welcome Bureau to correspond with Presbyterian churches in Canada, Scotland and the United States in order to locate Presbyterians moving into New England in churches of their choice. Dr. Shriver went to San Francisco early in November to spend five months in a similar survey of Presbyterianism on the Western coast.

◆

PASTORS of churches, and superintendents of Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor and other organizations desiring to hear the wonderful story of John Goode from his own lips should send in their applications now, with dates, et cetera, to the Christian Herald, Bible House, New York. Mr. Goode is now speaking to church audiences in and around New York City, and his message is one of strongest appeal to the sinner and of the greatest inspiration to all who are interested in the uplift of fallen humanity. Churches should not fail to take advantage of this opportunity now, as in the coming months Mr. Goode's services will be in demand by the New York Evangelistic Committee. We would therefore urge that pastors make their dates as soon as possible.

◆

I think the book, "The Miracle of Answered Prayer," is one of the finest I ever read. It is wonderful, and I wish it might be in every home in the land.

Kent City, Mich. MRS. W.

$1.30 Worth for 50¢
The Home Garden
E·L·D·Seymour
Pakro Seedtape
Lettuce Big Boston
Pakro Seedtape
Radish
Seedtape
Sweet Peas Mixed

In Canada 60 cents

To Help You Realize Why People Are So Enthusiastic About

TRADE MARK PAKRO SEEDTAPE REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.
FOR BETTER GARDENS

Here's a truly delightful new book in which Mr. Seymour virtually carries you right into one of the beautiful gardens about which he talks, and there tells you in most happy vein—authoritative, easy to understand information—just how to plan your garden, and how and when to plant the different Vegetables and Flowers.

E. L. D. Seymour, B. S. A., is well known as the author of "Garden Profits," editor of the "Garden and Farm Almanac," associate editor of "Country Life in America" and "The Garden Magazine." The book is beautifully bound in boards, splendidly and abundantly illustrated in colors, and its regular price is $1.00.

Pakro Seedtape consists of thoroughly tested seeds of only the best of prize-winning strains, spaced in a thin tissue paper tape exactly the correct distance apart. It can be planted a whole row at a time, and no thinning out is necessary—what a wonderful labor saver! It assures higher percentage of germination, a stronger plant life, fine straight rows, and a fine even stand.

To prove to you how much better it is, we offer you a copy of Mr. Seymour's book and any three packages of Seedtape, regular value of which would be $1.30, at a special introductory price of 50c. (In Canada 60 cents.) Simply send post office money order or stamps for the book and Seedtape.

FLOWERS
10c. per Package
(In Canada, 12½c per package.)

Alyssum, Sweet
Aster, Giant Mixed
Aster, Queen of the Market
Bachelor Buttons or Corn Flower
Balsam, Double Mixed
Candytuft, Mixed
Forget-Me-Not, Blue
Hollyhock, Chartiers
Mignonette, Grandiflora
Morning Glory, Mixed
Pansies, Good, Mixed
Phlox, Drummondi, Mixed
Pinks, Chinensis Double Mixed
Poppy, California
Poppy, Shirley Mixed
Salvia, Splendens
Stocks, Ten Weeks, Mixed
Sweet Peas, California Giant, Mixed

VEGETABLES
10c. per Package
(In Canada, 12½c per package.)

Beet, Crimson Globe
Beet, Egyptian
Cabbage, All Seasons
Cabbage, Jersey Wakefield
Cabbage, Premium Flat Dutch
Carrot, Danvers
Carrot, Oxheart
Celery, White Plume
Endive, Green Curled
Kohl Rabi, Early White Vienna
Leek, Large Flag
Lettuce, Big Boston
Lettuce, Black Seeded Simpson
Lettuce, Trianon Cos
Onion, White Portugal
Onion, Yellow Globe Danvers
Parsley, Double Curled
Parsnip, Hollow Crown
Pepper, Large Bell
Radish, French Breakfast
Radish, Icicle
Radish, Long Scarlet
Radish, Scarlet Turnip, White Tip
Spinach, Long Standing
Swiss Chard
Tomato, Beauty
Tomato, Ponderosa
Tomato, Stone
Turnip, Purple Top, Strap Leaf
Turnip, Purple Top, White Globe

American Seedtape Company, Inc.
Dept. 105, 71 West 23rd Street, New York City
Canadicn Distributors, Wm. Rennie Co., Ltd., Toronto, Ont.

WEATHER

FAIR AND WARMER TO-DAY. TO-MORROW FAIR. MODERATE SOUTH WINDS.

Full Report on Page 12

Make Your Own Weather Forecasts

Your weather knowledge can be as authoritative, as far as sudden changes are concerned, as the government forecasts if you have a

No. 2252 HOUSE Tycos Barometer

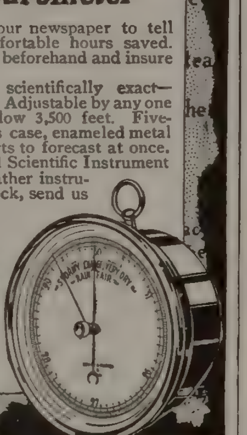
No waiting for your newspaper to tell you. Many uncomfortable hours saved. Know what to wear beforehand and insure bodily comfort.

In construction, scientifically exact—quality the highest. Adjustable by any one for all altitudes below 3,500 feet. Five-inch lacquered brass case, enameled metal dial. Efficient—starts to forecast at once.

Your Optician and Scientific Instrument Dealer sell Tycos weather instruments. If out of stock, send us $10 and we will ship instrument at once.

You should have our 36-page Barometer Booklet. It describes other styles—yours on request. Address the

Taylor Instrument Companies
ROCHESTER, N. Y.
World's Largest Mfgs. of Scientific Instruments



1917 Model

30 DAYS FREE TRIAL and freight prepaid on the new 1917 "RANGER" bicycle. Write at once for our big catalog and special offer.

Improved Models, prices reduced. Extraordinary new offers. You cannot afford to buy without getting our latest propositions. WRITE TODAY.

Boys, be a "Rider Agent" and make big money taking orders for bicycles and supplies. Get our liberal terms on a sample to introduce the new "RANGER."

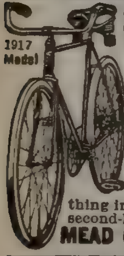
TIRES, equipment, sundries and everything in the bicycle line half usual prices. A few second-hand bicycles $3 to $8 to clear.

MEAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. F-71 CHICAGO.



Folding BATH TUB

Costs little, no plumbing, little water. Weight 15 pounds, folds into small roll. Full length baths, far better than tin tubs. Lasts for years. Write for special agents offer and description.
Robinson Bath Cabinet Co., 4569 Factories Bldg., Toledo, O.

Dorothy Dod's Favorite Flowers

Yielding a Mass of Blooms
FREE

To get our beautiful Spring catalogue to as many lovers of flowers as possible, we will mail you one packet each of Rainbow Mixed Sweet Peas, Shirley Poppy and Dianthus Single; Tomato, Bonfire; Lettuce, All-heart; and our catalogue included, if you will send us your name and address and TEN cents in stamps or coin to cover mailing.

The catalogue contains all the Flower and Vegetable novelties for 1917, and much reliable information explaining in detail how to plant. One million packets will be distributed this year. May we add your name to our list?

WM. ELLIOTT & SONS
Est. 1845 47 Vesey Street, New York

FREE 1917 PLANTING GUIDE AND PURE SEEDBOOK

Ask now! This beautiful 96-page four-color book describes 1917 varieties vegetables and flowers; handsomely illustrated; beautiful home grounds, flower and vegetable gardens, landscaping, shrubbery, orchards, farms. A dictionary on gardening! Flower lover's delight! Berry grower's book! An orchardist's manual! Most wonderful gardening guide catalog ever published. Better than our famous 1916 book. Don't miss it. Ask today. A postal gets it.
Galloway Bros. & Co., Dept. 2655 Waterloo, Ia.

POULTRY PAPER 44-124 PAGE periodical, up-to-date; tells all you want to know about care and management of poultry for pleasure or profit. Four months for 10 cents.
POULTRY ADVOCATE, Dept. 29, Syracuse, N. Y.

"Every Ladies' Aid Society, and every Women's Club doing Church, School, Temperance, Library or Missionary work will be particularly interested in the Fund Raising Plan referred to in the announcement of McCALL'S MAGAZINE below:

For Correct Styles—
For Patterns That Fit—
For Easier House-Keeping—
For a Guide in Buying—
For Dainty Needlework—
For Wholesome Stories—

We suggest that you send your subscription now to start with April (printed in March) our Easter Annual Spring Fashion Number.

More Than One Million Three Hundred Thousand (1,300,000) Discriminating Women Every Month Turn to McCALL'S MAGAZINE

March and April numbers may sell out before your order reaches us—buy them at 10c each at any News-stand or McCall Pattern Agency.

McCALL'S MAGAZINE

Announces a Change in Price

The pages of McCALL'S for 1916, end on end, would reach from New York to San Francisco forty-five (45) times, and weigh over ten million (10,000,000) pounds.

In 1917, raw paper, of the high grade we use, (one of the biggest items of expense in publishing a magazine of large circulation) will cost nearly twice as much as we paid last year. Besides ink, type metal, engravings, labor—in fact, everything that goes into making McCALL'S—has nearly doubled in cost.

To lower McCALL standards, or cheapen McCALL quality was unthinkable. The one and only thing to do was to increase our subscription price and keep on improving our magazine.

McCALL'S is now ten cents (10c) a copy, seventy-five cents (75c) a year ($1.00 Canada; $1.50 foreign). March number on sale now; April number, with advance Easter Fashions, on sale in March. However, for a short time only, opportunity is here given to subscribe at the old low rates.

A FASHION AUTHORITY RECOGNIZED FOR NEARLY 50 YEARS

How often you hear, "She hasn't a bit of style." You know women possessing extravagant wardrobes, yet who are never stylishly dressed. You also know women who spend a very modest sum on their clothes and you wonder how they manage to dress so charmingly. Our Fashion Editor says, "STYLE is a matter of TASTE rather than money."

Taste, you will agree, however excellent, must have a reliable guide. THE McCALL COMPANY of New York, founded 1870, makers of McCALL patterns (so favorably known for their style, fit, simplicity, and economy) and publishers of McCALL'S MAGAZINE (monthly), The McCALL BOOK OF FASHIONS. (Quarterly), McCALL'S EMBROIDERY AND NEEDLEWORK, etc., enjoy a prestige of nearly fifty years' success as Fashion Publishers and offer just such a guide in the monthly style news (recognized as authority), richly illustrated in black and white and in colors, by the choicest new, approved designs, and patterns that faithfully reproduce those designs.

1917 EDITORIAL PROGRAM

You and all your family will surely enjoy some of these added March and April features:

"The Nameless Man," big new serial story of love, mystery and surprising climaxes, Natalie Sumner Lincoln; "Latch-Strings Ajar," story of a friendly house by the road, and a lonely girl and how her Romance came, Katherine Kingsley Crosby; "The Church that Waked Up," Montanye Perry; "Sixteen," a girl misunderstood, Mary Lerner; "The Thorny Path," about a woman who dared; "Seven Times Seven," married problem, Royal Brown; "Personality" of Jennette Rankin, first congress-women; Color Masterpiece, "Gossip," Carl Mar, etc. Stories and articles follow later from these popular writers: Helen Christine Bennett, Anne Gunter Boykin, Mariel Brady, Helen Topping Miller, William Hamby, Lilian Ducey and many others.

CORNELL'S DOMESTIC SCIENCE

Classes use McCALL'S. To them it is a text book. Many home-loving women look upon McCALL'S as a "household necessity" because of these practical departments:

Correct Social Usage—What Priscilla Learned at Boarding-School, Mary Marshall Duffee; Words—How to Use Them, Emma M. Bolenius, text-book Author; Home Millinery, Evelyn Toby, Millinery Director Columbia University; Common-sense Beauty Talks, Annette Beacon; Paris Fashion Letter, Paris Correspondent; Home Dressmaking, Margaret Whitney; Embroidery, Genevieve Sterling and Helen Thomas; Children's Page, Frederick White; Baby Welfare, Mary L. Read, Director School of Mothercraft; Foods and Food Values, Isobel Brands; Gardens, F. F. Rockwell; Household Decoration, Mary H. Northend; Parties and Entertainments, Martha Grossman; Housekeeping Exchange, Helen Hopkins.

CUT OUT THIS COUPON AND MAIL IT BEFORE MARCH 31, 1917! Chris. H. 2-7-17

Mark a cross (X) before items wanted. Pin to sheet of paper, write name and address and mail with Money Order or Check—send 10c or less in U. S. Stamps (for Canada and foreign 1c stamps accepted) to THE McCALL COMPANY, McCall Building, 236 to 246 West 37th Street, New York, N. Y.

Please send........McCall's Magazine one year, 50c enclosed (75c Canada; $1.00 Foreign). ....McCall's Magazine two years, $1.00 enclosed ($1.50 Canada, $2.00 Foreign). ....McCall's Spring and Summer pattern Catalogue, 2c enclosed. ....McCall Book of Fashions (Spring Quarterly), 35c enclosed. ....McCall's Embroidery and Needlework (500 Designs) 25c enclosed. ....Fund Raising Plan for Churches, Schools and Societies. ....Bicycle Offer to Boys and Girls. ....$5.00 Pin Money for Spare time. ....Cash Offers to Agents. ....Book of 860 Gifts and how to get them without money. ....Name and address of nearest McCall Pattern Agency.

McCALL STYLE PATTERNS

Canadian Branch at 70 Bond St., Toronto

A New Man-Building Book

NO one is richer in time than another; in this the millionaire has no advantage over the poorest. It is the use we make of time that brings us success or failure. To such spirit as this Dr. Orison Swett Marden, author of many man-building books, keys his latest, "Everybody Ahead," published by Frank E. Morrison, New York. It was Max Nordau who observed that the universal ideal of the American people seems to be success, and that "Everybody Ahead" is the national motto. But it is not with the elements of material success only that Dr. Marden deals, for he analyzes a great variety of foods necessary to nourish our threefold nature, physical, mental and spiritual. One cannot attain his maximum of power and creative force unless the aims are right, the living right, the habits right, the thought right and the work right. It is for a general building up of the youth in body, brain and spirit that the author pleads; and he furnishes zestful stimulus and practical suggestions to this end. He urges that youth must be developed in all these parts, as all the members of a boat crew or ball team must be equally developed, to work in harmony and win. Dr. Marden more insistently than any one else, perhaps, urges the theory that thought is master of circumstance, and that the direction of one's thought determines the course of one's life. It is a good theory as far as it goes, and in his new book he carries it farther and urges it with greater strength than ever before. "Everybody Ahead" is an intensely stimulating argument for better preparation, for higher aims, for stronger efforts toward such success in life as the soul may liberally share.

◆

An English Admiral on the War. Admiral Sir David Beatty, whose squadron bore the brunt of the fighting in the great North Sea battle, and who since that famous event has superseded the statuesque Jellicoe as commander-in-chief of the British navy, is a thinker as well as a fighter. It is a rare event for any one holding a prominent official position under the government to speak or write freely concerning the nation's attitude at a time like the present. Admiral Beatty, however, in a letter to the Society for the Propagation of Christian Knowledge—which somehow escaped the censor's vigilance and got into print—has given expression to some very far-reaching views on the conduct of the war. He writes: "Surely Almighty God does not intend this war to be just a hideous fracas or a blood-drunken orgy. There must be a purpose in it. Improvement must come out of it. England remains to be taken out of the stupor of self-satisfaction and complacency into which her flourishing condition has steeped her. Until she can be stirred out of this condition, until a religious revival takes place, just so long will the war continue. When she can look on the future with humbler eyes and a prayer on her lips, then we can begin to count the days toward the end."

Saving Paper. It has been said that the best way to save money is not to spend it, and users of paper are adopting similar means to prevent waste of this rapidly appreciating commodity. Department stores and mail-order houses in many of the cities have found it possible to use less paper in wrapping packages without decreasing in any degree the protection of the contents. Grocers have found it possible to use much less paper, or, to put it another way, to put up more goods in the paper they did use, one element of waste which has been eliminated being the wrapping of boxes which are already weather-tight. The school board of New York City has found it hard to secure the usual pads of "scratch" paper for the 800,000 school children of the city. It has been reported as considering a return to slates. People are urged to keep paper instead of burning it, but as yet we have not seen a practical suggestion as to how this paper is to be profitably collected and returned to the channels of industry.

ANÆMIA IS BLOOD POVERTY

AND DEVELOPS AT ANY AGE

cheeks and lips become pale, the body is languid and colds are easily contracted—it undermines the very source of health and must have immediate treatment.

Drugs or alcoholic mixtures cannot make blood. Nourishment is necessary and Scott's Emulsion is always the physicians' favorite—its concentrated medical nourishment charges the blood with red corpuscles, feeds the famished tissues and carries food value to every tiny nerve and fibre in a natural, easy way.

Take Scott's Emulsion to enrich your blood but shun the alcoholic substitutes.

13-113
SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

STOP! Don't Go Out in the Cold

Don't go out through the snow, cold, slush or nasty weather to the old unhealthy, unsanitary open privy. Let the children, ladies or the old folks enjoy the comfort and convenience of a warm, clean, odorless sanitary indoor closet. The unsightly germ-breeding, disease-spreading outhouse is a menace to your health.

WOLVERINE Chemical Toilet

protects your health, saves you money. Pays for itself many times in a year. No water, sewer or cesspool. Endorsed by health officials. No more coughs, colds, lumbago, rheumatism, or neuralgia caused by unnecessary exposure. No more big doctor bills.

Easy to install. Costs less than a cent a day upkeep. Cheapest closet on the market. Thousands now in use. FREE BOOK tells all.

DAIL STEEL PRODUCTS CO.
404 Main St., Lansing, Mich.

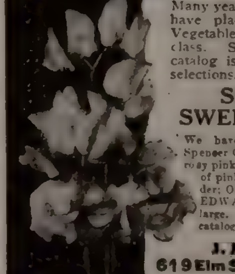
GREGORY'S HONEST SEEDS
61 Years, Always Dependable

Many years of careful, patient selection have placed Gregory's Flower and Vegetable Seeds in the thoroughbred class. Stocks complete! Our 1917 catalog is a valuable help in making selections. Free—write us!

SPECIAL 25c SWEET PEA OFFER

We have carefully selected 6 packets of Spencer Giant Sweet Peas; COUNTESS: soft rosy pink; APPLE BLOSSOM, varying shade of pink; SENATOR, beautiful dark lavender; OTHELLO, deep, rich maroon; KING EDWARD, rich carmine; WHITE, extra large. All 6 sent postpaid with 1917 catalog for 25c. Write now!

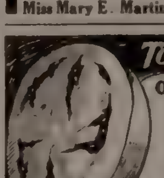
J. J. H. GREGORY & SON
619 Elm St., Marblehead, Mass.



Do You Love FLOWERS?

A new full sized packet of each of the following: New Red Sunflower—a great novelty; Gypsophila "Baby's Breath," white; Pyrethrum, golden yellow All for 10c

Headquarters for Bulbs Unlimited variety of flower and vegetable seeds. Catalog free. Write today.
Miss Mary E. Martin, 35 Jericho Road, Floral Park, N.Y.



Tomato Perfection at Last

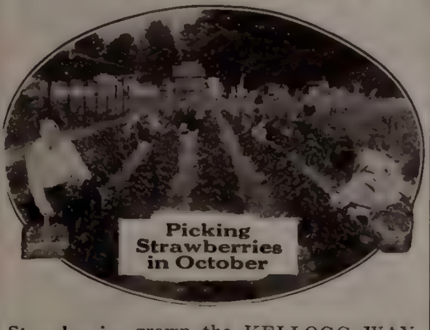
Our Improved Excelsior Tomato is the largest, sturdiest, most prolific home-garden variety. Rich, red fruits ripen early and till frost. Meat solid, delicious, nearly seedless. While they last we will send full-size packet for 10c. Our beautiful 1917 catalog of Pure and Sure Seeds, etc., is FREE. Write TODAY.
ST. LOUIS SEED CO., 411-H St. Louis, Mo.

CUT YOUR LIVING COST
OUR CATALOGUE WILL TELL YOU HOW

It will help you grow a hundred dollars' worth of vegetables on small plot; truthfully illustrates and describes the best in seeds, plants and everything for garden-making; 128 pages; has beautiful lithographed cover, and contains a 25c cash coupon which can be used as part payment on your first order. Mailed Free. Write to-day.

IOWA SEED CO. Dept. E. Des Moines, Iowa.

"Great Crops of STRAWBERRIES and How To Grow Them" is the best and most complete book on Strawberry Growing ever written. It fully explains the KELLOGG WAY of growing two big crops each year—a big profit in the Spring and a bigger profit in the Fall. Tells everything about strawberry growing from start to finish. Write for this book and learn how to supply your family with delicious strawberries the year 'round without cost, and how to make a big cash profit besides. The book is FREE.



Strawberries grown the KELLOGG WAY yield more dollars per square rod and do it in less time than any other crop. The profits made from strawberries are enormous. One acre of strawberries grown the KELLOGG WAY will yield a greater cash profit than twenty acres of common farm crops.

STRAWBERRY growing is so easy and so simple that even beginners grow big crops and make big profits right from the very start. Get our big 64-page book and learn all about this delightful and profitable business.
A postal will do—the book is FREE.

R. M. Kellogg Company,
Box 670 Three Rivers, Mich.

NATIONAL Gets Big Hatches

Peter Kilpatrick, Nazareth Pa., writes, "Have made better hatches than anyone here." Money cannot buy greater hatching value. Hot water heat—double wall—dead air space—asbestos lining—self regulating—ventilating—double glass doors—safety lamp—egg tester. No extras to buy—easy to operate—will not warp or shrink. Strongest, most durable Incubator made.

40 DAYS TRIAL
12 Years Guarantee
165 Egg Incubator
Only $10

Freight Paid East of Rockies

Take no chances. The National is built on U.S. Government specifications. A proven cold weather hatcher. The World's Greatest Incubator Bargain. Send postal today for Free 1917 Catalog And Poultry Book—worth dollars to every poultry raiser—or order direct from this ad and save time. Incubator and brooder both prepaid $12.50. Comes set up ready to run, with book of instructions. You take no risk, satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Don't delay. Send for Poultry Book today sure.

NATIONAL INCUBATOR CO.
Box 131 Racine, Wis.

57¢ PAPERS A BIG ROOM

Just think—only 57c for enough beautiful 4 color bronzed side wall, ceiling and border to paper a big room. Write today for our Free Book of over 100 big samples of wall paper and see this dandy paper. Also, our exquisite 1917 papers, consisting of plain and rich, heavily embossed gold, oatmeal, grass cloth, leather, tiffany, silk and creton effects at 6c to 40c a double roll of 16 yards. Finest varnished tiles, 35c a double roll. Combination matched with cut-out borders ready for hanging at 1 1-2c a yard up. Wall paper for all rooms direct to you cheaper than dealers buy at in carload lots. Don't wait. Get samples now—today—and see our beautiful art paper and marvelously low prices.

PAINT On Free Trial All kinds for everything; try it at home; if it suits keep it, if not return at our expense. Lowest prices you ever saw; 124 colors. Write for Paint Book and see.

JOHN M. SMYTH MDSE CO., 703-747 Washington Blvd. CHICAGO

WALL PAPER
OVER 100 SAMPLES OF BEAUTIFUL PAPER

Choose ★ Roses

Plant roses grown by specialists—backed by 50 years' experience—and guaranteed to bloom. Send today for illustrated 92-page Floral Guide—FREE. Easy to select choice kinds marked with a ★ from our list of nearly 400 "Best Roses for America."

CONARD & JONES CO.
★ ROSES, Box 140, WEST GROVE, Pa.
Robert Pyle Pres. A Wintzer Vice Pres.

BEES PAY BIG PROFITS

Raise your own honey. We start you right. Send today for Bee Supply Catalog. Sent FREE.
Dadant & Sons Box 50 Hamilton, Ill.

Young People's Topics for February 18

Using What We Have

Christian Endeavor and B. Y. P. U. Topic. Acts 3 : 1-10

THERE is a story told of a mission worker in New York who was halted in a dark alley by a sudden grasp on his arm and felt the hard muzzle of a gun pressed against his side while a hoarse voice demanded "Your money or your life." The man is reported to have answered: "I have no money; my life is hid with Christ in God and you cannot harm it; but if you will come with me, I'll give you a bed and a meal." The thug went, and later, according to the story, became converted and was the means of saving many other desperate men.

Use what you have.

Perhaps you cannot heal the sick body as Peter could, but you can bring the sunshine of cheery company into the sick-room. You may not be able to go as a missionary, but are you sure there are no boys or girls whom you could gather about you in your home of an evening or into your class in Sunday school?

Perhaps your church lacks some of the equipment you would like, but are you giving what you have the fullest use possible? Equipment never made a church successful; but earnest, enthusiastic, consecrated people have made many a meager equipment the center of a most successful work.

Peter gave what he had, and the gift was a greater alms than any the lame man had ever received. Sometimes the demand for what we have not is a challenge, a test, to see if we know how to use what we have. If we are asked to do a particularly hard piece of work for Christ we can be sure that if we begin to use what we have of faith and of grace and of skill, his grace and his strength will be added to ours.

The Marks of a Christian

Epworth League Topic. James 1 : 27; I John 3 : 14; John 14 : 23; 15 : 14

THE sub-title of this topic is "Doing Christians." What are the marks of the Christian? The marks of a good soldier are a correct carriage, attention to duty and the immediate execution of commands. How shall we know the Christian from other people in this very much assorted world of ours? We can't judge by their carriage, for certain kinds of sinners are fond of the trappings of piety. We can't judge by the speech, for—you remember the Pharisee's prayer—some beautiful prayers and testimonies are but reverberating echoes from an empty life. You can't always tell by the acts of kindness which a person may do, for no man is wholly bad, and many kind deeds are done by those whose lives are far from right in God's sight. But if a person is constantly doing kind deeds, feeding the hungry, ministering to the sick, cheering the downcast; if that person can praise God without praising himself, if he serves God humbly, works earnestly, shows a genuine and unfeigned love for all for whom Christ died, and seeks always to know and to do the will of the Saviour, and if his best friend believes in his sincerity, then we can be justified in considering that he bears the "marks" of a Christian.

No department of the League work so fully exemplifies the love of Christ to men as the work of the department of Mercy and Help. Sickness and sin and improvidence make poverty, and poverty is about the heaviest burden of our humanity. There is much honest poverty, and all of it, honest or otherwise, needs and deserves help that will remove both the poverty and its cause. Help that consists merely in giving things is only an aggravation; we must give study and sympathy and understanding, and we must mercifully help those in need to overcome the cause of their need and to get a new start. We must lead them to Christ and then show them the way to better living.

Unusual Homes at Big Savings

Gordon-Van Tine Homes

Write for this book today

Costs Guaranteed!

We do more than merely draw beautiful plans. Every Gordon-Van Tine Plan has to be practical—because it must be capable of being figured accurately and because we agree to supply all the material for it at a guaranteed price. On this basis, we have adapted some of the best work of America's leading architects to charming, inexpensive homes. Materials, all standard grades and Ready-cut to fit or not Ready-cut as you prefer. Ours is the only book pricing houses both ways. Prompt shipments to you anywhere.

Write For Our FREE Plan Book

Shows over 200 distinctive homes—cottages, bungalows, town and country houses with photos, plans, Guaranteed Prices. Lists exactly what we supply. Many convenience ideas appealing to women. Over 100,000 customers have built our houses everywhere. Local references. Send for book today. Use coupon.

Gordon-Van Tine Co.
Satisfaction Guaranteed or Money Back

6143 Case St., Davenport, Iowa
Established Half a Century

2154
GORDON-VAN TINE CO.
6143 Case St., Davenport, Iowa
Please send me FREE the books checked below:
Gordon-Van Tine Home Plans
☐ Garages Summer Cottages
☐ Greenhouse and Hot Bed for the Home Grower

Name..........................
Street No..........................
City ....State..............

Ro-San Indoor Chemical Closet
ABSOLUTELY ODORLESS

More Comfortable, Healthful, Convenient

30 Days' TRIAL

Eliminates the out-door privy, open vault and cesspool, which are breeding places for germs. Have a warm, sanitary, odorless toilet right in your house. No going out in cold weather. A boon to invalids. Endorsed by State Boards of Health.

Put It Anywhere In The House

The germs are killed by a chemical process in water in the container, which you empty once a month. Absolutely no odor. No more trouble to empty than ashes. Closet absolutely guaranteed. Write for full description and price.

ROWE SANITARY MFG. CO.
26 E. ROWE BLDG., DETROIT, MICH.

Ask about the Ro-San Washstand—Hot and Cold Running Water Without Plumbing

COMBINATION THREADING

3 days' work a month is sufficient to pay profits on the investment in this all-round pipe, bent pipe, bolt and nipple theading machine. Send for an OSTER catalog of power machines or of hand die-stocks.

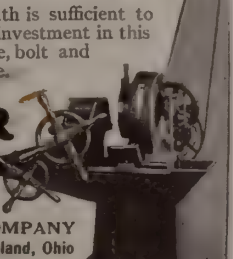
THE OSTER MFG. COMPANY
2122 East 61st Street Cleveland, Ohio

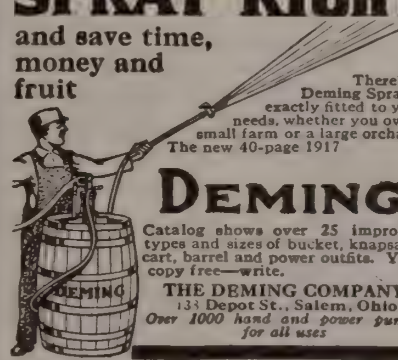


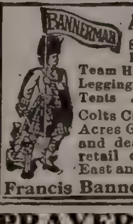
SPRAY RIGHT and save time, money and fruit

There's a Deming Sprayer exactly fitted to your needs, whether you own a small farm or a large orchard. The new 40-page 1917

DEMING Catalog shows over 25 improved types and sizes of bucket, knapsack, cart, barrel and power outfits. Your copy free—write.

THE DEMING COMPANY
133 Depot St., Salem, Ohio
Over 1000 hand and power pumps for all uses





ARMY AUCTION BARGAINS

Saddles	$3.00 up	Army Revolvers	$1.65 up
Bridles	.90 "	" B-L Rifles	.98 "
Team Harness	21.85 "	" Swords	.35 "
Leggings, pair	.15 "	" 7 Shot Carbine	3.50 "
Tents	2.85 "	New Uniforms	1.50 "

Colts Cal. 45 Revolver $7.45. Ctgs. 1c each. 15 Acres Government Auction Bargains illustrated and described in 420 large page wholesale and retail cyclopedia catalogue, mailed 25 cents East and 30 cents West of the Mississippi River.
Francis Bannerman, 501 Broadway, New York

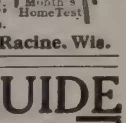
$8.55 Buys World's Champion Belle City Incubator

140-Egg Size—Hot Water—Double Walled—Self Regulated, with $4.85 Hot-water 140-chick Brooder—both $12.50. Frt. Paid E. of Rockies. Satisfaction Guaranteed.

$1000 In Prizes

Conditions easy—Save time—Order Now. Write for Free Book, Hatching Facts" today. A postal will do. Jim Rohan Pres.

Belle City Incubator Co., Box 127 Racine, Wis.



PRAYERS For Public Worship, Private Devotion and Personal Ministry. A Complete Guide to Devotion. This book is helpful to all, for home and public use. Cloth postpaid $1.00.
M. E. MUNSON, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York, N. Y.

VICK'S Garden and Floral GUIDE

Now Ready For 68 years the leading authority on Vegetable, Flower and Farm Seeds, Plants and Bulbs. Better than ever. Send for free copy today. For 1917
JAMES VICK'S SONS 13 Stone Street Rochester, N. Y. The Flower City

PATENTS That Protect and Pay Advice and Books FREE.
Rates Reasonable. Highest References. Best Services.
WATSON E. COLEMAN, Patent Lawyer, Washington, D.C.

Why Live An Inferior Life?

I know that I can easily, quickly and positively prove to you that you are only half as alive as you must be to realize the joys and benefits of living in full; and that you are only half as well as you should be, half as vigorous as you can be, half as ambitious as you may be, and only half as well developed as you ought to be.

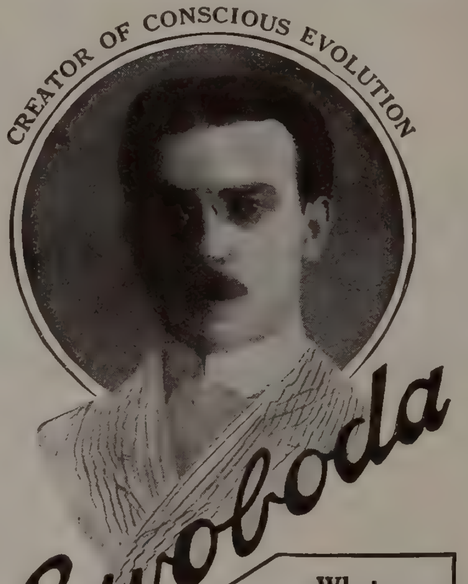
THE fact is that no matter who you are, whether you are young or old, weak or strong, rich or poor, I can prove to you readily by demonstration that you are leading an inferior life, and I want the opportunity to show you the way in which you may completely and easily, without inconvenience or loss of time, come in possession of new life, vigor, energy, development and a higher realization of life and success.

Become Superior to Other Men

The Swoboda System can make a better human being of you physically, mentally and in every way. The Swoboda System can do more for you than you can imagine. It can so vitalize every organ, tissue and cell of your body as to make the mere act of living a joy. It can give you an intense, thrilling and pulsating nature. It can increase your very life. I not only promise it, I guarantee it. My guarantee is unusual, startling, specific, positive and absolutely fraud proof.

WHY TAKE LESS THAN YOUR FULL SHARE OF LIFE AND PLEASURE?

Are you living a full and successful life? Why not always be at your best—thoroughly well, virile, energetic? Why not invest in yourself and make the most of your every opportunity? It is easy when you know how. The Swoboda System points the way. It requires no drugs, no appliances, no dieting, no study, no loss of time, no special bathing; there is nothing to worry you. It gives ideal mental and physical conditions without inconvenience or trouble.



YOUR EARNING POWER

—your success, depend entirely upon your energy, health, vitality, memory and will power. Without these, all knowledge becomes of small value, for it cannot be put into active use. The Swoboda System can make you tireless, improve your memory, intensify your will power, and make you physically just as you ought to be.

What Others Have to Say

"Worth more than a thousand dollars to me in increased mental and physical capacity."

"I was very skeptical, now am pleased with results; have gained 17 pounds."

"The very first lesson began to work magic. In my gratitude, I am telling my croaking and complaining friends, 'Try Swoboda'."

"Words cannot explain the new life it imparts to both body and brain."

"It reduced my weight 29 pounds, increased my chest expansion 5 inches, reduced my waist 6 inches."

"My reserve force makes me feel that nothing is impossible, my capacity both physically and mentally is increasing daily."

"I think your system is wonderful. I thought I was in the best of physical health before I wrote for your course, but I can now note the greatest improvement even in this short time. I cannot recommend your system too highly. Do not hesitate to refer to me."

"You know more about the human body than any man with whom I have ever come in contact personally or otherwise."

A Few of Swoboda's Prominent Pupils

F. W. Vanderbilt	Charles F. Swift
W. G. Rockefeller, Jr.	Oscar Straus
Howard Gould	Simon Guggenheim
Woodrow Wilson	Maxine Elliott
W. R. Hearst	Anna Held
Alfred I. Du Pont	Frank A. Vanderlip
A. W. Armour	Charles Evans Hughes

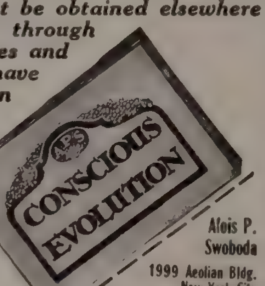
My New Copyrighted Book is Free

It explains the SWOBODA SYSTEM OF CONSCIOUS EVOLUTION and the human body as it has never been explained before. It will startle, educate and enlighten you.

My book explains my new theory of the mind and body. It tells, in a highly interesting and simple manner, just what, no doubt, you, as an intelligent being, have always wanted to know about yourself.

You will cherish this book for having given you the first real understanding of your body and mind. It shows how you may be able to obtain a superior life; it explains how you may make use of natural laws to your own advantage.

My book will give you a better understanding of yourself than you could obtain from a college course. The information which it imparts cannot be obtained elsewhere at any price. It shows the unlimited possibilities for you through conscious evolution of your cells; it explains my discoveries and what they are doing for men and women. Thousands have advanced themselves in every way through a better realization and conscious use of the principles which I have discovered and which I disclose with my book. It also explains the dangers and after-effects of exercise and excessively deep breathing.



Mail the Coupon To-day

Write to-day for my Free Book and full particulars before it slips your mind.

You owe it to yourself at least to learn the full facts concerning the Swoboda System of conscious evolution for men and women. Mail the coupon or a post card now, before you forget.

The Swoboda System is as effective for Women as for Men.

ALOIS P. SWOBODA
1999 Aeolian Bldg., New York City

Alois P. Swoboda
1999 Aeolian Bldg.
New York City

Please send me your free copyrighted book, "Conscious Evolution."

Name..........................

Address..........................

City..........................State..........

Merry Moments

W*HEN the Merry Moments column was started we announced that we could only return contributions when postage was enclosed. Some contributors, evidently forgetting this, have written inquiring as to the non-return of their contributions.*

POST OFFICE DEFICIT ACCOUNTED FOR. Helen was the little daughter of a thrifty woman who always took advantage of bargain sales.

One day the little girl rushed home from the post office and said to her mother:

"Mamma, you can get a five dollar money order at the post office for five cents!"

COMPRESSED "ERE"? A dentist from Indiana tells this joke on himself.

He was applying the compressed air to the tooth of a patient, when after a few gurgles and convulsive coughings upon the part of the victim, the doctor solicitously inquired.

"That air hurt?"

"That 'ere' what?" gasped the depths of the chair.

The answer slipped.

"That 'ere' air."

WASHINGTON'S DIFFICULTY. A certain Senator, deploring the dishonest methods of one type of business man, once said, with a smile: "It all brings back to me a dialogue I once heard in a southern school.

"'Children,' said the teacher, 'be diligent and steadfast, and you will succeed. Take the case of George Washington, whose birthday we are soon to celebrate. Do you remember my telling you of the great difficulty George Washington had to contend with?'"

"'Yes, ma'am,' said a little boy. 'He couldn't tell a lie.'"

AT THE CROSSROADS. The chairman of the committee was addressing a meeting at a teachers' institute.

"My friends, the schoolwork is the bulhouse of civilization. I mean—ah—"

He began to feel frightened.

"The bulhouse is the schoolwork of civ—"

A smile could be felt.

"The workhouse is the bulschool of—"

He was evidently twisted.

"The schoolbul is the housework—"

An audible snigger spread over the audience.

"The bulschool—"

He was getting wild. So were his hearers. He mopped his perspiration, gritted his teeth, and made a fresh start.

"The schoolhouse, my friends—"

A sigh of relief went up. Hamlet was himself again!

He gazed serenely around. The light of triumphant self-confidence was enthroned upon his brow.

"Is the woolbark—"

And that is when he lost consciousness. —Biblical Recorder.

◆

Worth Passing On

TWO pastors' wives were visiting together. One said: "I don't know what we will do—my husband is so discouraged. Somehow his people do not care to hear him preach, and our salary is far behind. My husband feels so blue that he does not like to visit the people and pray with them, and so he sits around at home nearly all the time." The other sister said: "We are getting along fine. My husband spends much of his time visiting, and the people like to have him kneel and pray with them in their homes. Our congregations are always good, and our salary is paid up promptly." While the two wives were talking they were mending trousers. One was mending them at the knees.—Western Christian Union.

◆

YOU will no doubt remember having sent $50 worth of small New Testaments to an ex-convict in Los Angeles, Calif., about three years ago. Never having heard from him since, you might naturally suppose he had backslidden; but not so. On the contrary, he has nothing but praise for the blessed Saviour, who came to him in that dark time, after midnight, in a prison cell. It is now ten years next February since his new birthday. In California the past summer I found one man who had been converted through reading one of the Testaments you sent. If we may judge by what this single Testament has accomplished, the investment has paid.

Baltimore, Md. W. A. EASTMAN.

"IF you must swear, please put it in writing." Cards with this message printed on them passed out quietly to men on the border who were using profanity have effectively eliminated swearing from the Y. M. C. A. buildings on the border and are said to have influenced the speech of the men throughout the camps.

THE Baraca-Philathea movement will hold its international convention beginning June 23, 1917, in the Baptist church of Syracuse, N. Y., from which the work started. The convention will, however, meet in the new $1,000,000 church. Delegates are expected from each of the more than 10,000 classes affiliated with this Bible class movement.

CHALLENGE CLEANABLE COLLARS

Made of cotton cloth—not starched but waterproofed. Stitched edge finish. All that a "linen" collar is, and more. Rain, snow, soot and grease cannot harm. Instantly cleanable, with a bit of soap and water. 25c each, a year's supply $1.50. A $5.00 to $10.00 annual saving. Your dealer's or direct. State size and style. Try a half-dozen Booklet on request.

DU PONT THE ARLINGTON CO.
725 Broadway :: New York

TO-NIGHT IN THIS CHURCH THE NEW MINISTER

THE NEW MINISTER

The most popular play for churches yet issued. Many churches have cleared $100. and over with it. Always draws big audiences. Nothing objectionable, and any church can give it. Single copy 60 cents

OUR BUSY LADIES' AID

Another of our best sellers, but much shorter than The New Minister. Easy to present. Few or many characters. Copies of both will be sent for examination for 5 cents postage on promise of prompt return.

BINGHAM-RADCLIFFE CO., Desk 4
Church Plays of Quality Millville, N. J.

High School Course in Two Years

LEARN in your own home. Here is a thorough and simplified high school course that you can complete in two years. Meets college entrance requirements. Prepared by leading members of faculties of universities and academies.

Study In Your Own Home

This course was prepared especially for home training. Your idle evenings can be spent in pleasant reading that will give you a thorough high school training.

Write for Booklet! Send your name and address today for our booklet and full particulars. No obligation. Write for it at once. Now.

American School of Correspondence, Dept. P2492, Chicago, U. S. A.

Church Organs

LATEST APPROVED METHODS. HIGHEST GRADE ONLY. ESTABLISHED 1827.

Main Office and Works: Kendal Green, Mass.

Hook & Hastings Co.

BRANCHES

Boston, New York, Phila., Chicago, Louisville, Dallas

500 TYPEWRITERS AT $10 TO $15

Typewriter prices smashed! Your choice of any factory rebuilt machine at a bargain. Every one perfect—guaranteed for 3 yrs.—including repairs. My free circular tells how to save 40 per cent—60 per cent on each machine. Write for it! C. E. GAERTE, President. DEARBORN TYPEWRITER COMPANY, Dept. E 24 Chicago, Ill.

INDIVIDUAL COMMUNION SERVICE

Does YOUR Church use this cleanly and sanitary method? Send for catalog and special offer. Outfits on trial.

Thomas Communion Service Co. Box 150 Lima, Ohio

CHURCH FURNITURE

Pews, Pulpits, Chairs, Altars, Book Racks, Tables, Desks—EVERYTHING. The finest furniture made. Direct from our factory to your church. Catalog free.

DeMoulin Bros. & Co. Dept. 54. Greenville, Ill.

BLYMYER CHURCH BELLS

Bring people to church. Their clear, beautiful, sustained, far-reaching tones are a power for good. Your church should have one. Durability guaranteed. Inexpensive. Art catalog & buying plans free.

The Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co. Dept. B51 Cincinnati, O.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."

RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

HIGH-VALUE PATENTS

—the ONLY kind Wanted and BOUGHT by Manufacturers. Send 8c. postage for new book of Extraordinary Interest to Inventors

R. S. & A. B. LACEY 61 Barrister Building, Washington, D. C.

Overland
TRADE MARK REG.

Stability

YOUR car is inseparable from the institution that built it.

The service it gives you is just what its producers build into it and keep alive in it.

In motor cars, stability of product is inseparable from the stability of the producers.

Overland ranks first among producers of cars above the $400 class—second in the entire industry.

There are 400,000 Overlands in use.

Overland dealers have contracted for one hundred and eighty million dollars worth of Overlands for 1917—an increase of seventy-five million dollars compared with last year.

Overland sales this year therefore will be approximately as great as the entire annual gross revenue of the New York Central Railroad.

Overland net assets have grown from fifty-eight thousand dollars eight years ago to over sixty-eight million dollars today.

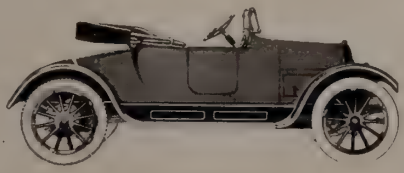
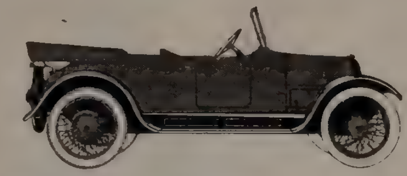
In our great Toledo plant and our allied plants, we employ nearly thirty-eight thousand men.

They directly support more than two hundred thousand people.

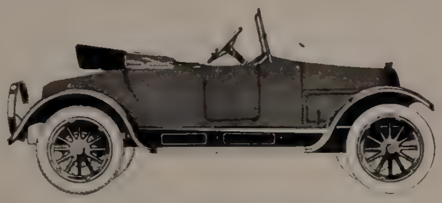
Permanent well appointed factory branches and parts depots representing an investment of millions have been established in important metropolitan centers that cover the country.



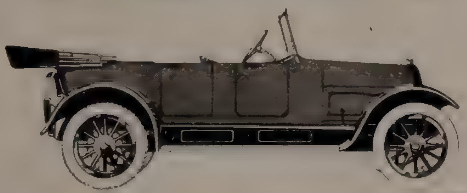
Two Passenger Roadster
Light Four, 104-in. wheelbase, $650



Four Seater, Sport Model
The Country Club, 104-in. wheelbase, $750



Big Four Roadster, 112-in. wheelbase, $835
Light Six Roadster, 116-in. wheelbase, $970



Light Four Touring, 106-in. wheelbase, $665
Big Four Touring, 112-in. wheelbase, $850
Light Six Touring, 116-in. wheelbase, $985

All prices f. o. b. Toledo

These branches serve the five thousand Willys-Overland dealers who complete our great international service system.

These tangible evidences of the stability of the Overland Industry are your best assurance of stability of quality and service in Overland Automobiles.

The Willys-Overland line is now complete.

And it is the only complete line of cars built and sold—

—under one executive management,
—with one engineering staff,
—with one purchasing power,
—by one production management,
—through one sales force, and
—one group of dealers.

Resulting economies amounting to millions of dollars, reduce the cost of every car—enable Overland to establish and maintain higher quality standards at lower prices.

So in your Overland you get maximum quality at minimum price—plus stability to assure permanence of value in your investment.

You can select a car in the light four group, the big four group, or the light six group.

You can select one of the cars in the luxurious Willys-Knight group.

In either case it is dominant value in its class for it has shared in the economies of Overland bigness and stability.

See the Overland dealer now and make your selection.

Catalogue on request. Please address Dept. 723

The Willys-Overland Company, Toledo, Ohio

Manufacturers of Willys-Knight and Overland Automobiles and Light Commercial Cars

"Made in U. S. A."

Firestone

"Firestone"
QUICK
NON-SKID

Motor Car Snow Shoes

OVER deep snow and slushy roads Firestone Tires carry your car with maximum ease of going. They are steady, safe and sure.

The quality of rubber in the Firestone Non-Skid tread insures a firm grip, good traction and long added wear.

And this matchless Firestone quality is yours at prices charged for ordinary tires. This saving is possible only because of methods and machinery highly efficient and modernized up to the minute. Also because of enormous output, and wide distribution expertly and economically handled. For safety and saving in the highest degree, ask your dealer for Firestone equipment.

FIRESTONE TIRE & RUBBER COMPANY
Akron, Ohio Branches and Dealers Everywhere

Christian Herald

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 14, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 7. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Photograph by C. A. Purchase

THE LOWER BAY

OUR MAIL-BAG

NOTICE

THE editors of the Christian Herald will be glad to answer any question addressed to the Mail-Bag, provided it be of general interest and not merely personal. Correspondents may use a nom de plume to identify the question, but all letters must contain name and address of the sender, in addition to the nom de plume. No attention will be paid to anonymous letters nor to those written with lead pencil.

Questions and Answers

J. T. L., Minn. Is it true, or rightly said, that the European nations are Christian nations? What is the prevailing religion among them? What percentage, on an average, of the European nations or peoples are professing Christians? There are people who say that, if the nations of Europe are Christian nations, then, if such religion is Christianity, they want none of it.

According to the latest estimates of Gustav Sundbärg, who is regarded as a statistical authority, there are in Europe at the present time 382 500,000 nominal Christians, divided as follows: United Kingdom, 42,000,000; France, 38,800,000; Germany, 55,700,000; Austria-Hungary, 44,400,000; Italy, 32,500,000; Spain, 18,608,000; Russia, 100,200,000. This enumeration includes Protestants, Roman Catholics, and the adherents of the Russian and Greek Churches. The Protestant total is 98,400,000, Catholic 179,100,000. In addition to the foregoing, there are in Europe 9,950,175 Jews, 8,200,000 Mohammedans and 900,000 other non-Christians. As to the genuineness of Europe's Christianity, we should not assume to judge. A very large proportion, there as here, may be Christians only in name. If all were judged according to a rigid standard, it might be made to appear that there was very little genuine Christianity left in the world. But we have no right to assume to judge the hearts of men, for that is solely a divine prerogative. Wherever one goes, men and women are to be found who are living the Christian life, and who are earnest and sincere followers of the Master. As to the attitude of nations and governments, although it may be difficult at times to reconcile it with our standards of Christianity, even in such cases we should be slow to condemn.

D. B., Denver, Colo. What is meant by the language of Matt. 5 : 40–42?

In the passage in question, Jesus was counseling his hearers to return good for evil, and in pursuance of this topic, he spoke (verse 40) of disputes that lead to litigation. "If any man sue thee at law and take away thy coat" (that is, the inner garment) "let him have thy cloak also" (the outer garment, which was usually more costly). A man might pledge his coat for a debt and it might be attached, but the outer garment was not allowed to be retained over night as a pledge from the poor, who customarily used it for a bed cover. The following verse (41) means that we should show a readiness to submit even to unreasonable demands, rather than to quarrel. The two passages together simply imply that we should suffer wrong ourselves rather than inflict it upon others, and that we should cultivate the habit of peaceful living with all men, even at the occasional sacrifice of our own interests and comforts.

E. R. A., Grand Rapids, Mich. 1. The passage in Matt. 12 : 40 is explained by accepting the view of leading commentators, that Christ adopted a mode of expression common to the Jews, and said that he should be in the grave three "evening-mornings." 2. The passage in Rom. 8 : 8 does not contain anything that would make it inconsistent for the church to give hymnbooks to sinners and ask them to sing praises to God, as you suggest. True, those of the flesh cannot please God; but do you want those in the flesh to remain of the flesh? The very fact that they will use hymnbooks in a divine service is a hopeful sign of spiritual awakening and should be encouraged. 3. We do not agree with you that it is a sin to ask God's blessing on "human progress," and that humanity is still no other than that which rejected and crucified Jesus. Modern human progress, despite the horrible examples set by it in Europe, has its hopeful aspects, which justify the belief that, even with all its errors, it will yet yield to the divine influence that would redeem and purify it.

H. E. McD., Hagerstown, Md. While you may be right in your statement that "Love thy neighbor as thyself" is not emphasized enough in the pulpits and among the members of many churches, you should not forget that there are very many noteworthy exceptions. Never in the history of the world has there been so much real charity, both in thought and deed, as now.

Mrs. T. J. C., Table Grove, Ill. The Holy Spirit is the divine helper, assistant, counselor and instructor, and his office is to carry forward the great work of healing and saving men which Christ began. He is to the disciples of Christ what Christ himself was to them while on earth (John 15 : 26; I Cor. 12 : 4-11). It is impossible to point out all the ways in which the Holy Spirit acts in individual cases, since as a skilful physician, he employs various means to fit various conditions and constitutions. So, also, the Spirit produces varying results, as is fully set forth by Paul (I Cor. 12 : 4).

L. C. O., Oxford, N. H. Matt. 21 : 28 is one of those passages that often puzzle. The Lord is here contrasting the Pharisee and the penitent: the former, ever ready to allege his belief and faith, his willingness to serve his Master and yet never doing so; the latter, though at first rebelling, finally yielding, and, without any outward pretension or sham, simply going and doing the Father's bidding. It is very simple to decide which has the greater merit.

Mrs. F. F. M., Weston, Ohio. These lines are in Longfellow's "Resignation":

> There is no death! What seems so is transition;
> This life of mortal breath
> Is but a suburb of the life elysian,
> Whose portal we call Death.

M. M., Modoc, S. C. Song is one of the oldest and sweetest forms of worship. We can praise God in song as truly as we can in the spoken word. Sacred music mellows the heart and uplifts the soul of the highest and the lowest, the learned and the ignorant, the good and the wicked, all alike. It is a mighty power in revival meetings. Hymns touch many that sermons cannot touch. Bliss, Sankey, Phillips, Rodeheaver and other Gospel singers have reached thousands with their songs and brought them to Christ. All of our best emotions can be expressed in song. It is the speech between soul and soul. People who cannot speak the same tongue can, through music, speak the same message all around the world and the same praise to God.

VALENTINE

By Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

I WONDER if you know, up there in heaven,
That I have kept your roses, crumpled now.
I wonder if you guess that still I treasure
A faded ribbon that once touched your brow.
I wonder if you dream, as dusk is falling,
Of how I read that note you sent to me.
I wonder if you think, up there in heaven,
Of all the golden days that used to be.

I wonder if you smile, up there in heaven,
And pass by, lightly, in your robes of white;
Or if you sometimes think of me a little.
You seem so near, so very near, tonight.
I wonder if that last shy kiss I gave you
Can make you lonely, just a bit, for me.
I wonder if you long, up there in heaven,
For all the golden plans that used to be.

Do they have valentines up there in heaven?
A love like mine is surely strong to go
The little way from earth to where you wait me,
Although it be beyond the stars' faint glow.
I want you, dear; my tired heart is calling;
My eyes are searching, though they may not see;
I wonder if you're lonely, there in heaven,
For all the golden dreams that used to be.

P. H. L., Clinton, Iowa. Write to the University of Missouri, Columbia, Mo. A request of the secretary will bring you full particulars.

Subscriber, Harrisburg, Va. The "cause of the European war" is not yet well enough understood to be explained. It was for information on this that President Wilson appealed to the belligerents in his peace note. As he stated it, the contentions of both sides, as presented to their own peoples and to the world, are very much alike. It is hoped that in a peace conference, or otherwise, the real grievances and terms of the various nations at war may be reduced from meaningless generalities to definiteness of statement.

Mrs. A. H. B., New Orleans, La. See answer to J. F. B., Tylerton, Md., in Mail-Bag page of January 24, Christian Herald.

W. G. C., Hanna City, Ill.; A. J. B., Philadelphia; Rev. E. E. W., Harlan, Ind.; A. M. Z., Chariton, Iowa. The "unpardonable sin," spoken of in the early days of the church, is believed to have been attributing the works of the Holy Spirit to the powers of darkness. With this exception, there is believed to be nothing beyond the reach of divine forgiveness. This is no excuse for sin, but it is reason for repentance. Christ says, "Him that cometh unto me I will in no wise cast out." Is it not sufficient assurance that divine mercy extends to the uttermost?

J. Q. H., Three Bridges, N. J. From March, 1915, the British and Foreign Societies published: Bibles, 889,105; New Testaments, 2,433,061; portions, 7,737,451—total, 11,059,617. During the past 100 years the American Bible Society has issued a total of 117,687,879 volumes. The issues for the year 1915 were 7,761,377. The Bible is now being read, in whole or in part, in over 500 tongues. It would be impracticable to give the total number of Bibles printed, as there are hundreds of publishing concerns, besides German, British, Scandinavian and other Bible Societies, spreading the Word.

P. S., Exeter, Pa. How any person can justify war and be a Christian is beyond my comprehension. I cannot find a single line in Christ's teachings that can be construed in favor of war under any conditions whatsoever. The nations at war, as well as the United States, are said to be Christian nations. From the Bible standpoint there are no Christian nations, nor ever will be, so long as men rule the nations.

War is an evil in itself and springs from the evil passions of men (see James 4 : 1 2). Jesus said that his Kingdom was not of this world, else would his servants (that is, followers) fight. He viewed war as an inevitable product of human sin, and said that wars would come, not that they should come, as though divinely ordained. God wants all men of all nations to be brothers and to dwell at peace, and at the Saviour's advent the divine message of peace was emphasized. But the evil passions in men's hearts have led them to forget God, and when the restraining power of the Holy Spirit is withdrawn they are left to the control of their own desires—hence wars and contentions.

S. C. Priest, Newark, Ohio, suggests a new possibility in church union. He says: "In reading the Christian Herald, I note your very consistent omission of anything tending toward sectarianism. This produced the thought within me that your periodical was doing a mighty work toward the unification of the too numerous denominations, without ostentation. You speak of the churches as 'Christian churches,' and this designation is always pleasing to the persons who unselfishly have the love of Christ in their hearts and heed his plea that they all might be one, as they should be, in him. If church buildings were designated only by the street or place located—such as the 'Park Street Church' or the 'Fifteenth Street Church' or the Cottage Grove Church' without the denominational prefix, a long stride would be made toward a real union of Christ's followers. The denominations differ no more from each other than the members individually differ with each other in regard to passages of Scripture, forms, services, music, et cetera. Therefore, if the congregations were to visit each other's services in rotation, 'Christian union' would be a reality without the clergy."

R. V. R., Grand Rapids, Mich. 1. The Talmud embodies the canonical and civil laws of the Jews. It includes, in addition, a large amount of discussion directly or indirectly relating to the same. The whole subject is too comprehensive to describe with any clearness of detail in the limited space of the Mail-Bag. 2. The passage you quote is a continuation of the story in Gen. 4 : 23. This has the distinction of being the only example of poetry which has come to us as belonging to the period before the Flood, and it is supposed to have been handed down by tradition to the time of Moses. Many distinguished theologians have written about it. Some of them have regarded Lamech as a murderer, stung by remorse, driven to make confession of his guilt to ease his conscience and afterward obtaining mercy. According to the legend, as the well-known author Kitto states, Lamech was blind and was led about by Tubal-cain, when the latter saw in the thicket a wild beast and told Lamech in what direction to shoot. Lamech shot the arrow and slew Cain. In alarm and indignation at the deed, he killed his own son. The occasion of the poem was the refusal of Lamech's wives to listen to his excuses for the deed which had caused the death of two men. The whole passage is so obscure, however, that no one can confidently assert what may be its real meaning.

A. M. C., Massachusetts. It is the duty of all who profess Christianity to avail themselves of the religious privileges that are open to them, and "to worship God in his holy temple." We are not to "forsake the assembling of ourselves" for this purpose. Our attendance is a declaration before the world of our Christian allegiance; but it is more. We owe it as an example to those with whom we come into contact, not to neglect this duty. There are, unfortunately, cases in which domestic conditions may interfere with the exercise of this privilege; but if it is possible by any means to arrange so that you may attend worship, at least occasionally, you should do so. Neither husband nor wife has a legal or moral right to interfere with this privilege, or to prevent each other from the legitimate exercise of it. Such matters should be amicably arranged, if possible.

J. W. McK., Carthage, Mo. I have thought much about what you said about "a certain rich man" in an editorial headed "The Unsatisfied Rich" in a recent number of your splendid paper. It seems strange that there should be people like that man in this trying time, but there are. Neither is it altogether their fault. I wish a few of those unsatisfied rich might take up the support of a missionary in the mountain or plains regions of this great Southwest. There never was a time when such support was more needed. A few years ago five hundred church buildings in this state had no pastors. These abandoned church buildings are not usually located where there are too many churches, but in isolated places. I am sure one of these dissatisfied persons could get more real joy out of using some of his money for that use than would be possible in any other line.

Here is an opportunity for some of the "unsatisfied." There is no joy that is comparable to that which fills the heart that is conscious of doing the Lord's work and of being of service to others. Any communications will be forwarded.

THE·CHRISTIAN·HERALD
·AN·ILLUSTRATED·NEWS·WEEKLY·FOR·THE·HOME·

United States Breaks With Germany

Praying that war will not result, the President dismisses German Ambassador and recalls Gerard, as American Protest to Germany's new naval policy of reprisal announced to the world in the note given on page 167 and tells Congress he will ask for authority to protect American rights on the high seas by every means in the event of an overt act by Central Powers

WHEN President Wilson on February 3 made the announcement in a memorable address to Congress that diplomatic relations with Germany had been broken off, the news sent a thrill of excitement through the entire nation. All felt that it was a critical moment, and that the action taken was one which, by all the laws of precedent and experience, might be expected to lead to war. So totally unforeseen had been the break, and so well had the Administration guarded its purpose until the actual announcement in Congress, that it took the entire country by surprise. Little else was discussed anywhere except the probabilities of war. It seemed that the long-feared horror would soon be upon us and that our nation must, notwithstanding its earnest desire for peace, be drawn into the international struggle.

THE first apprehension of possible war with Germany swept over the country with the publication of the note announcing the submarine blockade of England. This was on Thursday, February 1. Until Saturday morning the nation waited the action of the President, to which there was absolutely no advance clue. A tendency to rush the nation into war over night was noted in some excitable quarters. Somehow, the general sense was that no such crisis was at hand. The debate on the recent great peace utterance of the President proceeded in the Senate. Governmental measures were taken to restrict the sailings of vessels into the danger zones, and to discourage the taking of risks by individuals.

Saturday morning, February 3, the press reported important conferences between the President and his Cabinet and also with senators. Toward noon the news spread that the German Ambassador, Count von Bernstorff, had received his passports and that Ambassador Gerard had been recalled from Berlin. Also that the President would address a joint session of Congress at two o'clock. Instantly the thrill of possible war struck into every heart. It seemed that the long feared horror was upon us and the one great neutral nation must plunge into the murderous struggle.

By late afternoon the nation knew that the President had given his decision. Before almost the entire legislative body assembled (crowded, really) in the House, and including the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and his associates, and packed galleries, President Wilson, amid intense silence but with great calm and no appearance of depression, delivered the momentous speech which appears on this page. At one point he was interrupted by great applause long continued, namely at the close of the statement beginning, "I have, therefore, directed the Secretary of State to announce to his Excellency the German Ambassador." One or two other points caused demonstrations of approval. At the conclusion of the address, uttered with much feeling, the entire assembly stood and applauded.

THE startling news from the Capitol brought instant assent to the President's course from the whole nation. Everywhere the hope was expressed that Germany would halt before it was too late; but everywhere the determination to stand by the President was quick and earnest. The press and Congress unanimously supported the President.

War talk at once became the order of the day. One of the first steps was to safeguard New York City. The entire militia of the state was ordered out in preparation for any emergency. At the port of New York police guards were stationed near the various German liners. Naval officers were directed to look after the safety of interned German warships. All told there are about 90 German ships in American ports of a total valuation exceeding $126,000,000; the largest of these is the palatial liner Vaterland, 54,282 tonnage.

The severance of diplomatic relations between the two countries is complete. Every consular agent will return home from each country as quickly as possible. This involves a great deal of rearrangement of diplomatic representation in Germany of the interests of the belligerents which have been cared for by American agents, and of the representation of Germany by American embassies in belligerent countries. Our own interests in Germany have been committed to Spain, and Germany's interests here are now in the care of Switzerland. While severance of diplomatic relations is a step precedent to war, it does not of itself involve war.

A SUNDAY of calm reflection showed that the situation was not without its rays of promise. It brought the cheering hope that the step our Government had taken in breaking off relations with Germany might not after all, lead to war. President Wilson, himself, is authoritatively represented as determined to adhere strictly to his policy of neutrality until actual hostilities are forced upon us. It is to be made clear to the Allied Powers that the action of the United States in severing diplomatic relations with Germany, is in no sense to be interpreted as swaying the balance in the direction of the Allies. It is rather to be accepted as an act by the leading neutral nation in its own behalf, and that of all the other neutrals, so that if the rights of neutrals are respected, war will not follow. This hopeful aspect of the situation is further strengthened by a Berlin semi-official dispatch, via Sayville, which explains that the German measures "are not intended to damage neutrals, but were caused by the necessity to defend Germany against hostile measures which are contrary to international law." Simultaneously with this assurance comes the news that Germany, in response to the demand of our Government, has released the seventy-two Americans taken from ships sunk by the raider in the Atlantic, and brought to a German port on the steamship Yarrowdale. Further, it now appears from the cable dispatches that the sinking of the American S. S. Housatonic, February 2, was not done without warning, and that her entire crew was rescued and towed to safety.

The knowledge of the facts above stated has greatly modified the public view of the situation and has inspired official Washington with the hope that, as this has been a precedent-breaking war in many respects, it may also prove to be the first in which a new precedent has been established with respect to the results that usually follow the severance of diplomatic relations.

The President is reported as having invited all neutral nations to adopt the same course as his own. Spain is reported as about to protest to Germany.

. . .

This is the situation as the Christian Herald goes to press, February 5. Our editorial and news pages were sent to press before these two and before the great events here recorded had occurred.

President Wilson's Speech to Congress

"Gentlemen of the Congress:

"The Imperial German Government on the 31st of January announced to this Government and to the governments of the other neutral nations that on and after the first day of February, the present month, it would adopt a policy with regard to the use of submarines against all shipping seeking to pass through certain designated areas of the high seas, to which it is clearly my duty to call your attention.

"Let me remind the Congress on the 8th of April last, in view of the sinking on the 24th of March of the cross-channel passenger steamer Sussex by a German submarine without summons or warning and the consequent loss of the lives of several citizens of the United States, who were passengers aboard her, this Government addressed a note to the Imperial German Government, in which it made the following declaration:

"'If it is still the purpose of the Imperial German Government to prosecute relentless and indiscriminate warfare against vessels of commerce by the use of submarines without regard to what the Government of the United States must consider the sacred and indisputable rules of international law and the universally recognized dictates of humanity, the Government of the United States is at last forced to the conclusion that there is but one course it can pursue. Unless the Imperial Government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its present methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels, the Government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German Empire altogether.'

PLEDGE GIVEN AFTER SUSSEX SINKING

"In reply to this declaration the Imperial German Government gave this Government the following assurance:

"'The German Government is prepared to do its utmost to confine the operations of war for the rest of its duration to the fighting forces of the belligerents, thereby also insuring the freedom of the seas, a principle upon which the German Government believes now, as before, to be in agreement with the Government of the United States.

"'The German Government, guided by this idea, notifies the Government of the United States that the German naval forces have received the following orders: In accordance with the general principles of visit and search and destruction of merchant vessels recognized by international law, such vessels, both within and without the area declared a naval war zone, shall not be sunk without warning and without saving human lives, unless these ships attempt to escape or offer resistance.

"'But,' it added, 'neutrals cannot expect that Germany, forced to fight for her existence, shall, for the sake of neutral interest, restrict the use of an effective weapon if her enemy is permitted to continue to apply at will methods of warfare violating the rules of international law. Such a demand would be incompatible with the character of neutrality and the German Government is convinced that the Government of the United States does not think of making such a demand, knowing that the Government of the United States has repeatedly declared that it is determined to restore the principle of the freedom of the seas, from whatever quarter it has been violated.'

AMERICAN WARNING TO GERMANY

"To this the Government of the United States replied on the 8th of May, accepting, of course, the assurances given, but adding:

"'The Government of the United States feels it necessary to state that it takes it for granted that the Imperial German Government does not intend to imply that the maintenance of its newly announced policy is in any way contingent upon the course or result of diplomatic negotiations between the Government of the United States and any other belligerent government, notwithstanding the fact that certain passages in the Imperial Government's note of the fourth instant might appear to be susceptible of that construction.

"'In order, however, to avoid any misunderstanding, the Government of the United States notifies the Imperial Government that it cannot for a moment entertain, much less discuss, a suggestion that respect by German naval authorities for the rights of citizens of the United States upon the high seas should in any way or in the slightest degree be made contingent upon the conduct of any other government, affecting the rights of neutrals and non-combatants. Responsibility in such matters is single, not joint, absolute, not relative.'

"To this note of the 8th of May, the Imperial German Government made no reply.

"On the 31st of January, the Wednesday of the present week, the German Ambassador handed to the Secretary of State, along with a formal note, a memorandum which contained the following statement:

"'The Imperial Government, therefore, does not doubt that the Government of the United States will understand the situation thus forced upon Germany by the Entente Allies' brutal methods of war and by their determination to destroy the Central Powers, and that the Government of the United States will further realize that the now openly disclosed intention of the Entente Allies gives back to Germany the freedom of action which she reserved in her note addressed to the Government of the United States on May 4, 1916.

"'Under these circumstances, Germany will meet the illegal measures of her enemies by forcibly preventing, after February 1, 1917, in a zone around Great Britain, France, Italy and in the eastern Mediterranean, all navigation, that of neutrals included, from and to England and from and to France, etc., etc. All ships met within the zone will be sunk.'

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS BROKEN OFF

"I think that you will agree with me that, in view of this declaration, which suddenly and without prior intimation of any kind, deliberately withdraws the solemn assurance given in the Imperial Government's note of the 4th of May, 1916, this Government has no alternative consistent with the dignity and honor of the United States but to take the course which, in its note of the 18th of April, 1916, it announced that it would take in the event that the German Government did not declare and effect an abandonment of the methods of submarine warfare which it was then employing and to which it now purposes again to resort.

"I have, therefore, directed the Secretary of State to announce to His Excellency the German Ambassador that all diplomatic relations between the United States and the German Empire are severed, and that the American Ambassador at Berlin will immediately be withdrawn; and, in accordance with this decision, to hand to His Excellency his passports.

"Notwithstanding this unexpected action of the German Government, this sudden and deeply deplorable renunciation of its assurances, given this Government at one of the most critical moments of tension in the relations of the two governments, I refuse to believe that it is the intention of the German authorities to do in fact what they have warned us they will feel at liberty to do.

"I cannot bring myself to believe that they will indeed pay no regard to the ancient friendship between their people and our own or to the solemn obligations which have been exchanged between them, and destroy American ships and take the lives of American citizens in the wilful prosecution of the ruthless naval programme they have announced their intention to adopt. Only actual overt acts on their part can make me believe it even now.

WILL ASK MEANS FOR DEFENSE

"If this inveterate confidence on my part in the sobriety and prudent foresight of their purpose should unhappily prove unfounded; if American ships and American lives should in fact be sacrificed by their naval commanders in heedless contravention of the just and reasonable understandings of international law, and the obvious dictates of humanity, I shall take the liberty of coming again before the Congress to ask that authority be given me to use any means that may be necessary for the protection of our seamen and our people in the prosecution of their peaceful and legitimate errands on the high seas. I can do nothing less. I take it for granted that all neutral governments will take the same course.

"We do not desire any hostile conflict with the Imperial German Government. We are the sincere friends of the German people and earnestly desire to remain at peace with the Government which speaks for them. We shall not believe that they are hostile to us unless and until we are obliged to believe it; and we purpose nothing more than the reasonable defense of the undoubted rights of our people. We wish to serve no selfish ends.

"We seek merely to stand true alike in thought and in action to the immemorial principles of our people which I have sought to express in my address to the Senate only two weeks ago—seek merely to vindicate our rights to liberty and justice and an unmolested life. These are the bases of peace, not war. God grant that we may not be challenged to defend them by acts of wilful injustice on the part of the Government of Germany!"

The Twentieth Century City of Japan

By MAYNARD OWEN WILLIAMS

OSAKA is the Chicago-Pittsburg of Japan. It represents the most progressive spirit in the empire. It contains the richest and poorest inhabitants of the land. A single citizen gave a million yen for a city hall and then committed suicide because of a disastrous failure in business. The consumption of young manhood and womanhood is so appalling that few factories can be inspected. When a prominent American educator expressed a desire to visit some of the factories there several institutions were cleaned up by government order and he was officially conducted through a living lie concerning industrial conditions in this great city of a million and a half inhabitants.

Public pride runs high in Osaka. No city in Japan has such fine municipal buildings, only the national buildings of the capital surpassing them. Banquets follow in rapid succession in the great dining-room of the Osaka Hotel, and the business community is drawn together more closely here than elsewhere in Japan.

At Luna Park, which is the Coney Island of Japan, a tall Eiffel Tower, outlined in lights, rises above the gaudy amusement park of modernism. Its fairy-like form can be seen for miles on the rare nights when the pall of heavy smoke does not overhang the city, but almost at its foot licensed vice has just won a fight for the youth of a city of bright lights and dark homes.

Osaka has the smallest birth rate and the largest percentage of still births of any city in Japan, with 17.8 births for every 1,000 citizens in 1913, and more than one baby in ten being still-born. Almost no social service work is being done among the women of Osaka to better conditions; and two trained observers, one foreign and one Japanese, have told me that the recent factory legislation, so widely proclaimed as an attempt to bring Japan into line with other civilized nations in the matter of labor conditions, has not benefited things a particle. One prominent journalist and three business men have independently told me that pencils with a little lead in each end and none in the middle are being turned out by the thousand. A representative of the largest shipping firm on the Pacific Coast assures me that American pumps and razors with everything copied, even including the date of the patent on the box of the latter, are being manufactured in Japan. Osaka is said to lead in this type of modern commerce and progressive industry. What Japan can make she will not buy.

Australia, Russia and the South Sea Islands are being flooded with goods that are made to sell and automatically prevent return orders. Japan, doing her bit for the Allies, has had thousands of dollars' worth of war orders refused because of adulteration or deceit. With every dockyard busy and her shipping reaching for war ports that promise new fields for expansion of trade, Japanese merchants are deliberately killing geese upon whose golden eggs the next generation in Japan must depend for sustenance. Material progress has engulfed Japan when she has no spirit of altruism and when her commercial morals are those of the days of the ox-cart.

But the thing that causes Japan to sit up and take notice is that the conscripts for her army are smaller and weaker than they were when the little yellow men, with their tiny rice-balls, won a costly victory from indifferent Russia. Of youths called up in 1910 for conscript examinations,

The court house which bears no image of Justice, blind or otherwise

A new bridge will soon provide an open thoroughfare here for commerce

The breath of that giant, Industry, clouds the sunset in the new Japan

162 in a thousand were unfit for service. Four years later, with an even easier and less searching examination, 205 in 1,000 were unfit. To the military bureaucracy that rules Japan this state of things is alarming.

Hard labor conditions are the hope of Japan. With an eight-hour day, Japan would debauch herself into an early grave. The festival and the holiday are the days of vice. Dr. Soyeda, President of the Imperial Railway Board, says: "Most Japanese dream away their lives day after day. Some of them work hard on weekdays only for the purpose of enjoying themselves on Sundays. That is all very well in its way; but, unfortunately, their way of spending their Sundays is absolutely wrong. Their pleasures consist only in gratifying animal passions, with the result that they injure their health on Sundays instead of strengthening it. More men are absent from their offices and factories on Mondays than on other weekdays."

Living prices are rising and wages are about what they were in 1900. Baron Shibusawa is inviting the biggest fight of his life when he invites a labor leader into Japan. There are no labor unions worthy of the name in the empire, and the forces that inaugurated the California movement against the Japanese to protect America from cheap labor and long hours have no counterpart to protect the labor of Japan.

In a land where ricksha coolies can read, the rich are piling up wealth and the poor are being treated like animals. A protest against labor conditions in Japan spells imprisonment and a long wait for trial. Hitherto the discarded laborer has returned to his family and his farm, but now whole families are being worked to death together, and urban populations unconnected with farming families are being established. Deprived of a quiet place to die, the consumptive laborers hive in filthy huts and slowly shuffle off, but not before transmitting the white death to others. There is not only a growing discontent with inhuman conditions but sufficient education to enable dying men, robbed of opportunity by materialism, to read of the prosperity of the country through war. How long will the people stand it?

The loyalty to the emperor and the government is as strong as ever, but there is no feudal lord to whom the yeomen owe allegiance, and who in turn will protect those dependent upon him. Criticism of political leaders and parties is strong and even bitter. Terauchi is pictured as an idiotic Billiken, and Okuma as a man with a tongue as big as that of an ox. Respect for rule is on the decline, if the royal family is excepted.

When the sixty million finally rebel against the five million, there will be no altruistic love of fellow men or restraining moral force to prevent anarchy. Nor are there fit leaders among the poorer classes, who are subordinates from birth to death. It is all a question of time when Osaka will strike off the shackles that bind her laborers. But will capitalist or laborer inaugurate the movement? A beautiful court house does not ensure justice, but it gives point to injustice when it consumes dollars that are blood-money.

OSAKA is neither all bad nor all good. It is simply a teeming industrial city, existing in a potential storm-center at a time when an industrial revolution is imminent. It contains many public-spirited citizens and three courageous and established newspapers. The Asahi, after toiling along in miserable quarters for years, has just entered a beautiful white tile building that would be a credit to any city, and whose foundations would support a building six times as heavy. The Mainichi and the Jiji are also mighty forces, and in the great vice campaign took sides against the government sanction of a new district. From one end of Japan to the other, public-spirited men have said: "The government has had to go on with this to save its face, but another such movement will never be born." Vice has won at a cost that means its ultimate downfall.

Modernism cannot save Osaka. It may wreck it. The governor, under whose régime the opening of the Tobita quarters of seventeen acres in a busy section of the city near to nine higher schools was sanctioned, is a Yale graduate and a progressive educator. The Christians trusted him, but in vain.

Governor Okubo says that a former governor had promised such a district. The former governor denies this. The man from Yale says that the Tobita location has been chosen as a place to which the four other licensed districts inside the city limits of Osaka may be removed. But Tobita is in a growing district so near the city line that it will soon be a more dangerous district than any of the present ones. The government order announcing the new licensed-quarter came suddenly, after secret planning. The Christians were caught off their guard. The governor says this was to prevent land speculation—to enable vice to live off the people as cheaply as possible. Remember that scores of unfortunate girls are sold into the life by their nearest relatives, and that the present fight is the first big protest against such conditions on moral grounds. Remember that public opinion throughout modern Japan supports vice.

Is she a worn-out factory worker or just a worker of the passer-by?

No missionary in Japan knows more about the licentious condition of the country than Captain Bickel. The last words he said to me last summer were: "When you go up to Tokyo and the big men show you around, don't be misled into thinking that education necessarily means morality."

The governor who "slipped one over" on the Christians and the moral men of Osaka is a modern man. His prototype can be seen in every hotel in Japan, rounding out his chest and imbibing whisky pegs with a bouquet of cigarette smoke.

Who opposed the opening of a new vice district in progressive Osaka? Moral men and women, stand forth! Names, please.

Mrs. Kajiko Yajima, age eighty-two, Christian.

Colonel Gumpei Yamamuro, Salvation Army, Christian.

Hon. Soroku Ebara, age seventy-four, Christian.

Hon Saburo Shimada, president of House of Representatives, Christian.

Mr. George Gleason, American, Christian.

There are many others. But these are the big five. This fight for the womanhood and the homes of Osaka was a Christian fight, and Japan from one end to the other knows that this is the case. Christianity has met the steam roller of officially sanctioned vice and has gone down to defeat, because the Christians did not see it coming. But they have left such deep dents in the roller that it will never attempt such tough work again. The Christians, though defeated, are stronger than ever, for they have charged the windmills and proven them not to be giants but the toys of every passing wind. The gale of Christian sentiment is rising. Buddhist and Shinto leaders were appealed to, but in vain. Several prominent temples and shrines adjoin the vice district, and the vicious do not forget the gods when on their way to or from their debauchery.

I HAVE already written of Mrs. Yajima. She headed a procession of women, pleading for recognition as human beings through a monster petition for the protection of their homes and children from this new municipal cancer, eating away in the population.

Hon. S. Ebara is the peerless Christian educator whose power aids every Christian movement in Japan. Colonel Yamamuro is the well-educated and eloquent head of the Salvation Army in Japan, whose work compels the admiration of all. Even the Robert Ingersoll of Japan, Baron H. Kato, in his volume entitled "Evils of Christianity," says: "Although religion has so many evil features, it is not devoid of good, especially in its age-long devotion to philanthropic ministration. Christianity has been pre-eminently active and successful in such work, a fact too well known to need detailed proof. Above all, the Salvation Army's work, in recent years, compels our heartiest admiration."

The work of the Salvation Army under Colonel Yamamuro compels the heartiest admiration of the great atheist of Japan, who will have another chapter to write now that Christianity has openly fought an established government order to a standstill for eight months.

Mr. George Gleason is the biggest foreigner in Osaka. Long after he is dead, the young men of Osaka will use the municipal playground which he won from a reluctant government by a grandstand play which contained no selfishness. Japan had been trimmed in fine style by the athletes of China and the Philippines in the Far Eastern Olympics at Shanghai. The government officials, in utilizing some reclaimed land, wanted a nice little artistic park whose shrubs would be trained according to the care Japan lavishes on plants but has not sufficiently given to the child. But the Y. M. C. A. men, Gleason and Brown, asked that an athletic ground be laid out to prepare Japan for taking a worthy place in the Olympic meet which is to be held in Tokyo next May. When you touch the pride of the Japanese, things move; and today,

Continued on page 180

Hunting for the cause of the cycle's cough will draw a crowd anywhere

A part of the playground which is to help win the Olympic games

A WEEK in the WORLD'S NEWS

APPEAL FOR RIGHTEOUS PEACE. The strongest organized efforts in the interest of world peace is the recent address to Christians the world over signed by 779 leaders in all denominations of the Christian Church in the United States. The essential part of the statement follows:

"At a time when the world is suffering the indescribable horrors of war, and when the possibility of peace by negotiation is being urged by various governments, we desire to take our open stand with those who labor for the establishment of lasting peace upon the foundations of righteousness, believing that responsibility for the welfare of humanity is inevitable and universal.

First. We are convinced that any adequate guarantee of lasting peace involves the establishment of a League of Nations, with provision for the limitation of armament, and we believe that the agreement to establish such a League of Nations should accompany the offer or acceptance of any proposal for negotiation concerning the termination of the war.

Second. We believe that the approach to a just peace makes necessary an agreement that the adjustment of territory and compensation be upon the basis of righteousness alone, with due regard for the rights of all nations, small and great, belligerent and neutral, and that all differences not otherwise adjustable should be referred for arbitration either to the Hague Court or to some tribunal constituted for this particular purpose.

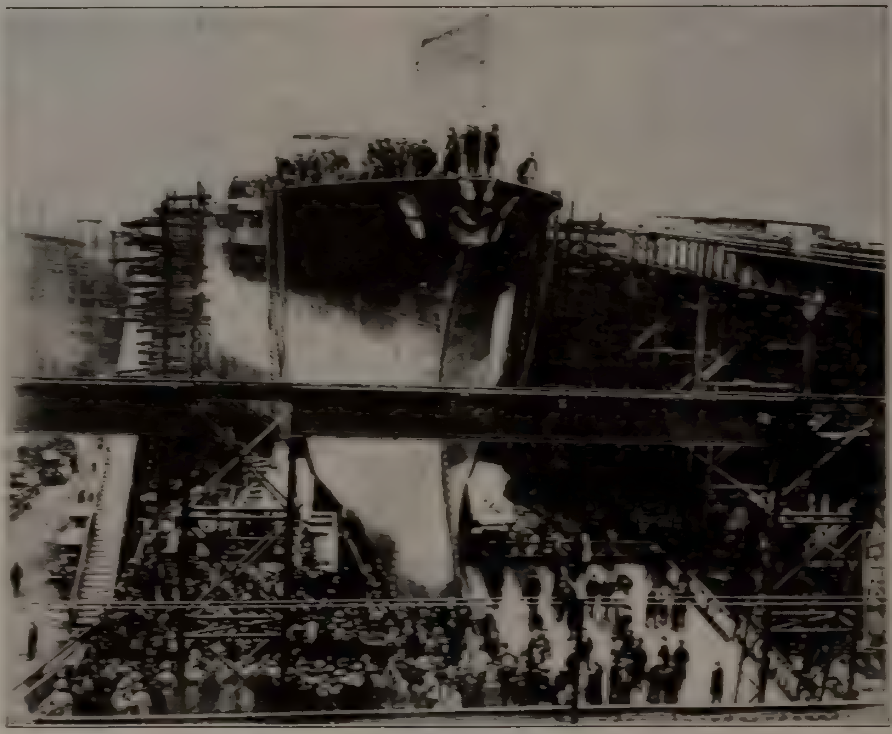
Third. We believe that any adequate program of negotiation in the interest of peace should further include the entire matter of relief, reconstruction and reconciliation in which the warring nations, the United States and other neutrals, shall engage for the common good.

"While we sign this statement without the authoritative action of the several bodies with which we are connected, we cherish the hope that it will be approved by a large proportion of those with whom in faith or practice we are associated, and we submit this deliberate expression of our attitude and principles to the prayerful consideration of our brethren in all nations, warring or neutral."

This statement is signed by 41 bishops, 185 pastors, 158 college professors, 154 secretaries of religious and social-service organizations, 35 editors, 178 representative laymen, and 28 others whose names were received too late to classify.

A BLOODLESS REVOLUTION. President Alfredo Gonzales of Costa Rica was deposed from office on January 27 by the military force of the capital, supported by citizens. The administrative power was conferred upon the minister of war, Federico Tinoco, who issued a call for a convention of delegates, to be elected by the people, to meet on April 1, for the election of a president. Gonzales was threatening a new system of taxes, and was also charged with planning to succeed himself as president, contrary to the constitution of Costa Rica. The deposed president took refuge in the American legation at San José, from which he appealed to the United States government for intervention. Unless disorders follow, the United States will take no action.

MAY ADMIT ARMED MERCHANTMEN. Washington dispatches of January 29, following announcements that Great Britain had decided to arm merchantmen both fore and aft, intimated that the American State Department might consider such vessels as armed for defense only, until evidence was submitted that any particular vessel had used her armament for attack, and that until then such vessels could enter and leave American ports at will. Dispatches from Washington on January 30 represented Germany as considering the sending of a warning to Americans and other neutrals to keep off armed merchant ships of belligerent nations, since Germany would consider such vessels as auxiliary cruisers and treat them accordingly.

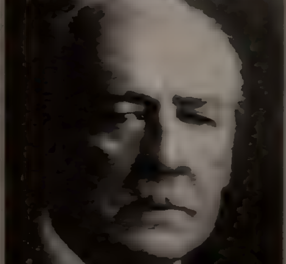


Launching of the Third Mississippi

The third American battleship of that name was launched at Newport News on January 25 in the presence of thousands of cheering spectators, including naval officers. The new Mississippi has ten times the displacement and one thousand times as powerful batteries as the first Mississippi, of which Lieutenant George Dewey was executive officer during the Civil War. After destroying the Confederate ram Manassas that Mississippi ran aground during the attack on Fort Hudson, where she caught fire and finally blew up. The second Mississippi rendered her entire service in time of peace, having been authorized in 1903 and sold to Greece on July 8, 1914. The new dreadnought will cost about $16,000,000.

FOUR THOUSAND PULPITS DECLARE WAR. As the result of an appeal from nearly 300 New York clergymen to the pastors of the state for a concerted discussion of the prohibition bills pending in the legislature, nearly 4,000 ministers in the state, on Sunday, January 28, either preached upon the subject of the saloon or made special announcements before their congregations as to the importance of the pending measures.

IMMIGRATION BILL VETOED. President Wilson vetoed the Burnett Immigration Bill on January 29, this being his second veto of immigration legislation because of the literacy test. It is probable that the House may be able to pass the bill over the veto, but any attempt to pass it through the Senate is expected to meet a persistent filibuster which will prevent a vote.



Lord Cromer

Former British Consul-General in Egypt, often called the Egyptian Czar, died January 29. Lord Cromer went to Egypt in 1877 as commissioner of the Egyptian Public Debt, found the country bankrupt and the people burdened with taxation. He obtained justice for the fellaheen, the peasantry, installed an irrigation system, abolished forced labor and placed Egypt upon a paying basis. Lord Cromer, who was seventy-six years of age, was appointed British Agent in Egypt in 1883, resigning in 1907.

FROM CANAL TO RAILWAY. The equipment used in the building of the Panama Canal, which was prepared for shipment to the Alaskan Engineering Commission for use in the building of the new government railways, and which has been awaiting transportation since June 14, 1916, was scheduled to be finally shipped on February 15. The material includes 50 flat cars, 11 locomotives, 2 steam shovels and 5 dump cars. In addition to this material originally assembled, the same cargo will include 4 large locomotives, 50 flat cars and 45 dump cars.

FOUNDATIONS CALLED LEECHES. In a debate in the Senate on January 26, Senator Chamberlain of Oregon called attention to the large number of persons on the staff of the Bureau of Education as collaborators and investigators, at the nominal salary of a dollar a year, these persons being paid large salaries by other organizations. It was shown that there were 150 such individuals carried on the pay-roll—most of them in the employ of the Carnegie and Rockefeller Foundations—who, because of their status as government employees, were able to use the franking privilege in spreading the propaganda of these foundations broadcast throughout the country. An amendment was inserted in the legislative and executive appropriation bill making it a misdemeanor for any one in connection with the Educational Bureau to accept pay from any other source.

ITEMS FROM THE WORK OF CONGRESS. The Enabling Act which gives the Secretary of Agriculture authority to enforce the treaty recently concluded with Canada for the protection of migratory birds is now before both Houses of Congress, but with the session crowded and the time short, the passage of the necessary bills may be overlooked unless the friends of the birds keep in touch with their congressmen and senators. President Wilson on January 29, after a series of conferences with legislative leaders, was reported as willing to modify his demand for anti-strike legislation as far as insisting upon any particular form of legislation is concerned, but to have stated that it was absolutely necessary to decide on some means of preventing strikes on the railroads of the country. The Administration leaders were reported as working on a compromise measure which the President would probably endorse. The Senate on January 26 passed the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, including in it a stipulation that all postmasters' positions should be made non-political and put under civil service rules. Republicans in the House are planning to criticize severely the Democratic plan for the raising of revenue by the issuance of bonds and by new direct taxes. The Federal Reserve Board is also before Congress in an attempt to have the law under which it was constituted amended in certain particulars. . . . The resolution of Senator Cummings for a full and complete debate of the President's peace message was tabled in the Senate on January 30 by a vote of 38 to 30.

FRAGMENTS OF NEWS. In addition to the deportations of East Prussians, the Russian government is accused by Madame Aino Malmberg of Finland of having since the beginning of the war deported 12,000,000 Poles, Luthuanians, Finns, Ukranians and Jews, thousands of whom have died from exposure, while thousands of others are said to have been slaughtered by natives of the places to which they were deported. A formal request for an investigation is to be made upon the President and the State Department. . . . The Wisconsin legislature is considering a proposal to remove churches and parochial schools from the class of property exempt from taxation. . . . The State Department at Washington on January 25 sent a protest to General Carranza against a number of provisions proposed to be incorporated in the new Mexican constitution, which would operate to forfeit to the Mexican government properties belonging to citizens of other nations, and which would also abridge the rights of foreigners in Mexico. It was announced January 30 that Ambassador Fletcher was to proceed to Mexico City at once and that the Carranza government was to be recognized. . . . The National Foreign Trade Council estimates that the property loss in the European theaters of war up to the present time has reached a total of $5,985,000,000. . . . Dr. William Pierson Merrill of the Brick Presbyterian Church announced on January 28 that he had

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly by The Christian Herald at Bible House, Fourth Avenue [illegible] New York City. [illegible] Bible House, N. Y. [illegible] H. Sandison, Vice-President, Bible House, N. Y. C.; [illegible] Secretary, Bible House, N. Y. City.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE. [illegible] a year in advance. Remittances should be made in the safest manner possible. Make checks and money orders payable to The Christian Herald.

FOREIGN POSTAGE.—For copies mailed outside the United States, Canada and Mexico add one dollar a year to subscription price.

CHANGE OF DATE.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date after your subscription is renewed.

EXPIRATION OF SUBSCRIPTION.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS.—It requires three weeks' time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

LETTERS should be addressed THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post Office, New York, as Second Class Matter.

Entered as Second Class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa.

decided not to accept the presidency of Union Theological Seminary. . . . The king of Sweden has commissioned Bishop Lonegren of Hernosand to visit the Lutheran Church in America this year in connection with the Lutheran quadricentennial celebration. . . . The House Navy Committee on January 29 voted to increase the authorized cost of the new battleships and battle-cruisers to make it possible to accept bids which were recently made in excess of the authorization. The committee also voted $18,000,000 for equipping navy yards. . . . The United States destroyer Sampson was severely damaged on January 27 in collision with a French motor-bark off New York Harbor. Both vessels made port under their own power. . . . The retail business district of Pittsburg was swept by a fire on January 27 with a loss estimated at about $3,000,000. . . . The Tabernacle Institutional Church of Augusta, Ga., of which Rev. S. C. Walker is the pastor, is erecting what is reported to be the largest Baptist edifice in the United States. It will have a seating capacity of 4,000. Dr. Walker is said to be a man of culture, eloquence and power, and one of the outstanding preachers of the negro race. . . . Having acquired the Danish West Indies, the United States faces the problem of how to govern them. It is planned to continue the present form of government as nearly as possible under the direction of an army or naval officer. At present the island is governed by a General Council chosen on a limited suffrage, a governor being appointed by Denmark. . . . Prohibition in Virginia is said to be starving the jailer, since Virginia jailers have made their living through the contracts for feeding prisoners, and the number of prisoners has been constantly reduced since prohibition went into effect. In Richmond, Va., the number of prisoners dropped from 306 in July, 1916, to 126 in December, and on January 10 there were only 96 prisoners in the Richmond jail, and the jailer was petitioning the council for financial relief. . . . A suit was brought by the Federal government in the United States Court, New York, on January 30 to destroy an alleged combine between the state of Yucatan and its representatives in this country to maintain conditions that force up the price of sisal fiber, used in the making of binding twine, until an increase of $25,000,000 in 1917 over the cost in 1915 is in sight.

House Overrides Veto. By a vote of 285 to 206, the House of Representatives on February 1, after forty minutes debate, passed the Burnett Immigration Bill over the President's veto. On the same day the House also passed the Emergency Revenue Bill taxing inheritances and excess profits, and authorizing bond issues, as outlined on this page in a previous issue.

Mexico Has New Constitution. The Constitutional Assembly called by General Carranza at Querétaro, Mexico, completed its work on January 31. The new constitution abolishes the office of vice-president, prohibits the reelection of a president, provides for an eight-hour day, six working days a week, and no more than seven hours of work at night. It provides also for compulsory arbitration, for profit-sharing, for free employment bureaus, for a national department of health, and compulsory military instruction, and includes strict anti-trust laws. Under this new constitution, foreigners must renounce allegiance to their native countries in order to acquire title to real estate, and stringent land laws provide for the cutting up of large estates and the return to the people of communal and tribal lands. The separation of church and state is assured, religious orders being prohibited from owning or administering real estate or mortgages, which is held to forecast the taking over by the government of all property of the Roman Catholic church in Mexico. This law may also require some adjustment of Protestant holdings in Mexico. All clergymen must be of Mexican birth, and they are prohibited from teaching in public schools and are permitted to give instruction only in the higher grades of private schools under the supervision of the government. Criminal procedure is reformed, and court costs are abolished. All natural resources in Mexico are declared the property of the government, and the succession to the presidency through absence or death is placed in the hands of Congress.

Emperor Charles Franz Joseph of Austro-Hungary taking the oath as King of Hungary at Budapest

State Department Supports "Gentlemen's Agreement." Anti-alien land bills similar to that of California, which were being pressed in the Oregon and Idaho legislatures and which violated the spirit of the Root-Takahira agreement, Japan's part of which has been scrupulously kept, for several days engaged the attention of the State Department. Impelled by a protest from the Japanese ambassador, Secretary Lansing secured the cooperation of the United States senators from the two states, and on February 2 the bill in the Oregon Senate was withdrawn, and the bill in the Idaho Senate, which had passed the House, was indefinitely postponed. The State Department appealed to the two states to avoid anything that might disturb international relations during the present time of stress for the national government.

The War in Europe

MUTUAL bombardments and trench-raiding marked the week on the whole of the western front, on the Italian front, and in Macedonia, no decisive action being reported from any of these fronts. The action reported last week in Mesopotamia apparently resulted in a gain of ground for the British near Kut-el-Amara, the British claiming to have captured two and one-half miles of trenches, while dispatches from Berlin admitted a loss of "some ground" to the enemy. In the snow-covered Carpathians on the Moldavian-Bukowina border, where the Russo-Rumanian front bends sharply toward the eastward, Russian forces after artillery preparation on January 28, succeeded in gaining some ground on both sides of the Kimpolung-Jacobeni Road, making further slight advances on January 31.

In the Riga region, where severe fighting was reported last week, the action continued, the Germans driving the Russians farther northward some two-thirds of a mile, a gain which at last reports the Russians claimed to have reversed.

During the week the principal field of warfare and the chief center of interest shifted from the land to the sea. On January 27 the British Admiralty issued a statement declaring an enlarged area in the North Sea dangerous to shipping. The new British danger zone practically closed the North Sea east of the Dogger Banks, extending from Dutch territorial waters to the extreme northern point of Danish territorial waters. No explanation was made as to the reasons which might have prompted this extension of the danger zone. It was suggested on February 1 that Britain may have had advance information as to the purposes expressed by Germany in her note to the United States government similar to notes sent to all neutrals and made public on January 31, which is given on this page.

On February 1 the State Department at Washington made public a second memorandum delivered with the German note on the day previous. This memorandum had been prepared at the German embassy in Washington before the receipt of the formal note from Berlin. While it agreed in substance with that note, it made more explicit the intentions of Germany by stating that all ships met within the barred zones would be sunk.

Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg, addressing the Ways and Means Committee of the Reichstag on January 31, announced the change in the U-boat policy, saying: "We have been challenged to fight until the end. We accept the challenge, we stake everything, and we shall be victorious. . . . As regards all that human strength can do to enforce success for the Fatherland, be assured, gentlemen, that nothing has been neglected. Everything in this respect will be done." No official statements regarding the new German policy are available from any other source at this writing.

Count Adam Tarnowski von Tarnow, the new Austro-Hungarian ambassador to the United States, arrived in America on February 1.

Greece, having fully met the demands of the Entente, even to the extent of humiliating herself by formally saluting the colors of the Entente nations at Athens, is still held under a rigorous blockade. On January 23, Premier Lambros appealed to American Minister Droppers to use his influence with the Entente diplomats to hasten the lifting of the blockade of Greece, which on that date had lasted fifty days. Supplies of grain were then approaching exhaustion, and bread rations for the whole nation had been reduced. The English requisition of Greek merchant-vessels had been acquiesced in by the Greek owners, and negotiations were proceeding with the British government looking to the exemption from requisition of a sufficient tonnage to meet the actual commercial needs of Greece herself.

The report of the first two days of the new German submarine campaign showed eighteen vessels known to have been sunk. Of these, two were Norwegian, one was Dutch, one Spanish, and one was the Belgian relief steamer Euphrates, returning to America in ballast and evidently sunk by mistake as she carried a German safe conduct. The rest were British. Four of the victims were trawlers, three fishing smacks, one was a tug and of these, the tonnage was not given, the total tonnage given as sunk being 12,[illegible]. Twelve members of crews were reported lost.

Germany Announces New Naval War Zones

ON January 31 Ambassador von Bernstorff delivered to Secretary Lansing at Washington a note from the German government partly in answer to the President's speech and partly imparting information of Germany's purpose to use "every means destined to bring about the end of the war." A copy of the note was handed to Mr. Gerard at Berlin. The note was as follows:

MR. Secretary of State: Your excellency was good enough to transmit to the Imperial Government a copy of the message which the President of the United States of America addressed to the Senate on the 22d inst. The Imperial Government has given it the earnest consideration which the President's statements deserve, inspired as they are by a deep sentiment of responsibility. It is highly gratifying to the Imperial Government to ascertain that the main tendencies of this important statement correspond largely to the desires and principles professed by Germany. These principles especially include self-government and equality of rights for all nations. Germany would be sincerely glad if, in recognition of this principle, countries like Ireland and India, which do not enjoy the benefits of political independence, should now obtain their freedom.

The German people also repudiate all alliances which serve to force the countries into a competition for might and to involve them in a net of selfish intrigues. On the other hand, Germany will gladly cooperate in all efforts to prevent future wars. The freedom of the seas, being a preliminary condition of the free existence of nations and the peaceful intercourse between them, as well as the open door for the commerce of all nations, has always formed part of the leading principles of Germany's political programme.

All the more the Imperial Government regrets that the attitude of her enemies who are so entirely opposed to peace makes it impossible for the world at present to bring about the realization of these lofty ideals. Germany and her allies were ready to enter now into a discussion of peace and had set down as a basis the guaranty of existence, honor and free development of their peoples. Their aims, as has been expressly stated in the note of December 12, 1916, were not directed toward the destruction or annihilation of their enemies and were, according to their conviction, perfectly compatible with the rights of the other nations.

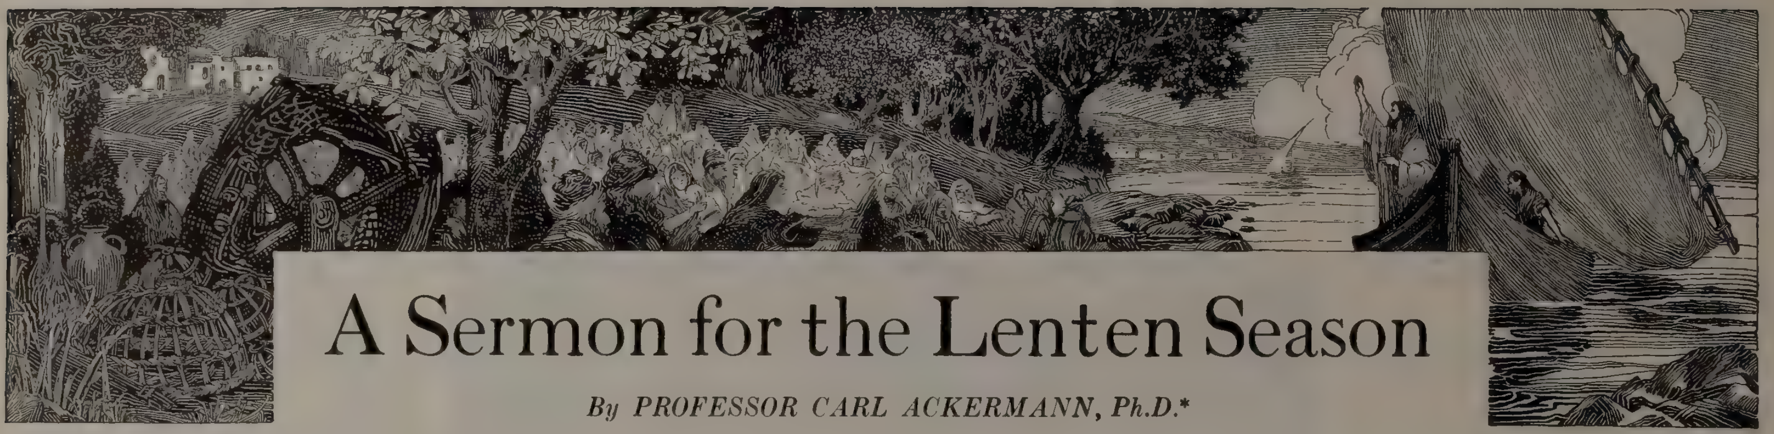
As to Belgium, for which such warm and cordial sympathy is felt in the United States, the Chancellor had declared only a few weeks previously that its annexation had never formed part of Germany's intentions. The peace to be signed with Belgium was to provide for such conditions in that country, with which Germany desires to maintain friendly, neighborly relations, that Belgium should not be used again by Germany's enemies for the purpose of instigating continuous hostile intrigues. Such precautionary measures are all the more necessary, as Germany's enemies have repeatedly stated, not only in speeches delivered by their leading men, but also in the statutes of the economical conference in Paris, that it is their intention not to treat Germany as an equal, even after peace has been restored, but to continue their hostile attitude, and especially to wage a systematical economic war against her.

The attempt of the four allied Powers to bring about peace has failed owing to the lust of conquest of their enemies, who desired to dictate the conditions of peace. Under the pretence of following the principle of nationality our enemies have disclosed their real aims in this way, viz.:

To dismember and dishonor Germany, Austria-Hungary, Turkey and Bulgaria. To the wish of reconciliation they oppose the will of destruction. They desire a fight to the bitter end.

A new situation has thus been created which forces Germany to new decisions. Since two years and a half England is using her naval power for a criminal attempt to force Germany into submission by starvation. In brutal contempt of international law the group of Powers led by England does not only curtail the legitimate trade of their opponents, but they also by ruthless pressure compel neutral

Continued on page [illegible]



A Sermon for the Lenten Season

*By PROFESSOR CARL ACKERMANN, Ph.D.

TEXT—Luke 18 : 31. "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem."

THE seasons in their round have brought us once more to that time which by the church has been designated the Lenten season. During this season Christians are accustomed to lay aside the cares and amusements of life and to meditate on the Saviour's great humiliation and speak of him as the Man of Sorrows. During this season we in spirit accompany the Saviour on his last journey to the Holy City, to his sufferings and death.

When we realize its import, we must confess that it was the most momentous journey in the history of the world. It was a journey upon the successful and yet so horrible issue of which depended the eternal destiny of man. It was a journey that aroused little commotion on earth but was impressively watched by the hosts of heaven. It meant much for Jesus and much for us. "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem."

It meant for Jesus, first of all, a going up unto the feast of the Passover. According to Jewish law every male Jew was required to go up to Jerusalem to this feast commemorative of the passing of the destroying angel over the land of Egypt. This going up to Jerusalem was the journey of a poor son of Abraham—so poor that he had not where to lay his head—with his few followers from Galilee, to attend to their duties at the paschal feast. And we are told that when he finally arrived at Jerusalem, he sent two of his disciples in advance to prepare the paschal feast, and with his disciples he partook of the same.

THIS going up means, in the next place, for Christ a last attempt both by teaching and the fulfilment of prophecy to call Jerusalem to repentance. When he neared the city, he made his triumphal entry, thereby fulfilling that saying of the prophet: "Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; shout, O daughter of Jerusalem; behold, thy King cometh unto thee; he is just and having salvation." After he had entered amid the hosannas of the multitudes that went before and followed after, he taught daily in the temple, calling upon all his brethren to turn from their wickedness and embrace the salvation of the Lord. These things Christ had in view when he said: "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem."

But this was not all that it meant for Jesus; nor was he ignorant of the rest. He had long before predicted the things he must endure. He had foretold that he must pass through the valley of the shadow of death. He knew that it was a journey into persecution and suffering. He saw beforehand his utter rejection by the leaders of the people. People often march, without caring where they go, into the jaws of destruction, into pain and suffering; but such was not the Saviour's case. He foresaw all that would befall him, the unutterable woe and agony in the garden, his betrayal by a Judas, the scourging and scoffing, the lashing and mocking, and the suspension upon the cross brought about by the false accusations and wicked machinations of those who had but a few days previous welcomed him as the King of Zion. Yes, he knew all this and yet he said: "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem." It was a going up of the King of salvation to the possession of his eternal throne. It was a voluntary going of the Lamb of God to the last great paschal feast there, to be sacrificed once for all for the sins of mankind. It was a going unto a holy, precious, glorious sacrifice, but it was a horrible path to tread. It was a going into the jaws of death, bearing the curse of the sins of the whole world.

Yes, Christ sees all this, but he looks far beyond also. His journey is not ended in these bitter sufferings. Beyond the horrors and darkness of Golgotha he sees the brightness of the resurrection morn. In foretelling the events of his journey, he not only says: "He shall be delivered unto the Gentiles, and shall be mocked, and spitefully entreated, and spitted on; and they shall scourge him, and put him to death"; but he also says: "And the third day he shall rise again.". That was the crowning event of this great journey. It meant the triumph over death and the grave, the dethronement of Satan, the overthrow of hell, the taking of captivity captive, with redeeming grace triumphant. It proved that He who went up to Jerusalem was the King of kings and Lord of lords foretold by the prophets of old. The journey of Christ to Jerusalem was through the cross to the crown.

THAT journey of Christ to Jerusalem also means much for us. So far as he himself was concerned, Christ did not need to make that journey. It was not necessary for him who is the Lord of the law to obey it on his own account. No, his work was mediatorial in its character.

We had fallen from that first estate of purity and holiness; we had fallen into sin; and it was to save us that he came into the world. "But when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." When Christ, then, in the face of all that he foresaw, still made that journey, it was with the consciousness that for us there is no crown without the cross, no eternal life without his death. He proclaimed his sufferings in advance to show his divine submission, the depth of his compassion, and the great self-sacrifice for his avowed enemies.

It is when we take this into consideration that the greatness of the Saviour's work for us appears in its true light. It was a life of never-ending crucifixion. The Saviour knew his fate; yet, in expectation of all these horrors, he cheerfully went forward, biding his time, and then laid down his life for us.

When Christ went up to the Passover, we are to remember that for us he obeyed the law. When he made his triumphal entry, it was to prove himself our Lord and King. When he shed his blood on Calvary, it was an all-atoning sacrifice for the sins of all mankind. When the Saviour went up to Jerusalem, a battle was fought there the like of which the world had never seen, and upon its issue depended our eternal happiness. It was a battle with God alone on one side and earth and hell combined against him on the other. It was an hour of darkness while that battle was fought—even the sun could not bear to look upon the scene. The issue means for us translation from the kingdom of darkness to the Kingdom of light.

SINCE this journey means so much for us, is it not appropriate that we consider it in this Lenten season? The Lord is saying to us also: "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem." He invites us to go with him in spirit on his last journey to see him in all his persecutions and sufferings. We are to lay aside, especially at this time, all joy and feasting, and by thinking of him and meditating upon his sufferings and their import, to learn to know our own misery and sinfulness; and by clinging ever closer to him, to become day by day more and more partakers of those benefits which his death secured for us. May our hearts be so attuned that we may receive the full blessing of this Lenten journey.

THIS going up unto Jerusalem is finally, however, a type of another journey which we ought to make—the journey to the Jerusalem above. There were many, very many, who did not make that journey with the Lord to that earthly Jerusalem; and there are many, very many, who do not make the journey to the Jerusalem home above, which he purchased with his blood for all who love and serve him. And he is continually journeying with true Christians. He is calling to each and every one: "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem." Do we accompany him on his journey? Are we striving by his grace to enter into that haven of rest?

Like his journey then, so is the journey now, by the way of the Cross. If we would proceed on the journey we must take up the cross and fight with the powers of darkness. They will bring trials and tribulations upon us; but we know that the way to the crown is the way ot the Cross, the way to the gates of heaven is the way of self-denial and death to the world.

We know, too, that we have a place of safety and defense if we will but dwell there. In his loyal service are found weapons which are able to withstand all the fiery darts of the wicked. Here in his church the Lord has placed his Word; here he has promised to be present and to fight our battles for us. He who would accompany the Lord Jesus and who would overcome the foes that cross his pathway must enter in and delight in the courts of the Lord. Then, though trials and crosses come, we shall overcome them all, and they will but bring us nearer to the city of our God.

What an encouragement there is, then, for us to join the company of the Lord and say: "Behold, we go up to Jerusalem!" What an encouragement to let go the world, with its honors and pleasures, even though this should bring the cross! These trials and crosses can last but a little while, and will be the prelude to a "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," even eternal life.

---

* Pastor Ackermann is a leading member of the Faculty of Capitol University (Lutheran), Columbus, Ohio.

The Water of Life

A MIGHTY king fell sick one day,
And on his royal couch he lay
Tossing with fever and tortured by thirst,
And all of the court physicians versed
In science and nature could not allay
The terrible thirst of the king that day.
(For they did not know, they could not know
That a sin-sick soul had brought him low).

Then a Jew whose sandal-straps were red
With desert-dust stood forth and said:
"O king, why with pain wage so weary a strife?
I pray you to drink of the Water of Life!"

Then a messenger fleet to Iman Khan,
Friend of thirsty souls, right swiftly ran;
For a seller of wonderful water was he,
And he came to the king as hastily
As the horse of an Arab could speed him away,
And soon he arrived where the sick man lay.

Then the monarch said: "O Iman Khan,
I know you have come from far Ispahan
To give me relief from this torturing strife
By bringing to me the pure Water of Life."

Then Iman Khan bowed low, and poured
The precious water which he had stored
In water-skins for the long, hot ride,
And placed it in bowls by the sick king's side.

Then they held a bowl to his thin, parched lips,
And he tasted the water in eager sips;
Then he drank deep draughts; but he longed for more,
And his thirst was greater than ever before.
And he said, "With the fever I still am at strife;
So this cannot be the true Water of Life!"

Then his servants in haste again went forth
To the east and the west, to the south and the north,
To find in cool springs or where bright fountains break,
The Water of Life which his thirst would slake.
But they all from the quest unsuccessful returned,
And day after day the king's hot fever burned.

At last he summoned the foot-sore Jew,
And said: "Oh, how can your words be true?
No water on earth can satisfy;
I shall burn with the fever, and thirst till I die."

Then the Jew bowed low and gently said:
"O mighty monarch, have you not read
That the water which nature gives to men
Can never prevent them from thirsting again?
But the water which Christ shall give shall be
A well of water eternally.
And this, O king, is the Water of Life,
Which can bring you relief in your torturing strife.
Who searches afar shall his quest not win,
For the living water springs forth within."

"How may I this wonderful water receive?"
"O king, you have only to fully believe!"
Then a marvelous peace o'er the sick king crept;
He drank of the water, and quietly slept. —A. M. G.

FOR EVERY DAY
IN THE
YEAR

DAILY MEDITATION

Revs.
J. H. Jowett, D.D.
C. C. Albertson, D.D.
E. W. Caswell
and
Prof. W. H T Dau

The Blind Spot

SUNDAY, February 18. Num. 13 : 33. "And there we saw the giants, the sons of Anak, which come of the giants; and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight." That was an inventory with the main fact omitted. It was an estimate which left out God. These explorers moved in the world of things which are seen; they never sallied forth, on venturous quest, into the realm of the unseen. Indeed, to them the unseen world did not exist. Spiritual presences and forces were disregarded in their count. They were not even named. They saw nothing but physical giants, and they were dismayed.

It has been charged against William Pitt that he did not comprehend the Revolution in France. "He saw his enemy; he did not see his allies." It is a significant criticism, and its application is far wider than the field of European politics. The same defect of vision may be found among men and women who sincerely profess their concern for the Kingdom of God. They see the enemy; they do not see their allies. They see the giants, but they do not see the Lord; nor do they catch a glimpse of the mighty but secret forces which follow his command.

And this imperfect vision, this blindness to the friendly allies, breeds the mood of pessimism. We become possessed by an excessive and debilitating self-depreciation. "We are in our own sight as grasshoppers." We feel no more competent to capture the enemy's citadel than a grasshopper is able to subdue a fort. Spiritual pessimism is the parent of moral paralysis. Nothing so saps our fighting power as the apprehension that we are sure to be beaten. The will eventually softens if it breathes the air of despair. If we estimate the combatants as "grasshopper versus giant" we are undone.

And therefore it is of vital importance that we cultivate the spiritual sight which gives reality to the unseen world. There is a mystical food which is gathered from harvests that grow on heavenly fields. Our spirits are fed on spiritual things, and they find their strength in the bread of life. Heavenly manna is the food of heroes. Courage is the product of grace. Indeed, all our virtues draw their vigor from spiritual breasts. If we cut ourselves away from "the things which are not seen," we break communion with our spiritual supplies, and all our powers will become anemic; we shall lack adequate resource; and when the giant appears we shall surely faint. When the spirit faints the end has come!

But preeminently, when we see the giants, we must swiftly turn the eyes of the soul upon the Lord. If we are dismayed by a king let us fix our gaze upon the King of kings. The mighty Friend will give us confidence to meet the foe. "The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?"
J. H. J.

Open Windows

MONDAY, February 19. Dan. 6 : 10. "Now when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime." Here was a great statesman, prime minister of the empire, though an alien in Babylon. Yet he is as eminent for devotion to the religion of his fathers as he is in the service of the state. Daniel adds to his faith courage. What is faith without courage? Stones without mortar. What is courage without faith? Mortar without stones. We need a faith to stand for. Our age is not so deficient in courage as in faith, however much we need both.

Daniel had a faith worth standing for. So have we. He had inherited it. So have we inherited ours. He had confirmed it by experience. So may we. God may be more real to us than gleaming palace or hanging garden. God is at the heart of the faith of all great souls, Moses, David, Daniel, Paul, Augustine, Wesley, Moody. Daniel seems to have been very reckless regarding his own life. His motto was no miserable "Safety first." It was rather, "Salvation first." "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own life?" It is a great thing in any man's life when he resolves that religion shall be his vocation. Daniel made religion his calling. Only incidentally was he the servant of the earthly king. The judgment of God, in Daniel's opinion, overruled all earthly judgments. He must be true to himself. The loss of self-respect is life's supreme tragedy. If Daniel's windows had not been open, it might have been harder for him to pray. Observe, "his windows being open." Prayer was the habit of his life.
C. C. A.

Jehovah's Answer

TUESDAY, February 20. Hab. 2 : 14. "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." There have been times when the true religion seemed to be on the point of becoming extinct. Such were the times of Habakkuk. At the head of victorious armies Nebuchadnezzar, the proud monarch of Babylon, was marching triumphantly through Asia into Africa. The power of Egypt fell before him. Tyre, the seagirt metropolis of the merchant aristocrats of the world, was razed to the ground. Jerusalem, the holy city, had to surrender to him. It seemed the hour of triumph for God-defying infidelity and overbearing tyranny. Paganism was about to cover the earth. At this moment the Hebrew seer mounts the watchtower, to inquire of Jehovah what he shall answer to those who have challenged the truth of his preaching, namely, that Jehovah, not the Babylonian world-conqueror, will prevail. This is Jehovah's answer: "No structure reared as a challenge to the true God and his church will abide." All labor without God, and against him, is "weariness for very vanity." The King of Heaven thwarts the vaulting ambition of the kings of the earth. A tide is rising, unseen by scoffers, that is advancing silently, steadily; the truth of God's revelation is creeping into the lands like an incoming flood. No monarch's might, no warriors' host, can stem it. Men are learning the truth more quickly and embrace it more fervently, just as it seems to be slipping from them. The mighty schemes of potentates will be long forgotten, when men shall still be speaking of the glory of God, and the Cross of Christ will be seen towering over the fabric of men's ambitions that lies buried beneath the wreck of time.
W. H. T. D.

Zest in Service

WEDNESDAY, February 21. Neh. 8 : 10. "The joy of the Lord is your strength." While the young Christian takes pleasure in the innocent amusements of life, working off his excess of physical animation, the older he grows the more he sees that the higher type of enjoyment is found in the joy of the Lord. He delights in the law of the Lord, in the songs of Zion, in the fellowships of the saints. He is glad when the hour comes for worship in the house of God. He now lives on a higher plane than that of mere physical pleasures. He finds that he has mental and spiritual appetites of a higher order. Work now becomes play. In his communing with nature, like Franklin drawing the lightning from the clouds, his soul is overwhelmed with the joy of discovery.

Work becomes play when one is absorbed in a mighty purpose. The poet's pleasure is in giving expression to the music in his heart. The preacher's joy is when he can touch other hearts with the flame that is burning in his soul. Thinking God's thoughts after him and feeling God's love reproduced in our own manhood, are enough to fill an angel's being with sublime rapture and enthusiasm. God in history, God in nature, God in human hearts, are the fountains of deepest joy, highest pleasure and widest happiness. Mere recreations and momentary amusements should be to rest the soul and body, that higher flights may be attained.
E. W. C.

Beauty for Ashes

THURSDAY, February 22. I Cor. 15 : 36. "That which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die." This is the law of the harvest; peace lies at the end of struggle, life is purchased at the cost of death. Some things must die in order that other things may live. Our forests are rooted in the dead vegetation of unnumbered yesterdays. "That a rose may breathe its breath, something must die."

A great English reformer, disappointed at the slow progress of a certain movement in which he was deeply interested, inquired, "What more does this cause demand in order that it may move forward?" One who knew the law of the harvest replied, "All that is lacking now is somebody's life-blood." The president of a Christian college in China recently spent a year in America visiting the churches, and sums up his observation of religious conditions here thus: "I fail to hear the sacrificial note." The rich young ruler who came to Jesus was unwilling to strike the sacrificial note, and hence the music of his life lacked harmony. As one can be neither a scholar, an artist nor an athlete without the sacrificial spirit, is it not evident that the Christian life demands not less than these? Christianity has no doctrine of sacrifice for the sake of sacrifice, of suffering for mere suffering's sake, but it puts in the forefront of its ethical doctrines the imperative necessity of sacrifice for the sake of character and service.

It is not by chance that these words occur in the great Resurrection Chapter. Endless life blossoms from the dust. Years ago extensive fires swept over a certain Adirondack mountain. Last fall two travelers over a mountain trail were startled at a great expanse of wild scarlet sage. Instantly there leaped to the lips of one the words of Isaiah, "Beauty for ashes." The rarest qualities of mind and spirit are possible only to those who see the truth Paul puts in these words: "That which thou sowest is not quickened unless it die."
C. C. A.

Overcoming Evil

FRIDAY, February 23. Rom. 12 : 21. "Be not overcome of evil, but overcome evil with good." In the letters of Jesus to the seven churches in Asia (Rev. 2 and 3) the Christian is represented as an "overcomer." His life is a constant warfare with elements of evil, and the life everlasting will begin for him when he receives the victor's crown. It is, accordingly, a fatal thing when the Christian becomes lukewarm in his struggle against sin, when he shirks the strife which consistent profession of the truth as it is in Jesus entails in a world which loves wickedness. By refusing to fight and permitting himself to be defeated in any moral conflict the Christian stakes his eternal reward. He should overcome, not be overcome. However, a strange method for gaining the victory is proposed for him: He must overcome evil with good. The secular governments in their efforts to enact strict justice must follow the law of retaliation. They may give bruise for bruise, and exact life for life. Also in our social relations it is sometimes salutary to make a wrongdoer take his own medicine, because that is the quickest way to make him see his fault. But the Christian is more interested in turning an evildoer into a good person than in punishing him for his evil act. The Christian will heap coals of fire on an enemy's head by deeds of kindness. Like his Master, he will not revile again when he is reviled. He will not render evil for evil, or railing for railing, but contrariwise blessing. The victories of Christian forbearance and patience in well-doing are the noblest triumphs which one man can achieve over another.
W. H. T. D.

The Universe a Temple

SATURDAY, February 24. Rev. 4 : 11. "Thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created." Christ is everywhere in nature, as well as always in the midst of the assembly of the children of God. The whole universe is sacred to him as its Author and Creator; nothing is secular. Everything he has made should be as a mirror, through which to behold him. He was in the burning bush as a purifying fire, as an illuminating light; in the rainbow as a sign of no more world floods. He is in the holy communion as a covenant of his everlasting love. He is the Vine, we are the branches, bearing fruit by union with him. He is the Water of Life to every one who thirsts, the Sun of Righteousness to all in darkness, the Tree of Life for healing.

As well as in great cathedrals and churches, we remember him and worship him in God's first temples, amid the massive cathedral groves, with spaces of broad aisles, a mosaic of flowers for a floor and overarched branches for a ceiling, while the openings between the leaves are windows admitting the golden light. With merry songsters and sighing winds for a choir, one feels worshipful where Christ has made the place of his feet glorious.

Jacob realized at Bethel, with a stone for a pillow and the ground for a resting-place, that God was there, with angels ministering unto him and a golden ladder inviting him to the skies. May we not have holy communion with Jesus everywhere, because day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge, and his written Word and his creative work are all one handiwork?
E. W. C.

OUR · EDITORIAL · FORUM

President OTTO KOENIG · Managing Editor GEORGE H. SANDISON · Secretary THEODORE WATERS

A Time for Calm Counsels

A NEW and possibly the final phase of the great war has begun. Germany's note, briefly interpreted, informs this nation that, all peace overtures having been rejected, the Teutonic Powers will now carry the war to a finish with all the weapons at their command. The struggle will be one of increased intensity, a titanic climax to the two and one-half years of fighting, and will be marked by fresh horrors on land and sea. God grant, for humanity's sake, that it may be brief!

Our government and people had cherished hopes of peace. In the spirit of equal friendship for all the nations involved, our President had made sincere efforts to bring about a basis that might lead to negotiations. These efforts are now necessarily set aside, for a time at least. By a single swift change, the war has been brought nearer to our own shores.

It is a time for calm counsels, and for the avoidance of undue agitation or excitement. In the face of such a grave crisis, partisanship must stand to the rear. There should be nothing that would arouse the passions or inflame the souls of men. Although the situation is critical, yet it need not be regarded as necessarily involving this nation in the terrific struggle. Every right-thinking American will trust the wisdom and skill of our government in Washington to pursue a policy which should keep us out of the vortex of war, if such a thing be possible.

We pray that President Wilson and the National Congress, in dealing with the new situation, may be guided by a Higher Power, and that they may be given the skill and wisdom necessary to keep the nation honorably in the paths of peace, as they have done heretofore. Our prayers will strengthen their hands and reinforce their efforts. And whatever the result may be, we believe they can depend upon the loyal and united support of the whole American people, who thus far have been led safely during these terrible years while desolating war has raged throughout the rest of the world. May God soon send the blessed sunlight of peace to end the conflict.

The Evangelistic Standard

AMONG the letters which the Christian Herald receives from evangelists throughout the country—many of them from men of large experience in soul-winning—are some that sound a very striking note in favor of a higher standard of evangelism than that which is recognized today. One of these communications is from a worker who has been through many campaigns, and who writes from a more than ordinarily extensive experience. He says that he has seen in some campaigns "a good deal that has not appealed to me, and I presume has not appealed to many thinking men. . . . We have always felt that evangelistic work, being the most intensive of spiritual effort, should be prosecuted with the utmost consecration and true humility. We have not been overzealous for great numbers for the numbers' sake, although we have made strenuous efforts to reach the largest number possible. We believe that greater emphasis should be laid on genuine spiritual results.

"Would it not be in keeping with the high-standard policy of your paper, and might it not result in great good, if you could appeal for a higher class of evangelism and a positive emphasis upon definite conversion? If a great paper like the Christian Herald, at the moment of entering into a movement to give wider publicity to evangelistic work, can at the same time undertake a campaign of uplift in evangelism, I believe the possibilities are unlimited."

We are in hearty accord with any movement that will raise the standard of evangelism. We believe that such a movement would command the cordial cooperation of every evangelistic worker, not merely for the sake of the reputation of their spirit-filled calling, but for the permanency of the work itself. So to raise the standard that it will command the confidence and respect of all who are ready to hear the Gospel, and that it may also enlist the hearty support of the churches, should be the consistent aim of every evangelist.

Such a reform as is indicated need not detract from the individuality of any evangelist. Some may excel in one way, while others find their surest road to popularity in other ways; but all should have the one definite aim: to make their very special calling so distinctive in its consecration, so wholly free from any possibility of the charge of unworthy methods and motives, that it will be lifted above reproach. It is true that Paul said he was willing to become all things to all men, if by any means he could save some; but this latitude need not imply license to offend. The calling of the evangelist is one specially ordained to reach and convince the inmost hearts of men and women, and to draw them as penitent sinners to the cross of Christ. In such a high and holy vocation there should be no jarring note, no descent below the high standard which the very nature and spirit of the work demand. It is a good sign that the evangelists themselves are conscious of the need of such an uplift.

The Christian Freedom

"THE truth shall make you free," said our Lord in the temple, to those who had believed in his message. Not with the freedom of license, but with the blessed security that guards and saves us from sin; that leads to the love of righteousness and replaces the old desire for indulgence with new and better and nobler aspirations.

When a man accepts Christ as Saviour and Guide, he passes from sin's bondage to life and freedom. He can then see clearly that the condition from which he has been released was the worst and most degrading of enslavements. He had served a tyrant who was insistent in his demands, and who was the poorest of paymasters.

This is the wonderful change that is wrought in man's status; but a transformation still more wonderful has begun in the man himself. "Where sin abounded, grace now much more abounds." The whole being feels and reflects the impulse of the new conditions, receiving strength to resist temptation until the old yoke is cast off absolutely. Those intrigues that once held an overmastering attachment are now seen in their true character, and are found repulsive and deadly. When one begins to walk in the new life, the old life ceases to attract. He becomes, in the spiritual and ultimately in the physical sense, a "new creature." And by keeping in close touch with Christ, the Christ-likeness grows with every hour of progress. It is true, the old carnal nature does not give up without a struggle, sometimes many of them; but through divine grace, the free man of salvation emerges triumphant from all such trials, having the assurance of spiritual reinforcement which never fails to come in response to the call.

"I will follow him! I will serve him all my days! He has redeemed me and given me freedom!" was the cry of a slave who had just been purchased, and her tears of love and gratitude were dropping on the precious document which attested the fact of her freedom. Can the ransomed sinner be less loyal?

A Vatican Outlook

FROM Washington comes a highly interesting statement, credited to D. A. Palmieri of the Congressional Library, a writer who is somewhat of an authority on ecclesiastical subjects. It is to the effect that the Vatican has formed plans looking to the appointment of a commission of cardinals by Pope Benedict XV, to consider the practicability of a reunion of Christianity, and incidentally of establishing friendly relations with the Anglican Church. It is further explained that a special effort will be made to establish a basis of reconciliation between the Papacy and the Russian Church, and that there will be a reinvestigation of the validity of Anglican and Episcopalian ordinations. Professor Palmieri recalls the historic fact that Leo XIII made some progress in the development of a project for reuniting Christendom. Now the reigning Pontiff, in view of the anomalous religious situation that has arisen out of the war, has apparently decided that the great opportunity has come—the supreme moment for Christianity to assert its authority—and that, as the statement credited to Dr. Palmieri explains, "It is time to renew the policy of Leo XIII, and the reestablishing of a political peace to be the first step toward renewed attempts to stop the splitting of Christianity into a great number of sects."

Briefly, the outstanding features of the project are these: (1) the bringing of the Orthodox Slavs into the Roman fold; (2) the revocation of the Bull of Leo X, declaring the Anglican Church ordinations invalid, thus paving the way to a possible reunion of that church with Rome, and (3) the promotion of the unity of the American Episcopal Church with Rome, the Vatican's hopes in that direction having been stirred by the "initiative movement" of the recent Episcopal World Conference. Beyond this, there is very little that can be regarded in the Palmieri foreshadowings as definite, although these in themselves are apparently viewed as pointing hopefully to the possibility of Rome being ultimately able to establish a link between herself and other communions.

While Rome's hopes may have at least the semblance of a foundation, as far as the distracted Slavs and certain elements in the Anglican and Episcopal Churches are concerned, we cannot accept the Palmieri suggestion seriously where it relates to anything more. The Vatican is too keen an expert in diplomacy to court failure. Should the Roman Church be represented, as it may well be, in any "Congress of Christendom" after the war—a project seriously suggested in several quarters—it need hardly be expected to venture on any scheme that would involve the integrity of Protestantism. Rather will the Vatican be content to sit on equal terms with its neighbors and unite with them, wherever it can do so, in cooperative effort for the general good of the world and the restoring of shattered civilization. On such common ground it would find welcome; but to go further than this would be too reminiscent of the old fable of the wolf and the lamb, with the latter inside.

"The Unsatisfied Rich"

OUR editorial under the above heading, printed some weeks ago, has brought out numerous suggestions of good purposes in which the rich man mentioned might find satisfaction in giving money.

That there are countless uses to which money could be put, in which it would serve better purpose than it does in the bank account of an over-rich man, goes without saying. An endless list of possible benefactions confronts the rich man. But his complaint is that, unfortunately, he neither enjoys having his money, nor does he enjoy giving it away. He is philosophical enough to realize that so long as he keeps his useless surplus to himself it at least can harm only himself, while if he gives it away it may harm many. So he remains unsatisfied.

Our suggestion, then, is that he forget his money and try giving himself. There are thousands of unfortunates within his personal reach whom his interest and sympathy will help, without possibility of injury. The great gift of the widow's mite lay in the giving of her heart.

The rich man has no right to expect to be happier than the poor man. When did wealth ever promise satisfaction to its possessor? Has not laughter ever sounded more joyous and sweet from cottage than from mansion? Neither happiness nor unhappiness is carried in the purse, full or empty. Happiness is harmony with the best in this life about us and hope in the life beyond.

He who gives to any benefaction first the interest, sympathy and helpfulness of his heart makes the richest gift he can make to others and to himself. It is in the giving of self that it is most truly blessed to give. Such giving freshens the soul into a sweet fountain. Blessings must flow from it, because it fills itself with blessings to overflowing.

The Odious Literacy Test

THE President, in vetoing the "literacy test" immigration bill, took opportunity to give good reasons for his action. While in most of the provisions of the bill he would be very glad to concur, he cannot rid himself of the conviction that the literacy test constitutes a radical change in the policy of the nation which is not justified in principle. "It is not a test of character, of quality or of personal fitness," he says, "but would operate in most cases merely as a penalty for lack of opportunity in the country from which the alien seeking admission came."

A shattered Europe will for a long time after the war have few able-bodied men to spare from tasks of restoration. Never at any period in our country's existence were restrictive measures against immigration more utterly uncalled for than now. In any case, no man is proved unfit for American citizenship by the mere fact that he is ambitious enough for his children to leave a land that neglected to give him an education.

The President raises another objection which must find quick responsive echo in every Christian heart. The "religious persecution" clause in the bill vetoed takes from the immigrant all exercise of conscience as to what constitutes religious persecution and vests that decision with our immigration officers and Secretary of Labor. Not only must such a clause be bound to involve us in official disputes with other nations, but it is a flat denial by America itself of the principle of individual religious liberty.

At best it is a badly botched-up bill. If there is reason for any such measure at all, it must at least be made over to conform to long-established and sacredly prized American principles of right and justice.

A Friend Passes On

STEPHEN MERRITT, "The Friend of the Friendless," and for nearly two generations one of the best known figures in philanthropic and Christian work in New York, passed away on January 29 at the patriarchal age of 83. He was born in New York City on March 6, 1833, his father's name also being Stephen. His father was an undertaker and desired his son to succeed him in that business, but young Merritt had other views. He entered the Brooklyn Navy Yard, where he served a three years' apprenticeship in the sail-making branch, at the close of which he was appointed to the post of warrant officer. But he soon felt the call for a religious life and entered Amenia Seminary, where he was trained for the ministry. During a vacation he found that his father's business needed his help, and he left the seminary to resume a calling to which he clung during the remainder of his long life.

He was known as "The Friend of the Friendless"

Both his parents were earnest Methodists, and long before young Stephen reached his majority he had become a member and active worker in the old Bedford Street Methodist Episcopal Church. In that church he was ordained local deacon by Bishop Scott over fifty years ago, and later local elder by Bishop Ames. Soon thereafter he went out from Bedford Street and established the Bank Street Church and somewhat later he founded its offspring, the Perry Street Church. It was about this time that the wonderful spiritual character of the young preacher began to develop. His unquestioned power in the pulpit, his familiar yet cogent form of address, his unvarying good humor, and his tremendous capacity for work brought him into demand in many places. His seven years' pastorate in Franklin Street was so successful that there were added to his charge two other Methodist churches on the East Side. From that busy field he went to Jane Street Church, where he labored for five years, and succeeded in building up from very slender foundations one of the largest Methodist congregations in New York City at that time. There were nearly 1,000 members, and during the five years' pastorate it is estimated that 10,000 confessed Christ under Mr. Merritt's ministry.

BUT his energies and his peculiar talents were of a character that could not long confine themselves to the duties of a pastorate. He longed to be out in the highways and byways and among the slums of the great city, seeking out the wanderers who rarely came to any church. He founded and established a Gospel mission on Eighth Avenue, New York, and in the spacious basement he began a new feature in Christian philanthropic work, which has since spread to many states. He was the founder of the "Travelers' Club," which was composed of the very poorest, the lowest, and the most wretched of unfortunates—men who had drained sin's cup to the dregs, and who had almost lost all hope in life. To this class Mr. Merritt extended a helping hand, giving them food, a shelter and a gospel of welcome and Godspeed combined. It was a strange sight for a visitor who dropped in at any one of these nightly reunions to see the scores of poor down-and-outs eating their bread and drinking their coffee while their host entertained them with good, sound Christian advice, or with a simple Gospel homily suited to their condition and needs. This all-night mission for the homeless he kept up at his own expense for three years. He also established missions in Little Twelfth, Roosevelt and Horatio Streets and was an active friend of missions of the same class in different parts of the country.

During all these years, and notwithstanding the many changes and developments in his spiritual work, he still retained his connection with the undertaking business which his father had established. He developed the business so that it became the best known establishment of its kind in the country. He it was who arranged and directed the funerals of General Grant, General William Jenkins Worth, and many other men of national fame. The income from his business, beyond what was necessary for the support of his home and personal necessities, was almost wholly devoted to charities without number. It was a familiar remark about Stephen Merritt that "he had the biggest heart and the openest purse of any man in New York, and no one ever appealed to him in vain." Certain it is that on repeated occasions he gave away in charity to some poor homeless tramp, or some unfortunate mother about to be dispossessed, the money he had reserved for his own household needs.

Stephen Merritt's charities, however, though often indiscriminate were in many cases attended with wonderful results. One incident, typical of many, will suffice for illustration: He was sitting at his desk one day in his undertaking office, when a figure entered which might have been the physical expression of James Whitcomb Riley's "Raggedy Man." It was a forlorn and much battered figure, grimy, unshaven, and with a hopeless, faded look that awoke Mr. Merritt's compassion. Questioning the man, he found that he had come from a nearby state. "He had been drinking and he was dirty and hungry, and all the rest"—a clean confession. There was something in the voice and attitude, however, that Merritt's quick perception noted.

"Yes, you have come down a good deal, I suppose; every one does who works for the devil, and hits the booze. I don't know that I ought to trust you; but I am going to do it for the sake of Him who did a great deal more for me. Here's $5. Now, you get out and get a bath, a shave, a clean shirt, and get your shoes shined, and brush up, and then come back and let me see you, and I'll see what we can do."

The man, mystified and ashamed, took the money without a word, and with a nod, shuffled out of the door.

About three o'clock the same afternoon Mr. Merritt, still at his desk, was accosted by some one standing in the doorway. He looked up.

"Well," he asked, "what can I do for you?" probably anticipating some business order.

"I've come back as I said I would."

"You've come back?" said Merritt. "Well, who are you?"

"Well," said the man, "you told me to call again."

"I know; I've lots of people calling. Who are you? What's your name?"

"Well, I can't give it to you."

Merritt stepped nearer and looked. He said, pointing his finger at the man, "Are you the bum that came here this forenoon, and that I gave a $5 bill to?"

"I am the same bum," said the man, with his eyes filling with tears.

"God be praised!" cried Mr. Merritt, while his eyes twinkled with delight, and a little prayer of gratitude went up from his lips.

There was a quiet talk. He found he had taken the first step in what proved to be a great adventure. He financed the man, sent him on to his wife and children, and from that day forward the life of the friendless, homeless, penniless castaway was transformed. He became one of the stanchest friends Stephen Merritt ever had. He became famous in the temperance lecture field, traveled over the globe in the cause of temperance and Christianity, and his name today is well known on two continents.

Mr. Merritt was one of the warmest friends of the Bowery Mission. For nearly twenty years he devoted a considerable part of his leisure time evenings to speaking to the derelicts and giving them a cheering message of hope and encouragement. He was unanimously chosen as the dean of the mission, and no more popular or beloved speaker ever set foot on its platform. He was also a warm friend of the Christian Herald Children's Home, of which he was the honorary chaplain, and children and grown-ups listened with equal enjoyment to his familiar addresses from the platform of the little stone chapel. He was the father-in-law of the late Dr. Louis Klopsch, the former proprietor of the Christian Herald, and between the two there was a very strong bond of Christian unity, which steadily increased as the years went by.

WITH advancing age and its attendant infirmities, Mr. Merritt drew more and more from the active life he had led so long. Increasing blindness was added to his discomforts; yet his strong Christian faith and sunny optimism never left him. Three years ago, on the occasion of his eightieth birthday, in receiving the greetings of friends and relatives, he said: "I haven't a single worry, a doubt, a fear or a pain. I have lost my eyesight, but, thank God, I have not lost my faith, and I am probably today the happiest man on Manhattan Island." Many times during these closing years he reiterated his Christian confidence and his willingness to go, "trusting on the divine mercy and with full assurance of salvation."

The funeral services took place on January 31, at 223 Eighth Avenue, near Twenty-first Street, New York, and were largely attended. Several organizations of which he was a member were represented in the gathering, and there were present also many who had known and loved him long, and had been associated with him in Christian work. The services were conducted by Rev. John G. Hallimond, superintendent of the Bowery Mission, and Rev. A. B. Simpson, founder of the Christian Alliance, both of whom paid glowing tributes to the veteran Christian. Rev. Doctors Marshall and Holla also spoke. It was a most impressive occasion, and many in the audience were melted to tears.

Stephen Merritt's Christian life has had a far-reaching influence. Through his kindly ministrations, his whole-souled benevolence, his labors in many fields, and especially among the great multitude of down-and-outs, he was instrumental in winning many to better lives. Not only the men of the Bowery Mission and the Bread Line, but those whom he encountered in his life-long ministry in churches, camp meetings and other places, will cherish in loving remembrance his earnestness, his energy, his human, loving-kindness, his sincere Christian spirit and his readiness to help the afflicted and distressed. He was one of whom it can be truly said that "the world was better for his having lived in it."

Flowers of Self Denial

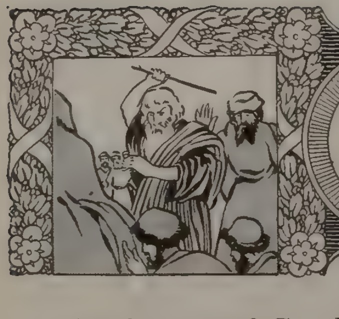
ONE of the prettiest sights in San Francisco is the flower stands along Kearny Street in front of the Chronicle Building. There must be ten or fifteen of them in a row. I look down on this bright sight every day from my window across Market Street in the Hearst Building. The variety of flowers may change with the seasons, but the display is there three hundred and sixty-five days in the year. It's a beauty spot, and the vendors tantalize you by offering such pretentious bargains that you wonder if they are real.

One day a youth poked at me a bunch of roses with appropriate garnishings of green. I was not thinking of flowers, but the cluster he posed in front of me, with the further information "only 25 cents," made the sale. I was on my way home at the time, and twenty minutes later these flowers had taken the place of others that had wilted, and were adorning our living-rooms. It was the end of the third day before there was the slightest sign of wilting, and in the meantime nine roses had opened their graceful petals as if to say, "Enjoy the fulness of my flower, for I have about fulfilled the mission for which I was created." For three days we did enjoy their beauty, their color, their cheerfulness and their fragrance. And all for the price of two drinks.

Suppose every man who buys two drinks of whisky every day were to spend the price of two drinks in flowers —what a revelation would follow! The streets would soon be lined with flower stands. Our tastes would change. In climates where flowers do not prosper the year round, great greenhouses would be established, for where there is a demand there is sure to follow the necessary supply. And just think what the price of two drinks of whisky a day, in flowers, would do for the home. To start with, there would be two drinks less for the home folks to contend with, and the fragrance of roses to supplant the odor of whisky. Then perhaps, as we grow to love more of nature and less of alcohol, we might find the good fellow who used to mix the drinks selling flowers and studying ways and means of making them more beautiful and more lasting. He would certainly have reason to be proud when he knew he had a hand in sending father home to mother and daughter with a big bunch of fragrant roses instead of a "bun."

And what a saving would be effected! The whisky money would fill every room in the home with flowers. Not only would money be saved, but time. Did you ever stop to consider how much time is consumed along with whisky? It requires lots of time, and men who are studious in their whisky habits have little time for home or anything else. With the flower habit taking the place of the drink habit, father would soon be cultivating flowers all over the lot with time to burn, and time to do the many other things he had always hoped to do "when he got time." Then, since we are all human, the man who used to dispense the drinks would come to and wonder how, for years, he had taken the coin that should have gone to happiness, to cheerfulness,—to flowers, and dropping it in the till, ring a bell, as much as to say, "I am counting you out."

Joseph R. Kathrens.



SECOND BIBLE PICTURE STUDY

"A Message of Good News"

THIS is the title of an illustrated Prospectus which tells about our novel and exceedingly popular educational recreation—the Second Bible Picture Study. We want every reader to send for a copy of this Prospectus and to become acquainted with a diversion of fascinating interest to all members of the household, one which will prove of remarkable value in the self-improvement of every participant.

Briefly explained, this is the plan of the Bible Picture Study:

In the Christian Herald we are printing one or more pictures each issue, without titles and without any text to indicate what the illustrations might or do represent.

We ask you to participate in the pleasurable and stimulating exercise of selecting Bible verses that best fit these pictures.

There are to be sixty pictures in all. If you are a regular subscriber of the Christian Herald, you will naturally receive the entire series in our publication itself. In becoming a participant after the commencement of the series, you are fully protected, as we will provide you with all the pictures that have been previously published, as explained in our offers.

The Rules governing the Bible Picture Study were published in the January 17th issue of the Christian Herald. They will also be sent upon request. The enjoyment of this pastime is open to all, including you.

Surprises and Delights

IF it were a requirement that the entire two Testaments be searched, this would be rather a task, for there are over 31,101 verses in the Bible; so we have simplified our Bible Picture Study by selecting only about two thousand verses, and have collected these within one compact little book, which we have given the title "Pearls from the Bible."

To simplify the recording of the verses, we have prepared a special pamphlet, which we call the "Answer Book." "Pearls from the Bible" and the "Answer Book" (comprising the Outfit for conveniently participating) can be obtained as explained in our offers. When requested to do so, we will send all the pictures published previous to the receipt of an order for the outfit.

1,000 Cash Rewards

Apart from the great value that every participant will receive in mental benefit of various kinds, there will be awarded over $5,000.00 in cash rewards to the one thousand participants who submit the greatest number of best answers.

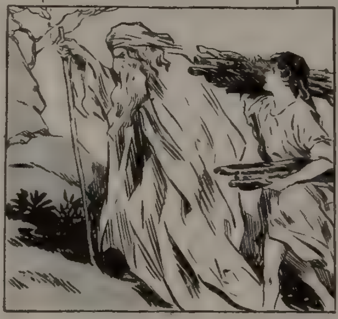
The Bible Picture Study has the indorsement of a host of clergymen, Sunday school superintendents and teachers, educators, editors, and others who are well qualified to judge of its merits.

You can compete without expense, as outlined in the Rules, which are free on request.

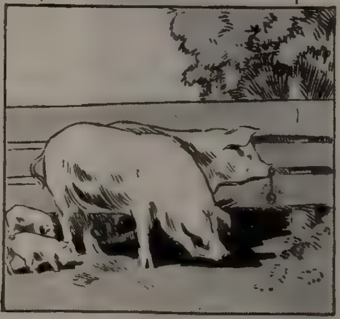
THE FIRST 10 PICTURES

Eight of the pictures in the Second Bible Picture Study have been previously published in the Christian Herald. Pictures Nos. 9 and 10 appear for the first time below.

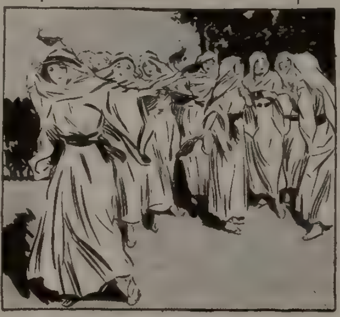
Picture No. 1



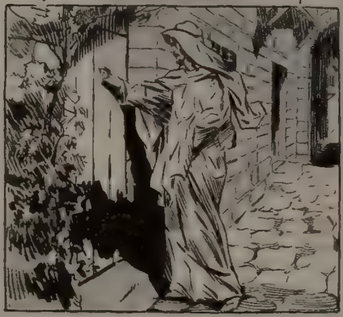
Picture No. 2



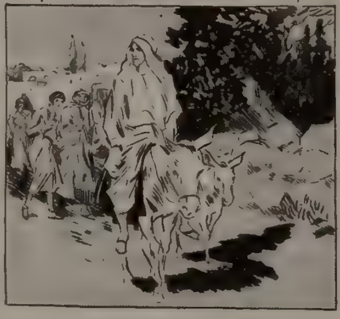
Picture No. 3



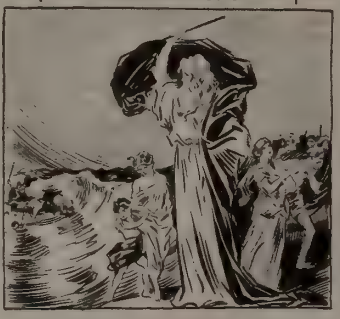
Picture No. 4



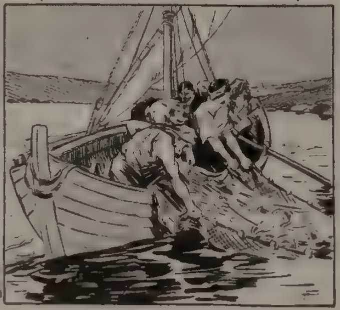
Picture No. 5



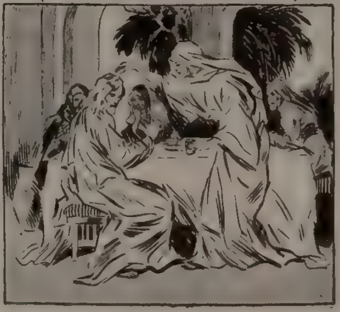
Picture No. 6



Picture No. 7



Picture No. 8



Two Ways to Enter

IF you will help us introduce the Christian Herald in families where it is not now read, by inducing some one who is not now a reader to subscribe for the Christian Herald for six months at $1.00, we will present you with a complete Bible Picture Study Outfit.

As a present reader of the Christian Herald, do you find it brings you help in your spiritual life? Does it give you desirable news of current events? Are you entertained and informed by its articles and pictures? Is your home happier because the Christian Herald comes into it? In short, does the Christian Herald bring a blessing into your life each week?

Then in inducing a friend to take the Christian Herald you are merely asking him or her to receive a weekly visitor who brings a blessing. It is not a difficult matter for one who greatly enjoys a magazine to induce a friend to try it. And by doing so in this case consider what you will gain in addition to the satisfaction of doing your friend a good turn.

By that one act of kindness you secure for yourself the Bible Study Outfit, which will mean everything to you in connection with the Second Bible Picture Study. We do not hesitate to recommend to you that, failing to secure a new subscription, you give the Christian Herald for six months to a relative or friend. That will cost you only a dollar. For that dollar you will send the Christian Herald into a friend's home, who will learn about the Second Bible Picture Study, and you will yourself receive the Bible Study Outfit.

You could scarcely do a greater kindness to some young person in whom you are interested than to make this gift of a six months' subscription to the Christian Herald. For do not forget that we have overwhelming evidence in the letters received in connection with the First Bible Picture Study that it produces an interest in the Bible that long outlasts the Picture Study itself.

Outfit With Renewal

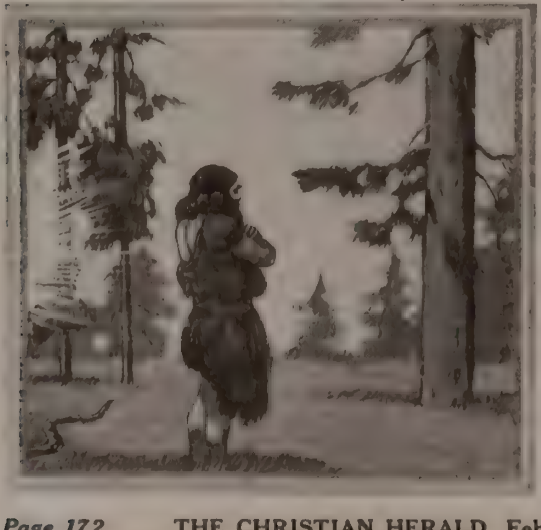
With a renewal of your own subscription, you may obtain a Bible Picture Study Outfit at a total cost of $2.35. If you wish to order other magazines with your renewal, tell us what magazines you desire and we will advise you the cost.

Any one who is not now a subscriber to the Christian Herald can also obtain the complete Outfit and a year's subscription at a cost of $2.35.

A New Bible Compilation

"Pearls from the Bible" is a new compilation of Bible verses. It is not simply a collection of Bible verses, as was the book issued in the former Study, but a careful grouping of promises precepts and prophecies. "Gems from the Bible" is useless in this Second Bible Picture Study. "Pearls from the Bible" is the only compilation of the 2,000 Bible verses from which participants will make their selections in the Second Bible Picture Study.

Picture No. 9



Bible Picture Study Coupon

CHRISTIAN HERALD,
Bible House, New York

Gentlemen: For the enclosed $.......send the Christian Herald for $\substack{6 \text{ months} \\ 1 \text{ year}}$ to

Name ....

Address ....

....

Send the Bible Picture Study Outfit to

Name ....

Address ....

....

Feb. 14, 1917

Picture No. 10

THE BIBLE and NEWSPAPER

Conducted by FERDINAND C. IGLEHART D.D.

Christ in Hospital Vestibule

A RICH man in New York City was afflicted with a grievous malady which was taking his life. Until comparatively recent years those suffering with his trouble were left to die without remedy. One of the leading operating surgeons of New York only the other day, on being asked what success he had in operations for this particular disease, answered, "I never try it. A man has to kill twelve men to learn how to perform that operation, and I have never been able to take the risk." The patient was taken to Baltimore, where he was successfully operated upon, not only giving him relief from excruciating agony, but prolonging life and giving health. So grateful was the man for his recovery that he erected a large building in the grounds of the hospital for the treatment of those suffering the affliction of which he had been cured. In the rotunda into which the door of the main building opens is a colossal figure of Christ in the act of easing pain and curing the sick. How precious the Saviour is to press the sorrowing, suffering, crying children of men to his bosom of love and give them rest! This statue of Christ in the Brady Building at Johns Hopkins Hospital has cut into its stone base these words: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." (Matt. 11 : 28.)

Condemns America's Waste

SENATOR McCUMBER of North Dakota in a speech in the United States Senate the other day bitterly denounced the profligacy and extravagance of the American people in pursuing pleasure. The high cost of living, he said, was largely due to American extravagance. He cited figures to show that the people of this country spend $13,000,000,000 annually for liquor, tobacco, and amusements. He said: "This revelry in extravagant habits, this unquenchable demand for amusements, for continuous mental intoxicants, is undermining the sturdiness of our younger generation. The American people seem obsessed with the idea that the main thing in life is amusement, play, entertainment." There may be more truth than the public is willing to admit in Senator McCumber's contention. We have a play side of our nature which has to be met with play, a work side which requires relaxation and entertainment. But it is likely that too much money and time are spent on pleasure and play in proportion than there should be, and that the senator's warning should be heeded, lest as a nation we become "Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God." (II Tim. 3 : 4.)

Violate Sabbath for Pay

THE papers make reference to a bill introduced into one of the state legislatures allowing moving picture and theater shows to open on Sundays with the provision that one-half of the receipts be given to the state. One might hope that the item was a joke penned by the "funny man" on the paper. It would be bad enough to sell God's day to companies for the money there is in it, but for a state to coldly arrange to divide the greed-money would be meaner still. Little by little the greed of men and their fondness for this world are trying to steal away from God the day that belongs to him. And the state that would become a partner in that theft for a money bribe would deserve public pity and contempt. It might be well for legislatures now in session to have this commandment in mind: "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." (Ex. 20 : 8.)

Pending Prohibition Bills

THE decision of the Supreme Court of the United States upholding the Webb-Kenyon Law has emboldened the states already dry to enact more stringent laws, and wet states with a chance to ask for prohibition. A bill has just been introduced into the Utah legislature. It contains the provisions of all ordinary prohibition laws, and adds ironclad restrictions of its own. Governor Simon Bamberger said in the last campaign that if the legislature passed a prohibitory bill he would sign it. But he has taken the initiative and asked for the passage of the drastic bill, and says that it is the most urgent piece of legislation to be considered. It is about certain to become a law, and Utah will become the twenty-fourth dry state. Florida is likely to be the twenty-fifth. Indiana, however, is in the race with a bill for statutory prohibition offered by the Anti-Saloon League and Dry Federation, with Governor Goodrich in the chair, elected on a dry platform behind the bill. Wyoming is pretty certain to pass a bill submitting to a vote of the people the question of constitutional prohibition, which, with the immense women's vote, is expected to take the state into the dry column. Governor E. C. DeBaca of New Mexico in his message recommended the passing of a bill handing the question of constitutional prohibition for the state to a vote of the people. Several other states are just about ready to take similar action. The legislatures in the states forbidding the liquor traffic are helping to answer this part of our Lord's prayer: "Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil." (Matt. 6 : 13.)

Old Man Plays Historic Organ

ALANSON H REED, seventy-five years old, of Wellesley Hills, Mass., played the old Oliver Holden pipe organ in the Old State House, Boston, Mass. The old organ was owned by Oliver Holden, a singer and composer, of Charlestown, Mass., and was presented to the Massachusetts Historical Society by Mrs Fannie A. Tyler, a descendant of Mr. Holden. Mr. Reed played the 125-year-old organ on Christmas Day. The frame on the left panel of the organ contains the words and music of one of Holden's songs, "Mount Vernon," sung at the Old South Church, Boston, January 9, 1800, at funeral services for George Washington. The bell to the right was cast in England in 1744 for the Courthouse on Queen (now Court) Street, Boston, erected about 1773 and demolished in 1834. The bell is loaned by the city of Boston. What a story the bell could tell, if its tongue could only speak, about the great and good men who founded the government of the United States, and of their services and sacrifices to establish a free government on this Western continent! What a story the organ could tell, if its pipes were human tongues, of the unselfish and patriotic citizens who came upon the stage at Washington's death, and the faithful generations that gave practical direction and prosperity to our institutions! How the grand old organ voiced the heart and melody of those who worshiped the God of the nation as well as of individual believers! "Praise him with stringed instruments and organs." (Ps. 150 : 4.)

Costly Living and Preachers

THE high cost of living has hit the salaried people hard. Food, clothing, fuel and other necessaries of life have gone up from twenty-five to sixty per cent. on the average, and the salary as a rule has been stationary, or even reduced. Over three-fourths of the people of the nation have to live on salaries fixed as a rule by the people paying them. The public scarcely realizes what a hardship the average family has to keep the expenses within the income these days of soaring prices. The stroke falls especially hard on the ministers and their families. As a rule they have the smallest salaries of any profession, and some have less than the day laborer and servant in the millionaire's home. It is because the minister and his wife are such economists and so industrious that their families are so well fed, clothed, and educated. It is scarcely conceivable that any church would think of reducing the minister's salary at this time. The cruelty and hardship of such a course would probably be taken out of the spiritual thrift of the charge, and held as a witness against those responsible for it at the accounting of the last day. This is the time to raise the preachers' salaries. The old $1,000, $2,000, $3,000 or $5,000 salary will only buy one-half or two-thirds as much of a living as it did a little while ago. If the church will have faith in God and the people, and move the minister's salary up to where it justly belongs, its own self-respect will be maintained, it will be happy in the joy it will bring to the parsonage, and the heavenly Father will smile on such treatment of his ministering servant. Wall Street, which has had a hilariously successful year, set the pace of the new year by a gift of ten to one hundred per cent. of the annual salary. Many bankers, big business establishments, railroads and other corporations did the same. These are the exceptions. Most of the eighty per cent. of the toilers of the nation, those who live on salaries, have not had them raised. Paul, after quoting from the Mosaic law requiring the proper support of the ministers of the old dispensation, says: "Even so hath the Lord ordained that they which preach the Gospel should live of the Gospel." (I Cor. 9 : 14.)

Foxes Pester Farmers

WHEN Mrs. William Granneis of Stormville, Putnam County, New York, went into her cellar to get a bucket of coal the other morning she was startled at the crashing of glass. Certain that a burglar was there she ran up the steps screaming for help. Her husband soon appeared on the scene with a revolver. The intruder made a dash for liberty. It was not a man, but a fox. The husband shot the fox, but only wounded him. Though there were blood traces in the snow, they did not get him. In reaching for some young chickens he knocked over a glass jar of preserves. That incident happened only thirty miles from New York City in the Hudson River region. Mrs. Bertrand Smith of Patterson, in the same Putnam County, heard her pet cat crying in the yard. She saw a good-sized fox choking it to death. She ran to the rescue. Instead of beating a retreat as would be expected, the fox jumped at Mrs. Smith and bit her. Christ used the fox as the symbol of a sneak in this reference to Herod: "Go ye and tell that fox, Behold, I cast out devils, and I do cures today and tomorrow, and the third day I shall be perfected." (Luke 13 : 32.)

Electricity Lights Cave

THOSE who in the past have visited Mammoth Cave in Kentucky, and have come away impressed with its magnitude and grandeur, got only an imperfect view of the great natural wonder because the torches and smoking lamps of the guides were so dim and flickering. An electric-lighting plant has recently been installed in the cave, and adds immeasurably to the wonder of the scenery. The effect of the new light on the stalagmites and stalactites is beautiful in the highest degree, throwing them out in bold relief against the dark background of the cave. There is everything in the light that is cast on scenes and subjects. Their beauty and greatness do not appear until there is sufficient light to reveal them. No view of nature, literature, history, government or religion is adequate without the aid of divine light upon it. Christ, who is the fountain of light and love, is necessary to the revelation and interpretation of visions of earth and heaven. "In him was life; and the life was the light of men." (John 1 : 4.)

HUDSON SUPER SIX

How Hudson Super-Six Saved the Six

A Review of the Crisis in Motordom

Only engineers knew it, but a year ago a crisis impended in Motordom. The lightweight Six—long the favorite type—was waning in popularity. The trend was towards Eights and Twelves. It seemed for a time that certain limitations would force the Six out of the field. Note how the Super-Six reversed that condition.

For years the Light Six was the leading type. Hudson was its foremost exponent.

It was so much smoother than former types that enthusiasts called it finality.

But it never fulfilled expectations. It nowhere near ended vibration. It won hardly a record. About every performance record that counted—save a few won by V-types—was still held by Fours.

Multi-Cylinders Came

At that juncture Hudson engineers—and numerous others—began to build V-type motors. That is, two Fours or two Sixes so set at angles as combat the Six limitations.

The trouble, remember, with all types yet developed, lay in excessive vibration. That caused friction and wear. It lessened power and endurance. The object of the new types—the Eights and Twelves—was to minimize that waste.

Numerous upper-grade cars adopted them. The Hudson shop had its V-types perfected. For a time it seemed that the fate of the Six was sealed.

Then Came the Super-Six

But early in 1915 Hudson engineers discovered the cause of motor vibration. And they set out to remedy it in a new, mathematical way.

In June they applied for a patent. In December the patent was granted. It gave Hudson control of a basic invention which solved the problems better than anyone had dreamed.

It added 80 per cent to the efficiency of the best Six ever built. That is, to its power and endurance. It gave the new Six—the Super-Six—a supremacy too great to be questioned.

The First Year's Results

The Hudson Super-Six has been on the market a year now. It has won all worth-while records—that is, records made with a stock motor. In speed, power and endurance, in hill-climbing and quick acceleration, it has out-performed all other types. It won the chief record—the 24-hour record—by a margin of 52 per cent.

It twice broke all endurance records in a round trip from San Francisco to New York. It ran 7000 miles at over 80 miles an hour without showing any wear on the bearings.

It has gained the supreme place in Motordom. It has come to out-sell any other front-rank car. It is now out-performing all rival cars for 25,000 owners.

Today every man who seeks the best in a fine car must choose the Hudson Super-Six.

Not Like Other Sixes

But don't confuse the Super-Six with Sixes of the old type. The Super-Six is a unique type—a basic invention, controlled by Hudson patents. It differs from other Sixes more than Eights or Twelves do.

Numerous makers abandoned the V-types because of the Super-Six. The added cylinders seemed useless additions when the Super-Six so excelled.

But no other Six is like the Super-Six. Our patents prevent approach.

A New Gasoline Saver

This year we add to the Super-Six another exclusive advantage. It is a gasoline saver, remarkably effective. At a nominal cost it can be added to any Hudson Super-Six.

And our latest bodies, in every style, are masterpiece productions. They are built to match the Super-Six supremacy.

Phaeton, 7-passenger,	$1650	Limousine............	$2925
Roadster, 2-passenger,	1650	Town Car............	2925
Cabriolet, 3-passenger,	1950	Town Car Landaulet...	3025
Touring Sedan........	2175	Limousine Landaulet..	3025

(All Prices f. o. b. Detroit)

HUDSON MOTOR CAR COMPANY, DETROIT, MICHIGAN

HUDSON SUPER-SIX

Starting Something

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER, Jr.

"I DON'T like that girl!" The second vice-president of the club spoke positively. "I don't like that girl!"

"Why don't you like her?" questioned the third vice-president. Her eyes, as she spoke, followed a brisk, carefully dressed little figure as it hurried busily across the floor. "She seems pleasant and attractive. She dresses rather well. She knows what she's talking about—usually. Why don't you like her?"

The second vice-president, if she hadn't been a very charming lady, might have snorted. As it was, she sighed—in an annoyed way.

"I don't like her," she answered, "because she is never satisfied with anything that's customary. She's always starting something!" So spoke the second vice-president. And the conversation was dropped.

The girl in question was a friend of mine—had been a friend of mine ever since our eyes had met and we had smiled, understandingly, over the unconscious bit of humor in an over-zealous member's speech. She had been my friend ever since we had walked home through the twilight and she had confided hopes and plans and ambitions to me. The hopes and plans and ambitions had not been the shy ones that usually fill the mind of a young girl. There had been nothing shy about them. They had been vivid, aggressive, defiantly courageous. She had been my friend ever since she organized a brilliant scheme for increasing the membership of the club. The scheme had never materialized, for the members were loath to consent to an innovation, but it had been so clever that it compelled my attention and approval. Yes, the second vice-president had spoken truly. The girl was always starting something. And therein lay her greatest charm—for me.

ONCE upon a time there was a kingdom. It was a pleasant little kingdom, with vast natural resources—mines, and green fields, and great rivers, and luxuriant forests. There were many rich people—the owners of great estates—who lived in the country, and lived well—for they controlled the mines and the forests and the water power of the rivers. What if, on the dark city streets, there were folk who died for the want of warmth and clothing and food? That sort of thing happens in every country. It is to be expected that wealth and poverty will brush elbows at the place where the roads cross!

There had been a long line of kings who had governed the country. They had been placid, easy-going kings—some, perhaps, a trifle more efficient than others—but, on the whole, not very different. Some giant cook might have taken a huge cookie-cutter labeled "ruler" and cut them out of the same dough—marked "stuff o' kings." They were as much alike as that.

The country prospered, not in great leaps—perhaps very slowly. The rich people became a bit richer than their fathers had been before them, and the poor people . . . well, the poor people didn't become much poorer. They couldn't! And when one king closed his eyes in the long sleep that we, who are very much civilized, call death, his oldest son would take the heavy golden scepter in his hand and ascend the throne and rule as his father and his grandfather and his great-grandfather had ruled. We of the present day might have called the reigning kings commonplace. We might have spoken of them, individually, as "bromides." But the people of the country were satisfied. You see, they didn't know any better. People who don't know any better are usually satisfied, but it's a sluggish kind of satisfaction.

And then one day the bells rang out to announce the birth of the reigning king's first son. The bells had often, in years past, rung out for the same purpose, and the people didn't think anything of it. They didn't know that, with the arrival of the little red-faced, squalling baby, a new era was dawning.

When the child was some two years old he began to be different. He showed, first of all, that he didn't want to play with the royal toys that countless generations of little princes had played with. He showed a desire to roam out of the royal nursery that had always been large enough for the others. He cried when they wouldn't allow him to make friends with the ragged little street children.

When the prince was fifteen he was conceded by his guardians to be very difficult. He wanted to study economic conditions instead of Latin. He was more interested in poverty than in Greek pottery. His tutors shook their heads, and sighed.

When the prince was in his early twenties the king, quite suddenly, died. And the golden scepter was placed in the hands of his son who, as a boy, had been called difficult and different.

When the prince became king he did not settle into the rut that the other kings had settled into. He was bubbling over with ideas, plans, hopes. He was filled with enthusiasm. He went into the dingy side streets and relieved misery; he started missions and free-food bureaus. He listened to the voice of his people and answered it. And the country prospered. The rich people didn't grow poorer, and the poor people certainly grew richer.

And yet they criticized him harshly. Even some of the poor people, whom he had helped, criticized him. They could not deny that he had done a great work, but—

"It's lack of precedent," they probably said. "His father and grandfather didn't do any of the things that he did, and the country got along. He'd be the best king we ever had if he wasn't always starting something!"

PRECEDENT is the most annoyingly persistent word in the world. Custom, the custom of generations, is not easily shaken off. People doing something new—even though it is a fine thing—are quite sure to have their efforts criticized and their methods picked to pieces. As a New York newspaper said, editorially, a few days ago, "The files of the anti-Lincoln papers are not in our office. But it is a safe guess that dozens of editorials appeared between 1860 and 1863, to the effect that slaveholding, which was good enough for Washington and Jefferson, ought to be good enough for their followers."

Well, precedent is a fine thing, in a way. It's doubtless a fairly safe thing. But it isn't the progressive thing. And the people who start things, though sometimes they do not start successful things, are at least progressive. The girl, even though she was criticized by conservative vice-presidents, was progressive. The king, even though his subjects—the ones that he had worked over and wept over—did not understand his methods, was progressive too.

WE who sit at home by the fire—we who have lived easily, looking in on life from the outside—are very apt to speak, not always pleasantly, about the folk who are always starting things. "Why," we say, "don't they let well enough alone!"

Let's stop and consider what would have happened if Columbus hadn't sailed across the ocean, because nobody ever had sailed across the ocean. He started something. Let's think of other people who started things. They were criticized at the time.

And then let's think of the people who are being criticized now, because they are out of the rut—because they are starting things! And let's wonder what other people will think of them—a hundred years from now—when they are in the history book, and we . . .

After all, the folk who start something are the ones who keep the world interested, and young, and progressive.

The oil of appreciation will keep the wheels of love running smoothly to old age.

Opening Up New Gospel Fields

By REV. Z. C. BEALS, Hochow, China

WE had been home on furlough because of Mrs. Beals's health. A year ago, however, her health improving, we returned to China, our chosen field of work.

We had labored for over twenty years in Wuhu, a treaty port, three hundred miles up the Yangtse; but, as a lady at home had given us a special sum for a new station, we took two months in selecting a strategic location as a home base. We decided upon Hochow, a city thirty miles north of Wuhu, and at the mouth of a small river that flows into the Yangtze past Hanshan, another city twenty miles still farther inland. We rented a building for a chapel on April 1, and bought land for a home soon after. While our home was building we had preaching in the chapel and on the streets and villages. Mr. Sen, our evangelist, worked hard, as did our three colporteurs. We soon had a large class of inquirers, and by July 1 we had over forty.

Mrs. Beals's strength did not return fully, and we found we could not go to Kuling, as we had hoped, and through the hot weather she got weaker, until August 15, when her heart gave out. Just before she died she turned to us and said, "Hark!" and in a few moments more she said, "He is coming," and was gone. A noble life, with a record of twenty-five years of service in China, awaits the glad day. About all the foreigners in Wuhu and about two hundred Chinese came to the funeral.

As the coffin was being lowered into the grave a band of Chinese young ladies sang sweetly, "Asleep in Jesus, Blessed Sleep." The preacher read the English burial service, then announced Mrs. Beals's favorite hymn, "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name," and then spoke in Chinese of Mrs. Beals's love and service, and urged them to pick up her mantle of love and power and go forth to their own people.

Now I am alone in Hochow, yet not alone, as He is with me. The work is most interesting and hopeful. On October 12 we examined the candidates for baptism, and found fifteen who had given up idolatry and were accepting the true God. That afternoon we had the glorious privilege of baptizing them. The first one to come forward was a man of seventy-five years. His long, flowing white beard made him look like a patriarch or typical Chinese sage. He was so glad he had heard about salvation before it was too late. It is a joy to hear him pray and testify. If no one else were saved here I would feel repaid for all trials and losses; but there are others, just as earnest, who are also rejoicing in this salvation, and thirty-five inquirers who are now preparing for baptism. Seven months ago these were in heathen darkness and never heard of Christ, and now at least thirty are truly saved, and the work is only just begun.

We are reorganizing our work at Hanshan. A lady gave $500 for this city, and it buys land and puts up a church that will hold three hundred people. We are also working three other towns, ten miles farther on. Some years ago a reader of the Christian Herald sent me $100 for a day school at Chaohsien, to be called the Norris School. Six boys who passed through that school are now evangelists, and three colporteurs. Think you not that the $100 has brought that friend a big income?

We are hoping and planning on building a church here at Hochow that will accommodate seven hundred persons. The Chinese today are ready for the Gospel. Never in all my twenty-five years' experience have I found them so willing to hear and receive.

Hochow was a center of the great 1911 flood. We gave relief out for months. This year the farmers are prosperous and thankful to the Christian Herald and the Red Cross Society for coming at the time of their distress. That help really saved all this part from starvation. Hundreds of orphans were saved, many of whom the Christian Herald is yet supporting. Many of these orphans are now teaching and preaching. The bodies were saved then; now we are trying to reach the souls.

Reports from the Evangelists

EVANGELIST MILFORD H. LYON, of Winona Lake, has been conducting a revival campaign in Portland, Me., since December 31, in which thirty-two churches united. Many surrounding towns were represented at the meetings, which were held in an auditorium seating 4,000. In the first four weeks 2,431 confessed Christ. Among them were 400 high school students. Business men's luncheons held at noon, and eaten while a stirring religious talk was being given, were a unique feature of the movement.

Evangelist G. A. Klein of Nashville, Tenn., begins a series of meetings in Dallas, Texas, on March 11.

The Elmer C. Miller evangelistic party, after closing a successful series of meetings in Oswego, N. Y., have been conducting a union campaign at Cortland, N. Y., for some time past. There were 1,000 confessions in the first two weeks. The services were held in a tabernacle with a seating capacity of 3,000, and were invariably crowded. "Farmers' Day" brought out a large attendance, with many rural visitors.

Rev. Thomas Houston, the "blind evangelist," and party have just closed a series of successful meetings in Park, Pa., with notable results. This group of workers now goes to South Brownsville and Scranton, Pa., afterward to Nutley, N. J., and Bayshore, Long Island, N. Y.

Evangelist Rae Palmer, of Warrensburg, Mo., is now conducting a series of evangelist meetings in Kansas City, under the auspices of the Armourdale Baptist Church. During the first two weeks over fifty accessions are reported, and many inquirers.

Evangelist Oscar Lowry and party are now concluding a revival campaign in Enid, Okla., in which all the Protestant churches are united, and which has been remarkably successful in spiritual results. They open a six weeks' campaign at Sterling, Ill., on February 18.

The Colegrove evangelistic party is holding the last of a series of union meetings of all the churches in Tekonsha, Mich. One-sixth of the population of Tekonsha has confessed Christ, and many others have rededicated their lives to his service. A leading physician and many business men are among the converts.

Evangelist L. F. Swarthout, of Chicago, has lately conducted successful meetings in Whitehall, Montague, and Albion, Mich., New Harmony and Covington, Ind., Evanston, Ill., and also in a number of churches in Chicago. Large audiences were attracted by the lantern-slide Gospel illustrations which the evangelist uses with excellent effect. This is a comparatively new feature in evangelism.

The Haudenschield and Pugh evangelistic party closed the year 1916 with meetings at Iola, Kan., and opened the new year with a tabernacle campaign at Wellington, Kan. They expect to return to Iola for another series of meetings in September.

Evangelist S. D. Goodale and party recently closed a series of meetings at Hardin, Ill. There were 172 professed conversions and there has been a remarkable quickening of the spiritual life of the place. About 100 have been received into the church. These workers are now holding meetings at Kampsville, Ill., and report "conversions right along."

Jack Cardiff, former pugilist, and for a time Billy Sunday's physical trainer, at the head of his own evangelistic party is putting the weight of his arm and heart and mind into the battle against sin. Evangelist Cardiff may be in New York City during the Sunday campaign.

The Dish That Won't Stay Full

Put a dish of Puffed Grains on the table when the children come home from school. Salt them a little, or douse with melted butter. Any Puffed Grain—Puffed Wheat, Puffed Rice or Corn Puffs.

Note how soon that dish is emptied.

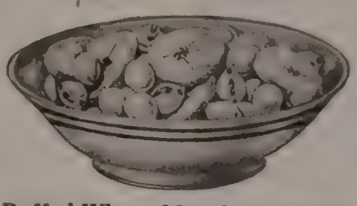
You will know then that Puffed Grains have all the attractions of bonbons and cookies and nuts. But none of their objections.

Not Morning Dainties Only

Some folks serve Puffed Grains for breakfast, then put them away for the day. They are missing two-thirds of the good.

Think that Puffed Wheat and Rice are whole-grain foods. They are the only whole-grain foods with every food cell exploded. Here every atom feeds.

They come in the form of bubbles—grains eight times normal size. They are airy, flaky, crisp and nut-like—enticing food confections.



Puffed Wheat Mixed with Fruit

You can float them in milk.

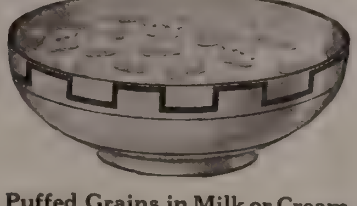
You can use them in soup. They take the place of nut-meats in any way you use them. And children love them dry.

Are you not serving lesser foods a hundred times when Puffed Grains would be better?

Puffed Wheat Puffed Rice and Corn Puffs

Each 15c Except in Far West

These foods are prepared by Prof. Anderson's process—by being shot from guns. Inside of each grain this process creates a hundred million steam explosions. Thus every food cell is blasted.



Puffed Grains in Milk or Cream

That fits every food cell for easy digestion. All the elements in the whole grain are made available as food.

That's where Puffed Grains differ from other whole-grain foods. Not a food cell is wasted—not an element is lost. Better one ounce of Puffed Wheat than a dish of wheat with most food cells unbroken.

Keep all three on hand.

The Quaker Oats Company

Sole Makers

(1505)

BLUE STREAKS

$3.00 each

Guaranteed

The Goodyear Blue Streak Bicycle Tire is more than mere material made to serve a useful purpose.

It is a symbol of integrity and unfailing honesty.

It is a sequel to the lofty ideal ever held by The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company—"to give the public the best value possible."

It is a history of Goodyear intention, Goodyear ability and Goodyear achievement molded into rubber. Goodyear Blue Streak Bicycle Tires represent the Goodyear Company.

They cannot falter where this great name is at stake.

The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, Ohio

GOODYEAR
AKRON

This is the Gold Medal
they awarded us

the first prize at the Panama-Pacific Exposition
It means that the workmanship, simplicity of construction, and beauty of design are of the highest quality.
You can have the satisfaction of knowing that when your friends see in your home they will know that you have selected wisely and in perfect taste. They are handsomely finished, dust-proof, non-binding doors, no ugly iron bands. Write for our free Style Book showing Colonial, Mission, Clawfoot and other designs in mahogany and oak. Also "In an Emperor's Den," an interesting booklet about our bookcases used by royalty. Dealers Everywhere.

GUNN Sectional Bookcases

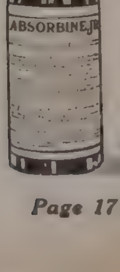
THE GUNN FURNITURE CO., 1824 Broadway, Grand Rapids, Mich.



After a Hard Day

rub the tired muscles with a few drops of the soothing, refreshing, antiseptic liniment, Absorbine, Jr. You will find it pleasant and convenient to use and remarkably efficacious.

Absorbine, Jr., invigorates jaded muscles, limbers the joints and prevents second-day soreness and lameness after a strenuous, tiresome day of sport or work.

Absorbine.Jr.
THE ANTISEPTIC LINIMENT

combines efficiency with safety, being made of pure herbs, and is positively non-poisonous. Then, too, Absorbine, Jr., is a safe, powerful germicide, which makes it especially valuable as an application for cuts, bruises and sores. No danger of infection if Absorbine, Jr., is applied promptly. A bottle of Absorbine, Jr., kept handy for emergencies, is excellent health and accident insurance.

USE ABSORBINE, JR., wherever a high-grade liniment or a positive germicide is indicated.

$1.00 a Bottle at Druggists or Postpaid

A Liberal Trial Bottle will be sent to your address on receipt of ten cents in stamps.

W. F. YOUNG, P. D. F.
5 Temple St., Springfield, Mass.

These Club Feet Made Straight in Four Months

Annabell Williams was born with Club Feet. After other treatment had failed, her mother brought her to the McLain Sanitarium, January 17, 1916, at 11 years of age. Four months later they returned home—happy. Read the mother's letter.

"I took Annabell home, on May 19, 1916, with two straight and useful feet. Today she runs and plays as any child. We can't say enough for the McLain Sanitarium and will gladly answer all letters of inquiry."
Mrs. Morgan Williams, Higbee, Mo.

This deformity was corrected without plaster paris or general anaesthesia.

FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN

This private institution is devoted to the treatment of children and young adults afflicted with Club Feet, Infantile Paralysis, Spinal Diseases and Curvature, Hip Disease, Bow Legs, Knock Knees, Wry Neck, etc. Our valuable book "Deformities and Paralysis," with Book of References, free.

The McLain Orthopedic Sanitarium
923 Aubert Ave. St. Louis, Mo

Jesus at the Pool of Bethesda

International Sunday School Lesson for February 26
John 5:1-15

The House of Mercy

By George D. Allison, Ph.D.

THE trip to Bethesda was an incident of a visit to Jerusalem at feast time. Jesus used the opportunities of social worship as they came, and realized the special value of great occasions in the religious life. If he were here today he would appreciate the great denominational gatherings and the special significance of a day like Easter. To him and to us the occasions that stir every one are unique opportunities for ministry and for broadening of views.

But sometimes a casual feature of a great trip is alone worth remembering. Here we learn of only one outstanding event of his journey to the metropolis. Jesus felt impelled to visit the famous health baths at Bethesda, "the House of Mercy." In those days of few physicians and unscientific remedies, the healing of medicinal springs was even more sought than today. The crowds at the German spas are the modern counterparts of the company Jesus observed. Jesus was always interested in the physical needs of people, though he felt yet more keenly their spiritual sicknesses.

This was an intermittent spring. It was recognized that the periodic bubbling of gases therein was the real source of its healing power. Consequently when "the waters were troubled" the sick plunged in and the helpless were aided by friends and attendants. The keen hope and expectation of cure was a factor in its accomplishment, just as so often today when an invalid becomes convinced that a certain treatment will restore his strength.

The fourth verse, which tells of the angel of the Lord that troubled the waters, is omitted in the Revised Version, because it was a marginal note added to John's narrative. But we must not lose the message of this verse. To the reverent and theological mind of that day nothing was more instinctive than to attribute all natural beneficences to God, their Giver. Modern speech has become prosy and ungracious—and modern commentators disparage such references to the agencies of God.

How much more beautiful and inherently religious to think of God sending the ministry of the springs! He "maketh winds his angels, and flames of fire his ministers" (Ps. 104:4). To the poetic trust of the Semitic peoples even the last catastrophe was the coming of an angel, "the angel of death."

For us today the meaning is clear. All helpful agencies are God's. He stored the hills with coal and iron for his children. He sends the rain and the sunshine upon the earth. He has provided healing herbs and antidotes for all toxic forces. Every discovery of medical science is an unveiling of an angel of ministry to afflicted humanity.

The Friendless Man

HOW pathetic it is to think of this poor fellow lying there, within sight of the bubbling waters, upon the very porch of the House of Mercy, but unhelped by any man! The strong and well were too much interested in their own dear ones to notice this friendless one. Yet it is often otherwise, happily. I have known a father whose child was stricken with infantile paralysis who was deeply touched at the sight of other little sufferers. He had not realized the need before, but at once provided for the children of others both nurses and treatment.

There is disheartening suffering in this old world. But you will find that those who are helping to relieve it are filled with hope and faith. It is the cynical bystander who is pessimistic about it all. If you feel overburdened by the war or by poverty at home, do something to help and new confidence will come. Jesus the Helper of men was an optimist.

By the way, how close a parallel this man furnishes to our spiritual cripples, to men and women on the porch of the House of God but not able to enter in, within sight of the ministries of faith and trust but unhealed! God grant such may find a friend in you or me who will help them into the cleansing of repentant prayer, into the purification of consecrated service.

"Wilt thou be made whole?"

Yes, that's the big question, spiritually at least. A great many people don't want to be any different, have lost all desire for robust faith and full-orbed joyful soul development. That's the saddest penalty of all, the curse of our age—indifference to the highest life. When the sick man no longer desires to become well our task is hard. There are chronic invalids who only need the spur to the will, to shake off pessimism and unfaith. Challenge the despairing to a desire for health, to a confidence in God's care and love. Arouse the sinful to a prayer for holiness, and the way is opened for a modern miracle.

Cooperation Required Even of a Cripple

"JESUS saith unto him, Arise, take up thy bed. and walk." He saw a will to be healed in spite of the long disappointment. He saw some response to his face and his words of compassion. Then quick came his command. How wonderful and wise Jesus was! He worked within the man, not from without. He required cooperation, an attempt, something definite for the body and the will. The man felt new powers within his frame and at the same time was challenged to act upon this new-found strength. He was ordered to roll up his mat—that he might not be tempted to fall back again upon it. He was kept busy—and there was therefore no relapse. It is a commentary on Paul's perplexing text in Philippians: "Work out your own salvation—for it is God who worketh in you both to will and to work." This man worked out his own cure; yet God, through Christ, worked in him, giving both the will and the power to be strong.

Even so the grace of God operates upon spiritual disease and paralysis. The Holy Spirit inspires the desire for salvation and supplies the spiritual strength as well. By evangelism, by preaching, by innumerable influences men are awakened, not only to their need but to their possibilities. Cooperating with God, they are redeemed.

When asked who had healed him, the restored cripple did not know! Think of it—after those years of suffering, he had been cured, and had not thought to ask his Saviour's name. It seems incredible. Yet one of our own beloved physicians has discoursed to me on the ingratitude of patients, and I could scarce believe. The doctor labors all night to save a little child, and sometimes is not thanked, is not even paid. Men nursed through fever and delirium have not asked their doctor's or nurse's name.

So God expresses the frightful ingratitude of man, as in Hosea the prophet: "They knew not that I healed them."

However, this man had some excuse. Jesus ordered him to take his bed and walk, and doubtless he was under the spell of that authoritative command. He may have stalked off overjoyed, like one in a trance, and made for home. Only too late he bethought himself to look for Jesus.

But this he did—he recognized that God is the giver of all good gifts, and he went into the temple to give thanks. It seems only fair to believe that gratitude to God took him there. He had come to a realization of his debt.

Jesus hadn't forgotten him. "Jesus found him," had been looking for him. When we forget him, he does not forget us. He had a further message for the man that was cured. He always has.

Jesus' Warning

THOUGH glad to find him there, Jesus did not fail to give the warning that was on his heart. He reminded him of the greatness of God's mercy to him, and solemnly dedicated him to a righteous life. "Behold, thou art made whole; sin no more, lest a worse thing befall thee."

Perhaps some youthful folly had caused him this frightful suffering. Our boys need to be warned of the penalties of the sins of the flesh. Perhaps the old temptation would return to this Jew now worshiping the God of Israel.

There are "worse things" than being crippled of body. Sin paralyzes the will and kills the soul. We are apt to be more anxious over our children's bodies than over their spirits. We dread the contamination of contagious disease more than the corruption of evil companionships. We pray for the healing of the body and forget to ask for victory in temptation. It is a poor interpretation of faith that thinks entirely in terms of physical health to the detriment of unselfishly evangelizing the sinful.

We must not judge uncharitably. The healed man was challenged because he carried his mat on the Sabbath. We don't like to see beds carried about on Sunday now. But he had a good reason for it. Thanksgiving for his cure should have been the all-explaining feeling of the man who asked him to stop carrying his mat. Circumstances alter cases.

Yet these unfortunate men "persecuted Jesus because he did these things on the Sabbath." Thus does the letter of the law war against the spirit! Do we act as blindly today? Yes, some of us cavil at redeemed men who are exuberant in their rejoicing, "walking and leaping and praising God." We do not like the methods of missions and revivals that are doing work we leave undone. If we have not "a more excellent way" to demonstrate, ought we not to be silent and give God the glory?

Sunday School Methods

By FRANK L. BROWN, Joint General Secretary World's Sunday School Association

Washington's Birthday Sunday

ON the Sunday nearest Washington's birthday the school has a splendid chance to impress Home Missions by the contrast between Washington's day and this, showing the steps in national progress and the reforms in national life, due to the permeating influence of the Bible.

The school-room should be appropriately decorated in the national colors. A large portrait of Washington, draped in the flag, should be hung at a prominent point. Some of his great sayings should be called from his writings and a few of the best lettered by some school artist on paper or cardboard and placed on the school wall. The following are suggestive:

The perpetuity of this nation depends upon the moral and religious training of the young.

Speak not evil of the absent; it is unjust.

It is better to be alone than in bad company.

Let your hand give in proportion to your purse.

It is our duty to make the best of our misfortunes.

True religion affords government its surest support.

A good moral character is the finest essential in man.

I hate deception, even where the imagination only is concerned.

It is impossible to reason without arriving at a Supreme Being.

I hope some day we shall become a storehouse and granary for the world.

The company in which you will improve most will be the least expensive to you.

It is a maxim with me not to ask what, under similar circumstances, I would not grant.

Labor to keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire called Conscience.

Would to God the harmony of nations were an object that lay nearest to the hearts of sovereigns.

I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs, that honesty is the best policy.

Avoid gaming. This is a vice which is productive of every possible evil. It has been the ruin of many a worthy family, the loss of many a man's honor, and the cause of suicide. Few gain by this abominable practice, while thousands are injured.

Washington's Farewell Address may be made the basis of teaching the value of religion and the Bible in individual character and nation-building.

Dr. William Elliott Griffis of Ithaca suggests that Washington's Birthday Sunday may be made of value:

1. By showing Washington the boy, his obedience, self-control, improvement of opportunities, fair-play, self-reliance, politeness, reverence, and willing service to God and man.

2. By the inculcation of patriotism, apart from its martial features, as illustrated in the life of Washington as surveyor, explorer, legislator, chief executive, intelligent and unselfish patriot.

3. By suggesting his moral as well as physical courage.

4. By showing how the qualities of modesty, simplicity, purity of heart and mind, dignity, propriety and truth were exemplified in the boy.

5. By picturing the man and the sage, the example of Washington as a Christian, a devout worshiper and a communicant at the Lord's Supper.

The picture of Washington at prayer at Valley Forge should be procured and hung in the school-room as a permanent contribution to the school decorations.

Little Stories from Mission Fields

THE problem how to reach China's women is still a burning one despite many opening doors. The tiny-footed lady with vision narrowed within the four walls like a bird in a cage; the woman who has nothing to do but spend hours combing her hair, touching the rouge in just the right spot on lip and eyelid; where shall we find a point of contact with her? She may have a passing interest in the barbarian from the wilds of far-away America. She seems to listen politely, but her mind is busy comparing her daintily embroidered satin slippers with the great leather shoes which her visitor wears. She compares her satin skirt with the other's woollen one, her trim, neat, fur-lined jacket with the other's loose cloak. She can hardly restrain her fingers from feeling if the waist is boned, wondering meanwhile, "Does she never comb her hair?"

She knows her soft, plump hands and long finger-nails are more lady-like than her guest's. The high, straight nose is the only thing she finds to admire; and when her efforts to converse about such things are coolly met, she trails off into bored silence.

And the other woman! The woman rising early with perhaps a half sweet potato on which to begin the day's work; the woman half of whose children are dead, and the other half are cold and hungry; whose heart is calloused and hard, full of superstition and dread; the woman who must slave early and late to keep the wolf from the door; how find a point of contact with her?

Truly we need the wisdom of serpents. We find one point of contact in the children. They gladly come to Sunday school and carry home the message in song and story. J. RICKETTS.

REV. R. O. REINER of Pyeng Yang, Korea, tells of a boy who applied for admission to the academy. His home was in one of the most distant parts of Ham Kyeng Province. He arrived at the academy after traveling on foot more than 1,300 li to reach Pyeng Yang and with only $1 (2 yen) in his possession to cover all his expenses for the year. He had to be told he could not enter. Mr. Reiner writes: "It was one of the hardest moments of my life when I told him no. Who knows but that just such a boy might eventually become a leader in the Korean church and lead it to the conquest of the land?"

THAT GRAY HAIR

Don't dye it with crude dyes—many hair dyes are greasy and sticky. They are sometimes dangerous, and cause a world of trouble. Restore the natural color by the scientific method discovered by a woman. This application is clean, colorless and dainty. It brings back the original color in from 4 to 8 days.

Mary T. Goldman's Hair Color Restorer

Thousands of men and women have stopped their gray hair by this one safe method. They would tell you, if you knew them, of the absolutely satisfactory results of this scientific preparation.

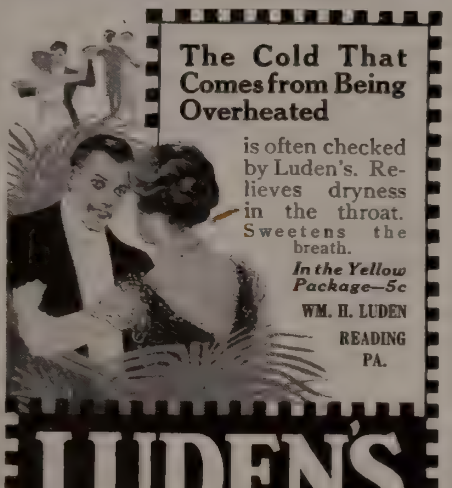
You may prove this for yourself by accepting our free trial package.

Send for the free trial bottle and be sure to say exactly what color your hair was before turning gray. Tell us whether it was black, dark brown, medium brown or light brown. Better, enclose a lock with your letter.

We will send you the free trial bottle and a special comb with which to apply it, by return mail. When you want the full-size bottle you can get it direct from us if you prefer not to buy of your druggist. Regular size costs $1.00.

MARY T. GOLDMAN
378 Goldman Bldg. St. Paul, Minn.
Established 50 Years (120)

TRIAL BOTTLE FREE



The Cold That Comes from Being Overheated

is often checked by Luden's. Relieves dryness in the throat. Sweetens the breath.

In the Yellow Package—5c

WM. H. LUDEN
READING
PA.

LUDEN'S
MENTHOL CANDY COUGH DROPS

Get This Lamp Free

SPLENDID NEW CLUB OFFER

Wonderful New Light

Burns Kerogas—Cheapest Fuel Known

Safe—Can't Explode

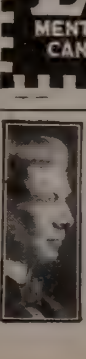
80 hrs. of Light for 10c

300 Candle Power

Produces a powerful white light, yet soft and easy on the eyes. Brighter than 18 electric light bulbs—20 ordinary oil lamps, or 10 acetylene gas jets. Costs less than 1c a night. Get our club offer. We want one person in each locality to whom we can refer prospects.

Agents: Get our offer of Big Profits and Free automobile to travel in. Send for sworn statement. Let us tell you how to get this lamp free.

Thomas Lamp Co. 8724 East St., Dayton, O.



Health is Yours

If you follow the teachings of Dr. Elmer Lee, editor of the Health Culture Magazine

Every month it is brim full of hints and helps for cures without drugs, and right eating, breathing, exercising, etc. $1.50 a year; 15c a number—four months "On Trial" for 25c.

Send today for your first four months and add to your health. Money back if not satisfied.

HEALTH CULTURE, 516 St. James Bldg., New York

HOLCO Seed Book FREE

Tells you what and how to plant in your vegetable and flower garden and when to plant it. Makes crops sure and dependable.

Send 10c. for one package each of Giant Pansy and Radish seeds and get the book FREE

THE HOLMES-LETHERMAN SEED CO.,
232 N. Cleveland Ave., Canton, Ohio.

Another Nervous Breakdown?

WHAT is it? Just tired out or just broken down? If sleep alone no longer suffices to allay the tension of nerves that are overwrought and distracted, a complete collapse may not be far off.

Physicians will frankly tell you that medicines are of no avail—that rest and nutrition are the only salvation. And as a scientific means of furthering nutrition, they often use Sanatogen—in itself concentrated nutriment which conveys to the starved centers exactly the food that is needed, and especially organic phosphorus, "in such a form," as Dr. Saleeby says, "that the nerves can actually take hold of it."

Several weeks' regular use of Sanatogen has brought to thousands and thousands of nervous sufferers new vigor, fresh vitality and sustaining endurance—with better sleep and better digestion.

Lady Henry Somerset, one of the thousands of well-known people who have endorsed Sanatogen, writes:

"Sanatogen undoubtedly restores sleep, invigorates the nerves and braces the patient to health. I have watched its effect on people whose nervous systems have been entirely undermined, and I have proved Sanatogen to be most valuable."

Won't you give Sanatogen a chance to help your nerves?

FREE SAMPLE OFFER

On request we will send a 25-gram Sample Package of Sanatogen, also the "Text Book of Sanatogen," telling of its tonic and upbuilding value. Address The Bauer Chemical Co., 26F Irving Place, New York.

Sold by good druggists everywhere, in three sizes, $1.00 up.

THE FOOD TONIC

Grand Prize at the International Congress of Medicine, London, 1913

Sanatogen
ENDORSED BY OVER 21,000 PHYSICIANS

Germany Announces New Naval War Zones

Continued from page 167

countries either altogether to forego every trade not agreeable to the Entente Powers or to limit it according to their arbitrary decrees.

The American Government knows the steps which have been taken to cause England and her allies to return to the rules of international law and to respect the freedom of the seas. The English Government, however, insists upon continuing its war of starvation, which does not at all affect the military power of its opponents, but compels women and children, the sick and the aged, to suffer for their country pains and privations which endanger the vitality of the nation. Thus British tyranny mercilessly increases the sufferings of the world, indifferent to the laws of humanity, indifferent to the protests of the neutrals whom they severely harm, indifferent even to the silent longing for peace among England's own allies. Each day of the terrible struggle causes new destruction, new sufferings. Each day shortening the war, on both sides, will preserve the life of thousands of brave soldiers and be a benefit to mankind.

The Imperial Government could not justify before its own conscience, before the German people and before history the neglect of any means destined to bring about the end of the war. Like the President of the United States, the Imperial Government had hoped to reach this goal by negotiations.

After the attempts to come to an understanding with the Entente Powers have been answered by the latter with the announcement of an intensified continuation of the war the Imperial Goverment—in order to serve the welfare of mankind in a higher sense and not to wrong its own people—is now compelled to continue the fight for existence, again forced on it, with the full employment of all the weapons which are at its disposal.

Sincerely trusting that the people and the Government of the United States will understand the motives for this decision and its necessity, the Imperial Government hopes that the United States may view the new situation from the lofty heights of impartiality and assist, on their part, to prevent further misery and unavoidable sacrifice of human life.

Enclosing two memoranda regarding the details of the contemplated military measures at sea, I remain, &c.,

J. BERNSTORFF.

One of the Memoranda Mentioned in the Note

"From February 1, 1917, within barred zones around Great Britain, France, Italy and in the eastern Mediterranean, as outlined in the following, all sea traffic forthwith will be opposed. Such barred zones are:" (here follow details in nautical terms, covering the area shown on the map below).

"Neutral ships plying within the barred zones do so at their own risk. Although precautions are being taken to spare neutral ships which on February 1 are on the way to ports in the barred zone, during an appropriate delay, yet it is urgently to be advised that they should be warned and directed to other routes by all means available.

"Neutral ships lying in ports of the barred zones can with the same safety abandon the barred zones if they sail before February 5 and take the shortest routc into the open district.

"Traffic of regular American passenger steamers can go on unmolested if:

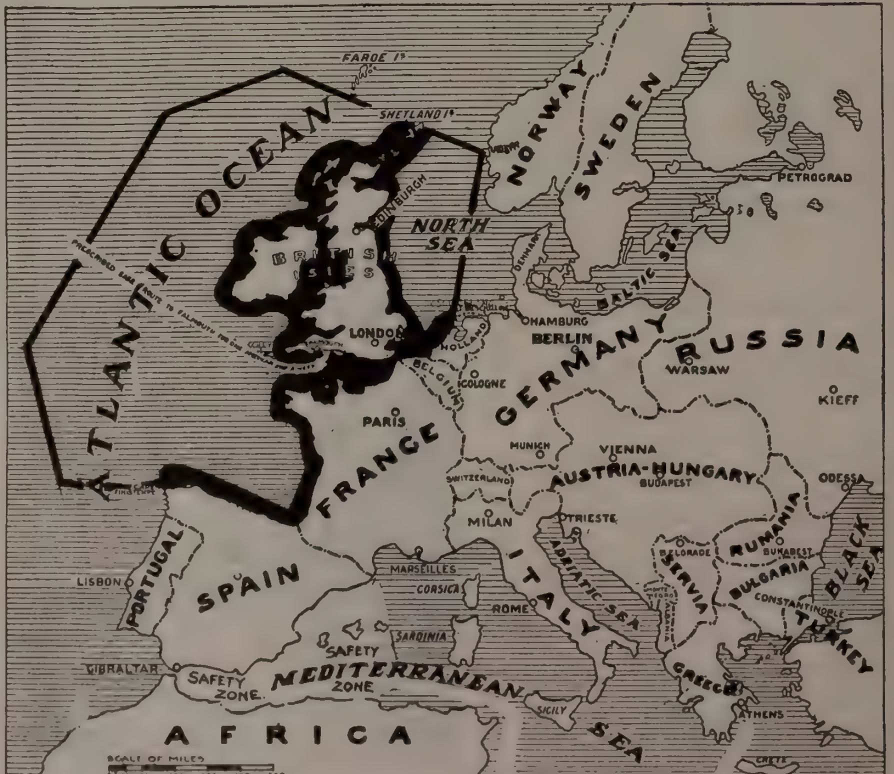
"A. Falmouth is taken as the port of destination, and if,

"B. On the going and return journey the Scilly Islands, as well as the point 50 degrees north and 20 degrees west be steered on. Along this route no German mines will be laid.

"C. If steamers on this journey bear the following special signals, which only they will be permitted to display in American ports: A coating of paint on the ship's hull and the superstructure in vertical stripes three meters broad, alternating white and red; on every mast a large flag of checkered white and red, on the stern the American national flag; during darkness the national flag and the coat of paint to be as easily recognizable as possible from a distance, and the ships must be completely and brightly illuminated.

"D. If only one steamer runs each week in each direction, arriving at Falmouth on Sundays, leaving Falmouth on Wednesdays.

"E. If guarantees and assurances are given by the American Government that these steamers carry no contraband (according to the German list of contraband)."



The war and safety zones outlined in a memorandum attached to the German note. Surrounding the British Isles is a "barred zone" twenty nautical miles wide (shown as a heavy black border above). A secondary war zone completely inclosing Britain is shown by a heavy black line. The danger zone in the Mediterranean is ruled and the safety zones in both areas are left white. All the territorial waters of the belligerents are in the barred zones.

"NEW-SKIN"— TO PREVENT INFECTION

"New-Skin"

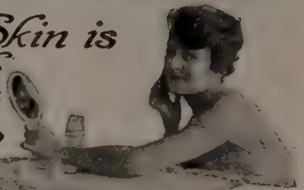
—for cuts and scrapes

An antiseptic liquid for little hurts. It forms a waterproof covering that protects the wound and allows it to heal. Carry it with you always for emergencies.

At all druggists (10c., 25c.). Or send us 25c. in stamps for the larger size by mail.

Be sure to get the genuine. Always in glass bottles; red and gold paper cartons.

NEWSKIN CO., NEW YORK



"My Skin is smooth as Velvet since I've used—

CRÈME SIMON

The Velvet Complexion Maker

Made by J. SIMON & CO., Paris, France
Famous abroad over half a Century.
Fragrant—Refreshing—Beautifying.
CREME SIMON, 45c, 75c & $1.25
POUDRE SIMON (Face Powder), 40c & 75c
SAVON SIMON (Toilet Soap), one size, 50c

At All Good Dealers'

Send 2c stamp to cover postage, with dealer's name and receive a handsome and practical CREME SIMON diminution mirror.

MAURICE LEVY, Sole U. S. Agent
Dept. "G," 15 West 38th Street, New York

High School Course in Two Years

LEARN in your own home. Here is a thorough and simplified high school course that you can complete in two years. Meets college entrance requirements. Prepared by leading members of faculties of universities and academies.

Study In Your Own Home

This course was prepared especially for home training. Your idle evenings can be spent in pleasant reading that will give you a thorough high school training.

Write for Booklet! Send your name and address today for our booklet and full particulars. No obligation. Write for it at once. Now.

American School of Correspondence, Dept. P2492, Chicago, U. S. A.

20 Packets Seeds—10c.

We want every reader to test "HARRIS SEEDS THAT HUSTLE." Send 10c. now — before you forget — for this mammoth collection. We send you 20 separate packets finest varieties—one each—of Beets, Carrot, Cabbage, Celery, Cucumber, Lettuce, Cress, Muskmelon, Watermelon, Onion, Parsley, Parsnip, Radish, Salsify, Spinach, Tomato, Giant Mixed Poppies, Calendula, Cosmos; also Children's Botanical Garden, a collection of flower seeds. With this collection we send rebate check for 10c. and big catalogue of world's finest seeds.

HARRIS BROS. SEED COMPANY
280 MAIN STREET MT. PLEASANT, MICH.

CUT YOUR LIVING COST

OUR CATALOGUE WILL TELL YOU HOW

It will help you grow a hundred dollars' worth of vegetables on small plot; truthfully illustrates and describes the best in seeds, plants and everything for garden-making; 128 pages; has beautiful lithographed cover, and contains a 25c cash coupon which can be used as part payment on your first order. Mailed Free. Write to-day.

IOWA SEED CO. Dept. E. Des Moines, Iowa.

REVERSIBLE "Linene" TRADE MARK

Send 2 Cents in U. S. stamps to pay postage and we will send you FREE a SAMPLE COLLAR of our New Style "Copley." State size wanted. REVERSIBLE COLLAR CO., Dept. T, Boston, Mass.

LAME PEOPLE

OLD WAY

The Perfection Extension Shoe for any person with one short limb. Worn with any style of ready-made shoes with perfect ease and comfort. Shipped on trial. Write for booklet. Henry E. Lotz, 313 Third Ave., N. Y. City

OUR WAY

THE NATURAL WALK

The Christian Herald Prayer League

ALL Christians are urged to unite with the members of the Prayer League in daily prayer at the noon hour. Also any one is at liberty to send a request for prayer or an acknowledgment of answered prayer, thereby becoming enrolled as a member of the Prayer League.

"HAVE you received the Holy Ghost since you believed?"

It was a most natural question for Paul to ask of the disciples of John the Baptist whom he found at Ephesus. And they, when they had heard from Paul of John's testimony regarding Jesus, were baptized in the name of Jesus and received the Holy Ghost, the witness of the Spirit to their salvation. From the earliest days, the assurance of the Spirit has been an important stone in the foundation upon which the structure of Christianity has rested. Yet many people have been received into the church and have felt themselves to be Christians, whose faith has been little more than an intellectual assent, and whose hearts have never felt the power and blessing of the indwelling Spirit. This blessed experience is both the seal of our sonship and the strength of our souls. Without it, faith is often lost in strange bypaths; and sometimes the unwitnessed life meets shipwreck among the reefs and shallows of false doctrine and unbelief.

We write this because a heartbroken mother has come to us asking prayer that her daughter, a member of the church for many years, but afflicted with a hasty temper and a quick, vituperative tongue, may yield herself to God and be "born again." How delighted is the enemy of souls when he can steal away the graces that belong to Christ and substitute wilfulness, contention, bickerings and backbitings! This mother asks prayer that this daughter and her husband may feel a deep conviction of their need, and that they may both receive grace to believe in and to experience salvation to the uttermost.

An anxious mother requests prayer for the salvation of her children. She writes: "I have just had a very marked answer to my prayer for help in financial troubles. I called and God said, 'Stand still and see the salvation of the Lord.'"

C. S. G. writes that when she realized the number of the members of the prayer League and how they were widely separated, she was overwhelmed at God's power to call together from all points such a company of intercessors, and she felt that she must pray more and come very close to God. C. S. G. is a shut-in, but she has learned to pray for wisdom just to live one day at a time and to feel his presence and his love.

Mrs. E. B. says that ten years ago she asked prayer that her mother might be kept through a serious operation, and the prayer was answered. Now she asks prayer for the same mother that she may be restored to health again, after a complete nervous breakdown.

G. W. praises God for the improvement, in answer to prayer, of her mother's sight. Her mother is able now to read without glasses such clear print as that in "The Miracle of Answered Prayer," which G. W. has just received, and which she declares a "wonderful book."

E. G. is happy in answered prayer. A dear one afflicted with spells of insanity, for whom prayer was asked of the League, is now healed. E. G. says that this wonderful evidence of the healing power of prayer has made her pray fervently for all of the afflicted mentioned in the Prayer column.

Mrs. L. N. has been relieved of a goiter which had annoyed her for years. She writes: "I grasped God's healing power. Thank God, he healed me. I could breathe the fresh air, which I had not done for years. Praise his holy name and holy power." She asks prayer for the healing of her husband, who is suffering with asthma.

Mrs. L. O. P., who says she loves the Christian Herald, writes to tell us of the conversion in answer to prayer of her son, now in a tuberculosis sanitarium, but slowly recovering health.

Mrs. H. E. S. acknowledges answered prayer in the saving of her son from drink. He has kept sober for three months. She asks prayer that his reform may be permanent and that he may become a Christian; also that her daughter may be converted and brought safely through a great crisis in her life.

A Constant Reader praises God for prayer answered in permanent employment for herself and for two nephews.

Mrs. H. S. M. writes that she was cured in one night of an ailment for release from which she prayed, telling God that she could not serve him as she wished to, in such torture.

Prayers are asked for revivals of religion at:

Allentown, Pa.; Mount Zion, Ind.; Oakland, Fla.; Allensville, Ky.; Lincoln, Neb.; Cedar Falls, Iowa; Liscomb, Iowa; Skamokawa, Wash.; Elida, Ohio; North Brooksville, Me.; Tyler, Texas; Chambersburg, Pa.; Alfred, Ohio (that many may be saved during revival); Portland, Me. ("pray that the evangelistic meetings now being held here may prove a great success in bringing souls to Christ"); Lexington, Ga. ("pray for prohibition in Georgia, also for a great revival").

Mrs. W. L. and A Mother ask prayer that their sons'-minds may be restored; Mrs. J. G. asks prayer that mother's mind, S. T. C., that sister's and own minds may be restored; Mrs. C. M. asks prayer that a young mother's mind may be restored; fourteen friends ask prayer for mental restoration or strengthening for themselves, friends and relatives.

Mrs. J. S. W. asks prayer that cataracts may be removed from husband's eyes and sight strengthened; Mrs. S. D. M., that a growth on nephew's eye may be removed and sight restored; Mrs. M. T. asks prayer that husband's and own sight may be restored; fifteen friends ask prayer for the restoration or strengthening of sight for friends, relatives or themselves.

Forty-seven friends ask prayer for a deeper work of grace, assurance of sins forgiven, or express in other ways their desire for personal spiritual blessing.

Mrs. M. S. asks prayer that two sons and husband may be cured of the liquor habit; eight parents ask prayer that their sons may be cured; E. M. P. asks prayer that brother may be cured of the habit and return home; ten others ask that other relatives or friends may be delivered from this habit.

Mrs. J. S. W. and Mrs. S. A. P. ask prayer that their four sons may be saved; twenty-nine parents ask prayer for the conversion of sons; fifteen wives, for their husbands; forty-seven, for other relatives or friends.

Twelve readers ask prayer for special blessing for others.

Seventy-nine ask prayer for the healing of friends or relatives, including A. M., that son may be healed without an operation; another, A Grateful Mother, that two daughters may be restored to health without an operation; another, B. B. F., that cancer may be eradicated from system of a very dear sister; another, J. L., asks prayer that wife may be restored to health without an operation; fifty-eight friends ask prayer for healing for themselves; seventeen friends, for restoration of hearing for themselves or others.

Twenty-seven friends ask prayer for help or guidance in financial affairs.

Thirty-three friends ask prayer for the granting of varied desires and needs.

Acknowledgments of answered prayer have been received from the following:

E. H., Lakewood, Pa.; Mrs. A. E. H., Unionville, Conn.; Mrs. E. F., Frederick, Md.; Mrs. M. E. O., Broken Arrow, Okla.; Mrs. E. E. B., Beverly, Mass.; Mrs. M. E. R., Darlington, Pa.; M. B., Springfield, Ill.; A Reader, Logansport, Ind.; A Praying Mother, Fort Worth, Texas; Mrs. E. J. B., Carterville, Ill.; R. M. D., Taft, Tenn.; Mrs. A. O., Westerly, R. I.; S. E. B., Edgewater, Colo.; Mrs. A. G. V., University Place, Neb.; L. A. T., Ontario, N. Y.; H. N., Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. I. B., Tiro, Ohio; Miss J. P., Lynchburg, Va.; An Earnest Believer, Tyler, Texas; Mrs. M. Bristol, Va.; Mrs. G. J., Mankato, Kan.; J. F., New York, N. Y.; A Grateful Mother, Normal, Ill.; A Friend, Madisonville, Texas; G. D. D., Hampton, N. H.; L. H., Philadelphia, Pa.; Mrs. M. G., Updike, Miss.; A. F. B., Auburn, N. Y.; Mrs. E. M. M., Oakland, Fla.

THE Prayer League Blue Book, "The Miracle of Answered Prayer," by Rev. J. G. Hallimond, is being everywhere enthusiastically received. It will strengthen your faith. Send 75 cents to the Christian Herald Book Department for a copy of this wonderfully helpful and inspiring book, which should be in the hands of every member of the Prayer League. They will find it especially helpful.

SAXON "SIX"

People Generally are Convinced of Saxon "Six" Superiority

Nor is this belief in Saxon "Six" superiority confined to one part of the country. You'll find it equally as strong in the West as in the East, in the city as in the country.

But what are the specific reasons that have led motor car buyers the country over to this same clear-cut conclusion?

Perhaps the biggest single factor in Saxon "Six" success is the Saxon "Six" motor.

It is understood, of course, that uniform torque—smooth power-flow—is the standard sought by all motor car makers.

With a "less-than-six-cylinder" motor there are naturally intervals between impulses or explosions. These spell vibration and consequent wear on the motor and parts.

With a six-cylinder motor, however, one explosion merges smoothly into the next. And this vibrationless power-flow gives rise to several important advantages.

It practically eliminates wear on the motor and parts, gives longer life to the motor, enables higher maximum speed and lower minimum speed, and produces nearly absolute operative quietness.

And, best of all, it adds perceptibly to the performance of the car — in pick-up — in high-gear work and pulling power.

Saxon "Six" is $865; "Six" Sedan, $1250; "Four" Roadster, $495; f.o.b. Detroit. Canadian prices: "Six" Touring Car, $1175; "Six" Sedan, $1675; "Four" Roadster, $665. Price of special export models, "Six," $915; "Four," $495; f.o.b. Detroit. 858

SAXON MOTOR CAR CORPORATION, DETROIT

PARIS STRIPED
MARECHAL NEIL FIRE KING
NEW ORCHID FLOWERED
GIANT SNOW QUEEN

FIVE FULL SIZE PACKAGES, marvelous and striking varieties. Gigantic in size, richest and unique colors. PANSIES

SEND 10 CENTS to help pay postage and packing and receive this big Introductory Collection of Pansies; guaranteed to please, and our handsome Seed and Plant guide. To help you grow the biggest and finest flowers we will mail you our Pansy booklet FREE Mention this paper. Send to-day. Don't wait.

GREAT NORTHERN SEED CO., 2307 Rose St., Rockford, Illinois

"LAWN PARK" COOP

Saves Your Chicks

The Wire Park, which pulls out like a drawer, gives hen and chicks fresh grass, air and sunshine during the day; closes at night and in storms. This coop meets every demand; portable, with removable floor for easy cleaning; roomy, light, durable, sanitary.

LAWN PARK BROOD COOP
IT TELESCOPES!

PROOF Against Hawks, Rats, Weasels, etc.

Made of galvanized metal; repels vermin Size, open, 18 in. x 24 in. x 48 in. Pays for itself in chicks and labor saved. Write today for free circulars, special prepaid offer and how to turn work into pleasure and profit.

CYCLONE MFG. CO., DEPT. C; URBANA, IND.

GALLOWAY SEPARATORS

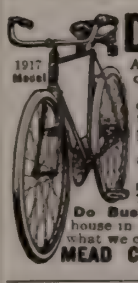
Have taken the field by storm. The highest quality separator possible to build. Simple, scientific design, only two shafts in the whole gearing. Bowl easily washed. Working parts run in oil spray. Easy to operate. A perfect skimmer. You can

GET ALL DAIRY PROFITS

You can save even half because we build these perfect separators in our own factories with the highest skilled labor and lowest possible cost for fine materials and sell them direct from factory to farm at one small profit based on enormous volume. Guaranteed for ten years. Compare and test it beside ANY SEPARATOR BUILT. Ask for 1917 free catalog.

39.90
Skims 375 Lbs. Per Hour

WM. GALLOWAY CO.
Box 3483 Waterloo, Iowa



Delivered TO YOU FREE

A sample 1917 model "Ranger" bicycle, on approval and 30 DAYS TRIAL.

Write at once for large illustrated catalog showing complete line of bicycles, tires and supplies, and particulars of most marvelous offer ever made on a bicycle. You will be astonished at our low prices and remarkable terms.

RIDER AGENTS Wanted—Boys, make money taking orders for Bicycles, Tires and Sundries from our big catalog. Do Business direct with the leading bicycle house in America. Do not buy until you know what we can do for you. WRITE TO US.

MEAD CYCLE CO., DEPT. F-71 CHICAGO

A Penny Post Card Brings 100 Samples Free

You can get a big book of Wall Paper samples free from Montgomery Ward & Co. by just writing a postal card and asking for it. These samples are good size and show exact colors, designs and prices. Write today, don't forget to address Dept. A169

Montgomery Ward & Co.
Satisfaction Guaranteed or Your Money Back
New York, Chicago, Kansas City, Ft. Worth, Portland, Ore.
Write House Most Convenient.

COUGHING spells eased, throat soothed, voice helped by

BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES

NEW TRIAL SIZE BOX 10c

Regular Sizes 25c, 50c, $1. At Druggists.

JOHN I. BROWN & SON, Boston, Mass.

RAISE GUINEA PIGS

We buy all you raise. Splendid money making opportunity. Big demand — thousands needed weekly. Easy to raise — inexpensive to house, feed, keep. Pay better than poultry or squabs. Particulars, contract, booklet how to raise free.

CAVIES DISTRIBUTING CO., 719 W. 74th St., Kansas City, Mo.

Buy Your Books of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

No matter what book you want, if it is a good book, we can supply it, no matter who publishes it, write

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, N. Y.

The Twentieth Century City of Japan

Continued from page 165

beside the Osaka Hotel, in the center of the city, is a municipal playground which is used daily by hundreds of men, boys and girls.

The Y. M. C. A. Building in which Mr. Gleason met me is a regular barn. The hall is bare, the classrooms dimly lighted and poorly equipped and the private office has about the size and general equipment of a box stall. But eight hundred live wires are getting an education in that old barn of a building, and those walls have resounded to the exhortations of Mott, Henderson and Eddy. That old structure is the center of the social and spiritual life of the young Christian men in Osaka, and from its inhospitable-looking doorway have proceeded most of the reforms that make for Christianity and morality in the great city. Bible classes, educational meetings, social gatherings and public meetings for righteousness have made sacred those dingy walls. A fine new building is soon to be erected, and Japan is to furnish one-third of the entire sum. The Y. M. C. A. was the first agency to interest me in Christian work, but I had to go abroad before I realized what the "C." in the title meant. The Y. M. C. A. in Japan and China is something more than a bath house and pool room.

Counting Y. M. C. A. teachers, missionary wives, and retired missionaries, Osaka has one foreign worker for every thirty thousand people. Yet Osaka, according to one man I spoke to, is the storm center of the next quarter century, unsurpassed by any other city, with the possible exception of some Chinese or Russian center.

LIFE in Osaka is speeding up, with the consequent wear and tear and destruction. Its myriad factories belch forth the smudge of modernism to cloud the clear sky under which agricultural Japan has slumbered so long. The few manufacturers in Japan have made great advances. They are as much at home in a limousine as any one. The war is pouring profits into Osaka such as Japan has never known. Stock speculation is the hobby of the rich and the hope of humble servant girls. The public library, the banks, the court house and prominent business buildings proclaim to the dullest that Japan is a modern nation.

In the last fifty years Japan has proven her ability to assume modern materialism. Osaka is the testing-ground to see whether Japan, with a heathen public opinion and exploitation of human flesh in every form, can survive the temptation to worshipMammon rather than the true God.

High above the filth of the narrow streets and the river on which a heathen festival is the annual excuse for gilded debauchery there rises the tower of a modern court-house. But there is no figure of impartial Justice with balance and sword at the top. Japan has the machinery of modernism. Has she the spirit which takes cognizance of the balances, or must she fall by the sword of Justice? She has ignored Justice and humanity in her mad scramble for gold. Will Justice pass her by when the reckoning is made? Osaka must answer —soon.

The progress of Japan is the enforced progress of an autocratic land where the many are the slaves of the few. Osaka stands for progress, and its men and women are the weakest in the empire. In Japan, according to official investigations, the average life of men was thirty-eight years in 1886, and in 1910 was thirty-one. But the last six years have seen more crowding, more overwork and more disease than did the decade before.

A prominent California business man said to me: "Before we let the Japanese into our land, they must prove in their land whether they are willing to recognize their laborers as human beings. They cannot expect us to do so before they do so. Race hatred has nothing to do with the California question. It is purely a question whether American laborers are to be subjected to such conditions as the Japanese will tolerate, and Osaka is the place where Japan is proving her fitness or unfitness to be regarded as a barbarous nation or one which can stand the scrutiny of twentieth century civilization. If we want the conditions that prevail in Osaka in California, all we have to do is open our doors and let them in."

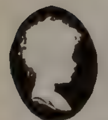
◆

TO the Rev. Mrs. Daisy Barr, an Indianapolis evangelist, falls the title of the only woman evangelist as far as can be ascertained. Mrs. Barr has been an ordained minister of the Society of Friends for the past twenty-two years, and during that time has held charges in various Indiana and Ohio cities. Until two years ago she was in active pastoral work. Early this year Mrs. Barr was scheduled to start an eight weeks' campaign in St. Louis, cooperating with the Women's Federation of that city. She heads a party of nine workers, men and women, experts in all phases of religious work. At each revival campaign a large tabernacle is constructed by volunteer labor.

THE Hofmeister Evangelistic Party has just closed a four weeks' campaign with the Wyandotte Evangelistic Association, in the First Presbyterian Church at Wyandotte, Mich. Over 180 confessed Christ, and more than 100 gave pledges to daily Bible reading and prayer.

What we think causes more indigestion than what we eat.

Your Child's Success Starts Here



When your boy or girl grows up and launches into a successful career, the dominating thought will always be, "What a splendid start I got at home."

Or, if failure comes, the lack of proper home training will be remembered with bitterness.

Your child's success is in your hands—it starts at home. The discipline-control you impart to your child is the biggest success factor of all. Fine schooling, good family, high intentions, all go for naught without the vital essential of tactful discipline.

R. C. Beery, A. B. (Columbia), M. A. (Harvard), President of the International Academy of Discipline, has written a highly instructive Introductory Course in Child Training, for parents. This book is absolutely free—it goes to you without any strings or obligations. Thousands of parents have already written for it. This valuable Introductory Course tells how, day by day, without any added effort on your part, you can impart to your boy or girl the discipline-control which will stand them in such good stead throughout their entire careers.

Success or Failure Is in Your Hands

Do you want your boy or girl to command success and respect? Do you want your child to be a leader—to rule others—to win the high places which life holds for those that are properly equipped? It is in your hands.

The Free Introductory Course tells why and how. Send for it today. No charge. No obligation. Mail the coupon NOW.

International Academy of Discipline
Dept 303 Pleasant Hill, Ohio

INTERNATIONAL ACADEMY of DISCIPLINE
Dept. 303 Pleasant Hill, Ohio
Without cost or obligation on my part, send Introductory Course for Child Training for Parents.
Name ....
Address ....

Correspondence Bible Study

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."
2 Timothy, 2:15

Correspondence Study Has Been Demonstrated as a Most Efficient Educational Method

The Moody Bible Institute has a fully equipped department exclusively devoted to teaching by correspondence.

Our aim is for careful business administration, most efficient teaching, and courteous attention to all inquirers and students.

Our courses are thoroughly tested and increasingly popular. Notwithstanding the world war, which has affected our work in many parts of the world, the absorption of the people in the prosperous business conditions in our country, and the opposition of destructive criticism, large gains were made last year over any previous year. Our courses will satisfy your needs.

We Offer These Eight Courses

Synthetic Bible Study
—a fascinating study of the contents of the whole Bible, "really in a class by itself."

Practical Christian Work
—for soul winners and workers in exceptional forms of Christian service.

Bible Doctrine
—a biblical course in the great doctrines of the Christian faith.

Bible Chapter Summary
—a unique method of becoming acquainted with every chapter in the Bible.

Introductory Bible Course
—true to its name.

Evangelism
—nothing in modern evangelism overlooked.

Christian Evidences
—an old subject brought up to date.

THE SCOFIELD BIBLE CORRESPONDENCE COURSE
—a scholarly, comprehensive, tested for a quarter of a century, and taken already by ten thousand students, is still presented as the most comprehensive course in Bible study ever offered by correspondence.

Write For Full Particulars to
The Moody Bible Institute
153-163 Institute Place Dept. F-8 Chicago, Illinois

MAULE'S SEEDS

Once Grown Always Grown

GUARD against failure in your flower garden by using Maule's seeds—each lot tested for vigor and growing power, and backed by our 40 years success as seed growers.

The Maule Seed Book
176 pages full of valuable gardening information Free

Include 10c. and get Maule's 40th Anniversary Offer of Pansy Seed, a generous packet of the beautiful and hardy Giant Pansy, a carefully prepared mixture of the largest pansies known. Our direct-to-you selling method means economy and fresh seeds.

Wm. Henry Maule, Inc.
2132 Arch Street
Philadelphia, Pa.

Patent Your Ideas!
Books "What to Invent" and "How to Obtain a Patent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report regarding patentability.
CHANDLEE & CHANDLEE, 1164 F Street, Washington, D. C.

Paint Without Oil

Remarkable Discovery That Cuts Down the Cost of Paint Seventy-Five Per Cent.

A Free Trial Package is Mailed to Everyone Who Writes.

A. L. Rice, a prominent manufacturer of Adams, N. Y., has discovered a process of making a new kind of paint without the use of oil. He calls it Powdrpaint. It comes in the form of a dry powder and all that is required is cold water to make a paint weather proof, fire proof, sanitary and durable for outside or inside painting. It is the cement principle applied to paint. It adheres to any surface, wood, stone or brick, spreads and looks like oil paint and costs about one-fourth as much.

Write to Mr. A. L. Rice, Manufacturer, 107 North Street, Adams, N. Y., and he will send you a free trial package, also color card and full information showing you how you can sav a good many dollars. Write today.

A SMALL FARM in California will make you more money with less work. You will live longer and better. Delightful climate. Rich soil. Low prices. Easy terms. Sure profits. Hospitable neighbors. Good roads, schools and churches. Write for our San Joaquin Valley illustrated folders free. C. L. Seagraves, Industrial Commissioner, A. T. & S. F. Ry., 1988 Ry. Exch., Chicago.

KIDDER'S PASTILLES For 50 yrs. Standard Relief for (Inhalation) Asthma All Druggists; or by mail, 35c.
STOWELL & CO., Manufacturers, Charlestown, Mass.

$25 A WEEK IN CASE OF ACCIDENT OR ILLNESS
Paid by our new Premium Dividend Accident and Health Policies. $5000 for Death. Premium $15 or $20 yearly. We want Agents everywhere to sell these policies. Big money can be made by hustlers. For particulars write
North American Accident Insurance Co., Dept. F. Newark, N. J.

Young People's Topics for February 25

Christ's Power to Keep Us

Epworth League Topic. Matt. 28 : 20; Ps. 91 : 1; II Tim. 1 : 12; Phil. 4 : 6, 7; Jude 24

THE follower of Buddha or of Mohammed may visit the shrines made sacred by their one-time association with his prophet; he may gain something of inspiration by reading the teachings of his religion in the places where the founder taught, and so may the Christian; but the follower of Christ needs only to go to his knees, to open his heart Godward, and he will be in the presence, not of a sacred shrine, but of the Christ himself. Christ alone, of all who ever sought to lead men to holier living, was able to leave this earth and yet to remain in it; for Christ alone was God. And with his last great commission to "Go into all the world" was given the last and possibly the greatest promise, "Lo, I am with you alway."

Preserves in glass jars are considered to have "kept" only when they have not "worked." Some people seem to feel that they will be kept in a "glass jar" variety of religion, to which working is utterly foreign. Their static powers are unlimited. If we read the promises aright, however, Christ has promised the comfort and power of his spirit to those who "go into all the world." Your part of the world may be your own home or neighborhood or town, or it may be far over seas, but, if you enter it in Christ's name, his power will be constantly with you and you will be able to say "with exceeding joy," "I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him."

The Appeal of Foreign Missions to Young Life

B. Y. P. U. Topic Phil. 3 : 1–16 (Conquest Meeting)

YOUNG life loves and seeks adventure, and there is a considerable element of adventure in Foreign Missions. The stories of pioneers like Carey and Judson and Livingstone lose their tragedy in the lapse of years; their sacrifices and sufferings fade into the background as we scan the story of their triumphs. Our eyes dim as we read of Judson's loss of wife and child, as we see Livingstone die alone in an African hut; but straightway we look upon the thousands of native Christians whose present faith is part of the harvest from the field then sowed, and we cry, "Isn't it glorious to have done this?" Glorious it is; and it must be part of the plan of God that the story of heroism and sacrifice, of undaunted faith, of persistent, loving effort in the face of unbelief, derision, physical suffering, death even; the story of final success but of half-manned fields, of peoples crowding toward the Christ, of converts who have believed but cannot be received because there are none to instruct them; the story that is the story of missions—it must be, we say, a part of the plan of God that this story should find a response in young lives. For strong young lives are needed as never before, not only on the firing-line of missions, but at the home base where the missionary interest must be kept at white heat if the man in the field is to be supported in his work. Some day the kingdoms of this world will be the kingdom of our Lord. The day is brought nearer by the missionary spirit of intense love and loyalty, the spirit that transmutes sacrifice into privilege, that is willing to count all things loss for the gain of Christ.

The House Mission Boards of My Denomination. What They Are and What They Can Do

Christian Endeavor Topic. Isa. 35 : 1–10

IT is the business of a Home Mission Board to make a highway for holiness in the desert, whether that desert happens to be a newly opened irrigation district in the West or a hundred-year-old tenement district in an Eastern city, in which foreign-born people, struggling for a mere pittance, living in poverty and ignorance, would remain forever alien to our land and its purposes but for the searching out of such by the home missionary. The Home Mission Board keeps the cause of Christ in the vanguard of civilization; it makes citizens of the aliens, and Americans of the immigrants. It keeps the church doors open in places where, but for it, faithful hands that are too few would fail of victory. Sometimes two boards working from denominational standards will keep two churches open where one would better promote the cause of Christ. But this condition is passing, and there is now little waste of money and effort in such duplication. The trail of the home missionary from the Alleghanies to the Pacific is marked by strong churches which have grown from the preaching-places he established, and the work of this pioneer of the Cross is by no means finished.

Detailed information for this topic should be secured from the Home Mission Boards themselves. It is not possible to give adequate treatment here to the work of all the boards in which the members of the Christian Herald Family are interested.

A Great Missionary Gone

THE death of the Rev. William Alexander Parsons Martin, D.D., LL.D., marks the passing of one of the last of the great pioneer missionaries of the modern church. He died in Peking, China, December 17, 1916, in his ninetieth year—the senior in age and continuous service of all the foreigners resident in that country. When Mr. Martin and his young wife were appointed missionaries to China by the Presbyterian Board in 1849, the small ship was four months and nineteen days in making the voyage. They found a China still under the sway of age-old superstitions. Only five cities had been opened as ports by treaty: Nanking, Shanghai, Amoy, Canton and Foochow. The interior was almost unknown to the outside world. Missionary work was in its infancy. There were less than 300 Protestant Christians in the whole empire. The Presbyterian Board had only three stations, with twenty-four missionaries. Today there are 5,338 missionaries of all Protestant denominations, 20,460 Chinese ministers, teachers and evangelists, 6,716 stations and outstations, 3,880 churches with 330,926 members.

Young Martin speedily won recognition as an expert in international law. His fame grew among the Chinese as well as in the diplomatic world, and in 1868 the emperor asked him to organize the International Law and Language School in Peking, called the Tung-Wen College. This college has been well called "the first little rill from which the refreshing waters of Western learning trickled into the minds of the coming statesmen of China." Soon he was made president of the college.

After the Boxer uprising he returned to America for rest. He went back to take the presidency of the new government university at Wuchang, and after fulfilling this engagement asked the Presbyterian Board to reappoint him in connection with the Union Mission College at Peking, refusing to accept any salary. The Board made him an honorary member of the North China Mission. "When I saw him in Peking in 1909," writes the Rev. Arthur H. Brown, "the son of Yuan Shi Kai, afterward president of the Chinese Republic, was coming regularly three times a week to Dr. Martin's residence to receive special instruction in political economy and international law."

Dr. Martin was probably more familiar with China than any other foreigner in his generation. As an author he was prolific. The missionaries of the second and third generations, who are now conducting the work in China, owe much to the mighty men of the pioneer era, among whom Dr. Martin occupied a distinguished place.

GIVEN TO YOU WITHOUT EXPENSE

Parlor Rocker No. Q65). Given with a $10 purchase of Products.

Any one of these useful pieces of furniture would cost you $8 or $10 at retail. We give you your choice with a $10 purchase of foods, soaps, toilet preparations and other household supplies (choicest quality, fresh, pure—direct from us, the manufacturers. There are over 1600 Premiums from which to choose—furniture of all kinds, carpets, rugs, stylish new dresses, coats and others.

NEW SPRING CATALOG FREE

Send for it today. Shows how you can furnish your home without any expense whatever, just by buying needed household supplies direct from us, instead of at the store.

Send Coupon at Once

Fill out this Coupon and mail it to our nearest address today, or write a postal mentioning this magazine. Over two million people profit by using our Catalog and you will profit too. Send the Coupon and see!

Parlor Table No 1850. Given with a $10 purchase of Products.

Cedar Chest No. 050. Given with a $10 purchase of Products.

TRY ANY ONE AT OUR EXPENSE

Larkin Co. Buffalo Chicago Peoria

Send postpaid your Catalog No 63

Name ....

Address ....

C. P. 337

SMYTH'S 60 INCUBATOR

ALL STEEL

ON 30 DAYS' FREE TRIAL $3.92

HOLDS FULL 60 EGGS

$3.92 60 EGGS

To quickly popularize SMYTH'S All Steel 60 Egg Incubator, we will sell 5,000 at only $3 92 each. Guaranteed to hatch as large a per cent of strong, healthy chicks as any incubator made, regardless of name, make or price. Made of polished steel; with double walled air chamber, 1917 improved disc regulator, standard thermometer visible through lass damper, best safety metal lamp, heat distributing drum around uter edges, water jacketed heat flue and automatic heat regulation nsuring even temperature and moisture in every part of egg chamer, and proper heat to eggs all the time. Full directions with ach incubator. SEND $1.00 deposit and we will send you this high-grade, latest improved SMYTH'S all eel 60 egg incubator by express, subject to examination. Pay alance $2.92 and express charges to agent after you find the incuator perfectly satisfactory and the greatest incuator bargain in the world, then take it home and TRY IT 30 DAYS at our risk and if you do not find it as good a hatcher as you ever saw or heard of, regardless of price or make, or f for any reason you are dissatisfied, return at our expense and we ill refund your $3.92 and freight harges If you want incubator sent by PARCEL POST send $3.92 and enough money extra to pay the parcel post postage and we'll send on same liberal trial offer as above. Shipping weight 19 lbs. We make very low prices on larger incubators, brooders, and poultry supplies of all kinds in our big free incubator Catalog sent you free upon request. Order incubator or catalog today.

JOHN M. SMYTH MDSE CO. 703-747 Washington Blvd. CHICAGO

Vapo Cresolene

"USED WHILE YOU SLEEP"

Established 1879

for Whooping Cough, Spasmodic Croup, Asthma, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Catarrh.

Don't fail to use Cresolene for the distressing, and often fatal affections for which it is recommended.

It is a simple, safe, effective and drugless treatment.

Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough and relieves Spasmodic Croup at once.

In asthma it shortens the attack and ensures comfortable repose.

The air carrying the antiseptic vapor inspired with every breath, makes breathing easy, soothes the sore throat, and stops the cough, assuring restful nights.

Cresolene relieves the bronchial complications of Scarlet Fever and Measles and is a valuable aid in the treatment of Diphtheria.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 37 years of successful use. Send us postal for Descriptive Booklet.

For Sale by Druggists

Try Cresolene Antiseptic Throat Tablets for the irritated throat, composed of slippery elm bark, licorice, sugar and Cresolene. They can't harm you. Of your Druggist or from us 10c in stamps.

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO. 62 Cortlandt St., New York
or Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada

Comfort Indoor Closet

Odorless, Sanitary, Germ-proof. Can be placed anywhere in home. A guarantee of healthy, sanitary conditions.

ABOLISH OUTDOOR CLOSET

Have city conveniences. Germ-life killed instantly by chemicals. Emptied once a month. Needs no other attention. Boards of Health endorse. Write for literature. Agents wanted -- exclusive territory.

COMFORT CHEMICAL CLOSET CO.
5422 Factories Bldg. TOLEDO, OHIO

Drilling Wells is a Year Round Business

Drilling Water Wells is a profitable, healthful year-round business. There are wells all around you to be drilled. Don't you want to get into a money-making business for yourself? Write for particulars. Star Drilling Machine Co.
665 Washington St., Akron, Ohio

SAMPLE OUR SEED

Three earliest vegetables in cultivation for 10c. One packet each, Robinson's Earliest Tomato, Earliest Round Red Radish, Earliest Lettuce, 10c to new customers. Regular price 30c. CATALOG FREE.
C. N. Robinson & Bro., Dept. 64, Baltimore, Md.

WANTED AN IDEA! THINK OF SOME SIMPLE THING TO PATENT. Protect your ideas, they may bring you wealth. Write for "Needed Inventions," and "How to Get Your Patent."
RANDOLPH & CO., Dept. 96, Washington, D. C.

Get This ALUMINUM SET FREE

OR CHOICE OF OTHER USEFUL PREMIUMS WITH YOUR 1917 IMPERIAL RANGE

A special offer with every Imperial Range—an elegant Pure Aluminum Cooking and Roasting Combination. Seamless and Sanitary—4 pieces. Makes 12 useful kitchen utensils, as illustrated.

30 DAYS FREE HOME TEST

PAY US NO MONEY IN ADVANCE

We take all the risk. Choose any range you want from over a hundred styles. Try it, test it for 30 days before you decide to keep it. Send it back if not satisfied.

FACTORY PRICES—WE PAY FREIGHT TO YOUR HOME TOWN

Choose Your Own Terms, if you decide to keep your Imperial—Cash or Credit. By dealing direct with our factory you pay no Freight nor Middlemen's Profit. You easily SAVE $10 TO $20 By our new 20th Century methods.

100,000 Imperials now in use. Housewives delighted. IMPERIAL RANGES are made of highest grade materials. 365 DAYS' GUARANTEE. Will not warp or crack. Have the marvelous even baking Old Dutch Oven modernized—a STONE OVEN BOTTOM—which holds heat like a Fireless Cooker. Great fuel savers and new kind of PERFECT ODOR HOOD. Test all these without risk in your home before buying any range. Write at once for

BIG FREE CATALOG with "No-Money-Risk" Trial offer. Also valuable Premiums and complete description of Imperial Ranges and their new 1917 improvements—You need this book to intelligently select a range. Write today. A letter or postal will do.

THE IMPERIAL STEEL RANGE COMPANY
680 Detroit St.
CLEVELAND, O.

LET ME INSURE YOUR SUCCESS WITH POULTRY

My world-famous high-quality incubators and brooders and my 20 Free Poultry Lessons make success easy and sure for you! Lessons given free to every purchaser of a

"SUCCESSFUL" Incubator or Brooder

Backed by 22 years of big successes and strongest guaranty ever written. Write me a postal for book and prices. "Proper Care and Feeding of Chicks, Ducks and Turkeys" sent for 10 cents. "Successful" Grain Sprouters furnish green food—make hens lay in winter. Ask about my high-grade poultry—all leading varieties.

J. S. Gilcrest, Pres.
DES MOINES INCUBATOR CO.
389 Second St., Des Moines, Ia.

$7.50 and up

10 Sample Pkts. of Flower SEEDS FREE

1 Pkt. Asters, McGregor's Mixed
1 Pkt. Fancy Pansies, Gorgeous
1 Pkt. Sum. Cypress, Burn'g Bush
1 Pkt. Peony Poppies, Double
1 Pkt. Snapdragon, Giant Fl'd
1 Pkt. Clove Pinks, Spicy Sweet
1 Pkt. Alyssum, Always Blooms
1 Pkt. Mignonette, Old Favorite
1 Pkt. Candytuft, All Colors
1 Pkt. Petunia, Free Flowering

Send 10c to pay packing, postage, etc., and we will mail these 10 pkts. selected seeds with full instructions, in a 20c premium envelope which gives you more than the seed FREE

OUR GREAT SPECIAL BARGAIN CATALOGUE SENT FREE—OVER 100 FLOWERS SHOWN IN COLORS

McGregor Bros. Co., Box 514, Springfield, Ohio

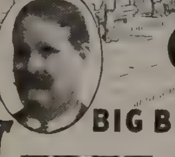
The "BEST" LIGHT

Positively the cheapest and strongest light on earth. Used in every country on the globe. Makes and burns its own gas. Casts no shadows. Clean and odorless. Absolutely safe. Over 200 styles. 100 to 2000 Candle Power. Fully Guaranteed. Write for catalog. AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.
470 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

OWN A STORE LIKE THIS! YOU CAN.

HOME OF CRISPETTES
Long's



POP CORN CRISPETTES BUILT THIS BIG BUSINESS FOR ME

FREE Secret Formula For Making Crispettes

Here's a chance for every ambitious man to get into a big money-making business for himself. Requires no experience and but little capital. Once I was just a struggling candy maker. The profits from Crispettes—the new delicious pop-corn confection—built this big business for me. The very same proposition that made me should do the same for you. I'll furnish everything—teach you Free—show you how to make Crispettes by my secret formula—show you how to succeed. You can build a business of your own as I did. Get a window—a small store—a cozy nook in a theatre lobby or similar location where the rent is low. Start the business. Keep all the profits.

Every Nickle You Take In Nets You Almost Four Cents Profit

The demand for Crispettes is enormous—everybody everywhere likes them. One sale means two, two means four and so it goes. Think of the fortunes made in 5c pieces. It's a great business. I found it so. So should you. Come to Springfield and see all this for yourself. Drop in quietly. Ask anybody about Long, about my store. Ask them if what I say isn't the truth. See the Crispette Machine just like I'll furnish you. See Crispettes made. Make a batch yourself. It's so simple, easy. You'll see—know—learn all about this business. Up to a distance of 300 miles I'll pay your railroad fare if you decide to go into the business.

Send For My FREE Book

"Dollars and Sense In The Crispette Business." It tells the complete story—gives all information. It's mighty interesting reading. Tells what others have done and what you can do. Write for it today.

This Machine Makes Big Money

W. Z. Long Company
1307 High Street
Springfield, O.

"A Train Load of Books" What Clarkson is Doing for the Book Buyer

IN several hundred thousand Libraries in the homes of people in every walk of life—from the day laborer to the college professor and high government official, from the persons who buy a few books of popular fiction, to the persons who pride themselves on having the complete works of all the standard authors in De Luxe Sets artistically printed and bound—almost every book was bought from me. WHY? Because I have no agents and sell you just the books you want—all new many at a saving of from 50 to 90 per cent. You examine the books in your own home for five days before paying for them. If not satisfied, return at my expense and owe me nothing.

Sample Prices:

When a Man's a Man. Publisher's price, $1.35. My price, 90c.
Eyes of the World. 89c.
Famous Pictures. $6 00; $1.45.
Encyclopedia of Quotations. $2.50. My price, 89c.
What All Married People Should Know. $3.00; 73c.
Buffalo Bill's Own Story of His Life and Deeds, $1 50 85c
Famous Orators. $2.50; 95c.
Law Without Lawyers. Pub. price, $2 00. My price, 45c.
Shakespeare. 24 vols. 24mo. Limp Leather, $2 65
When a Man Comes to Himself Woodrow Wilson 50c.
Jiu-Jitsu, or Art of Self-Defense. $1 25; 60c.
Key to the Bible. $3.75; 98c.
Library of Wit and Humor. $1.50; My price, 52c.
Huckleberry Finn and Other Mark Twain Books. $1.75. My price, $1.23.
Brann: The Iconoclast, 2 vols. Complete; My price, $2.25.
History of the World, 3 vols. $12.00; My price, $2 95.
Memory: How to Develop. 85c
Century Book of Health. $5.50; My price, $1.50.
New Americanized Encyclopedia, 15 vols., 3 4 Leather. Publisher's price, $75.00. My price, $14.75.
Century Dictionary and Cyclopedia, 12 vols 3-4 Leather. Publisher's price, $120.00. My price, $39.50.
New American Encyclopedic Dictionary, 5 vols., 3-4 Leather Publisher's price, $21.00. My price, $4.75.

Here are De Luxe Sets, Morocco bound, complete works, many of them at less than 25c on the dollar. Hugo, Kipling, Poe, Eliot, Dickens, Thackeray, Stevenson, and scores of others

Get My Big, New Catalogue

My new catalog, sent free for the asking, tells you how to save 50 to 90 per cent on thousands of books. It is a course in literature, giving nationalities, date of birth and death of authors, the author's life and standing in literature, etc. Hundreds of sets and thousands of single volumes listed.

I sell more books direct to the booklover—the individual reader—the rich man who insists upon his dollar's worth—the man who watches his pennies—and sell them for less money than any other man in America. Every book new and fresh, and guaranteed to please you—you to be the judge. I do not quibble, and would rather have a book or set of books returned at my expense than to have a dissatisfied customer.

DAVID B. CLARKSON, The Book Broker
203 Clarkson Building, Chicago, Illinois

HIGH-VALUE PATENTS—the ONLY kind Wanted and BOUGHT by Manufacturers. Send 8c postage for new book of Extraordinary Interest to Inventors
R. S. & A B LACEY Barrister Building, Washington D C

CALIFORNIA GERANIUMS sturdy, outdoor grown, 8 for 25c; 18, 50c; different varieties. Choice Chrysanthemums, assorted, 18 for 50c; Canterbury Bells, 50c, Sweet William 35c per dozen; prepaid. Far West Nursery, 844 Waterloo, Los Angeles

True friendship is keeping the wormy half of the apple.

To think twice before we speak once may be a good rule, but the world would be better off if some people thought seven times and then said nothing.

Merry Moments

WHEN the Merry Moments column was started we announced that we could only return contributions when postage was enclosed. Some contributors, evidently forgetting this, have written inquiring as to the non-return of their contributions.

True Stories Sent by a French Reader

A DISTINGUISHED young professor of theology at a French Protestant university was known to be of humble social origin, and the students found him rather "heavy" in the matter of speech in his first lecture. Many days had not passed, however, before they discovered, at their own expense, their professor's ready wit.

One morning some of the students put near his desk a bundle of hay. The young professor was quite equal to the occasion. Looking calmly at his audience, he said in the most natural tones: "Gentlemen, which of you has forgotten his breakfast?" At another time the students put a log of wood in the same place. He looked at it in the most amiable manner and said sweetly: "I am always glad to see a new pupil join my class."

A FAMOUS French preacher is very absent-minded. He does many funny things, about which he is the first to laugh heartily afterwards.

One night, before going to bed, he was looking, with a lamp in his hand, for something in the cupboard of his dressing-room. He set the lamp on one of the shelves. When he shut the cupboard door, he forgot the lamp inside. He remained a little while quite still, wondering; then he opened the door of his room and said to his wife in a solemn and distressed voice: "My dear, God sends me a great trial. I believe I am blind!"

The great preacher's wife was not much disturbed. She was used to these sudden calamities. Not long before, had he not come home informing her he was quite lame? She discovered he had been walking with one foot on the sidewalk and one foot on the street, and had mechanically kept up the unequal step until he got home.

So tonight she just said: "You have extinguished the lamp?"

"No."

"Then where is it?"

"I am sure I don't know. But don't you see the light?"

"I see no more than you, but we must find the lamp. I hope you did not put it where it can set fire to something."

She got up and found the lamp, which had already begun to char the upper shelf.

"You are really too bad!" laughed the great preacher's wife, returning to her bed.

"Really I am," assented her husband, overjoyed to be spared the "great trial" to which he had already tried to submit.

ANOTHER time, on a Sunday morning, preaching before a huge congregation, he several times carefully wiped his perspiring forehead with a folded pair of socks he had put in his pocket before going out instead of a handkerchief, and he never found his mistake until he was told at home. He had a good laugh over it, but went on putting in his pockets the most assorted articles, which used to be as puzzling to him as to his visitors or hearers when he proceeded to wipe his ever-perspiring forehead.

The Christmas Ship in Port

A CABLEGRAM received late in January announced the arrival at Alexandria, Egypt, of the Christmas ship Cæsar, which sailed from New York on December 16 with a cargo of food and clothing for the sufferers in Armenia and Syria. By the time this issue of the Christian Herald is in the hands of its readers, the Cæsar in all probability will have made harbor at Beirut, and its cargo will already have begun the work of mercy upon which it was sent over seas. The readers of the Christian Herald and their friends, as previously announced in these columns, had a share in that cargo to the extent of $25,000, or about one-tenth of its value. Hoffman Philip, first secretary of the United States embassy at Constantinople, boarded the Cæsar on January 10 at Malaga, Spain, to represent the State Department and to take the cargo through the blockade into Syria.

Cablegrams recently received show a constant increase in the distress and need which the cargo of the Cæsar will but partially relieve. At last reports it had been found necessary to include among those receiving help Greeks deported from Macedonia and Thrace and from other parts of the Turkish empire and concentrated in camps far from their homes. Many thousand Ottoman Turks, especially women and children, were also feeling the pinch of mounting prices and of lessening stores of foodstuffs. Nearly 200 missionaries of the American Board and other societies, and consular representatives, are now giving their whole time to the work of relief in Syria; and yet the demands of the work exceed both the strength of the corps of workers and the funds at their command.

Similar reports come from the other fields in which committees are responsible to the Christian Herald. From Holland, Poland, Galicia, Belgium and France there comes constantly the insistent cry for help. The nations at war are giving freely; in fact, England and Germany are each reported to have given more for the relief of distress among populations beggared by the war than America has yet given, and the financial strength of both nations has been called on again and again for the utmost sacrifices for the immediate expense of war. America at peace, and prospering with a surplus in spite of high prices, and with less suffering within her gates than in many years, faces, in this terrible need abroad, both an opportunity and a duty.

The opportunity is to show mercy; the duty is to examine carefully and prayerfully every item of expenditure and to make sure that we waste nothing or spend nothing without need in order that every possible dollar may be available to buy food for those who, except we give and give largely, must certainly perish, and perish miserably in that most horrible of deaths, slow and certain starvation.

The Monthly Offering Clubs by their growth give evidence of the growing conviction on the part of Christian Herald readers of the necessity of meeting this relief situation as fully and completely as possible by regular sacrificial giving. We urge consideration of these clubs because we are daily more and more convinced that only by assuring a steady and constant stream of money and material can the women, children and old people in these stricken lands be carried through these days of terror to the days of restoration in peace.

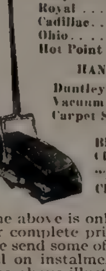
Please address your gifts to the Christian Herald, Room 93, Bible House, New York City. In due course acknowledgment will appear in the paper. State any preference you may have as to the use you wish made of your gifts.

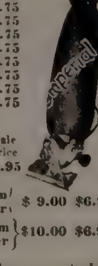
New Gifts for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the War

Friends, Howell & Rockham, S D	$44.50
W R Adams	23.00
Friend, Essex Fells, N J	30.00
Union Ch, Bristol Sprgs, N Y	17.82
Ella A Erbe	4.00
Mrs J W True	1.05
Lucy L Herrington	10.14
Mr & Mrs H M Davis & Son	11.00
Jeff Eskew	2.03
U S S, Sunderland, Vt	.85
Three Friends, Topeka, Kans	7.00
Luth Ch, Springfield, Pa	8.00
Mrs R E Tuthill	6.00
Worden Sunshine S S Cl	2.25
B J S, Shiloh, O	3.50
Ernest Reinburg	4.00
Presby S S, Pine Grove Mills, Pa	12.00
Cong'l Ch, Estelline, S Dak	2.43
Charles H Thorne	4.00
Friends' Bible School, Penn, Mich	7.40
J L J Stoudt	6.00
Mrs R A Critzmeyer	.75
Mrs Phillip Miller	3.50
M T B	.40
Lydia E Monefort	.40
Wm H Gray	4.37
J Vander Wonde	2.85
J M Nelson	3.50
Mrs V S Cook	6.00
Mrs L M Hoak	$3.50
Mrs L R Hollcraft	5.50
Veda Cawood	3.50
Mrs M E Carpenter	12.00
Mrs W H Landry	1.80
M D Wight	5.02
F R Falconer	3.50
Geo Beatty	4.00
Geo N Brain	2.60
Mark L Dunning	3.50
Mrs N N Bartlett	8.50
Miss Adelaide D Swift	3.50
Mrs Mary Cooper	.15
Robt M Brown	.10
J B Forsythe	6.00
Mrs W E Wilson	3.50
Mrs Wm Howard	1.25
Mrs J C Masters	.65
D Marty	16.50
Mrs R S Knode	4.65
W O Stowell	1.60
Andrew Winkler	1.90
Mrs Sarah A Brown	2.70
Miss Kate Evans	.35
Friends, Cairo, Mo	2.15
R Primmer	12.00
Mrs J W Day	3.25
John Peterson	4.00
Mrs Lizzie Brillhart & Friends	17.50
Two Sisters, Baltimore, Md	4.00
Woodbury, Mich Evan Ch	8.22
J F Bidlespacher	2.35
Union S S, Ellsworth, Nebr	3.73
Geo W Laird	1.25
People of Rock Springs, Tex	4.00
Johnson Maunsey	7.50

OUR ANNUAL SALE VACUUM CLEANERS AT BIG REDUCTIONS

Includes every known make of cleaner—about 75 different kinds, all new latest models. Greatest sale in the history of the business.





ELECTRIC POWER CLEANERS

	Regular Price	Sale Price
Norfolk	$25.00	$16.75
Imperial Model D	32.50	26.75
Frantz Premier	35.00	26.75
Western Electric	32.50	26.75
Baby Hoover	47.50	39.75
Royal	35.00	27.75
Cadillac	30.00	24.75
Ohio	32.50	25.75
Hot Point	25.00	19.75

HAND POWER CLEANERS

	Regular Price	Sale Price
Duntley Combination Vacuum Cleaner and Carpet Sweeper	$7.50	$3.95
Bissell Combination Vacuum Cleaner and Carpet Sweeper	$ 9.00	$6.90
"Twin" Combination Vacuum Cleaner and Carpet Sweeper	$10.00	$6.90

The above is only a partial list. Send coupon today for complete price list.
We send some of the cleaners on Free Trial. We also sell on instalments. We pay all express charges.
The above illustrations show the two biggest "hits" of the year, the "Twin" hand power combination Vacuum Cleaner and Carpet Sweeper and the Imperial Model D Electric Cleaner.
Our opinion as Vacuum Cleaner specialists is that these two cleaners are the best that can be obtained at any price for home use. We will gladly ship either one anywhere on 10 days' free trial. No money in advance and easy payment if you are entirely satisfied. Mention this advertisement.

Every Cleaner Guaranteed New, Latest Models
For more information about these or other cleaners send coupon today and ask all the questions you wish. Our advice is FREE.

Muenzen Specialty Co., 131 West 42nd Street, N. Y., Dept. 24
Without obligating me in any way, send complete price list of sale prices on latest models (insert the word hand or electric) .... Power Cleaners and a free copy of "How to Select a Vacuum Cleaner" which contains information of great value.

Name..............................
....

Why Be Thin?

I can improve your figure—build up your strength—make you weigh what you should. I know I can, because I have helped over 35,000 women gain 10 to 35 pounds—not only gain flesh, but they are now, oh, so well—and rested!

One pupil writes: "One year ago I weighed only 100 pounds—now I weigh 126, and, oh, I feel so well!"

I want to help you attain your proper weight. In your room. Without drugs. By scientific, natural methods such as your physician approves.

If you only realized how surely, how easily, how inexpensively your weight can be increased, I am certain you would write me at once. You will surprise your family and friends.

Do write! I want so much to help you as only a woman can. I've had a wonderful experience. Let me tell you about it. Write for my Free Booklet, No. 22.

Susanna Cocroft
Dept. 18. 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago

Low Cost Heat

Get Our Wholesale Price

On this unbeatable quality hot air furnace. Quick shipment direct from manufacturers. We Pay Freight. Heats the whole house through one register. Separate cold air returns. Easy to install. Powerful and healthful heating plant at money-saving price, cash or credit. Satisfied owners everywhere. Write today.

Ask for Catalog No. 927
KALAMAZOO STOVE CO.
Manufacturers, Kalamazoo, Mich

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You" Trade Mark Registered

$8.55 Buys World's Champion Belle City Incubator

140 Egg Size Prize Winning Model—Hot-water—Double-walled—Copper Tank—Thermometer Holder—Deep Nursery—Self-regulating. When ordered with $4.85 Hot-water 140 chick Brooder, both cost only $12.50.

Freight Prepaid East of Rockies

Satisfaction Guaranteed

Over 524,000 Satisfied Users

Save time—Order Now—Share in my

$1,000 Cash Prizes

Conditions easy to get biggest Prize—Free Book "Hatching Facts" tells all—Gives short cuts to Poultry Success—Write for it today. Jim Rohan, Pres.

90 Days' Trial

Belle City Incubator Co., Box 127 Racine, Wis.

HOME STUDY leading to degrees from old residential college.
DR. C. WALKER, 6922 Stewart Ave., Chicago

Smith Grove S S, E Dinwiddie Circuit, Va Conference	$7.00
Margaret Adair	30.00
John Petherick	8.00
Vidalin Luth Ch, Arka, N D	23.45
Luther Ch, Gardar, N D	11.60
Vikur Luth Ch, Mountain, N D	7.10
Churches, Farmington, Ill	6.00
L C Tobias	8.55
S S Class, Brimson, Minn	4.00
Advent Church, Friendship, Me	7.50
Sand Creek S S, Williston, N D	3.20
Kellerton Ch, Vienna, S D	12.75
Friends, West Leyden, N Y	6.00
Emma Brook	30.00
Four Mound Union S S, Spokane, Wash	7.02
J C Boot	7.00
Samuel Mahood	6.00
—— La Clede, Ill	.10
J T Larsen	7.00
Miss E M Mason	6.00
Benj S Barton	3.54
—— Grapeland, Texas	12.50
S S, La Harpe, Kans	1.10
Walnut Grove Aid So, M P Ch, Bellefontaine, Ohio	3.50
J K Judy	30.00
Friend, Lyons, Kans	4.00
John Atha	2.60
Mrs E B Fitzgerald	4.00
Priscilla Class M E S S, Dexter, Me	6.00
Covington U P Ch, Linwood, N Y	30.00
Mrs L H Cowie	4.00
Friends, Basin, Wyo	6.00
Union S S, Pleasant Ridge Presby Ch	1.25
John Maxted	3.50
Alameda & Rachel Gustafson	4.00
S S & Friends, Dafter, Mich	24.50
Amanda L Taylor	9.20
Mrs N B Henry	2.75
Rev & Mrs S B Leary	4.00
Meth, Bapt, Presby & A R Presby Chs, Camden, Ala	60.00
Children's Home Springfield, Mo	1.61
—— Denison, Texas	8.00
J M Holmes	12.00
W R Cuthbert	50.00
H A Love	25.00
Joseph Gledhill	25.00
A Mottaz	25.00
Anderson & Lavalley	25.00
J W Winter	20.00
Crouch Family	20.00
J S Wolfe	20.00
G L Harrington	15.00
Women's Missy So, Fruit Hill Ch, Berwinsdale, Pa	15.00
Friend, Trowbridge, Calif	15.00
Sister & Brother of Md	15.00
W R McMurray	10.00
W D Benedict	10.00
Helping Hand Soc, M E Ch, Phila, Pa	10.00
Annie M & Mary E Kimball	10.00
The Lord's Tithe, Bedford, Ohio	10.00
Elizabeth Brook	10.00
S F Findlay, Ohio	10.00
F V Edwards	10.00
Kings Daughters' Circle, Hammond, N Y	10.00
Mrs L R Hannah	10.00
"D Ph", Troy, N Y	10.00
A N Falk	10.00
Caroline Harvey	10.00
Susan Margrave	10.00
J O Murphree	10.00
John W Kennon	10.00
Albert Bucknall	10.00
—— Columbus, Ohio	10.00
M Moon	10.00
F Nancolas	10.00
J W Mason	10.00
Mrs C P Dey	10.00
Geo Sheriff	10.00
Mr & Mrs J F Camper	10.00
L W Freeman	10.00
W C Zalman	5.00
Mrs Sarah C North	5.00
B L N	5.00
L E C	5.00
Reader, Worcester, Mass	5.00
Mr & Mrs H A Watkins	5.00
E P Hunter	5.00
Mrs Martha Murley	5.00
C E Hobbs	5.00
L H Marsh	5.00
Roy Hubbs	5.00
Johnsville, U B Ch, Shauck, O	5.00
Mrs M S Ballock	5.00
Swedish Ladies Aid Soc, San Bernardino, Calif	5.00
Capt W F Holland	5.00
J L Crothers	5.00
Mrs Harlan & Family	5.00
Templeton Family	5.00
Chas Shedd	5.00
Mrs Mary M Chance	5.00
Ida B White	5.00
W H Van Dyke	5.00
Miss Elizabeth E Grime	5.00
Neilson Family	5.00
T A Garland	5.00
Mrs M M Parsons	5.00
J F Mowe	5.00
V K Zambakian	5.00
Miss L P Fant	5.00
Miss E Louise May	5.00
Mrs Nettie Tucker	5.00
Friend, Washington, D C	5.00
A F H	5.00
L W Felter	5.00
Mr & Mrs W A Atkinson	5.00
Mr & Mrs Daniel Heimlich	5.00
Jessie Williams	5.00
Mr Edgar Logan	5.00
A Arneson & Family	5.00
Mrs S H Baumgartner	5.00
Jas R Raup	5.00
Eugene Franckle	5.00
—— Live Oak, Fla	5.00
Mrs S J Huffman	5.00
F A Shannahan	5.00
J N Webster	5.00
Mrs Mary A Folwell	5.00
Free Bapt S S, Rio Grande, O	5.00
Mrs John F Hargett	5.00
Miss A L Rice	5.00
Mrs C M Eggleston	5.00
Cora M Richards	3.00
Grace M Swertfager	3.00
Mrs Warren Graves	3.00
Mrs A A Stentz	3.00
R Veenker, Sr	3.00
Mrs A S Abbey	3.00
Miss E V Wordson	3.00
"Q," Oneonta, N Y	3.00
Chas Swindells	3.00
Welsh C M Ch, Portage Prairie, Wisc	3.00
Gleaners Class, Westminister, Md	3.00
Two Friends, Newton, N J	2.50
Mrs Dexter Bennett & Mrs Delia S Gardner	2.50
Asa N Bird	2.00
Mrs Aikins	2.00
Reader, Weaverville, N Car	2.00
Wm Heacock	2.00
Mrs A H Johnson	2.00
W A H	2.00
J E Horton	2.00
Mrs A G F	2.00
Mr & Mrs Ed Anderson	2.00
Spangler Sisters	2.00
Mrs M E Case	2.00
Anna O Rasmussen	2.00
Rev C H & Mrs Stickle	2.00
Mrs Chas Sheff	2.00
Marie C Meyer	2.00
Mrs F Fuller	2.00
M J Mowe	2.00
L E Harris	2.00
Loyal Daughters of Burt Lake, Mich	2.00
A E Radford	2.00
Mr & Mrs J F Chandler	2.00
M L Messer	2.00
Mrs Mary McKinley	2.00
Nora Gutekunst	2.00
Mrs G M Campbell	2.00
E R Langill	2.00
Helen R Simpson	2.00
Miss A H Ames	2.00
Symphathizer, Wilmington, Del	2.00
Miss F M Emmons	2.00
Friend, Storm Lake, Iowa	2.00
Mrs C F Wilken	1.50
Three Friends, Newman, N Y	1.50
Mrs H W Whitmore	1.00
Friend, Brookville, Ohio	1.00
S A Cook	1.00
Mary A Fleming	1.00
Mrs T T Adams	1.00
Louis De Lancett	1.00
John McBride	1.00
Mrs H E Glich	1.00
Ira Clynick	1.00
Fred Ault	1.00
Fabian Le Blanc	1.00
Otto Moran	1.00
Fred Johnson	1.00
John Bodey	1.00
Joe Chappell	1.00
Alfred Peterson	1.00
Lenora Highland	1.00
Mrs John Steinke	1.00
Mrs Ray Remine	1.00
Mrs E J Hamil	1.00
Friend, Owego, N Y	1.00
Subscriber, Paris, Texas	1.00
Blanche F Walden	1.00
Viola Wehrs	1.00
Mrs M A Fitze	1.00
Mrs E R Metcalf	1.00
Mrs Aug Lindahl	1.00
John L Hoffman	1.00
Mrs G D	1.00
Friend, Boone, Iowa	1.00
Sympathizer, Newark, N J	1.00
Rosa N Pierce	1.00
Mrs J McPoland	1.00
D Meyer	1.00
Mrs Sarah Rea	1.00
Alice Slade	1.00
Mrs L J Andrus	1.00
Helen L Weller	1.00
J W Hand	1.00
Mrs H J Tubb	1.00
E V Skinner	1.00
Mrs E M Tracy	1.00
Friend, Three Rivers, Mich	1.00
Flett S S, Tacoma, Wash	1.00
A M Gibson	1.00
S R Gregg	1.00
J E Sawders	1.00
A N Hall	1.00
Mrs E F Newell	1.00
Mrs E F Woodbury	1.00
A S Weaver	1.00
Friend, Hillsboro, N H	1.00
Miss C V Lockland	1.00
Mrs F Bartlett	1.00
E J C	1.00
Mrs W M McCarthey	1.00
—— Ogden, Ia	1.00
Sarah E Hermance	1.00
Agnes L Sherrett	1.00
Louise McIntyre	1.00
Mr & Mrs E D Eubank	1.00
Mrs Marshall P Clark	1.00
Ida Van Loon	1.00
Mildred Gfeller	1.00
Thurlow W Shugart	1.00
Miss Margaret Griffins	1.00
Elmy E Gibson	1.00
E B, Martins Ferry, O	1.00
Miss S E Lyle	.50
L W	.50
Mrs E H Sheets	.50
Hazel Barter	.50
E E Anderson	.50
In His Name, N Y	.25
James Mowe	.25
Mildred Mowe	.25
A R Failing	400.00
Geo Ravn	12.70
S S Grayson, Nebr	11.90
A L Grissinger	4.00
Mrs S J Stallings	6.00
L J Tyler	9.00
Mrs M W Baird	7.00
—— Napoleon, Ohio	6.00
Presby Ch, Delia, Kans	20.50
Presby Ch, Rossville, Kans	13.85
France S S, Parker, Kans	2.75
Kanesholm S S, Mt Jewett, Pa	23.23
John Roehrer	1.25
Miss Amanda Warner	4.00
Mr & Mrs S M McCanliss & Daughter	2.25
Hebron Bapt S S, King, Va	13.75
Monmouth, Calif, U P Ch	28.20
Mr & Mrs C J Cain & Daughter	4.00
Oak Forest S S, Norwood, Mo	1.04
Mrs C A Dunn	1.40
Mother's Class, Johnson Memorial Ch, Huntington, W Va	6.50
Mazeppa Union SS, Lewisburg, Pa	12.05
Friends, Ogdensburg, Wisc	10.75
Bethesda S S, Fairfield, Iowa	3.62
Friends, Debrio, Wash	16.00
Friend, Canon City, Colo	3.50
A H Keyes	6.00
Henry Thye	4.00
Oscar Duryea	.10
S J Hedges	4.00
Mrs Garbutt	.30
U P Church, Altus, Okla	10.60
S S, Wilmore, Kans	2.65
Eliza Hilbert	8.00
John W Price	4.00
S S, Trout Lake, Wash	6.62
Goodfarm Ch of God, Mazon, Ill	18.25
G E Spangler	6.00
G A Kirkland	6.00
Friends, San Francisco, Calif	9.15
Mrs E N Tomley	30.00
Mrs E Bezant	9.00
Mrs E M Campbell	6.00
Miller S S, Miller, Ala	30.00
Mr & Mrs J C Mitchell	.80
Onita Cole	.10
Ruby Burditt	.10
H E Beckman	100.00
Mrs Margaret Wheeler	50.00
In His Name, Brinsmade	50.00
Emma C Sterrett	50.00
Mr & Mrs W C Stryker	50.00
Chris Guth, Jr	50.00
Mrs R H Overall	25.00
De Elle A Cole	25.00
Friend, Ft Collins, Colo	25.00
Ch of Brethren S S, Omaja, Cuba	25.00
Friend, Marshalltown, Iowa	25.00
Martha Hucker	20.00
E R Young	20.00
Mrs M A Conklin	20.00
Mrs C Louvisa Evitts	15.00
J K Judy	15.00
Mr & Mrs S N Vosburgh	15.00
Mrs E C Shields	15.00
Schertz Bros	10.00
Chris & Dorah Christensen	10.00
Mrs E M Dudley	10.00
O G Young	10.00
H H Morris	10.00
S A Alexander	10.00
L W Lazell	10.00
John Litchfield	10.00
G T Anderson	10.00
C B Hyde	10.00
Mrs L V Medley	10.00
Arthur J Raley	10.00
Bapt S S, Northstreet, Mich	10.00
Mr & Mrs David M Tipton	10.00
Ruth Neikirk	10.00
Mr & Mrs O Boyce	10.00
Israel Lust	10.00
Margaret Laird	10.00
James Broadwaters	10.00
Dr & Mrs Chas Hautz	10.00
Mr & Mrs L Sessions	10.00
Mrs John R Rosenberry	10.00
In His Name, Reading, Mich	10.00
—— Canton, Kans	10.00
Mr & Mrs David Harris	10.00
—— Harmarville, Pa	10.00
C G Oakes	10.00
Mr & Mrs A T Ostrom	10.00
Louis Weihe	10.00
H D Swart	10.00
Friend, Huron, Kans	10.00
M B Graham	10.00
Chas L Black	10.00
John Downs	10.00
"In His Name"	10.00
John B Bos	10.00
Mark T Warren	10.00
John Leach	10.00
Miss Abby T Arnold	10.00
A J Siekmeier	10.00
Mrs S L Garver	10.00
Harry Harp	10.00
O C Scarborough	10.00
Mrs A M Wilson	5.00
Mrs Harriet La Bar	5.00
J H Clements	5.00
Friend, Utica, N Y	5.00
P C Headley, Jr	5.00
H A Crutchfield	5.00
——Preemption, Ill	5.00
D L Feaster	5.00
G C Choate	5.00
Carrie A McBride	5.00
Mr & Mrs J E Green	5.00
S W Hanson	5.00
J R Mackentosh	5.00
E & M Francis	5.00
Mrs Adele Jaquet	5.00
Mrs E G Lautman	5.00
Wm Thiessen	5.00
Emma L Snyder	5.00
John J Snyder	5.00
Anna Emmert	5.00

Additional acknowledgments in subsequent issues of the Christian Herald.

Rubber Footwear
Holds up Colds

RUBBER footwear is the "Stop! Look! Listen!" preventive to the possible cold. It insulates the foot, keeping out cold and moisture, both of which are frequent causes of "snuffles." Many a cold in the head has traveled all the way up from "cold feet!"

GOODYEAR'S RUBBER GLOVE CO.
TRADE MARK
WALES GOODYEAR SHOE CO. TRADE MARK
BOSTON RUBBER SHOE CO. BOSTON U.S.A.
TRADE MARK
HUB MARK
UNITED STATES RUBBER COMPANY
US
RUBBER SYSTEM
AND ASSOCIATED COMPANIES
AMERICAN RUBBER CO.
TRADE MARK
"CANDEE"
TRADE MARK

But rubber footwear may be good, bad or indifferent—and only an expert can tell, by observation alone, which is which. So the leading makers put their brands on all their products to protect you. Almost from the very beginning of the rubber industry, these trade-marks have pointed the way to rubber footwear of supreme quality, style, fit and workmanship.

Seventy-four years of successful manufacturing and the experience of forty-seven great factories are back of every pair of rubber shoes, overshoes, arctics, boots, etc., produced by the United States Rubber Company, the largest rubber manufacturer in the world.

Rubbers that fit wear twice as long as rubbers that do not fit.

United States Rubber Company

Crooked Spines Made Straight

If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble you can be relieved—and probably wholly overcome your affliction—right in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who cured himself of Spinal Curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. Eminent physicians are endorsing it. The Philo Burt Method relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is invigorated and strengthened, all soreness is taken out of the back, the cartilage between the vertibræ is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed, and the spine is straightened. There is bright hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. Each appliance is made to order from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction and let you use it 30 days. Write today for our new book. It gives full information and testimonials

PHILO BURT MFG. CO., N207 Odd Fellows' Bldg., JAMESTOWN, N. Y.

Gets Into Every Nook
&
Corner
For Thorough Sanitation
Old Dutch Cleanser
Chases Dirt
Old Dutch Cleanser
Chases Dirt
MAKES EVERYTHING "SPICK AND SPAN"

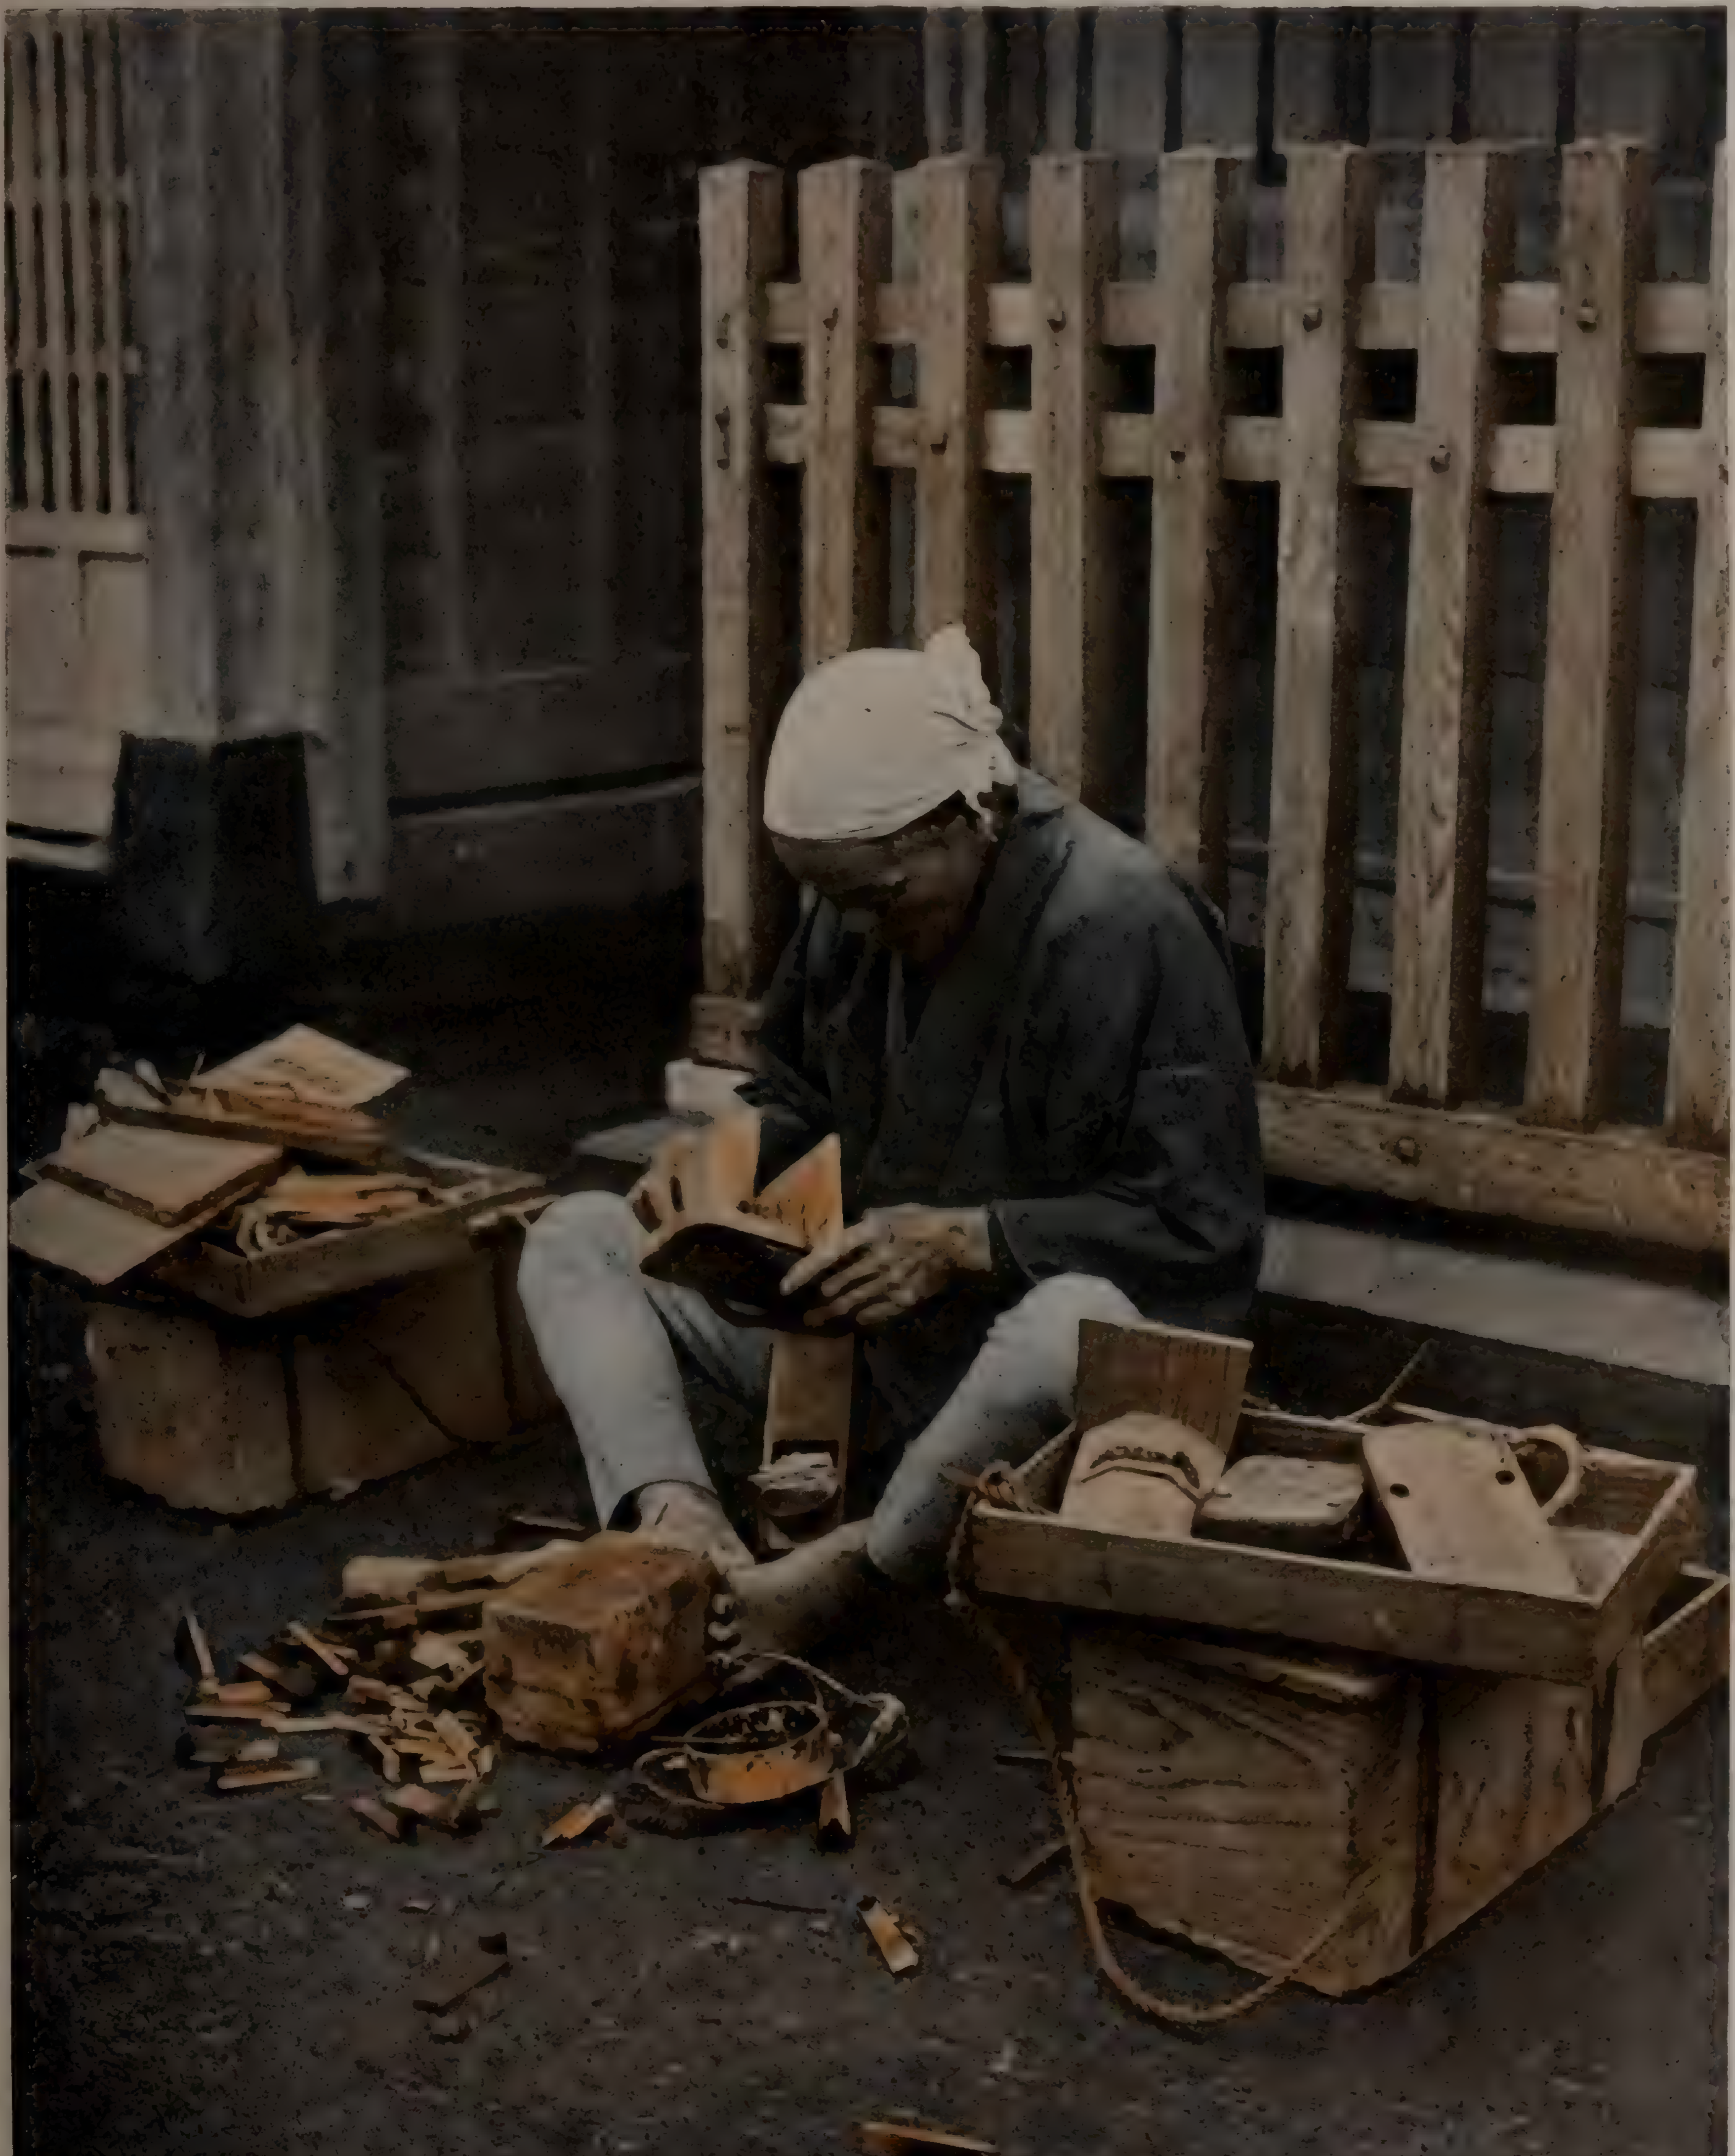
Christian Herald

COPYRIGHT, 1917, BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

SUBSCRIPTION, $2.00 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, FEBRUARY 21, 1917

VOL. 40—NO. 8. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK



From a hand colored photograph

AN ITINERANT JAPANESE COBBLER AT WORK

WITH LOOSE SEEDS
WITH PAKRO SEEDTAPE
PAKRO

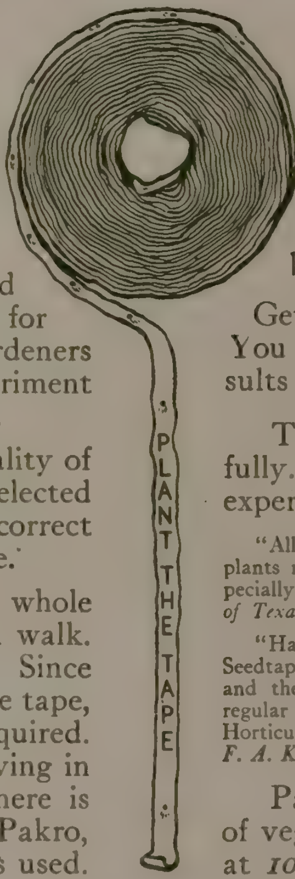
Quicker, better germination—stronger, healthier plants

JUST PLANT THE TAPE
A Row at a Time

PAKRO SEEDTAPE

TRADE MARK REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

FOR BETTER GARDENS



For healthier plants—for more luscious vegetables—for more beautiful flowers—try Pakro Seedtape this year.

You have every reason to expect much better results from Pakro. This, the most scientific improvement in planting discovered in years, has been tried and tested for you by thousands of amateur gardeners and agricultural colleges and experiment stations in all parts of the country.

Pakro consists of the finest quality of seeds, specially grown for us, and selected and tested by experts, spaced the correct distance apart in a thin paper tape.

You simply plant the tape, a whole row at a time, as fast as you can walk. What a saving in time and labor! Since the seeds are spaced correctly in the tape, practically no thinning out is required. Another even more appreciable saving in labor! In planting loose seeds there is a great deal of waste—but with Pakro, only the needful amount of seed is used. Here is still another saving.

And because the paper tape absorbs and holds moisture around these—this year's finest seeds—they germinate quicker and in a higher percentage, and assure you of fine even stands of strong, luxurious plants in beautiful straight rows.

Get Pakro for your garden this year. You will be delighted in getting better results with less labor—as others have done.

Thousands have used Pakro successfully. Here are examples of their experiences:

"All the Seedtape planted did exceptionally well. The plants made a splendid appearance and the stand was especially good."—E. J. Kyle, Dean of the Agricultural College of Texas.

"Have had a remarkable experience in planting Pakro Seedtape. They germinated in an exceptionally quick way and the plants appeared above the ground in absolutely regular order, not one missing in the several rows. I am a Horticulturist and Rancher of some little experience."—F. A. Koenig, South Paris, Maine.

Pakro Seedtape comes in 30 varieties of vegetables and 18 varieties of flowers, at 10c per package. (12½c in Canada.) Send for beautifully illustrated catalog.

$1.30 Worth for 50 Cents (in Canada 60c)

Mr. E. L. D. Seymour has just written a delightfully interesting book for Home Gardeners.

It tells in simple terms how to plan your garden, just when to plant the different Vegetables and Flowers, and just how to plant them. It gives authoritative and exact information that is easy to follow.

Mr. Seymour is author of "Garden Profits," editor of "The Garden and Farm Almanac," and is associate editor of "Country Life in America" and "The Garden Magazine." The book is beautifully bound in boards, splendidly and abundantly illustrated in colors, and its regular price is $1.00.

We will be glad to furnish those interested in the better Pakro Seedtape way of planting with a copy of Mr. Seymour's book and 3 packages of Seedtape—totalling in value $1.30—for 50c. Simply send us 50c in form of post office money order, or stamps, today, for the book and Pakro Seedtape.

American Seedtape Company, Inc.
Dept. 106 71 West 23rd St. New York City
Canadian Distributors, WM. RENNIE CO., Ltd., TORONTO

THE · CHRISTIAN · HERALD
· AN · ILLUSTRATED · NEWS · WEEKLY · FOR · THE · HOME ·

The Spiritual Stimulus of War

By EDWARD LYELL FOX

A GREAT military genius called war "the great purger." Freud, the noted Vienna scientist, found that war throws men back into their basal nature. President G. Stanley Hall of Clark University, one of America's most accomplished psychologists, wrote: "War immerses men in the rank primitive emotions." Baumann, the German psychologist, stated that "war has turned men from Nietzsche to the New Testament." Europe today is thinking of religion as it did centuries ago. Today it has a simpler and more primitive form of religion. It has been turned back to the deep sincerity that shook whole nations during the Ages of Faith. War has done that.

From the stories that soldiers repeat, it would seem that these authorities are correct. This war has indeed made Europe much more religious. Most persons, when they are about to die, think of God; an atheistic deathbed is a rarity. The war, by bringing the shadow of death closer to millions of people, has made them think of God—of religion. Protestant, Catholic, Hebrew and Mohammedan, it matters not, the war has made them better supporters of their creed; and if they have no creed, they generally get one. Many men upon whom the sight of a Bible had no effect, have begun to think of religion upon seeing a gleaming bayonet.

"At Verdun"—I quote an eyewitness of that terrific struggle—"yesterday morning, we went down to examine a long gallery which the French had dug for five hundred yards along that front. At the entrance to the main tunnel the regimental chaplain had persuaded the colonel to let a huge chamber be excavated, thirty feet under ground, and the chaplain had fitted it up as a chapel. There in that underground chapel, in the front-line trenches, at ten o'clock on Sunday morning, while cannon booming overhead in a terrific bombardment told of preparations for a German assault, we, with two hundred French soldiers, assisted at mass. We saw soldiers going to the altar and receiving communion, while two of their comrades sat in the little chamber, hollowed at one side of the chapel, with their fingers on electric buttons, ready to explode mines if the signal came that the attacking Germans had reached the mine fields. And as the services went on, the eyes of these rugged soldiers filled with tears."

Now, that little chapel is only one of thousands and thousands dug under ground all along the European battle-fronts. With men expecting that any moment may be their last, with their minds stripped of all the artificiality that peace time may have brought, with these millions of men right down to a bed-rock proposition—any moment death!—the effect of such religious services is profound.

THERE are today in the French army sixty thousand priests. The government compels them to do military service. Before the war, the workingmen and the priests of France were separated by a wide gulf. A workingman scorned a priest. The hold of the priest was on the rural districts, nearly every French farm having its crucifix. But the war has brought these freethinking French workingmen of the industrial centers and the priests together. Under arms, they have marched shoulder to shoulder. The workingmen have found that the curés are real men. They have come to like them. Without some love there can be no understanding or tolerance. Today the same workingmen who used to expectorate at the sight of a priest (I have in mind French Socialists) now gather around them when the fighting is over. The priests are tireless workers. When not on the firing-line, they are quick to hold religious services and to minister to the sufferings of the sick and give the last rites to the dead. Everywhere behind the French front are altars made of stumps of trees, broken guns, caissons, anything. When the fighting is done, the priests slip their vestments on over their uniforms and hold religious services.

This growth of religion in France during the war is of tremendous importance. Not because such a percentage of the French people are Catholics or such a percentage are Protestants. Rather, because France is one of the few nations which, as a government, attacked religion. France has been a hotbed for destructive attacks on religion. More atheism, more doubting agnosticism has come out of France than out of any other European country—and I allow for some of the German philosophers. Yet France today is in a fervor of religious exaltation. That is the important thing.

© Medem Photo Service

Russian troops, shortly after landing at Marseilles, give thanks in prayer for their safe arrival

Ex-Congressman Victor Murdock gives this insight into the French feeling. He is quoting a Frenchwoman: "Religion? It is everywhere," she replied. "In the people's faces, in their eyes, in their voices. You will find it in high, in low, in everybody. Only this morning I stopped at the little kiosk at the corner, and the woman there halted in the sale of newspapers and cried: 'Listen, Madame.' There was silence between us and all about. The air was vibrant with omen. It was like the brush of angel wings, sir, a portent. 'It is the good God,' the woman said to me, and we understood."

To the woman Murdock characterized the incident as mysticism, and demanded proof. "Go to the churches, then," she answered. "Go to Notre Dame for vespers. Go to the Madeleine. Go to the Holy Trinity. Leave Paris and traverse France. Visit Chartres and see the forest of candles aflame before the altar Pro-Patria. Watch the crowds of worshipers everywhere—crowds the livelong day, not alone for mass and vespers, but all day long." And ex-Congressman Murdock went and saw these things and could not but believe them.

LAST summer, on a section of the Somme front, when the bloody offensive was at its height, British soldiers on one section of the line stopped firing and gazed spellbound into the sky for fifteen minutes. The moon "made a cross in the heavens." Every man on that section of the line believed he saw it. The story ran through the army. A. C. Michael painted a remarkable picture of this cross in the heavens with the soldiers watching it spellbound. The picture was reproduced in periodicals. Hundreds of thousands of people saw it. Here in America, far away from the religious fervor in Europe, we have no idea what a deep impression such incidents make upon millions of people constantly expecting to hear of a dear one's death.

Robert Dunn, an American correspondent with the Austrian army, saw the soldiers at a communion service before being sent under fire. He told me that the effect upon the men was terrific; that after the sermon they kicked their toes in the frozen ground. Dunn has written of it in this way:

". . . Even as the priest arranged his vestments in a little pine-board hut with a Christmas tree stuck over it, granaten began to wail and whiffle overhead. Down the slopes came the soldiers and massed before a bench, covered with a coarse towel. Beyond the priest in his golden stomacher, a red-and-blue-clad dragoon stuck his sword into the soil and hung his helmet on it. The service began. Rank after rank, the men knelt languidly, laboredly; and when they arose after the monotones and changing keys of chanted response, they hunched up their knapsacks and kicked their freezing toes into the hard soil. . . . The priest began his sermon.

"'Dear war-comrades,' I caught after he had hung a spruce leaf upon the Christmas tree, continuing with phrases like 'Death and the battle,' and so on. The pith of it was that while soldiers in the field wanted letters from home above everything, he was there today to give them the greatest letter of all, one from God, the Bible."

I myself caught a glimpse of this deep spiritual thing at the battle front. It was reflected by one man. We were in the bombproof of Colonel Meyer, who commanded a Bavarian regiment in front of booming, blazing Ypres. I am quoting a few lines from a diary I made that night. "It's queer how you can, in a few minutes, learn the tastes and habits of a man in a place like this. The colonel is religious. There is a crucifix fastened to the burlap over my head. The colonel must sleep on this bench. At the ends of his shelf I see two other crucifixes, and there is a colored print, a Station of the Cross."

SMOTHERED by the photographic impressions of the firing line, the mind cannot give things their proper values. As I recall that bombproof now, I can understand the surfeit of crucifixes and religious pictures. The colonel never knew what day he would be killed. At the front one does not analyze such things. One's mind is running riot to virginal impressions of war. Thus, as we chased across the Russian steppes in a snowstorm on the heels of the Grand Duke's retreat, we thought of Napoleon. To think of Napoleon was conventional, but we thought of him in this way: We marveled how, in the winter—a Russian winter which we were now seeing for the first time—Napoleon was able to make the campaign to far-off Moscow in days when automobiles and railroads did not exist! But, miles away from these snowswept Russian plains, I thought again of them and of Napoleon, though in a different way. One remembered that a high church official issued an attack upon Napoleon, and that when news of it was brought to the conqueror, he sneered. "Does the old fool think that his mouth is going to make the muskets drop out of the hands of my soldiers?" And then, as one thinks again of the snow-swept Russian plains, of Napoleon retreating from Moscow, of his soldiers freezing, falling by the road, the muskets dropping from their hands . . . one wonders.

Yes, war does turn men's thoughts to religion. Go to gay, immoral Budapest. You find it today a city of sober people. You find in many of the shop windows the reproduction of a famous statue that stood "somewhere in Galicia." It was a large crucifix. A battle pivoted around it. A shell struck the statue, tore away the entire cross, and left the figure of the Christ standing and unscathed. This event made a tremendous impression upon the Hungarians. The story of it went through the army like wildfire. At Budapest, miniature statues, showing the destroyed cross and the intact figure of the Christ, were at once manufactured and put on sale. You can find them now, expensive or cheap, in nearly every Hungarian home. The pity of it is that it seems to take a war to make some people think of these things.

Consider Germany. Go, as I did, into that big Lutheran church just off the Linden. The news has swept over the city. Hindenburg once more has routed the Russians. Black-shawled women call the extras. Berlin rises out of its calmness and goes mad. Magically the cafés fill; magically they empty. I see people swarming toward a faded yellow-bricked church. They all seem fired with a zealot's praise. I go into the church after them and see them fall on their knees. . . . They are thanking God for the Russian rout. . . . I come to another church, its aisles are black with bowed backs, and the murmur of prayer drones like the hum of bees; a robed minister is intoning: "O Almighty Father, we thank thee that thou art with us in our fight for the right: we thank thee. . . ." It is very quiet in there; war seems incredibly far away. The sincerity of the people grips your heart. Something mysteriously big and reverent stirs all around. . . . Then, outside in the street, drums rattle, feet thump, a regiment is going to the front. I hurry to see it go by; but back in the church the bowed forms pray on. . . .

Like Paris, Berlin before this war was one of the most immoral cities in the world. Today, Berlin is essentially religious. The terrible pall of the war, common misery, common sympathy, have brought to every heart a devout recognition of God. This feeling of the German nation today is reflected in the utterance of its leaders. The Almighty has come into all their calculations. With death all about them, they instinctively try to invoke God. Nothing big can happen in Europe today without millions of men thinking that the Divine Hand is in it. Read the letters of the soldiers, the French, the Germans, the English. Read the letters they write back home, when they bare their souls wide and pour out their thoughts and feelings. In nine out of every ten of these letters you will find a religious strain. Yet before the war probably nine out of every ten in Europe were not given to religious thought.

Friends of mine, correspondents who have been with the Russian army, tell me that its religion is remarkable. Any one who has been in a Russian village will tell you that the peasant cannot get along without his priest and his ikon, the holy picture that hangs on the wall of his little house. Chanting priests, robed in all their vestments, have gone at the head of the Russian troops into battle, into death. There is a story which is believed by eighty per cent. of the Russian armies. The story is that when the Germans made their big drive into Russia hundreds of church bells disappeared miraculously from the churches in the territory captured by the Germans and were found soon afterward piled up in a public square in Moscow. That the Russian army took down these church bells—so the Germans would not have the metals to melt into ammunition—and transported them in freight cars to Moscow is not important. The vital point is that eighty per cent. of the Russian army believe that this miracle took place.

The Russian government makes every effort to bring religion to the soldiers at the front. In the Carpathians, the Russian priests, in all their splendid robes, used the flat-topped field kitchens and gun caissons for altars. Do you know what the peasants of Russia did when their own armies were retreating, and the German hosts were driving in, capturing one fortress after another? The peasants, of course, fled; but before they fled they did one thing. They all did the same thing: they took down the holy ikon from the wall. They saw that this religious relic was safe before they thought of packing up any material part of their belongings. Remember how Russia went into this war? The head of the Russian Church blessed the armies of the Czar.

THERE are, roughly, twenty million men today in Europe under arms. Twenty million men who any minute may be called upon to die. Twenty million men who have families thinking about them. One does not know how many million mothers, wives and children and old parents there are, going into the churches and praying day after day for their loved ones.

Twenty million men under arms! The flower of each nation, the best physically and the best mentally! Twenty million men thinking of God! And because dear ones are in danger, millions and millions more back home, thinking of God too.

War brings people into the churches on week days. Nobody waits for Sunday during these months of horror. Go into the churches of any European capital, small city, or village, and you see the bowed figures; you guess their prayers. "Save him, O Lord! Save us from all this frightful misery." It is always "Save." One begins to think about God when one wants something saved.

Do you know what a soldier told me? "Just before we go into action," he said, "every man thinks he is going to be killed. We are quite resigned to it. We are ready. If we are not killed we are very much surprised. And everybody in my company always prays after every battle, thanking Heaven that he was spared!"

When I was in Europe, I made it a point to interrogate a Protestant minister, a Catholic priest, a Hebrew rabbi and a Polish cleric of the Russian Church. My question was about religion and war. To each of them I put the same question: "What is your opinion as to the effect of this war upon religion? Will it strengthen or weaken religion?" And from every one, without hesitation, came the reply that war would strengthen religion throughout the world. And all their reasons were alike—that war swept away the philosophical cobwebs which peace had caused to grow in the minds of men, and that now, living simply, thinking simply, close to nature, the people were closer to God.

This French church, now a temporary hospital for German wounded, is still a house of prayer

Health for Everyman

By
IDA M. TARBELL

A Review of What Is Being Done in Great Industrial Plants to Conserve Human Energy

ONE of the greatest of present-day movements is that for industrial health. Its slogan is Health for Everyman. Like the safety movement, it wars on evils which the average employer has long contended were none of his business, but which, having finally recognized, he is attacking with hard common sense and professional thoroughness.

Two classes of diseases trouble industry. The first are those incident to the occupation itself—trade diseases.

There is no class, trade, profession or activity of men and women which does not have a possible physical evil accompanying it. A book has been written on the "Disorders of People of Fashion"; one might equally well be written on the "Disorders of Bankers and Brokers." Writers have their cramp and artists their colic. If classes with the means to control their conditions and to secure the best advice on avoiding the evils incident to their lives still are so afflicted that they are the support of hundreds of cures as well as of tens of thousands of physicians, nurses, masseurs and pharmacists, what can we expect of the millions who work in industries where they have no control over surroundings and no instruction as to the dangers of their occupations?

These diseases, which have made frightful havoc with national health, come from dozens of different causes. They are the results of poisonous metals and gases, of inflaming dusts and germs, of air pressure and of strain. The potter is in danger of lead poisoning, the matchmaker of "phossy jaw"; textile workers fear tuberculosis, washerwomen eczema. The stonemasons, sugar-refiners, candy-makers all have skin diseases peculiar to their trades. Gardeners are in danger from the seventy or more poisonous plants they handle. Anthrax threatens those who work with animals or animal products, whether they be sorters, butchers, shepherds or cattle salesmen. There is a big range of tremors and palsies, of spasms and neuroses traceable to shop and factory conpitions. Eye strains from improper lighting and from too fixed and too continuous attention, as well as injuries from dust and gases, are very general in many occupations. Our growing knowledge of the causes of many ailments which we have accepted as inevitable, and the realization of the enormous influence these things have on unhappiness and on inefficiency, have been a sharp spur to the efforts of all those who are interested in industry in any way. The intelligent employer is coming to a point in regard to occupational disease very like that he has toward safety: "Show me the disease and I will find a way to prevent its ravages." But just as safety is one-third prevention and two-thirds education and organization, so in occupational diseases education and organization are the biggest factors.

IT is obvious that health rules call for a genuine cooperation from the employer who adopts them. A workman cannot keep clean without plentiful supplies of hot and cold water, of soap and towels, as well as of basins. If the lunch is to be eaten outside of the work-room there must be a lunch-room. If work clothes are to be left at the factory there must be lockers. If gloves and goggles and respirators and milk are required there must be provision for them. The employer who is intelligent enough to set up rules will be intelligent enough to make it possible for the workman to obey them.

It is not always easy to secure cooperation from the labor force even when the best equipment has been provided and the most careful instruction given. The difficulties of persuading men and women to wear respirators where there is irritating or toxic dust is even greater than that of persuading those who use emery wheels to wear goggles or those who run saws to keep on the guards. An eye out, a finger off, is the terrible lesson which enforces the use of goggles and guards. But dust gives no such spectacular demonstration. Its victims grow pale and drop out. Their companions accept death as one of the mysteries of life, inevitable and unescapable, or as the "will of God." To teach them the connection between the death and the dust is a slow process, but it is the obvious duty of those who employ them.

The attempt to control occupational diseases begins in the employment bureau of the modern factory by a thorough physical examination. Indeed, in hiring nowadays it is a man's body which receives the first attention. "We are not hunting perfect physical specimens," Dr. Farnum, the medical supervisor of the Avery Company of Peoria, Ill., says. "What we are trying to do is to ascertain whether the individual man's physical condition is compatible with the work he is going to do." Is the man in condition to resist the peculiar danger in the occupation? A physical examination ought to show this. I know shops where no man or woman with incipient tuberculosis will be received. They are told frankly of their condition and urged to seek work in the open. Is the man strong enough to do the work? That is a matter not difficult to decide, and its decision prevents many a poor fellow straining himself to injury in too heavy tasks.

The modern employment bureaus know enough not to send a girl whose eyes are poor to a machine where the operation requires the strongest and steadiest sight. It does not put a man with a wooden leg to working a treadle which requires the leg muscles of a first baseman. It sends the girl to an oculist and often tells her to apply again when her trouble is corrected, and not infrequently it finds something the man with a wooden leg can do.

While the preliminary examination prevents men from taking work where all the physical odds are against them, it often for the time demonstrates to a man a handicap which he has never suspected. If it does not give him the work he wants it gives him valuable knowledge about his body which he probably would not have had until too late. He is obliged to face his handicap. The weak point is that he probably does not know how to seek a cure, or if he does he has not the means. It can hardly be expected of employers that they take care of applicants, though there are cases where it is done. The obligations here would seem to rest on outside social agencies.

When the wage earner begins to get interested in possessing and occupying such houses as these, it is part of the health policy of Industry to get him to surround his home with grass and flowers and to start a vegetable garden, knowing that such environment makes for better men and women

THERE is no question but that the best interest of the labor force is served by a refusal to accept those who are unfit for a particular task. The relation of the health of the whole to that of the part is obvious. There is a close connection, too, between disease and accidents.

"We think it would be reprehensible," the management of the Commonwealth Steel Company says, "if we did not know that a man had only one eye and would therefore put him where he might be in danger of having his good eye knocked out. We should for his own good and that of his fellow workmen know he is not subject to "fits" or conditions that might let him fall into things or off of places. We feel we should know that men who operate our twenty big overhead cranes are in physical and mental condition to properly handle big loads over other men's heads."

The man who is accepted as a good risk in a modern scientific shop will find there, as has already been said, all mechanical precautions that are known to minimize the trade danger. He will find the most important of all safeguards whatever the disease—good air, regular temperature, proper sanitation. If in addition he receives an education in the precautions he ought to take, he will have as fair a chance to escape the menace of his trade as industry knows how to give.

And so you can find many such plots as this one set aside for practical gardening by the children of the bread-winner

Photos by courtesy of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company

The most important feature of his education will be the annual physical examination which is offered all employeés in a thoroughly modern organization.

In all factories where the physical examination is put into force a few old employees are almost invariably found to be suffering from serious troubles which, neglected, would soon incapacitate them. These troubles may be, too, of such a nature that the men are a menace to their fellows. There is an impression abroad that such discoveries lead to immediate discharge; that is, that the annual physical examination is really an annual weeding-out process, intended simply to keep a vigorous force together. Undoubtedly the aim is a vigorous force. It should be; but I have never personally found an employer dismissing a diseased workman without giving him a chance for a cure or a change. Again and again I have known of cases where a serious condition, quite unsuspected by the victim, has been discovered, and by promptly dealing with it the health has been entirely restored.

AT the Pfister and Vogel Leather Company of Milwaukee, the physician is never allowed to lay off a man who has been long on the rolls on account of physical defects. He must make his report to the superintendent. When they find a man cannot be restored to health, they keep him at work through the winter months or until such a time as he is able to secure other employment, giving him a notice of some two months so that he can make his arrangements. Frequently they have been able to remedy a condition by an operation. In the first two years after starting their medical work, they operated on eighty-four men, all of whom are now in the factory at their old wages. They insist, as do all the best companies where I have examined the medical department, that what they are after is sound bodies, and that they consider it part of their business to help the men to a good physical condition and show them how to keep so.

PARTICULAR care and kindness is exercised where tuberculosis is discovered. All over the country employers are sending tuberculous employees to tent colonies or hospitals where they can have the best of care. Often the victim has no idea of his condition and fights an exile. A man who had been thirty years with the Avery Company of Peoria, Ill., was found on the first examination they held to have tuberculosis of the lungs. He was immediately sent to the Ottawa Tent Colony and is now back at work. The Crane Company has its own camp for the tuberculous.

The Metropolitan Life Insurance Company has made especially elaborate arrangements for caring for those among its 15,000 employees who are tuberculous. The sanatorium—built on the southern slope of Mount McGregor, New York, a stonethrow from the cottage where General Grant died—is one of the noblest of the company's many contributions to the cause of national health. It has aimed to make a modern sanatorium one which should not only serve its employees but should set the highest standards for such an institution, and should as time went on serve as a great laboratory for developing better methods for fighting the plague. There has been a question raised as to the legal right of the company to devote money to such a purpose. It is a question often raised over this kind of work by corporations and stock companies. Before undertaking the work a judgment was asked from the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York. The court returned as a principle the following:

